Booth said that the committee contacted all the students, faculty and Junior Advisors who had been involved with FRS. "Their impressions were overwhelmingly positive," he said.

Ninety percent of the students who participated said the program helped integrate their social and intellectual lives and two-thirds said that discussions in FRS courses were better than those in their other courses.

— by Scott J. O'Callaghan

Hopkins

Continued from Page 1

completed. Renovation of Hopkins Hall began last summer. Once an ENF is filed, interested parties can ask the state to require a more detailed environmental impact report.

Strongly suggests plan

"Although I am not requiring an environmental impact report for this project, I strongly suggest that Williams College enter into a process with the community of Williamstown that will result in a master plan for the college that protects the interests of the town as well as the college," Hoyte wrote in a March 30 certificate waiving the filing of an EIR for the project.

Valerie Talmage, Executive Director of the Massachusetts Historical Commission, urged Hoyte's office in a March 18 letter "to carefully consider their policy in dealing with developments that file an ENF after irreversible damage to the environment has already occurred."

Talmage also said that the addition to Hopkins will result in the destruction of the original historic fabric on the facades of Hopkins.

"The design of the addition is highly competitive with that of the Romanesque Revival Hopkins Hall," Talmage wrote. "The addition has severe adverse visual impacts on the historic building and on the surrounding historic district. MHC believes an addition could have been designed which would have respected Hopkins Hall while meeting the programmatic needs of the college."

Renovations underway

Talmage noted that Hopkins is potentially eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places.

Renovations of the interior of the existing building and the construction of an addition to Hopkins are well underway. Most of the interior has been gutted, and some of the exterior has been altered to accommodate the addition.

Williamstown Historical Commission chairman Dagmar Bubriski said that the commission would have expressed its concerns about the historical integrity of Hopkins earlier, but assumed the project would be privately funded and thus not open to public comment.

"The commission is very disturbed that the historic fabric of the interior [of Hopkins] is gone forever," Bubriski wrote. "The community as well as the college has lost an important historic resource."

Assistant Director for Construction Services Antonio Janairo said that the renovations in Hopkins were necessary to comply with fire codes, and the addition was necessary to create more office and classroom space.

"Perhaps the college may have been remiss in [altering Hopkins]; whether there is an obligation [to preserve the historical integrity] is questionable," Janairo said.

He added that the college had tried to protect the historic integrity of Hopkins as much as possible. "We've had serious consultations with representatives of our art department in reviewing the proposed addition," he said.

Tutorials

Continued from Page 4

Bruton said that all the students in a tutorial would meet together the first week and then break into groups of two. The pairing will probably be based on student background in the subject. Each student will give a formal presentation every other week, and the other student and the professor will react and comment, Bruton said. He stressed the formality of the presentations.

In a separate interview, Bruton said he is pleased with the way the program has turned out. "I think the package we've worked up is really quite impressive," Bruton said the reason some of the larger departments are only offering one tutorial is because many of the people who were keen to offer them will be on leave next year. He also said that some departments had difficulties offering more than one tutorial because of major requirements which had to be offered.

At the meeting, Berek, who is planning to teach a tutorial next year, said that the program was not likely to expand much in future years because of the inefficiency of the teaching method. Only 10 students can take each course.

According to Wootters, not only does a tutorial teach material, it also teaches students how to learn independently and respond on the spot.

Wootters said a tutorial could not cover as much material as a lecture of seminar could. "We sacrificed a certain amount of content," What students did learn, however, they learned more thoroughly, he said.

According to Lipton, in some ways the tutorials must differ from those at Oxford, which is the model upon which Williams tutorials were originally based. They are only one of four classes and grades are given by the tutor rather than resulting from a set of comprehensive exams. "The similarities are certainly more striking than the differences," he said.

BMW Weekend at Mt. Holyoke College

"The Ultimate Party Machine"

Friday, April 22nd
10 p.m. - 2 a.m.

In the Amphitheatre
Open Party

Live Band:
"The 5-0"

Traditional Party Bvcs.
ID Required for Alcohol

EST. 1901

Williams Co-op

IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHERS • SPORTING GOODS

SALE

CO-OP

Levi's

ADIDAS SHOES

All Athletic Equipment

Custom Printed T-Shirts

Everything for Men & Women

Racket Sales & Service

Class Rings

Gifts

W. Lax

Continued from Page 14
Putting in what seemed to be a last desperate effort, Skidmore launched an offensive which shifted play to the other side of the field. Lisa Phillips '88 and Wynn Hohl '89 led the defense, which with freshman goalkeeper Tracey Davis's efforts repelled two Skidmore shots. This was the first and last time during the game that the Ephs were truly tested.

During the last ten minutes of the game, Williams scored ten goals, which Kershaw attributed to "really good midfield connections." The scoring lineup also showed off the team's depth, as five different players scored goals, bringing the total number of Williams scorers to nine. Lisa Tenerowicz '88 had an especially strong second half, scoring three times. Co-Captain Christine Boddicker '88 and Abby Burbank '88 each contributed one goal, while Burnett and Cooper put in two.

The team was expecting

Tuesday's win; they have beaten Skidmore for several consecutive years and did not feel seriously challenged.

"The problem with a game like [Tuesday's] is that you can develop some bad habits—you start running the ball instead of passing it," Burnett said. During ¼ of the game we were stalling them, and we didn't shoot on all the opportunities we got. Yet we not only put 20 goals in but we kept them to one."

Fell to Tufts

Facing powerhouse Tufts, who had just beaten last year's number-one Trinity 15-5, was no easy task. The Ephs fell to Tufts 13-6 during last Saturday's game, after falling behind 8-2 by the half. Outstanding players were Flaherty, who scored two goals on assists from Burnett; Bernheimer, Boddicker, and Cooper, who scored one goal each on free position shots; and Kershaw, who scored a goal on a ground shot.

"The first half we were really nervous and we really did not play very well," Burnett said, commenting on the loss. "I think if we had played the whole game like we played the second half, the game could have been a lot closer." Tufts' main strength was a midfield speed which equalled that of the Ephs, combined with what Burnett called size and "really tough players."

This week the women's team is looking for easy wins on Thursday and Saturday against Mount Holyoke and Smith, who they beat during pre-season games. Repeat performances would raise the Ephs' record to 5-1 up north after a 4-1 spring stint.

M. Rugby

Continued from Page 14

the day's third match. Kudos go to Paul Faraci '90, who led a C side tackling refresher course for a side line crowded with onlookers, as he buried a shoulder that likewise buried a Crusader.

The day's final event was also its most discouraging. Facing the senior contingent of the Varsity football team—a nefarious collection bent on delivering their last sanctioned body slams before being released into society—the D-side meet with an expected fate suffering a 20-0 defeat. The WRFC looks to regroup this week before facing the Parent's Weekend onslaught of Boston's South Shore Rugby Club this Saturday on Cole Field. Kickoff is slated for 12 noon, RAT (Rugby Adjusted Time).

Parking

Continued from Page 4

behind the Weston Language Center. According to Wagner, the committee thought that the lot north of the tennis courts was a better idea because it could be larger, better lit and it would clear up summertime congestion in the Mission Park area caused by people staying there during conventions.

The committee proposed the Denison Park lot because "It seemed to [the committee] that there were several constituencies interested in doing something near Spring Street," Wagner said. The Denison Park lot could be more expensive because it is a wetlands area and there are some storage sheds located there now, Wagner said. But the committee felt that the congestion on Spring Street and the lack of parking for the athletic facilities were big enough problems to warrant the extra expense.

The committee also suggested widening the driveway at the Williams College Museum of Art to accommodate visitors to the museum, Wagner said.

The committee offered several other sites as alternatives for future lots. Among these was another lot north of the tennis courts and an expansion of the Spencer/Brooks lot.

Wagner said that the lot behind the tennis courts could go in as soon as next year, while the Denison Park lot could take a few years to complete.

According to Wagner, the committee received input from the Committee on Undergraduate Life, College Council, the Planning Board and the Town-Gown Liaison Committee and received responses from faculty and staff while revising the proposal.

Wagner said that he believes that President Francis Oakley, College Provost Nell Grabols and Dean of the College Stephen Flx, as well as Reed, will be on the administrative group which will make the final decision.

M. Crew

Continued from Page 14

and WPI after having previously raced in fours. The eight, stroked by Wheelock, won by "open water" ahead of WPI who was followed by Conn. The first boat's record is 4-0 as it anticipates its clash with Wesleyan this weekend.

Coach Hettle expects his team to make a strong showing at the Little Three championships. Williams traditionally humiliates Amherst at these races, but Wesleyan has been the victor for the last two years. Hettle, who in '85 stroked the last Williams boat to win the varsity race and the coveted Saratoga oar which comes with it, expects the varsity race to be a dog fight. Hettle sees neither team taking a substantial lead during the body of the race and said he believes the race will be decided within the last 500 meters. Though Wesleyan won a silver medal in the Dad Vail championship regatta last year, the Williams oarsmen hope for victory on Saturday at Amherst.

BGLU

Continued from Page 1

said, "but I'm not sure that's entirely bad because it has opened up a lot of dialogue."

Exhilaration, difficulty

Speaker after speaker rose at Friday's rally to address a variety of topics, including the exhilaration of coming out and admitting one's homosexuality or bisexuality as well as the difficulties involved in coming out at Williams. They also talked about fears they had of being judged solely on the basis of their sexual preference.

Under a giant banner reading, "Preppy Dykes and Faggots Come Out," Raquel Holmes '90 told the crowd that when she was able to see gay women filling positive roles as mothers, teachers and students, she had no difficulty in admitting she was gay. "I am a lesbian, and I am very proud of it."

Her pride was echoed by Assistant Professor of Political Science Timothy Cook, who said he understands the world differently because he is gay. "I'm very glad to be gay. It gives me an insight that is denied to 90 percent of the population."

But Assistant Professor of Political Science Wendy Brown said that superficial negative judgments still persist, even in the Williams community.

"People think they know everything about you if they know you're gay," she said. "I cannot assume people will look past this one fact to see what I really am. I cannot assume my freedom." Brown called on people at the rally to join everyone who must fight for their freedom. "We want to fight for a world that makes a home for all of us."

Freshman impressed

Freshman Alex Love '91, a BGLU member, seemed impressed by the professors' participation in the rally. "It's invigorating to see professors not only willing to participate in a student-initiated activity, but contribute to a cause that is a little bit controversial."

Some people at the rally criticized Williams for being a closed community, pointing out the difficulty of coming out in a small, isolated place where everyone seems to know everyone else. But most seemed to agree that things could be worse.

"It's so much better than it was at my high school," Love said. "When I was a prospective at Oberlin, though, I saw couples [of the same sex] walking around together, and I don't think Williams is ready for that."

"There's a limited range to what students can do here without being outsiders," Brown said. "There are fewer options of places to really fit in, but I think the atmosphere is tolerant in a liberal sense. It's not as bad as some places."

Some spectators expressed surprise at the use of the terms dyke and faggot in the speeches and on the banner. Questioned on that point after the rally, Brown said, "Once you call yourself a name, it takes the power and sting out of it being used derogatorily."

Kent said she thought the week was a success. She pointed out that many students wore white shirts on Friday to show support for rights, and over ten percent of the student body filled out postcards addressed to the Los Angeles School Board expressing support for a counseling program for gay teenagers.

Trustees

Continued from Page 1

of the process and results of the college's recruitment of black faculty and students and women faculty.

Representatives of Health Services and the Dean's office gave the trustees an overview of health concerns on campus and the college's counseling services at a Thursday meeting.

Strong concern

Director of Psychological Counseling Services John Howland said he expressed strong concern at the meeting about alcohol use on campus and said he told the trustees that he would like to be able to have further assistance in educating students about alcohol.

Howland said he would like to hire a health educator for Williams, and said the Deans and the trustees were favorably disposed to the idea. The health educator could also address AIDS, drug use, contraceptives, sex practices and date-rape, Howland said.

Dean of Freshmen Joan Edwards, who was also at the meeting, said she would like to have a health educator by next fall when an expanded freshman days will allow more time to address health concerns.

Budget is tight

The trustees may have responded positively to the health educator proposal, but according to Reed, next year's budget looks very tight, "and any requests will be looked at with a jaundiced eye."

Faculty

Continued from Page 4

faculty's hands... We're being told that this is the way we have to do it," he said. Goethals said in response that the faculty would have the right to approve the proposal. He also said that many of the ideas for the proposal have come from other faculty members.

Several faculty members said that they felt obligated to vote against the proposal because they objected to some of its parts. Goethals requested that the proposal not be amended at the meeting, but be voted on as a whole. He said the different parts of the proposal reinforce and balance one another. As a result, he argued, passage of all parts would allow no one area to be weighted. He also said that if the proposal were passed, it could be amended in consultation with the Dean of the Faculty.

"I think there are a number of us who voted against [the proposal] who are strongly in favor of student evaluation of teaching," Lecturer in Economics Kathleen McNally-Wassenaar said.

Taking away a tool

Several faculty members objected to making the new SCES a mandatory part of teaching evaluation. In the past, faculty members could choose whether to use the SCES for their own benefit or as a method of evaluation, according to Goethals.

"My worry here is that we are taking away a tool which has been helpful to faculty and making it a tool of evaluation," said Associate Professor of English Lawrence Raab. Raab said that he felt the long SCES was helpful in gauging student opinion of aspects of teaching.

Assistant Professor of East Asian Languages Emiko Konomi said she was dissatisfied with the content of SCES

"The problem is we have too many bright people with good ideas," he said after he informed the trustees that the college will be operating at a $376,000 deficit next year, the first time in some years the college has operated at a deficit. "Bright ideas cost money," he said.

Reed said the deficit was caused by a shortfall in the Alumni Fund, which raised $3.7 million in 1987, $5 million short of the projected goal. Reed attributed the shortfall to last October's stock market crash.

Reed announced that Arthur Levitt '52 and Hedrick Smith '55 had been appointed permanent trustees starting July 1 to replace Francis Vincent Jr. '60 and Preston Parish '41, who will be retiring. William Ouchl '65 was appointed a term trustee.

questions. "Those are particular models of teaching [on the SCES] that not all teachers endorse," Konomi said more non-invocative wording of questions is necessary.

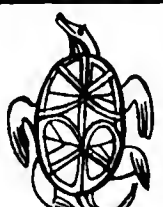

Professor of Economics Roger Bolton, a former member of the CAP, said at the meeting that he could not vote in favor of the proposal because it did not make provision for the proper evaluation of SCES data. According to the proposal, raw scores from SCES will be sent to the CAP each semester. Formerly, data was interpreted by the departments and then given to the CAP once a year.

WILDLANDS RESEARCH
San Francisco State University
Extended Education
Summer/Fall/Winter '88-'89 3-14 units
Join Backpacking Research Teams in North America, Nepal and Hawaii
On-site expeditions to preserve:
Wildlife Species
Wilderness Environments
Course leader:
WILDLANDS RESEARCH: (707) 632-5665
3 Mosswood Circle, Cazadero, CA 95421

ANSWERS TO CURRENT PUZZLES

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
20 SPRING ST./WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123-3548/PHONE 413-458-5717

Bicycles and Repairs

the Mountain Goat
130 Water St.,
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-8445

GATES REAL ESTATE
"Berkshire Properties"

Vacation — Lake Related
Farm & Residential

(413) 862-4565
(413) 269-6585

Brokers:
Nancy Gates
Jack Gates

Associates:
Fred Melcalf
Ken Cronin

Hobson's Choice
Fine Food & Good Spirits

Serving lunch, snacks & dinner non-stop
from 11:30 a.m. 'til 9 p.m.

Home-made soups and unique dinner specials
A casual & relaxed decor of natural wood & brick
Informal bar for good drinks &
interesting conversation.

159 Water Street (opp. Carol Cable), Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-9101

Discriminating people, you Liberal Arts graduates

You've learned how to distinguish between Ulysses (highly intelligent, but devious) and Hercules (full of drive, but no gray matter).

You can appreciate the differences between George Washington and Benedict Arnold. You know why Othello messed it all up, why Henry V got the girl and the money.

In short, you have a solid understanding of Homo sapiens: You know what kind of animal he is, and whether he's likely to succeed or not. You know about square pegs in round holes.

So why don't you join us. We're a New York management recruiting firm. The book says you've got to be extremely ambitious, highly motivated, enterprising, assertive and articulate—with impressive interpersonal skills. Not too liberal. Not too artsy.

Find out more at your placement center. And send your resume to Sharon Gilbert at our New York office.

Human Resource Management
535 Fifth Avenue, 32nd Floor, N.Y., NY 10017
(212) 867-2650
30 Vreeland Road, Florham Park, NJ 07932
(201) 966-0909

"STOP THE NUCLEAR MADNESS!"
A SPEECH BY
DR. HELEN CALDICOTT
FOUNDER OF PHYSICIANS FOR SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY, NOTED AUTHOR AND ACTIVIST

WEDS., APRIL 20
8:00
CHAPIN HALL
Sponsored by the Lecture Committee

West Package & Variety Store

"Purple Cow" brands always on sale
Vodka - Gin - Rum - Bourbon

Coors & Coors Light
(12 oz. bottles) $11.99 + dep.

O'Keefe Canadian $13.99 + dep.

Stroh's 30 pack $11.99 + dep.

Melster Brau ½ Keg $27.00 + dep.

3 Liter Pepsi $1.59 + dep.

Stop by on your way back from Pizza Hut
We really do appreciate your business

663-6081 between N. A. and Williamstown

London School of Economics and Political Science

A chance to study and live in London

Junior-year programs, Postgraduate Diplomas, One-Year Master's Degrees and Research Opportunities in the Social Sciences.

The wide range of subjects includes:-
Accounting and Finance • Actuarial Science • Business Studies • Economics • Econometrics • Economic History • European Studies • Geography • Government • Health Planning • Housing • Industrial Relations • International History • International Relations • Law • Management Science • Operational Research • Philosophy, Logic & Scientific Method • Population Studies • Politics • Regional and Urban Planning • Sea-Use Policy • Social Administration • Social Anthropology • Social Planning in Developing Countries • Social Work • Sociology • Social Psychology • Statistical and Mathematical Sciences • Systems Analysis •

Application forms from:
Admissions Registrar, Room 10, L.S.E., Houghton Street, London WC2A 2AE, England, stating whether undergraduate or postgraduate.

LSE

Now Accepting Sophomores!

Juniors, Seniors & Grads...

GIVE YOURSELF SOME CREDIT!

APPLY NOW FOR YOUR VERY OWN...

• Bring a photocopy of your School I.D.

• No cosigner required

APPLY NOW ON CAMPUS!

Date: April 20, 21, 22
Time: 10 a.m. - 2 p.m.
Place: Baxter Mailroom

CITIBANK
Citibank (South Dakota) N.A. Member FDIC

M. Lax

Continued from Page 13

Earlier in the week, Williams travelled to Westfield State and came away with a 15-8 victory. Bob Santry '90 lead all scorers with four goals and 3 assists as Brent Powell '91 added a hat trick and Tim Oliver '90 tossed in two. Freshman Ian Smith continued his outstanding play as he tallied four assists while Senior middle Jon Edlehad two fees of his own.

The game was closer than the score indicated, however, as the Ephs needed a six goal third quarter to pull away from a 5-5 halftime tie. Senior Dana Weeder played well in his first start in goal this year and recorded seven saves.

Churchill commented on the slow start, saying "People were looking ahead to the Tufts game. It took us a half just to settle down and say, 'we've got to win this game first'. Still, there was no doubt in anyone's mind that we were going to go out and dominate the second half."

Williams returns home to take on New York powerhouse Union tomorrow at 4:00 and Trinity at 2:00 Saturday. The Union contest promises to be a tight match, as last year the Ephs needed four unanswered second half scores before Doug Gilbert '89 touched twine in the closing seconds to give Williams the win.

The shortest distance between you and what's going on on campus

The Williams Record

Women harriers place 1st at Trinity

by Kristen Tallo

The women's track team conquered host Trinity (55) and Connecticut College (50) with 76 points, while the men placed second with a final score of 44 points, mastered by Trinity's 106 points.

Thirty of the women's points were attributed to the collective efforts of Junior Dawn Macauley, who outpaced the competition to win three events (the high hurdles, intermediate hurdles, and the high jump), and sophomore Karlyn McNall, who leaped 16'5" to ace the long jump, overturning her own school record of the previous week.

McNall's 33'4" victorious triple jump qualifies her for the ECAC Championships. Her second place 95'2" hammerthrow smashed another of her own school records of last year, and she took third in the javelin.

Ann Dannhauer and senior co-captain Joan Davis each hauled in two wins, while Ann Platt '91 tagged the heels of Dannhauer at second in the 800.

In addition to taking second in the 400 meter relay, with the team effort of Davis, Sue Northen '89 and Kira Shields '91, sophomore Nicole Jefferson also tied Macauley's first place, ECAC-qualifying high jump of 5'2" to place second. Meg Brown '91 took second in the discus and fourth in the shot put, trailing classmate Dawn Pettaway by one place in the latter event.

Senior co-captain Sarah Pierce sailed to victory in the 3000 meter run, followed by Milka Brzezinski '89 at third. Junior Noriko Honda trailed Macauley at third in the high hurdles (also taking fourth in the hurdles). First-meet performer, Heather Sung '91, placed fourth in the long jump.

Lone male victory

Sophomore John Walker was the single individual victor for the men, winning the long jump and also carrying off second in the 100 meter and triple jump, an event for which he trained only last week.

While they had only one victory, the men amassed second-place performances: Dave Nadelman '89 (800 meter), Nate McVey-Finney '90 (5000 meter), senior co-captain Scott Purdy (high hurdles), Mike Simpson '90 (shot put and hammerthrow), and the relay team of Walker, Lars Hem '90, John Berger '89 and Carey Simon '90 (400 meter relay). Simon just missed victory with seconds in the 400 and 200 meter events, trailing the same opponent in both races.

Simpson also collected a third, in the discus, along with senior co-captain Ted Arrowsmith, who earned third in the 1500 meter run.

Coach Farwell reflected that Walker might have won the triple jump with a second attempt, but Farwell advised him to "save himself for the Little Three" because of a hamstring strain. Gearing toward the Little Three meet at home on Saturday is Farwell's strategy, even in the face of a home meet against Albany and R.P.I. today.

HELP WANTED

Top Children's Camp, Berkshire Mts., MA, seeks people over 20 years who relate to youngsters. Openings in Tennis, Baseball, Basketball, Football, Swimming, Sailing, Scuba, Waterskiing, Computer Program, Golf, Karate, Dramatics, Pianist. Good Salary plus room, board and laundry. Write Winter Offices: Camp Lenox, 270-80 Grand Central Pkwy, Floral Park, NY 11005 or call 212-662-3182.

PARLEZ-VOUS FRANCAIS?

The Peace Corps has challenging positions overseas available for French majors and minors. While gaining experience and bolstering your resume, you will help people in developing countries. Programs exist in education, agriculture, health and other community development projects. (Students graduating with other majors may also qualify.) Information: call collect — 617-565-5555 ext. 575.

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

GIFTS: For Mom and Dad and Friends

We Gift Wrap!

The finest selection of Greeting Cards —

Picture Frames — Blank Books

A treasure trove of Jewelry —

Reproduction and Antique

AND MUCH MORE!

TheLibrary

TRAVEL LIGHT

Bicycles and Repairs
(Williamstown)

• Travel Packs
6 different models in stock

• Travel Accessories
Passport Carriers
Undercover Wallets
Toilet Kits
Mesh Ditty Kits
Toothbrush Cases
Money Belts and more

130 Water St., Williamstown (413) 458-8445 Open 7 Days Manchester Center, Vt. (802) 362-5159

EXCEPTIONAL FARES

CITY	1/2 ROUND-TRIP FARES
Mix 'n' Match	Thru June 14	June 15 - Sept. 14	Sept. 15 - Oct. 31
FROM/TO NEW YORK (JFK)
AMSTERDAM	$219	$249	$229
BRUSSELS	229	269	239
LONDON	239	259	230
MADRID	249	269	249
NICE	259	289	269
PARIS	219	249	229
ROME	269	299	269
ZURICH	229	249	229

To calculate your round-trip fare, simply add the appropriate 1/2 round-trip fares.
■ Tax: Add $3 U.S. Dep. Tax & U.S. Arrival Tax. ■ One-way: Add $20 per person.

NO E*CEPTIONS!

"SEE EUROPE BY TRAIN"

Eurail Youthpass . . . $320 / one month (2nd Class)

New! Eurail flexipass . . . $310 any 9 days within 21 days (First Class)

New also! Eurail saver pass . . . $210 15 day pass (First Class) Available to 3 people or more travelling together

City	1/2 Round-Trip Fare
Mix 'n' Match	Thru June 14
FROM/TO NEW YORK (JFK)
Amsterdam	$219
Brussels	$229
London	$239
Madrid	$249
Nice	$259
Paris	$219
Rome	$269
Zurich	$229

THE TRAVEL STORE, INC.

105 SPRING STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
(413) 458-5786

Office Hours: Mon.-Fri. 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.
Thurs. - until 8:00 p.m.
Sat. 9 a.m. to 12 p.m.

Colonial Pizza

"The best in America"
Hot oven grinders, salads,
spaghettis, and more!

Now starting delivery to Williams College
From 5:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m.

Fresh dough daily

Nice atmosphere — Fast service

Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014

hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

Most students face a long tough road after graduation. But this should help.

Pre-approved credit & $400 cash back.

If you've received or will receive your bachelor's degree from a 4-year college, or graduate degree from an accredited institution between October 1, 1987 and January 31, 1989, you can qualify for Ford's Graduate Assistance Program.

We can give you pre-approved credit through Ford Credit and $400 cash back that can be used as a down payment on your new Ford. Only if you buy one of the new Ford cars or trucks listed below and only if you take delivery by December 31, 1988. Ask your dealer about other retail incentives which may be available, too.

For more information, call this toll-free number: 1-800-321-1536. Or see your New England Ford Dealer today.

Escort EXP

Escort GT

Escort

Festiva

Tempo

Mustang

Taurus

Thunderbird

Probe

Bronco II

Aerostar

Ranger

New England Ford Dealers
No one knows New Englanders better.

In the Spotlight

Steve Holsten has been on a tear lately. The senior second baseman drove in six runs against Trinity with a home run, a triple, and a double. Against North Adams, he hit a ball over four hundred feet with the bases loaded and trailing 7-4 in the last inning, only to be caught against the fence.

Trey Meckel '89 came up big with just two seconds remaining in the men's water polo game against Amherst on Saturday night. The lanky, offbeat net-minder turned away an Amherst shot with a spectacular save to hold on to the team's slim 11-10 lead and assure the squad's first victory over the Jeffs since 1985.

Basketball awards were announced just before spring break at the Sixth Man Club Annual Banquet. Garcia Major '90 and Nancy Hedeman '89 were named Most Valuable Players for the men's and women's basketball teams, respectively. Major averaged 20.9 points and 6.4 rebounds per game, while leading the team in free throw percentage (78.0), dishing out 3.4 assists per game and hitting 42.7 percent from three-point land, both second on the team. Hedeman, Williams' all-time scoring leader with 1101 career points, scored 17.0 ppg and hauled down 12.8 rpg, among the top ten in Division III nationally. Major was also named to the ECAC All-Star first team.

Captains for next year's squad were also announced at the banquet-juniors Mike Masters (10.6 ppg, 4.3 assists per game, 43 steals) and Bill Melchionni (16.7 ppg, 9.8 rpg) will lead the men into action, while Hedeman will captain the women's team along with classmates Julia Beasley and Missy Crouchley.

Captains for next year's hockey team were also announced at its annual banquet on Friday night. Juniors Tim Frechette, Chris Conway, and Will Putnam will guide the Ephs next winter. Conway and Frechette served as assistant captains this season.

Three members of the Williams-Oxford program had quite a year as part of the Exeter College Soccer Football program. Mark Saalfeld '89 led the first team with 17 goals, including four hat tricks, and Drew Sawyer '88 anchored a solid defense for the team, which finished second in the regular season and won the cup consolation. Sawyer also played for the second side, which went undefeated and won the cup and league double for the first time since 1883. Stewart Verdery '89 was a key substitute for the second side, scoring two overtime goals in the cup semifinals.

Women ruggers beat UVM and tie BC at New Englands

by Cecilia Malm

The WWRFC A-side team travelled to Randolph, Massachusetts on Saturday to participate in the New England Rugby Football Union Women's College Championships. The first game of the tournament was played against Harvard/Radcliffe, who quickly woke the sleepy Williams women up with ferocious scrum-downs and the mile-high kicks of their notorious Amazon fullback.

Unfortunately, the referee chose to ignore Radcliffe's frequent illegal obstructions and dangerous kicks. Midway through the second half the score stood at a discouraging 15-0, but Williams came back with a successful penalty kick by Lauren Boeschstein '89 to end the game at 15-3.

The second match against the University of Vermont was a victorious one. The Williams scrum came alive, inspired by the energy of wing-forward Kathryn Gerber '88. Kerry Kilander '89 scored the first try of the game by running the ball in from five yards straight through a wall of UVM players. Kilander was quickly emulated in the second half by Sonja Lengnick '88, who ran a similar suicidal play. The magical foot of Boeschstein nailed yet another penalty kick, bringing the final score up to 11-0.

Vying for a third place position in the A division with Boston College, the Eph women rallied for their third match of the day. The scrappy BC scrum proved to be tiring opponents, but the game remained a fairly even contest. Kilander scored in the second half to match a BC try, but both teams missed their extra point conversion kicks and an official tie was declared.

Fly-half Annie Cordova '88 and Kilander were chosen for the New England Women's Select Side.

Meanwhile back in the Purple Valley the B and C sides played Trinity and the Bay State Women's Club. It was a disappointing day for the two sides, but they exhibited fine dedication and sportsmanship. Next weekend all sides will be at home.

Holy Cross routs men's Rugby by 22-10 count

by Andy Harris

Accepting its first Division I challenge in almost a year, the WRFC journeyed east to Worcester to face the Crusaders of the Holy Cross. Spirits had been high among the A-side all week. While the forward eight had settled into a pattern of surgically precise scrummage and frolicking loose play, the backfield was enjoying unexpected chemistry.

But slashing winds and temperatures settling below freezing were the hand maidens of bitter fate. The hailed White

Dogs fell 22-10, after slipping behind by twelve points in the opening minutes of the match. The game was paradoxical—the A-side could easily have rallied victory if a few balls had taken different bounces or the match could have been a total blowout. Were it not for separate try-saving tackles by senior captain Nils Christoffersen and wing Chap Petersen '90, the score could have reached an even grosser total.

Williams was not so much outplayed as overrun. Indeed, the pack dominated scrummage, while splintering Crusader attempts at establishing second phase play in rucks and mauls. But a talented Holy Cross line spoiled all WRFC hopes with fundamental tackling and hard-nosed running, the Crusader backs shredded the White Dog game plan. Strong individual efforts by senior flanker Bradford Roegge and classmate Mike Sullivan provided the points for the Dogs, though providing little solace on that forlorn pitch.

B side heartbreaker

The B side had led off the Day's matches with the season's heartbreaker thus far. Facing a 14 point deficit late in the first half, the Killer B's managed 3 unanswered scores but came up short, 14-12, as time expired in the game. Phil Jack '90 continued his shifty running ways, charging 2 scores to his credit, both from over 30 meters out, while Sean Cooke '88 stuffed in the third score for the Dogs. The B's seemed almost dazed in the early going of this match, consistently allowing the Crusaders to beat them to the ball. But as time wore on, the usually feisty side returned to form, punishing its opponents while emasculating their offense in the second half.

A faint shimmer of hope, alas, a lonely and forsaken light-house facing the wrath of a raging storm, pierced the pale of destruction that had settled over the WRFC. The Screamin' C-men whooped their way to an impressive 23 point shut-out in release date: 04/17/88

Continued on Page 8

Tennis

Continuing its winning ways of late, the men's tennis team walloped Clark University 9-0 to raise its record to a perfect 3-0. The Ephs have beaten their first three opponents by a combined score of 24-3.

The whitewash was near total, as the racquetters dropped only one set in the afternoon. Steve Buxbaum '90 started out slowly in the fourth singles match, but stormed back to win in three sets, 3-6, 6-2, 6-2. The match was important in that it saw co-captain and number one player Hoyt Ludington '88 get his first win of the season, 6-4, 6-2. Ludington, who took over the number one spot from graduating Kevin Callanan '87, ran into Worcester, with the Columbia crew as a late entry in the regatta. Columbia's boats swept the regatta, winning every women's race they entered, but Williams first varsity eight, first novice eight, and second novice eight came in second in their races, blowing Conn. and WPI out of Lake Quinsigamond. The strong novice four took first against two WPI fours and the lightweight varsity four destroyed their WPI competition, winning by a full minute.

Despite the winning of WPI and Conn. shirts for many Williams women, everyone felt there was room to improve in technique and power. The women look forward to Little Three next Saturday against archrivals Wesleyan and Amherst at Amherst.

—Cara McCandless

very tough opponents in the first two matches. The men continued their domination of the doubles play, where they have not lost a match this season. The doubles teams keyed the exciting come-from-behind victory on the final day of the NESAC tournament last season.

Earlier in the week, the squad won in convincing fashion over Middlebury, 8-1. Although the result may make the match seem unimportant, it was an interesting test for this team. "The Middlebury win was a big one," said Ludington, "Their team is the same as last year, while we lost our one and two players, and we also don't have any new players."

—Ted Hobart

Water Polo

The Williams Water Polo Club defeated Amherst 12-11 to win the first water polo tournament in the new Chandler Pool, averaging ten straight losses to the Jeffs since the fall of 1985. The Ephs also tied the Elms from Yale after two overtime periods, and ended up undefeated in the history of the new facility.

Reflecting on the Amherst game, tri-captain Will Dudley '89 commented, "They seem like much nicer guys after you beat them." Amherst was especially dejected after having lost miserably to Williams at the Mens' New England Swimming Championships and at the NCAA Division III Championships. The victory was assured when Dudley blocked the shot of the Jeffs' Tom Donley '90 with five seconds left on the clock, followed by a heroic last-second save by goalie Trey Meckel '89 against Amherst senior Mike Zimmermann.

Scorers for the Ephs were tri-captain Andy Kaplinsky '90 with four goals, Than Healy '91 with three, John Cooke '88 and Dudley with two apiece, and Dave Cantor '89 with one. The Jeffs were led by NCAA All-American swimmer Donley, with five goals.

In the game against Yale, the score was tied at 11 after regulation, and after two overtime periods, the score remained tied at 12. Dudley had forced the game into overtime with a last second score in regulation, and went on to preserve the tie with another score at two seconds left on the clock in the second overtime period. Ephs scorers were led by Healy (four goals), with other scores coming from Kaplinsky (three goals), Dudley (three), and Assistant to the Vice President Steve Schaffer (two).

In other tournament action, Amherst defeated Yale Saturday morning, 12-7. Williams won the tournament with a 1-0-1 record. Amherst finished at 1-1, and Yale at 0-1-1. The Ephs look forward to the upcoming fall season with the return of many accomplished starters and enthusiastic novices.

—Rob Benson

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Animal joke gifts

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Authors' Associations

BY WILLIAM CANINE/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

ACROSS
1 Gardner's namesakes
5 Heat meas.
8 W.W. II vessel
11 Act
14 To and —
17 Pain in the hip for Bobby?
20 Hat for a sahib
21 Vandal
22 Toothily smile
23 Something for Ezra's
24 Nictation
26 Shout for 27 Indisposed
28 Glitten
29 Respect
30 Is still on the water
32 Long-running Broadway hit
34 Palliative
36 Provisional Mormon state
38 Oak bark
40 Horned Frogs' inst.
41 Not sweet

DOWN
1 Jellied dish
2 World Series M.V.P.: 1987
3 Ephebic
4 Japanese money of account
5 Bachelor President
6 Prepare
7 Remove a tangle
8 Sets free
9 Take note of
10 Barn's Crimon
11 Visionary
12 Cerf specialty
13 Tail
14 Better than Robert's bark?

81 Sea raptor
82 Adviser to Elley?
85 Profound
86 Hang loosely
87 Shatter
88 Carpenter's instrument
89 Stylish
91 Scott's "—"
93 Greek letter
94 Evaluates
96 High-ranking Moslem women
99 Some Scandinavians
101 —Magnon
102 Rock to a Glaswegian
103 Needlecase
107 Single
109 Grand —
110 Addition palace at Versailles
111 Reat
113 Well-groomed Mormon state
114 Desiccated
115 Dear met to girl
116 Most irritating
118 Sheriff's asst.
120 Favorite of Mrs. Spratt
122 What T.S.E. wrote
123 Nagana carriers
125 The daily grind
128 Bananas
132 Show off
134 Tropical
137 Stan's pal
139 Sound from the byre
140 Image
141 Flute for John?
143 Story by Eugene?
145 Booded, e.g.
146 Land east of Eden
147 Jungfrau et al.
148 Dupe Thomas?
149 Margu
150 Chemical suffix
151 Poodle size
152 St. Paul's Duluth dir.
153 Gypsum

75 Crew
76 Chewinks
78 Prayer books on a glacier
79 Mystic of old
80 Yellowstone feature
83 Samovar
84 G.I.'s refuge
85 Child in Rebecca's keeping?
87 Hobo
90 Two cobblers' job
91 George in a hurry?
92 Redom
95 One who was a fresh last year
96 Two's cousin
97 To be. Fr
98 Edgar slept here?
100 Rattle
101 Remove so as to make room
105 Betsy or Diana
106 Go before
108 Portside
110 Wake up call
112 Ligated
117 Timeless, to Fraherne
119 Groton student
121 Eye for an eye, e.g.
124 Labyrinthous
126 Windmill sails
127 Athenian denazogue
129 "I" — de la re" Monte-mozz
130 Crossings
131 City on the Sumida
132 Kin of tut-tut
133 Feat discom-fort
135 Young oyster
136 Port on Hawaii
138 Anglo-Saxon fricative
142 Aurora's Greek conner-part 144 "Swann's" Pronst

M. Crew

After an intense two weeks of spring break training in Washington D.C., the Williams Women's Crew traveled to Philadelphia to race against two strong crews, Navy and Penn, who had both been practicing on the water since Feb. 1. Their goal was to have a strong first race and stay close to the other boats. As expected, Penn and Navy took first and second, respectively,

In every race with the Williams boats in third. The first varsity eight came closest to the two by finishing only four seconds behind Navy while four seconds behind Penn in the competition.

After waiting for Lake Onota to thaw, the women had a pre-race week of changing boatlineups, trying to adapt to the loss of varsity women Ann Tucher '89 and Laura Woods '89 to injury and sickness. Two weeks later, April 16, the women were ready to take on WPI and Conn. College at

Men's lax surges to 3-1 up north with win at Tufts

by Marc McDermott

Riding the wave of a purple tide of swarming Eph defenders, the men's lacrosse team swamped Tufts 12-7 to raise their season's record to 3-1. The attack was again in top form as senior middle Chris Oldham reached the top of his game, notching three goals, and Brent Powell '91 and Bobby Santry '90 combined for six more, but it was the defense that made the difference.

In earlier games, the defense had been suspect, but coach Renzie Lamb stuck with his starters with one minor change, he moved senior co-captain Dave Crompton to the crease and put sophomore Jeff Stripp on the wing with co-captain Eric Churchill '88. With help from long stick middles Matt Zoln '91 and Steve Linen '90, the Ephs managed to contain the explosive Jumbo offense, thus preventing a replay of last year's regular season game where Tufts came back from a three goal deficit to win 7-6.

Third quarter burst

This year, the Ephs didn't have the luxury (or the burden) of a big early lead. Billy Boyd '88 ripped the nets first to put the Ephs on top, but Tufts came back with two and added another with seconds left in the half to trail by only one entering intermission. From the outset of the second stanza, however, Williams was in control.

"Both teams came out ready to play," said Churchill, "the beginning of the game was slow and cautious and the goal they scored right before the half hurt, but we really took the wind out of their sails in the first half of the third quarter."

Fuller takes faceoffs
With the help of Tony Fuller '89, who once again won 90 percent of the faceoffs, the Ephs scored five goals to Tufts' one in the opening minutes of the third to take a 9-4 lead which the renewed defense had no trouble holding. "We were much more aggressive than before," said Stripp, "The big differences were Tony's faceoffs and the defense playing as a unit for the first time."

Whatever the reasons, the Ephs backchecking produced many more takeaways than in the past and Williams scooped and cleared groundballs from under Tufts attackmen all day long to seal the win.

Continued on Page 10

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS.

This week's recipient is sophomore Karlyn McNail, who paced the women's track team to victory on Saturday, breaking two of her own school records in the process. In addition to setting new marks in the long jump and hammerthrow, McNail qualified for the ECAC Championships in the triple jump. Karlyn, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

The K-Swiss Tennis Shoe.

Distinctive with its five identifying stripes and generally recognized as the world's finest tennis shoe. Top leather, best rubber and superior workmanship. An American product made with characteristic Swiss attention to detail, quality and wearability. The shoe with a reputation for performance.

Goff's Sports, inc.

(413) 458-3605
15 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

Unbeaten Softball faces RPI today on Cole Field

It is not uncommon for a spring sport to get rained out, but snow is a different matter. Nonetheless, the softball team's doubleheader on Saturday at Skidmore was called due to a snowstorm in the sixth inning of the first game. Ironically, as the squad was leaving Skidmore, the sun had come out again and spring weather resumed.

The team could hardly complain, however, as its 6-0 lead at the end of six innings meant that the game would be counted as a win, upping the squad's record to a perfect 3-0. Cathy Hanclich '91 again took the mound for the Ephs, overcoming some wildness in pitching a two-hitter and tallying her third win.

All the offense for Williams came in the third, as Missy Crouchley '89 led off the inning with a single, and Julie Carroll '91 tripled to chase Crouchley home. Nancy Hedeman '89 drove in Carroll with a sacrifice fly, before Skidmore collapsed, giving up four more runs on two walks, three errors, and a sacrifice fly.

On Thursday, coach Dave Caputi displayed his own version of "Billy Ball," as the squad bunted five times in one inning to take advantage of shoddy Union fielding. The defense behind Hanclich, by contrast, was extremely sharp, highlighted by an outstanding day at shortstop by Carroll. Hanclich's pitching combined with tight defense to overcome the powerful Dutchwomen 9-3.

A busy week is in store for the undefeated Ephs, as they hosted RPI today before facing the Lord Jeffs at Amherst, whom they defeated in the first game of the season. On Saturday, the women take on Smith at Cole Field.

The Cycling team hosted a criterium race, consisting of laps approximately one mile long, on Sunday. Williams finished 7th in the 21 team field, with Jason Boro '90 finishing 2nd in the men's C race while Tom Heinemann '91 placed 13th in the men's A race. Here a Williams cyclist sprints for the finish behind Mission Park. (Scala)

Men's crew dominates four team tournament

by David B. Katz

The men's varsity crew dominated a regatta against Bucknell, WPI, and Connecticut College on Saturday on Lake Quinsigamond in Worcester. After an intense week of seat racing, coach Matt Hettle '85 decided boatings by Friday afternoon practice. Despite new lineups in both the first and second boats, both defeated the opposition by a comfortable margin.

The varsity's first race of the day was in fours, whose lineups consisted of a mixture of rowers from the first boat. At the start of the race the four, stroked by Seth Burns '89, "caught a crab" and was left behind by the other Williams boat and Conn. College, WPI, and Bucknell. Despite this setback the four regained its composure and soundly moved through the opposition and finally caught the other Williams four stroked by Toby Wheelock '88.

With only 500 meters to go both Williams boats were in front and fighting for first place. The four that had "crabbed" won the race with the other Williams boat coming in a close second. Conn. College's four came in third followed by Bucknell, the Conn. College B boat, and WPI.

The second varsity boat, stroked by Jeff Kip '89, exhibited its strength by speeding to an open water lead by the race's 1000 meter half way point. The entire boat rowed smoothly as it gradually opened up its lead through the remainder of the race. The boat finished in 6:41, followed seven seconds later by Conn. College's second boat. The second boat's record is now 2:1. Due to the depth of the team, the second boat is especially strong and hopes to do extremely well this season.

The first boat demonstrated its stamina on Saturday by defeating both Conn. College

Continued on Page 8

Senior shortstop Lewis Collins hustles down the 1st base line trying to beat the throw. Collins and the Ephs split a doubleheader at Tufts on Sunday. (Scala)

Baseball squad hovers near .500 mark

by Scott Mozarsky

The Williams baseball team continued to play .500 ball this week by beating Trinity 9-3 at home and then losing 7-5 on the road to North Adams State.

In both games the Ephs continued to rip the ball as they have since the northern season began. The hot hitting of seniors Steve Holsten, Jim Duquette and Chris Pachus, complemented by the smooth fielding of shortstop Lew Collins '88 and outfielder Sean Logan '88, have turned the Ephs into a solid ballclub.

Holsten led the Ephs in the Trinity game, driving in six runs with a home run, a triple and a double. Holsten notes that he, "feels comfortable at the plate and has been hitting the ball really well." The Ephs were also buoyed by the pitching of Mike Barbera '89, who frustrated a Trinity offense that had beaten the Ephs twice in Florida.

"It felt good to beat Trinity because they had beaten us twice in Florida and they were mouthing off before the game," Holsten said. "Crushing them was a good feeling after all of the bragging that they did."

Loss to N.A.

The North Adams State game was a major heartbreaker for a Williams team that was riding an emotional high after its victory over Trinity. After falling behind 7-0 the Ephs stormed back with a five run eighth inning behind the tenacious hitting of the bottom of the batting order.

The rally began when Scott Kennedy '89 worked out a walk after fouling off a number of pitches. With Kennedy on first, Pachus hit a monstrous home run, continuing his recent power surge. After a double by Brian Harwell '90 and two walks filled the bases, Logan singled to drive in a run. Duquette then walked to force in a run.

The score stood at 7-4, with the bases loaded and one out, and the hero of the Trinity game, Steve Holsten, coming up to bat. Holsten had driven a ball to the wall earlier in the game and, although he was 0-for-3, the Williams faithful were filled with hope based on his recent hitting spree.

Going, going...

Holsten responded to those hopes by hitting a long drive, deep to centerfield. The ball was going, going... and caught by the North Adams centerfielder at the wall. Holsten noted, "I knew that I had rocked the ball and thought it might go out. Unfortunately, I hit it to the wrong part of the park. It's a little disconcerting to know that the ball would have been out of the Metrodome, [where centerfield is 408 feet away], but was caught against the 410 sign here."

Although it was a blast, Holsten's shot went into the scorebooks as a sac fly which made the score 7-5. The game ended when Kennedy flied out. The Ephs tried to improve on their .500 record with a doubleheader on Sunday at Tufts.

Beth Bernheimer '88 charges in on the Skidmore goalie during the team's 20-1 shellacking of Skidmore on Cole Field last Tuesday. The squad's next outing was not nearly as successful, a loss to Tufts on Saturday. (Scala)

Women's Lax dumps Skidmore 20-1

by Mariam Naficy

As the women's lacrosse team played to an overwhelming victory last Tuesday against Skidmore, it was easy to forget that one was watching a game and not a practice. The Ephs scored goals so rapidly that the scoreboard could not be kept up-to-the-minute and spectators lost count of the score; when the mud had finally settled, the tally stood at 20-1.

From the first minute of the game, Williams dominated, with both Co-Captain Mara

Burnett '88 and Beth Bernheimer '88 scoring early goals. A strong Williams offense controlled the ball and kept the first half of the game in Skidmore territory, as Eph after Eph, hovering around the Skidmore goal, had their chance to put one in.

Bevin Cooper '91, Kristen Frederickson '90, and Burnett scored repeatedly to raise the Eph's score to 8; meanwhile, a spirited Skidmore team rallied to score its only goal of the game.

In the second half, the Skidmore players sealed their own fate, as they got sloppy, dropping caught passes and fumbling groundballs. Following sophomore Mo Flaherty's first goal of the second half was a ten-minute dry spell, when the Skidmore defense struggled to block Eph goals. The spell was broken, however, with sophomore Amy Kershaw's magic ground shot which rolled in past an oblivious Skidmore goalie.

Continued on Page 8

MINORITY STUDENTS TAKE OVER DEANS' OFFICE

by Peter Balaban

The takeover of the Deans' Office by a group of minority students last Friday ended at 2:00 p.m. yesterday after 25 hours of on and off negotiations between the group and the administration.

College President Francis Oakley, Dean of the College Stephen Flx and Provost Neil Grabois met with about 15 students in room 107 in the Physics building to discuss their demands on Sunday, and negotiations continued late into the evening.

The negotiations resulted in an agreement between the student group, the Coalition Against Racist Education, and the administration that the college will take steps to address minority concerns at Williams in three areas, according to a statement released by the college.

These areas include "the minority presence on the Williams faculty," "the minority experience in the Williams curriculum," and "minority students and student life at Williams."

In the area of minority faculty, the college will review

the Affirmative Action program beginning next fall, and Oakley has established a committee chaired by Professor Stuart Crampton to concentrate on attracting minority faculty in the natural sciences, mathematics and computer science to Williams.

The agreement about curricular changes includes Oakley's support for a divisional requirement designed to acquaint "all Williams students with the culture, experience and achievements of America's minority populations and of Africa, Asia and Latin America," the statement said.

In the area of student life, the college "will establish four named scholarships to support low socio-economic status students at Williams, with preference to minority students from urban areas, and secondary preference to minority students from non-urban areas."

Additionally, a center will be established in order "to serve the unique social and cultural needs of minority and foreign students, open to the entire community."

On Friday, CARE spokespersons said 50 students had been in and out of the building over the course of the day. They also said throughout the weekend there were a minimum of 15 people in the building at all times.

Kevin Hinton '89 explained to a supportive crowd Saturday why CARE members decided to take over the Deans office. (Ward)

Shortly after they gained control of the two-story building, the protestors draped a banner across its front that reads, "By any means necessary, we shall not be moved."

Director of Public Information James Kolesar said Sunday he did not know if the college had asked the protestors to leave the building since the beginning of the protest.

Reaction civil at first

Campus reaction seemed civil until Saturday evening. According to CARE member Farhan Haq '89, Tasha Norman '89 returned from Jenness to her room in the Berkshire Quad to find that someone had written "Niggers get out of Jenness" in shaving cream on her door.

The incident was not reported to Williamstown Police, but Security and Flx were notified. Flx confirmed on Sunday that there had been some incidents Saturday with racial overtones, but he would not be more specific. He said he had asked security to investigate the incidents.

Haq also said that rocks had been thrown at some of the windows in Jenness Saturday evening, cracking a few of them.

Continued on Page 4

Minority students took over Jenness House, located behind the science quad, early Friday morning. (Ward)

Alumnus fights for peace-studies program

by Todd Owens

If the Reverend Robert Beggs '38 has any say in the matter, Williams College will have a new Coordinate Program in International and World-Order Studies. According to Professor of Political Science and Chair of the Gaudino Committee Kurt Tauber, Beggs, a Protestant minister, is trying to raise $1.25 million from classmates to create a new endowed professorship for the program at Williams.

In a survey sent to 500 members of the student body to determine if there is any student interest in the project, the Gaudino committee described the proposed program as "a crucial opportunity for students to begin thinking about the realities of the 21st Century in which they will be living the greater part of their life." Tauber said, "the committee will be very much guided by the survey." He added that this is only the first step in instituting the program.

A crucial opportunity for students to begin thinking about the realities of the 21st century.

According to Tauber, the committee is unsure of both the focus of the program and even its title. "I have a sense that each title carries a different message," Tauber said. He said he hopes the program will address everything that creates world conflict, but admitted that it is a broad topic and may have to be reduced.

Assistant Professor of Philosophy Philip Clayton, a member of the Gaudino Committee, said that by the 21st century virtually all careers will have an international aspect. He said this shows the importance of the proposed program.

Jay Steinman '91, a student on the committee, said that he envisions the program as less of a Peace Studies and more of a Global Studies program. He added that he was not sure if the proposal would win approval from the Committee on Educational Policy.

By the end of the semester, the committee intends to publish a 10-15 page detailed proposal which will stress the intellectual need for the program and the academic rigor which it

Continued on Page 7

Trustees approve ACSR decisions

by Bill Savadove

The trustee Finance Committee approved all of recommendations made prior to last Monday's meeting, of the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility (ACSR), according to College Treasurer William Reed. In addition, the Finance Committee urged the ACSR to examine each company doing business in South Africa on a case-by-case basis before making any recommendations.

Reed, who serves as secretary of the ACSR, said that the policy of the college towards companies doing business in South Africa remains one of disinvestment. In other words, the college has a policy of asking companies to remove their operations from South Africa.

"It becomes a matter of tactics," Reed said. "If you want companies to leave South Africa, how fast can you achieve that? If you divest, or sell your stock, you have no vote. If you urge them, through a proxy, you are still engaged in an active dialogue."

If you want companies to leave South Africa, how fast can you achieve that?

In response to the Commission Against Racist Education's demand that the college totally divest in South Africa, Reed said, "We think we're better off to have a dialogue and to view each company on a case-by-case basis... It's really more of an emotional and symbolic issue to students. To the college, it's a very real problem for how it manages its endowment."

At last Monday's meeting, ACSR members voted unanimously against a proxy that called for the Whirlpool Company to have no economic ties to South Africa. In an interview, Reed explained that "no economic ties" meant the withdrawal of the company, safeguards against products from the company entering South Africa by other channels and the termination of service contracts.

"The fact that their products may flow back there through certain channels is the reality of the world," Reed said, "and we don't think it can be prevented... We don't think that companies can willingly violate a contract."

The committee has a specific

Continued on Page 8

How sweet it is! The shredded jersey of Brad Roegge '88 and his joyful embrace of senior captain Nils Christophersen tell the tale of the WRFC's gut wrenching 23-20 upset of Dartmouth, one of the top four teams in the nation. For story, see page 14 (Scala)

INSIDE THE RECORD

BGLU furthers tension	3
College as Williamstown landlord	5
Papa Charlie's to move in two weeks	9

The Williams Record

On the Record ...

"It would take me about two days, I think, to clean up the whole drug problem — me and the Strategic Air Command."
—George Steinbrenner '52 at a press conference last Saturday

"Carefully considered, deliberate reform is needed, not the quick-fix, impractical solutions presented by CARE..."
—Petition submitted to the Deans' office Friday by Kevin Conn '90

"We are not trying to discredit Williams or divide the campus community. We are trying to bring unity and put Williams in the vanguard."
—CARE member Shaaron George '91 at Saturday rally

Keep Talking

In the grand scheme of things, it is certainly possible that the takeover of Jenness House by a group of minority students over the weekend will be relegated to the annals of history as yet another episode in minority student activism at Williams.

The administration's concessions are far from the structural change the group said it was seeking after it walked into Jenness Friday morning.

Certainly the students saw the need to compromise—it would have been unlikely that the college would have waited the week out with the deans denied access to facilities needed to run the college.

What is essential is that the administration recognizes the need to keep minority concerns — from faculty hiring to investment policy in South Africa — on the agenda for the long term. Manufactured crises must no longer be the trigger for change.

LETTERS

The Williams Record welcomes letters from the community. Submissions should be no more than 300 words and must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and to edit them for length.

Show us what you think. The Record is now accepting applications for an editorial cartoonist for next year. Contact Chuck Samuelson at X2400.

DEBBIE SNYDER, EDITOR IN CHIEF
AL MOTTUR, EXECUTIVE EDITOR
RUSS HOLLENBECK, BUSINESS DIRECTOR

PETER BALABAN, NEWS EDITOR
BETH BROADRUP, FEATURES EDITOR
TED HOBART, SPORTS EDITOR
JED SCALA, PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR
KIRSTEN HASENFUSS, LAYOUT EDITOR

CHARLES SAMUELSON, OP-ED EDITOR
TRAVIS PIERSON, ARTS EDITOR
MARC McDERMOTT, SPORTS EDITOR
RICH WARD, PHOTOGRAPHY EDITOR
MARY ILIFF, LAYOUT EDITOR

News Assistants: Stephanie Jones, Scott O'Callaghan, Todd Owens
Features Assistants: Ann Mantil, Rob Weisberg
Photography Assistant: Jay Steinman
Layout Assistant: Lisa Keestner

Entered as Second-Class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-Class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM

by Rich Gardella

Letters

CARE's acts lack substance

Forgive me for blending lofty issues with low comedy, but it seems to me that the events of this weekend have placed the College administration in an absurd position analogous to that which John Cleese faces in the Monty Python's "argument sketch." The discourse Cleese is cornered in leads him to protest, "Wait a minute, this isn't an argument...an argument is a connected series of statements designed to support or contest a proposition." CARE (the Coalition Against Racist Education), seems most willing to play the part of Michael Palin in our current replay of this high drama, eagerly intoning little more than, "No, it isn't."

I would like offer some food for genuine argumentation, as well as several constructive suggestions, by way of systematically and rigorously considering CARE, its list of "concerns which could be addressed immediately by the administration," and its expropriation of Jenness House this weekend.

Let us first consider the name of the organization. I am particularly disturbed by the phrase "racist education." It necessarily implies that the faculty and administration is racist. Furthermore, the implication is made with out substantive supporting evidence. Let me start by defining my terms. The O.E.D. offers the following definition for the word "racist," which, I believe is quite revealing: "racist (substantially racialism): belief in the superiority of a particular race leading to prejudice and antagonism towards people of other races, especially those in close proximity who may be felt as a threat to one's cultural and racial integrity or economic well being." Bearing this definition in mind, let us consider the three "demands" contained in the group's April 23rd memo to the Williams Community.

The first demand is that the College appoint a Black or Hispanic Special Assistant to the President. For the result of this demand to be anything other than a token gesture, Nancy McIntire, the current Special Assistant to the President, would have to be fired. There's no point in making two positions on the staff where one person already suffices. Of course, if Ms. McIntire were fired, I should think it would be fully within her right to sue the College for discrimination. Imagine what these legal proceedings might sound like:

THE WELL PAID LAWYER: "Would

Ms. McIntire please tell the court why she believes she lost her job?"
MS. MCINTIRE: "I was dismissed, your honor, because my skin was not deemed to be of an appropriate color."

If these proceedings were to take place, then I think we would have more than enough evidence to justify the assertion that the College is comprised of racist educators. I'm sorry, but I can't accept the group's first demand. I'm not of the opinion that racism will be eradicated by engaging in acts which are racist by definition.

CARE's second demand is that the College "establish...full scholarships for Black, Asian, and Hispanic students of low socio-economic status, from major urban areas." Correct me if I am mistaken, but does Williams not already guarantee that it will meet the full demonstrated economic need of all its students? Are we not one of the FEW schools in the country which has totally NEED-BLIND admissions? Wouldn't the designation of "Asian money" and "Black money" be nothing more than another token gesture—something which would offend me if I were a person of race. Why invent labels like "the HISPANIC financial aid fund" where they are not needed? Furthermore, why is CARE only concerned with poor minorities "from major urban areas?" People demanding sweeping change should be semantically rigorous, lest they appear myopic. (I'd hate to be excluded from the brave new world of opportunities that these demands are going to create because I was a rural minority). Wouldn't it be a more reasonable mandate for the College to attempt to increase the overall number of minority applicants? This could only lead to a more interesting and diverse community as a greater number of less "traditional" applicants was accepted and matriculated.

The third demand was that the College set aside [or build?] a "cultural center to meet the unique social and cultural needs of minority students at the College." This, I think, has possibilities. However, before the administration commits a million dollars to the formation of a new cultural center, it deserves to have the following questions legitimately answered. First of all, what exactly are these needs? Secondly, what is it about these needs that requires they be met in a new College building? That is, what is the substance of these needs which cannot be met within the established structures of the College? If CARE were saying "We want to see Kabuki theater productions at the AMT," or, "We want to see contemporary Afro-American art exhibited at the

Continued on Page 8

An "emotive" Dr. Caldicott ignored the facts

by Drew Erdmann '88

I eagerly postponed one more night's work on my senior thesis to attend Dr. Helen Caldicott's lecture "Stop the Nuclear Madness." I did so not because of my well known propensity for procrastination, but because Dr. Caldicott is one of the major leaders of the modern anti-nuclear movement. Emotionally I hoped Dr. Caldicott would be able to convince me that there could be total nuclear disarmament. Intellectually I wished she would provide insight into the nuclear dilemma confronting humanity. When I left Chapin Hall after her speech, however, I found myself grossly disappointed by her presentation. Let me explain the reasons for my frustration.

I will not respond to some of Dr. Caldicott's more provocative statements such as Gorbachev could be the second coming of Jesus Christ, two years ago nuclear war was nearly imminent, or that a Constitutional amendment mandating proportional representation in Congress by sex (but not race) is required. I will simply confine my remarks to Dr. Caldicott's call for complete disarmament.

Dr. Caldicott did not offer any actual plan on how to achieve disarmament other than her pleas for peaceful and, if necessary, destructive civilian protest.

Dr. Caldicott's lecture was unquestionably emotive — but that was all. Quite simply, there was almost no intellectual merit to her entire talk. Dr. Caldicott's lecture was propaganda in the most pure form. She manipulated the audience's emotions by systematically distorting evidence. For example, she irresponsibly portrayed the risks of an accidental nuclear war as a definite possibility, if not a probability. Her statement that our strategic forces are controlled by computers is simply not true.

I was rather surprised that Dr. Caldicott, a self-proclaimed expert on nuclear strategy, never once mentioned Soviet doctrine. Moreover, I found it especially interesting that she could describe the development of American nuclear strategy in three different, mutually exclusive ways, in under two hours with no hesitation.

The true disappointment of Dr. Caldicott's speech, however, lies not in her contradictory arguments or misstatement of fact, but in the logic, or lack thereof, behind her advocacy of total disarmament.

logical, conflict between the superpowers. I don't think I need to list the numerous confrontations between the superpowers over the last four decades, ranging from the Berlin Crises to the current proxy war in Angola, to emphasize that there are definite clashes between American and Soviet interests. These simply cannot be ignored.

Even if you accept that the United States and the Soviet Union can disarm simultaneously, as Dr. Caldicott recommends, what kind of world would we live in? A "paradise" Dr. Caldicott contends. But would it be a peaceful "paradise"? I don't think so.

Dr. Caldicott did not deny that nuclear weapons have deterred war in Europe, she merely called this form of deterrence "racist" since it has not also deterred all Third World conflicts as well. What I find strange is that peace loving Dr. Caldicott should belittle the fact that nuclear weapons have helped deter war in Europe for the last four decades — especially after she herself argued that if there were a conventional war in Europe today, Europe would be uninhabitable forever because of damage to atomic power plants.

I do agree with Dr. Caldicott's assertion that nuclear weapons have made "all war... obsolete." The sheer terror produced by the possibility of escalation to a nuclear exchange has induced an unprecedented amount of caution in superpower relations, thus promoting international stability. Like it or not, the existence of nuclear weapons is one of the major reasons why the two superpowers have been able to wage a cold war, without falling into a hot one, for over forty years. This is not to say that relations between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. cannot or should not be improved; I am merely agreeing with Dr. Caldicott that nuclear weapons have made war between the superpowers unthinkable.

I really don't understand, however, how Dr. Caldicott can believe that the idea of "all war is obsolete" will continue to exist after the things that induced this state of affairs, nuclear weapons, no longer exist. Dr. Caldicott does not condition her call for complete disarmament by any substantive realignment in the international system; rather she explicitly calls for immediate and unconditional complete disarmament. Since there are legitimate conflicts between the superpowers, there would be a much higher probability of a confrontation sparking a war if both nations were not afraid of the possibility of a nuclear holocaust.

Dr. Caldicott did not offer any actual plan on how to achieve disarmament other than her pleas for peaceful and, if necessary, destructive civilian protest. Even if you believe that there is no real basis for superpower confrontation, can one easily assume that the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. could trust each other to disarm totally?

As both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. approached total disarmament, there would be an almost irresistible urge to cheat and hide a few weapons. Dr. Caldicott admitted that certain types of nuclear weapons are undetectable. Either nation could believe that by hiding a few weapons it could have a decisive advantage in event of war, or, that since the other nation could be covertly stockpiling weapons, it would be wise to conceal some for purely defensive reasons.

Such thinking, however, would introduce incredible instability into superpower relations. Just imagine the situation if a crisis arose, war seemed a possibility, and yet one superpower had secretly stored nuclear weapons. This nation may believe that it could launch a preemptive strike against the other, suffer no retaliation, and thus gain a decisive victory. Unlike today where nuclear war is simply unthinkable, a world "disarmed" could be a world where true victory in nuclear war becomes possible.

It is a paradox of the nuclear age that when many weapons exist the fear of using them remains unspeakably high, thus actually inhibiting war; conversely, when very few weapons exist, the possibility of successfully disarming an adversary with a first strike, and therefore, the possibility of actually winning a nuclear war, increases dramatically.

The possibility of nuclear war inherently elicits an emotional response. When repulsed by the horror of nuclear war, one should ask, "What can be done to prevent a nuclear war?" One should not simply jump to one conclusion or another on the basis of faith. Though an emotional issue, the prevention of nuclear war mandates an intelligent response based on reality, not an impulsive one based on passion. The stakes involved — humanity itself — are simply too high to leap before one looks.

Continued on Page 8

BGLU's "techniques of propaganda" further tension and division

by Ken Levy '91

What every single person at Williams College, regardless of his/her sexual affiliation, should find repelling if not revolting is the arrogant manner in which homosexual advocates recently scribbled pro-homosexual slogans and symbols on sidewalks all over Williams College. While everybody at Williams, and in this country for that matter, should be allowed to express any views they have at any time, this does not mean that they necessarily should be allowed to give vent to such expression in any fashion they desire. There is a code of ethics called manners. If the homosexuals want to attempt to turn what they believe to be the heterosexuals' "dark-ages" minds around, then nobody has the right to deny them that prerogative. But this specific form of persuasive attempt sharply defies at least two codes of conduct with which Williams students should, I believe, unanimously and unequivocally assent.

First of all, such acts amounted to nothing less than vandalism, defined as "the willful or malicious destruction or defacement of things of beauty or of public or private property." Surely, because these markings were in chalk, they will eventually disappear with time. But what would people who argue this say if the chalk used to scribble this graffiti had been used instead to scribble Nazi propaganda? I don't believe that they would be as complacent about the fact that this too would disappear eventually. They would argue, and rightly so, that this is a form of vandalism. The same reasoning should apply in this case.

Vandalism is vandalism; it is not qualified by the content of the graffiti or the amount of time in which the graffiti disappears.

Of course, it may be reasonably objected that there is a fine line that can be drawn between justified and unjustified graffiti, regardless of its illegality. For example, it could be argued that the French Resistance or the Jews in the Warsaw Ghetto under Hitler's regime would have been entirely justified in scrawling anti-Nazi slogans anywhere they could have. And this is certainly true, only because they did not have the option to freely express their views publicly and therefore were forced to resort to subversive tactics if they were to communicate their views at all. But the homosexual advocates, on the other hand, are just as free as any other group on campus to express their views in a civilized fashion. Therefore, there is no excuse for their graffiti; it was illegal and unjustified.

There is a code of ethics called manners.

But here one may argue that the homosexual advocates are not just as free as any other group on campus to express their views publicly; that whenever they attempt to do so, they meet with a humiliating mixture of scorn and apathy, thus making the attempt futile and discouraging. But, assuming this to be true (which is not necessarily so), the fact that their viewpoints meet with disapproval does not then signify that their freedom to express these viewpoints is being limited or denied. Freedom of expression depends not on how successful the speaker is or on how comfortable the speaker feels, the latter of which is actually a self-imposed limitation, but whether the speaker is allowed to express him/herself in the first place. It is plainly illogical to equate a negative reaction with a denial of free expression, for any reaction automatically necessitates something to which to react. The homosexuals, as uncomfortable or unsuccessful as they may be speaking before what they believe to be an antagonistic community, are nevertheless completely free to express themselves. Thus, the homosexual advocates still had no excuse for their graffiti, since they did have other legal and less underhanded means of expression than stealthily covering the sidewalks at Williams at night while the rest of the student body slept.

Secondly, this type of obnoxious propaganda is very similar in form and style to some of the propaganda tactics used by groups of the very bigoted nature against which these homosexual advocates are fighting. Just as racist groups such as the Ku Klux Klan and anti-semitic groups such as the neo-Nazis insolently spread their bigoted slogans and symbols without regard for the many moral values they offend, so too did the homosexual advocates impudently spread their own slogans and symbols without regard for the many heterosexual values that they implicitly and explicitly offended. For example, the slogan "Gay Power is Great Power" outside Sawyer Library implied not only that "Heterosexual power is not Great Power" but that what homosexuals are really after is not mere harmony or acceptance by the community but control itself, as if in an attempt to oust the prevalence of heterosexual values that now exists. They attempted more to force a way of thinking upon Williams students than to persuade them through rational argument. If their message really had merit, then they wouldn't have had to resort to tactics of intimidation as opposed to tactics of education and civility.

Those people repelled by the practice of homosexuality, for whatever reason, should never deny or attempt to deny the homosexuals the rights that all other citizens of the United States share. Homosexuals, like anybody else, are people deserving respect for whom they are and not what they are. Nevertheless, the homosexual advocates who scrawled these slogans here at Williams College should learn the simple but fundamental fact that in assailing the students of Williams College in such an offensive manner, they are only compelling the students they are trying to convince to think of them more as anonymous labels than individual human beings — again, more as what they are than who they are. Thus, they are, through such techniques of propaganda, only furthering the present division and tension between them and the rest of the Williams community and therefore hurting rather than helping their cause.

Minority group occupies Jenness House

Continued from Page 1

The group said it took over Jenness to protest the administration's unwillingness to address fundamental issues regarding minority concerns at the college.

The concerns included recruitment and hiring policies for minority faculty, students and staff; minority representation in the curriculum; and minority life at the college.

Apparently not enough

Members of CARE had presented a list of 13 demands related to minority concerns to Oakley and Fix on March 4. By the time CARE members met with administrators on March 17, their last meeting before the takeover, Oakley had agreed to parts of three of the demands, including establishing a memorial for theater professor Michael Knight, who died in December, and promising to maintain support for two Bolin Fellows.

But CARE apparently was not satisfied with the action taken by the college. "These discussions, as well as similar discussions involving other groups over the years, have not been fruitful. Rather, what has become clear... is the power differential that exists in favor of the administration," a Saturday statement said.

Associate Dean of the College Mary Kenyatta wanted assurance Friday from CARE members Sean McPherson '89 and Jillian Charles '91 that protestors would stay away from confidential student files in the Dean's office. (Scala)

"This action is one of empowerment," the statement said.

Fix sent a letter to the college community Friday that said the college had offered repeatedly to hold further meetings with CARE members.

"All of us in the college are prepared to continue such discussions in any atmosphere that is conducive to the free and open exchange of ideas," Fix's letter said.

Gap in negotiations

Another CARE statement, distributed at a press conference held Friday evening in Hardy House, cited recent actions of the college's Advisory Committee on Shareholder

Responsibility with regard to its policy on divestment, as well as a gap in negotiations with the college, as triggers for the takeover. Members were quick to acknowledge, though, that the action had been timed to coincide with Parent's Weekend, held from Friday to Sunday, in order to obtain maximum visibility.

A Sunday release demanded a public acknowledgment by the administration that Williams' present policy on investment in South Africa "is directly opposed to the views of the overwhelming majority of black students concerned with this issue."

The media, including the Associated Press wire service, ran stories on the event. An AP version ran of the story in Saturday's New York Times. A story on the takeover also appeared in the Boston Globe on Saturday. Television stations across the country picked up the story from AP, and on Sunday several local television stations sent camera crews to cover negotiations.

By Sunday, CARE's demands seemed to have changed a bit from the original list of 13 they had given to Oakley and Fix in March. The biggest change related to the college's investment policies.

and through the science quad, stopped in front of Jenness and formed a semi-circle facing the building. By the end of the rally the size of the group of supporters had surpassed 100.

Before CARE members came out of Jenness to address the crowd, some people in the crowd began singing "We Shall Overcome."

"The administration has been insufficiently powerful to assist minority concerns for too long," Kevin Hinton '89 told the crowd, as a few CARE members peered down from their vantage point on the roof.

Thanks for support

Hinton thanked members of the crowd for supporting the protestors through donations in food and in moral support. Haq said that members of the Jewish Association, VISTA, ASIA and the Black Student Union, which is located directly across from Jenness in Rice House, had all donated food. Members of Gladden House had also donated leftovers from their Friday cookout.

Hinton said that people had asked why CARE needed to take over a building. "They assumed mistakenly that the administration has been so reasonable and that we were being impetuous. That's not the case. Minority concerns have been systematically abandoned or brushed over."

Hinton attacked the college's investment policy with respect to South Africa. "Rather than divest they continue to invest when considered just and expedient."

He said that although he thought there has been a sincere willingness on the part of the college and Oakley to discuss minority concerns, there has been little change.

He suggested two new ways the college could address minority concerns. He said the school could begin an exchange of senior faculty members with Howard and Fisk Universities, which are black and which the college already has an undergraduate exchange with. College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 has also been pushing for the idea. Hinton also said that the college could reduce the teaching load for minority junior faculty members, who are often expected to be "Renaissance men" in terms of their activities.

Nation-wide movement

CARE member Shaaron George '91 spoke after Hinton. She said that the takeover was part of a nation-wide movement, citing a student takeover at Wesleyan University which began last week.

"We want to harmonize our minority community and campus community with the administration's policy and actions. "We are seeking to make life bearable here. You ask why aren't we integrating? We are asking for acknowledgement and respect for our differences... Don't ask us to integrate if you're not ready to acknowledge what we are."

"We are not trying to discredit Williams or divide the campus community. We are trying to bring unity and put Williams in the vanguard."

But the support expressed at the Saturday rally was apparently not shared by everyone. A petition criticizing the takeover as a publicity stunt was submitted to the Dean's office on Friday.

Kevin Conn '90 circulated the petition, which 21 people signed.

"Although we are sincerely opposed to racism in any form, we believe the that college is doing its best to address this problem," the petition said. "Carefully considered, deliberate reform is needed, not the quick-fix, impractical solutions presented by CARE in its original thirteen demands."

Administrators met throughout the weekend to discuss the takeover, but they declined comment on specific aspects of negotiations or the college's next moves.

Minority concerns spark a wave of national protests

by Beth Broadrup and Ann Mantil

Wesleyan

A protest of indefinite duration began on Monday April 18 at Wesleyan University when about 100 students initiated a sit-in in the waiting room outside president Colin Campbell's office in South College.

Student frustration with Wesleyan's policy on divesting stock from companies involved with South Africa sparked the protest. One of the group's goals is to "build pressure for divestment both on the Wesleyan campus and in the larger community," according to the group's statement of purpose.

On the following day, the students issued a two-part demand: first, that President Campbell clarify his stand on the university's divestment policy; second, that the Social Implications Subcommittee (SISC), advisors to the Trustees on investment policy, hold an open meeting no later than May 1 to discuss proposals it submitted to the Board of Trustees three days before.

The administration agreed to both parts of the demand, yet students remain unmoved, according to student Rob Freundlich, who spoke on behalf of the group. "We shall not be moved until we are satisfied that concrete and irrevocable steps have been taken by Wesleyan University toward divestment," students said in a statement. Freundlich said that the sit-in will continue at least until the SISC meeting.

University of Vermont

From April 18-22 at least a dozen minority students took over the president's office at the University of Vermont. The group did so to protest university inaction on higher recruitment of minority students and professors, according to the Brattleboro Reformer.

"We've heard the excuse that blacks don't like the cold," said one protester. "It just shows a lot of ignorance on the part of the administration."

Besides occupying the administrative offices, the group also waged a hunger strike, refusing anything but water until the school met their demands. On Friday, an agreement was reached that ended the protest.

School officials agreed to create 4 new minority faculty positions and double the number of minority students over the next four years, begin a racial awareness program for new faculty and staff and offer a course on racial issues to freshmen.

Duke

Student and faculty protests at Duke University over the last two weeks have led to a reversal of a decision on minority hiring. The New York Times reports that the Faculty Advisory Council passed a proposal requiring each of the more than fifty academic departments to hire one additional black faculty member by 1993.

Duke president Keith Brodie was one of 3000 people who signed a petition urging the council to reconsider its decision last month to "provide incentives" for hiring, instead of actually requiring it.

The new policy is expected to almost double the current number of 31 black faculty. However, some faculty warned that departments in the sciences may have trouble fulfilling the requirement, citing the fact that only six blacks earned Ph.D.s in mathematics last year in the entire United States.

In response to these statistics, the faculty further resolved to double the university's number of black doctoral candidates by 1993 and to provide a program of financial aid for them.

Senior sociology major in class by himself

by Alex Oh

Mike Friedman '88 got his first glimpse of cross-cultural social behavior when he and his father, an American diplomat, attended a festival in an African village to celebrate the construction of a new school building.

Following the ceremony, his father and his Marine security guards found it necessary to relieve themselves behind the brand-new building, which lacked indoor plumbing.

Although this particular incident probably did not have a long range effect on his development, Friedman credits his early experiences with differences between cultures as a major factor in his interest in sociology.

Friedman, not surprisingly, is a sociology major; what does seem surprising is that he is the only sociology major in the senior class, which has over 500 members.

"Student preferences have their own rhythm and patterns. There are certain national trends—for instance, during the '60s and early '70s, student interest in anthropology and sociology was high, but then it declined in the late '70s," said Associate Professor of Anthropology Michael Brown.

Brown, who is acting chairperson of the combined sociology and anthropology department, cited changing student attitudes as the cause of fluctuating student interest in sociology.

"Without sounding cliched, I think you'll be seeing a fallout from the me-generation of the Reagan Era," Brown added. "Students are becoming more interested in social and public issues and civil service, rather than investment banking."

Afraid to major

Friedman and Brown agree that sociology is currently unpopular with a majority of students. "I am convinced that people are afraid to major in it because the only thing they think they can do with it is either become a teacher or a social worker," Friedman said.

"The reason I majored in sociology is because, in my opinion, elements of anthropology, history, political science and architecture are all covered in the department," he said. Friedman praised the enthusiasm of the department whose staff outnumbered its majors.

"The professors really know what they're doing, and they're really caring about student development," he said. Although he said the personal attention he received from professors was one of the biggest strengths of the department, Friedman pointed out that the size of the department was a weakness.

"They are only two teachers right now since Professor Jackall is on sabbatical," he said, "and there's not much selection because of the size." According to Brown, classes are well-populated despite the limited selection.

"We'd like to consider our offerings as lean and mean," Brown stated.

Brown said that Friedman's status as the lone wolf sociology major is deceiving, and despite the low numbers of majors in classes of 1988 and 1989—one in '88 and none to date in '89—outlooks for the incoming freshmen are bright. He said that during the last prospective weekend, he was inundated with prospective students showing interest in

Continued on Page 8

College, as landlord, tries to shape town's retail business

by Cassandra Kirk

It might be construed as Williams' version of Manifest Destiny. But whatever you call it, the college is becoming increasingly involved in owning property in Williamstown that is used for retail space, and it seems to have its reasons.

Last Thursday, the Zoning Board of Appeals approved the college's sale of Grundy's Garage on Water Street to Deborah Donovan, who owns The Cottage store on Water Street. The college will retain ownership of the back half of the building for faculty art studio use. Attorney Bruce Grinnell called this process "condominimizing," where the college will retain no control over the commercial space in the front of the building.

other small college towns do the same thing; Harvard and Yale own a tremendous amount of real estate...

The Grundy's project seems to be part of a larger phenomenon: the college's desire to be closely involved in the makeup of retail shops in the center of Williamstown.

On Spring Street the college owns several buildings occupied by shops that cater primar-ly to students: the Danforth Block (Drummond Cleaners, the College Bookstore, the Library Antiques), the Mead Block (Treet Cleaners, Chet's Barber Shop), and the Adams Block (containing Hart's Pharmacy, Salvatore's, the Williamstown Advocate, McClelland's). It owns office space in the new Chandler Gymnasium, which it rents to Goodman's Jewelers, the Williams News Room, Pappa Charlie's Deli Sandwich Shop and an automatic bank teller machine owned by Berkshire Bank and Trust. It also owns McMahon House (the Travel Store) and Mullen House (Gallup-Dickey Insurance Agency).

"Charm of New England"

College Treasurer William Reed said the school owns the buildings because it wants property on Spring Street to reflect the values and characteristic charm of New England and it wants to insure that essential services are provided for students who do not have cars.

Rudy Goff, owner of Goff's Sports Inc., said of the college-owned properties, "They're probably the best on Spring Street." He said that these buildings have remained in good condition due to the college's continued presence.

Reed said that the college effectively subsidizes businesses in buildings it rents on Spring Street by keeping rents

Stanford

In a speech last week responding to Stanford University's recently ratified change in its Western Cultural Studies curriculum, Secretary of Education William J. Bennett (Williams '65) called the decision "an unfortunate capitulation to a campaign of pressure politics and intimidation." The change eliminated the mandatory reading of 15 classics for freshmen, replacing it with different books each year, some addressing racism and sexism. Bennett, speaking at Stanford, said, "a great university was brought low by the very forces which modern universities came into being to oppose—ignorance, irrationality and intimidation." Stanford president David Kennedy called Bennett "either ill-informed or irresponsible." According to the Berkshire Eagle, Bennett, who described Stanford as controlled by a "left-wing political agenda" including Marxism and feminism, agreed that Asian and African cultures should be studied but should not overshadow Western cultural studies.

SUNY Albany

During what may have been a final initiation rite of the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity, a 20-year-old sophomore pledge was electrocuted Thursday night as he waded into a concrete-bottom drainage pond at the State University of New York in Albany. Bryan Higgins had stripped to his underwear and waded into the water when friends saw him begin to shake. "They thought he was fooling around," said Albany County Coroner Timothy Cavanaugh. According to the New York Times, four other students in the pond suffered minor injuries. The university has initiated an investigation of the source of the electrical current in the campus pond. Meanwhile, Sunday's scheduled "Mayfest" celebration was canceled by university officials, who also forbid fraternity pledging for the rest of the year.

North Adams State

Selectmen of Florida, Mass. officially voted last week to deny a North Adams State College fraternity a beer license to hold its Roll-a-Keg fundraiser in an empty lot across from Giovanni's Restaurant on Route 2. Beta Chi Gamma has held the event for the past 10 years; all money goes to A Child's Wish Come True, an organization granting wishes to terminally ill children. The fraternity's president, Scott Schmidt, said partygoers would have been taken by bus to the party site and checked for proof of age, reported the Berkshire Eagle. Apparently selectmen's worries about underage drinking and noise overrode assurances made by Beta Chi Gamma. The fraternity is looking for a new location for the party.

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Beth Broadrup.

low enough to allow those businesses to continue to provide services to students.

"Some of those businesses are marginal," he said, "and if we charged what we could command for those spaces they would not make it."

Director of Buildings and Grounds Winthrop Wassenar was quick to add that the college is not losing money in these buildings; "they show us operating expenses and profits." He was reluctant, however, to compare the exact amount of rent paid in the subsidized buildings to rent paid in those that are not owned by the college.

"Other small college towns do the same thing; Harvard and Yale own a tremendous amount of real estate and some of this includes commercial space," Wassenar said.

Reed said that Williamstown is "not a company town, but [the college] wants to protect its interests."

When questioned about high prices charged by stores that rent from the college on Spring Street, Wassenar said that the pricing of items was entirely in the hands of the stores themselves, not the college.

Todd Solomon '84, co-owner of Bette's Life and Times, which rents its building space but not from the college, said, "The rents certainly put a lot of pressure on what [shops in non-college-owned buildings] have to charge people. We're doing everything we can [to keep the prices modest]." According to Solomon, a year ago the businesses in college-owned buildings paid approximately half the amount of rent paid by other businesses.

The Grundy's project differs somewhat from college involvement with Spring Street because the college does not

Continued on Page 8

The Adams Block on Spring Street is only one of the units of retail property that Williams College owns. (Ward)

GATES REAL ESTATE

"Berkshire Properties"

Vacation — Lake Related

Farm & Residential

(413) 862-4565

(413) 269-6585

Brokers:
Nancy Gates
Jack Gates

Associates:
Fred Metcalf
Ken Cronin

Hobson's Choice

Fine Food & Good Spirits

Serving lunch, snacks & dinner non-stop
from 11:30 a.m. 'til 9 p.m.

Home-made soups and unique dinner specials

A casual & relaxed decor of natural wood & brick

Informal bar for good drinks &
interesting conversation.

159 Water Street (opp. Carol Cable), Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-9101

PART TIME — HOME MAILING PROGRAM

Excellent Income! Details, send
S.A.S.E. West, Box 5877, Hillside, NJ 07205.

Chemists, Biologists, Geologists needed for summer employment. Positions available locally and in all areas of MA or NY. Send resumes to: W.S.T., 2211 Main St., Buffalo, NY 14214.

SUMMER HELP WANTED

General maintenance work — lawns, fencing, some painting, simple carpentry, etc. on country residence in Williamstown. Please call 458-3395 for more info.

Chekhov's "Three Sisters" light up Williams theatre

by Erik T. Burns

Williams theatre's spring production of Chekhov's "Three Sisters" is a wonderfully straightforward presentation of the playwright's melancholic treatment of the bored Russian upper class in the days before the revolution. Chekhov's play explores the parlor ponderings of a disillusioned elite, an elite obsessed with their days of glorious youth and dreams of their heaven, Moscow.

The play drags some during the third act, however, and the major complaint I had was with the length. Schechter's direction kept up enough visual distraction to get the audience through some of the slow points, but the show does leave you drained.

As usual, the technical aspects of the play were fantastic. Maggie Kuypers and Patricia Purdy's well-hung, well-draped stage gave the feel of the ridiculous burgeoning grandiosity of the aristocratic domus. The sound and light show was flawless as well, although I would have liked the final gunshot to have sounded more like a gunshot and less like a muffled champagne cork being popped.

"The Three Sisters" plays again this weekend, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, at the Adams Memorial Theater Main Stage, at 8:00 pm. Cost is $1.00 with Williams I.D., $2.00 general.

The acting is very good, especially the realization of the three sisters themselves, whose individual idiosyncrasies and dreams are poignantly treated. Michael Barrata lends comic relief as the deadpan rake Solyony, and Vershinin, the staid Lt. Col. with eyes and more for the middle sister Masha, is perfectly played by Ben Voorhes. Anthony Winkler also puts in a bravura performance as Doctor Chebutykin, the questioning existentialist.

George Wesley Bellows' lithograph The Stag at Sharkey's is part of the exhibition of American prints currently on display at the Clark.

Plethora of prints come to Clark

by Jon Ward

Print aficionados will be pleased by the print exhibitions currently at the Clark Art Institute. "Images of Venice: Etchings by Whistler and his American Followers," an exhibition organized by Courtney Braun, a student in the Williams Art History Graduate Program, focuses on the multifaceted representations of this historic Italian city by the American expatriate James Abbott McNeill Whistler and some of his followers. In addition to this, two new exhibits, "American Prints" and "New Acquisitions," opened last weekend.

In September, 1879, Whistler arrived in Venice on a three month sojourn to create a series of twelve etchings under commission from the Society of Fine Arts, London. Something of a rebel, Whistler extended his stay until November 1880, and produced over fifty etchings and pastels of the city. Whistler's unique visions of Venice inspired a group of American artists, studying in the city under the tutelage of Frank Duveneck, to work with him.

The exhibition features works by several of the "Duveneck Boys," including Charles Corwin, Otto Bacher, and John Henry Twachtman, as well as Duveneck himself. In addition, etchings of Venice by John Marin, Cadwallier Washburn and Ernest Roth, a second generation of Whistler-influenced painter-etchers, are included. The exhibition effectively highlights the influence of Whistler's daring representations in the work of his followers.

The works selected for the show are few in number but well chosen, providing an intimate setting for these smaller prints. Whistler's etchings are characteristically evocative, featuring unpicturesque and atypical views of Venice highlighted by his economy of line and form. His "Long Venice" etching depicts a distant view of the Doges' Palace and other Venetian Landmarks, with the foreground left surprisingly and powerfully empty. This Whistlerian use of blank space to both balance and contrast the rendered form is well suited to the print format, and can be seen in the work of many of his followers, most notably Washburn. Whistler's velvety atmospheric use of ink in some of his more radical work, such as, "Nocturne: Shipping," is echoed in a work like Blum's "Ships at Anchor, Venice." The intimacy of the exhibition encourages this type of comparison, as do the well-researched and informative museum labels.

American Prints

Newly opened is an exhibition of American prints, featuring works by Winslow Homer,

George Wesley Bellows, Maurice Steiner, and Joseph Penell. A number of famous works or print versions of famous paintings are included, such as Bellows' "Stag at Sharkey's," a 1917 lithograph based on his 1909 painting of the same name. This Ash Can School masterpiece is more precise than its loosely painted model, and the lines of the boxers' bodies are more defined and realistic, but it retains the mood of spontaneity and vibrancy central to the painting. The 1909 work's use of light/dark contrasts is even more sharply pronounced here, as the white glow of the boxers and the ring float above the shadowed spectators.

Also especially noteworthy is Homer's "Eight Bells," a document to his love of the sea, and its combination of beauty and danger. In the etching, Homer places two dark sailors armed with nautical measuring devices in front of a turbulent sky and sea. Typical to Homer, the scene is depicted realistically, nature dominating over the sailors, who seem powerless against the massive waves and clouds facing them.

New Acquisitions

The "New Acquisitions" exhibition is an opportunity to view the new prints joining the Institute's already extensive collection. Although the prints are quite diverse in subject and technique, there are several groups of related works which were acquired together. Notable among these are nine me-

Continued on Page 9

Pulitzer Prize-winning poet James Merrill, read selections from his works last Tuesday in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall. Merrill, whose published career has spanned the last 40 years, is considered by many to be one of the most important living poets. (Ward)

Dr. Helen Caldicott, a leading spokesperson against nuclear arms, seemed to cast a spell over her Chapin Hall audience last week. (Steinman)

Caldicott condemns nuclear madness in emotional speech

by Michael Reisman

Dr. Helen Caldicott, a leading spokesperson for nuclear freeze, spoke last Wednesday in Chapin Hall. She drew a large audience from Williamstown and the Berkshire county area but failed to attract a large student turnout. At the beginning of the talk, titled "Stop the Nuclear Madness," she looked out at the crowd and said, "I wish there were more students here because it's their future."

Caldicott, a physician and author, is a native of Australia. She has taught at Harvard Medical School and has served as President of Physicians for Social Responsibility. She was less affected by the emotional appeal of her speech, which covered many topics, including political apathy, Reagan, the chances of an accidental nuclear war, the current strategic stance of the superpowers and the Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces Treaty recently signed by the Soviet Union and the U.S.

Caldicott discussed the reasons for the low student turnout and general apathy in the United States on the issue of nuclear war.

"The only way to get people to think about [the possibility of nuclear war] is to get past the psychic numbing," she said. Caldicott added that polls taken over the last several years have shown that most Americans favor a nuclear freeze.

Caldicott blamed American apathy on "cold war" attitudes and anti-communist nationalism. "The absolute, concrete belief that the Soviets are evil scares me," she said.

People who own or are employed by corporations have reasons to support the war economy, Caldicott said, because almost every corporation in this country is involved in making weapons. According to Caldicott, corporations can make a 75 percent profit from weapons production and only a 15 percent profit from civilian enterprises. "War is good for business," she said.

Caldicott said that increasing international tension has driven the superpowers to adopt a policy of "launch on warning" in which nuclear weapons are controlled and launched by com-

Continued on Page 12

Peace-studies

Continued from Page 1

will entail. "The proposal will be a draft, our first pass at the community," Tauber said. He added that he hopes to have related course listings in the Williams College Bulletin by next fall.

Next semester, the proposal will enter a phase of soliciting student opinion, Tauber said. He plans open meetings and contact with the College Council. By January of 1989, Tauber said the proposal should go to the CEP and ought to come before the faculty for final approval in March.

According to Tauber, one of the major stumbling blocks will be persuading the faculty and administration that the program is worth the cost.

"Money is relatively scarce and people are not as bullish as they were, say, prior to October 19," Tauber said. He added that, until the money is raised for the professorship, he hopes that the professorship will be able to operate without hiring any new professors.

According to Clayton, the program will draw most of its courses from other departments, although they hope to offer independent introductory and capstone courses. Eventually, the committee hopes that new courses, such as those men-

Student-run leadership course coming in fall

by Stephanie Jones

A new course which was initiated by a student will be offered next semester. The offering, titled "On Leadership," marks the second time a student-initiated course has been implemented at Williams.

The course, created by Hal Hermanson '89, will begin by considering theories of leadership and will then see how they apply to various leaders, ranging from St. Paul to Donald Trump. The course is different from those offered at other colleges because it is about leadership styles rather than how to be a leader, Hermanson added.

"I'm interested in initiating things. I've always initiated things ... I think it's fun to create something new," said Hermanson. He began thinking seriously about starting the course over Winter Study and decided to give it a try after talking to other students who seemed enthusiastic, he said. According to Hermanson, nine people are already planning to be in the class. "I'm psyched because there are some really cool people who are going to take the course," he said.

Hermanson has been a student and a teaching assistant for "Nonviolence and Social Change," a student-initiated course begun five years ago. He said his experience with the non-violence course showed him it was possible to initiate a course, but it was easier than he expected. He submitted a formal description of the course to Kurt Tauber, the chair of the Interdepartmental Program for Experimental and Cross-Disciplinary Studies (IPECS). Tauber submitted it to the Committee on Educational Policy, which approved the course on April 11.

"I think there's a real need for this course," Tauber said. He said that if he had been in charge of the course he would have organized it differently, but added that "The point of a student-initiated course is to come up with a syllabus which is interesting to the students."

IPECS began its work last fall. It has been described by Tauber as a mechanism for allowing new programs to be implemented by students to address the academic needs of the college. IPECS is also responsible for the administration of the Freshman Residential Seminars, which were recently extended for another year.

"On Leadership," like "Nonviolence and Social Change," will not be taught by a professor, but by the students in the class who will take turns leading the discussions. Hermanson said that as the students have to act as leaders in the classroom, this format is especially appropriate. "A lot of times you have to let the professor do all the work and just take the notes," he said. Hermanson added that a student-run course can be more work for the students, because they have a responsibility to do all the reading, and the other students hold them accountable.

Hermanson said that one way in which the course will be different from "Non-violence and Social Change" is that professors and other speakers will attend some classes to lead discussions about leaders in their areas of expertise. Professor of Religion Mark Taylor has already agreed to participate, and Hermanson said he would also like to involve College President Francis Oakley, Williams College Museum of Art Director Thomas Krens, Professor of Political Science Wendy Brown and others.

State rep urges involvement at Earth Day

by Ann Mantil

State Representative Sherwood Guernsey D-Williamstown arrived almost an hour late to speak from Chapin steps on Friday afternoon. His appearance was sponsored by the Williams chapter of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, in conjunction with their annual Earth Day celebration.

According to Derek Cressman '90, one of MASSPIRG's project coordinators, thirty college campuses in Massachusetts celebrated Earth Day on Friday. The event was part of an effort to raise the level of student consciousness about the environment.

"The purpose was to recapture the environmental agenda and put Earth and the environment on people's minds again. It seems like people aren't thinking about those issues as much anymore," Cressman said.

"What we've been doing in conjunction with MASSPIRG chapters across the state has been fantastic," Guernsey said. However, he added that organization and support on the national level has not been as good.

Guernsey cited a new Massachusetts law to reduce sulfur emissions and help curtail acid rain as proof of MASSPIRG success. He said, "That takes care of fifteen percent of the problem. But it's only fifteen percent. The other eighty-five percent has to take place on the federal level."

The reduction of hazardous waste was another environmental issue Guernsey described as a partial victory because of a new law on land-fill regulation. "We can now protect our water supply from hazardous waste in our land-fills. But we don't have the leadership in Washington for that protection nationwide."

As part of reform on the federal level, the representative urged students to register to vote. "It's the first step and the

Continued on Page 9

Freshman Sean Spence gets a close look at a MASSPIRG toxic waste display last week on Baxter lawn. The display preceded Earth Day on Friday, when State Representative Sherwood Guernsey spoke. (Steinman) contacting classmates in the hope of raising $1.25 million to present to the college at their 50th class reunion in June of this year. Tauber said that Beggs would like the professorship to be filled by someone who could teach World-Order and Peace Studies.

As chair of the Gaudino Committee, Tauber found time this semester to look into the proposal. "I decided that in the second semester I would like the [Gaudino] committee to do one thing and one thing only," Tauber said. He gave the committee the option of pursuing experimental education programs, student initiated studies or the Global Studies Concentration. After two full weeks of discussion, committee members decided to look into Global Studies. Tauber said that the committee will be exclusively concerned with this proposal for the rest of the semester.

The professorship will probably be named after Professor James Pratt, who taught philosophy and religion at Williams, Tauber said. Pratt played a nationally important role in the study of comparative Eastern religions.

According to Tauber, College President Francis Oakley has already accepted the gift of the Class of '38, and a search for the professor will begin when the money is raised. "The current president's interest is international things. The boss thinks that Williams students need to learn more about their world - it's always nice to say the same damn thing as the boss," Tauber said.

ARTS IN VIEW

Tonight, Nancy Morejon, Director of the Caribbean division of Casa de las Americas, Cuba's largest cultural center and publishing house, will give a poetry reading at 7:00 in Stetson Faculty Lounge.... At 8 PM tonight, Carol Ockman, associate professor of art will give an illustrated lecture on Bertie Morisot at the Clark.... On Wednesday, the winners and those named for honorable mention in the annual Academy of American Poets Contest will read their works at 4 PM in Currier Ballroom.... At 8 PM, Wednesday night, Michael Schapiro will give a concert featuring Jewish folk and inspirational music in the Kuskin Room of Thompson Memorial Chapel.... The Williams Collegium Muscum will give a concert on Thursday at 8 PM in Bernard Music Center.... At the same time, the Williams Dance Society will give their annual Spring Dance Concert in Upper Lasell. It will be repeated Saturday at 3 PM.... The Williams Jazz Ensemble will give a concert at 8 PM on Saturday in Chapin Hall.

Local Movie Listings
(Good through Thursday)
Bennington Cinema I, II, III Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802), 442-8179
Casual Sex	7:05 & 9:05
Blindfold	7:00 & 9:15
Bright Lights, Big City	7:00 & 9:15
Images Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
Empire of the Sun	tonight? & 9:30
Cry Freedom	beginning Wednesday 7 & 9:30
Hakopyan	beginning Friday 7 & 9:00
North Adams Cinema Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Blindfold	7 & 9:15
The Fox and the Hound	matinee: 2:00
Casual Sex	7 & 9:15
Boogie Woogie	7 & 9:15
The Untouchables	7 & 9:15
Pittsfield Cinema Center Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
Bright Lights, Big City	7:00 & 9:15
Above the Law	7:00 & 9:15
Blindfold	7:00 & 9:15
Good Morning Vietnam	7:00 & 9:15
The Last Emperor	7:00
Casual Sex	7:15 & 9:15
The Seventh Sign	7:15 & 9:15
Moontuck	7:15 & 9:15
Bad Dreams	7:15 & 9:15
Boogie Woogie	7:15 & 9:15
Johnny Be Good	7:15 & 9:15

MILLIONS REACH FOR THE

Williams Record

Letters

Continued from Page 2

College Museum," then I would be impressed with their initiative, and endeavor to secure a place at the front of the line to see the exhibits. These sorts of needs, however, can clearly be met within existing structures. What are the needs which require a new building? Couldn't these needs be met within Rice House or Hardy House?

Now, what about the takeover of Jenness House this past weekend? I, for one, am unimpressed. The April 23rd memo from CARE states that the action was taken, "to protest the administration's unwillingness to address substantively fundamental issues." I fail to see the substance which justifies the action. The memo's demands aren't particularly substantive. President Oakley has repeatedly asserted that he is willing to listen, and indeed, to take reasonable action. My own past dealings with Dr. Oakley lead me to believe that he is sincerely interested in resolving issues which confront the student community. A dialogue is needed, and I don't believe that CARE is going to facilitate that by taking over Jenness House. I think they should leave—unthinking expediency is prejudicing an important issue.

Let me close by returning to the O.E.D.'s definition of racism, and beg the question: who, at the present moment, best fits the criteria of the definition, CARE, or President Oakley's administration? The three demands contained in the April 23rd memo clearly indicate that CARE is preoccupied with: racial integrity—they want to replace a competent white woman administrator with a minority; cultural integrity—they want a new cultural center to be created apart from existing structures; and economic well being—they want specifically "minority" scholarship money set aside. Furthermore, their takeover of Jenness House might also be viewed as antagonistic. It is at least noncommunicative and self-reflexive. If we are to live in anything resembling a community, (they did address their memo the college COMMUNITY) we must be willing to COMMUNE, to engage in intercourse (intellectual and otherwise). Rational existence requires it; all manners of argumentation demand it. CARE, come out of Jenness house and argue.

Martin J. Furey III '88

Do not focus debate on action

Whenever a strong political action is taken on this campus, debate is invariably shifted from the specific problem the action addresses to the action itself. On the surface, the debate is about Black faculty, a community center and assorted other demands. But these demands themselves are only a means to an end, a means of combating institutional racism.

On a daily basis, people suffer due to the unequal distribution of economic and social power. Racism turns those existing, historically based, socially created inequities into the "natural" state of the world. Racism is taken for granted, as given, but Racism has an origin. It is a particular type of consciousness that emerges from the social institutions of a given time. White culture is not considered as simply one among many ways of living, but rather the way. Everything else is not normal; everything else is deviant, inferior.

But racism is not just an opinion. Racism is 40 percent of Black children growing up in poverty. It is Hispanic workers being forced to work in fields for little pay with no protection from insecticides. It is U.S. corporations being able to promote the sale of dangerous products, banned in America, to Third World nations.

As guardians of ideas, academocratic institutions are hardly immune from the effects of this ideology. For years, white scientists and other academics wrote learned articles explaining the inherent superiority of the white race. Colleges don't exist in vacuums. The role of the university is to educate those who attend and to prepare them for the needs of a given society. Racist banks need racist bankers.

Williams College, for the most noble reasons, recognizes the importance of a minority presence at institutions of higher learning. More and more, however, people at Williams are realizing that if there is not also a minority community at Williams, a minority presence will always be a token presence.

If you bring minority students here and teach them only the white man's logic, only the white man's history, only the white man's values, only the white man's art; then you have done them an injustice. You have tried to replace the culture of minorities with white male culture. You have tried to reshape their identity in the form of white identity. On the other hand, if you teach white students only the white/male/heterosexual culture, you have helped perpetuate, through your inaction, a cycle of ignorance that will inevitably lead to more bigotry, poverty and violence.

But what can generate a minority community in an academic institution? It is generated by administrators and trustees that value the integrity and vitality of minority cultures and people. These administrators and trustees must demonstrate their commitment both in the United States and abroad. It is generated by a faculty who identify with minority culture and struggle. It consists of a curriculum which educates both the oppressors and the oppressed. It is generated by minority students who cherish their culture and themselves. It is generated by a lot more...

This is why we support CARE's struggle. This is why they protest, this is why they speak up and take a stand.

Barry Lovelle '88
and Tony Monsanto '88

Busted! Parents and students alike were entertained by rock and roll music when The Busted kicked off last weekend with a concert in the freshman quad. (Steinman) retain ownership of the retail space. Wassenaar said the decision to create retail space in Grundy's is in keeping with the commercialization of Water Street.

Landlord—

Continued from Page 5

Reed said that there is clearly a business side to education. "Williams has a $53 million annual operating budget," he said. "Therefore, [we] have two ways of handling financial affairs." He said the college can invest locally, although it is not necessarily profitable to do so, or it can invest for the good of the endowment. Reed noted that the college is not out to make money. He said the idea of the endowment is to invest money to obtain the highest yield.

Emotive—

Continued from Page 3

Dr. Caldicott, however, asked her audience to make a leap of faith. She wanted her listeners to believe on faith alone that nuclear disarmament would save the world. She, however, never told us how to achieve this "paradise" nor did she explain why a world without nuclear weapons would be more stable than the world of today.

I hope that members of her audience who found themselves emotional distraught over the horrors of nuclear war will now seek to educate themselves about the nuclear predicament. They will then be able to assess intellectually, not emotionally, Dr. Caldicott's recommendations and my opinion as well. Hopefully they will then recognize not only how to, but more importantly why, work for policies that augment international stability, while promoting arms control measures that enhance deterrence.

Drew Erdmann is currently writing a year-long PSCI thesis on American nuclear diplomacy during the Eisenhower years.

Soc.

Continued from Page 5

sociology and anthropology. The low number of current sociology majors, according to Brown, might also be due to the fact that for the past few years, the sociology and anthropology department has been concentrating mainly on increasing the number of anthropology majors. Brown added that for the next few years, the tendency will be to concentrate on sociology.

Friedman said he has had his share of problems with the major. "It doesn't impress the investment bankers," said Friedman, recalling his job interviews. Although he has a few more interviews lined up with law firms and other corporate offices, Friedman is giving some thought to bartending or driving a truck for a while.

"I don't think my lack of direction has anything to do with my major," he said. "If I had another chance, I'd do the same thing all over again."

ASCR—

Continued from Page 1

policy regarding pharmaceutical companies. Reed said, "We have tried to make a distinction between companies that produce generic medicines, and companies that produce specific products. For those companies that make specific products, we think that they should stay, that more harm would be done by leaving." In accordance with this policy, the committee voted for a proxy that encouraged American Home Products Corporation to withdraw, and against a proposal, by a vote of four to two, to have Johnson & Johnson withdraw. Johnson & Johnson produces materials for infant care.

The ASCR also voted on Monday to ask DuPont, the USX Corporation (a subsidiary of United States Steel), Unisys Corporation (formerly Burroughs) and Pfizer, Incorporated (a pharmaceutical company) to withdraw from South Africa.

Newsbriefs

CC: take minority courses

College Council decided to send a letter to the student body encouraging students to take courses dealing with racial and ethnic minority concerns at its meeting last Thursday.

President Trace Blankenship '89 suggested that the council write a letter to the student body recommending that, in the spirit of a liberal arts education, students take some courses devoted primarily to the experience, achievements and concerns of ethnic and racial minorities.

discretionary funds for the College Council. Blankenship remarked that Carter Zinn '88, last year's council president, had pursued a policy of "If it's there, spend it."

The council also considered the issues of self-scheduled examinations, graduate school counseling and the bookstore. Blankenship said he raised these issues in order to get an idea of their relative priority for future discussion. The council seemed most interested in the bookstore. Some members mentioned that the Gargoyle Society is already looking at the issue of self-scheduled exams.

—by Gillian Lippert

Track and field dedicated

A new baseball field and all-weather track on Weston Field were dedicated on Saturday, April 16. The new facilities, made possible by blasting through 10,000 cubic yards of rock to expand field space, are the most recent in the continuing modernization of Williams College's athletic facilities.

The new athletic area will also include a new scoreboard, a hammer/discus cage and a resodded football field moved 40 feet to the left of its original location to accommodate the new baseball field, said Supervisor of Building Trades and Grounds Norman Quinn. Construction on the project began last spring and moved into high gear the day after the last home football game. It will be totally completed as soon as the scoreboard and cage are finished, Quinn said.

"The construction costs should top out at over $1 million. [George] Steinbrenner '52 and other generous alumni have given a lot to the project. One woman donated money for the entire scoreboard," Quinn said. The balance was paid by the college, he added.

While the construction at Weston Field coincides with the completion of the Chandler Gymnasium and the renovations at Lasell Gymnasium, Quinn said this was a separate project.

Chair and Director of Athletics Robert Peck said all former Williams track and baseball athletes were invited back for the dedication of the new facilities. The ceremony included dedicating the baseball field to Bobby Coombs, a longtime Williams baseball coach, and the track in honor of Tony Plansky, who coached at Williams for about 30 years. Coombs threw out the first pitch at the men's varsity baseball game against Wesleyan on Saturday. That game, along with the Little Three track meet which was also held on Saturday, inaugurated the new facilities, Peck said.

According to Peck, "The whole facility is first class. In Division Three no one has a better track, and we'll have great baseball here." Quinn said, "Hopefully we have a facility second to none. There might be a few additions, such as moving the grandstand to make room for a softball field, as one alumnus wants to do. We should be able to hold any event that the athletic department wants, and we don't expect it to be outdated for many, many years."

—by Rob Weisberg

Pappa C's to move after delay

Construction on the new site for Pappa Charlie's Deli has been completed, and the restaurant should be making the fifty-foot move down Spring Street in about two weeks, according to owner John Maltezos.

Difficulties have been caused by a design flaw in the ventilation system for the storefront that includes Goodman's Jewelers, The Williams Newsroom and the future Pappa Charlie's. Assistant Director for Construction Services Antonio Janairo said that the three stores were on one heating and air conditioning system that was causing cooking fumes from Pappa Charlie's to spread through the other stores.

"When we realized the system was causing odors to permeate Goodman's and the Newsroom, we had to try a different approach to prevent the odor migration from becoming unbearable," Janairo said. Pappa Charlie's heating and air conditioning system was separated from the others. Janairo added that the repairs to the system were now complete.

According to Janairo, the decision to move Pappa Charlie's came about from the college's desire to restore the Williams Bookstore, which it owns, to its original building line. Janairo said that the part of the building now containing Pappa Charlie's will be completely removed. "We're going to tear the brick front down and restore the front [where Pappa Charlie's is currently located] to a wooden clapboard finish," he said. The restorations are scheduled to be finished by this June.

"The college owns the buildings, and they made the decision for me," Maltezos said of the upcoming move. He added that he did not mind being told to relocate his business. "People ask me if I'm upset. How can I be upset? The most important thing is to preserve history, and I think that building is more historical than I am," Maltezos said.

Maltezos said the delays had caused him some headaches but stated that he didn't intend to move until all of the problems had been solved. "I don't want to be there with certain things that don't work perfectly," he said. "That's what has pushed [the moving date] back. But finally it's coming together. In about two weeks, I should be all set."

—by Dan Skwire

Men's Lax

Continued from Page 10
sift one goal lead on the strength of freshman Ian Smith's blast with 12:00 remaining. The Ephs couldn't manage to break the game open, but Union could only manage to beat the Eph defense twice more and Williams held on to win 8-6.

Williams travels to Springfield for its first big game of the season Thursday. The game will be televised on NESN, a New England cable sports channel. Williams is ranked fourth in New England Division III behind Bowdoin, Middlebury, and Amherst, while Springfield is ranked behind the Ephs at fifth.

Springfield will have the added advantage of playing at night under the lights on their home artificial turf field. "We've scrimmaged them pretty even," said Lamb. "I don't think the turf will be a factor, we've played on turf before. I'm looking forward to it. I really want to see the mettle of the team."

W. Crew—

Continued from Page 11
weight four and Amherst's first boat, also a heavyweight boat. Amherst took a handy lead for the entire race finishing 12.6 seconds up on Wesleyan, 17 seconds up on Williams. Although the Williams' four finished third they felt they raced well.

Lacking an eight, Amherst did not participate in the varsity heavyweight eight race. Wesleyan and Williams struggled through a very close race for the title. After a strong, even start, the two boats raced bow to bow through the entire body of the race. With the last 250 meters to go the sprint began. Williams, unable to take the sprint up as high as Wesleyan, was nosed out at the end losing by 1.6 seconds.

The Williams' oarswomen are looking forward to the regatta next Saturday against U.Mass. and Lowell in Lowell, Mass. where they plan to make a strong showing.

Clark prints

Continued from Page 6

zotints by the English artist John Martin, created as illustrations for Milton's Paradise Lost. The prints are small and beautifully detailed, functioning as personal windows through which one may view Milton's literary creation. The print "Courts of God" is a rich look at the grandeur and majesty of the heavens, a perfect contrast to the furious and frightening dark visions of "Pandemonium" or "Satan in Council." Martin's light and dark contrasts, his rich and velvety mezzotint blacks, and his transcendent architectural constructions lend a power to his visualizations of heaven and hell.

In addition, the exhibition features two prints by Delacroix, who is already well-represented in the Clark's drawing collection. Both works are depictions of people he encountered on a trip through North Africa, showing his fascination with foreign realms. "J'ui vu d'Alger," or Algerian Jewess, is an illustration of a woman, which isn't so much a portrait as a study of a cultural phenomenon different from the artist's.

"Images of Venice: Etchings by Whistler and his American Followers," will run through May 8. "New Acquisitions" and "American Prints" will be on view through June 5.

Williamstown Elementary third graders were also on hand to distribute conservation pamphlets they had made themselves. Printed on recycled paper, they bore the words, "When you have old things that you don't want you should give it to places that need them."

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

20 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123-3548 PHONE 413-458-5717

the
GREENPEACE PIPER will play at your party, ceremony, etc.
for a check made out to GREENPEACE USA
(518) 672-4897

COUNCIL TRAVEL

From NEW YORK Round Trips Starting at

LONDON	370
BRUSSELS	458
PARIS	438
CARACAS	320
TOKYO	739

Taxes not included
ALSO: Work-Study Abroad, Language Courses, Int'l Student ID, Youth Hostel Passes, EURL Passes issued on the spot!

Call for the FREE CIEE Student Travel Catalog!

Amherst
413-256-1261

Steinbrenner

Continued from Page 14
Command. I'd go right in there and bomb them right off the face of the earth if they don't stop growing that stuff and shipping it over here.

Steinbrenner was recently named Chairman of the Overview Committee of the United States Olympic Committee Executive Board. He outlined some basic changes needed. "We've got to make it better for the athletes and the governing bodies. We've got to get them the money they need to do the thing right."

Steinbrenner emphasized the importance of expecting excellence, whether in athletics or in business. "Once we as a nation stop pursuing excellence, we're in trouble." He brought up the cases of the US auto and steel industries as examples of businesses that have adopted the wrong attitude.

Steinbrenner certainly expects excellence from his players, and, indeed, much of the talk centered on his beloved Yankees. On Dave Winfield's recent book, Steinbrenner responded, "What he said about me didn't bother me at all. What he said about me's been said 50,000 times. What bothered me was the position he put Willie Randolph in as the captain. He made Willie have to come out and say, 'Hey, the man lied. I never said that.' The second thing was, you don't talk about players on professional teams when you're playing with them."

On his up-and-down relationship with Yankee manager Billy Martin, Steinbrenner had nothing but praise for the veteran skipper. He credited Martin with the increased season ticket sales and the Yankees' current early-season success. "We're right up at the top, and he'll keep [us] at the top. He has no peer as a manager."

ANNOUNCING THE ARRIVAL OF WILLIAMSTOWN TRAVEL

The travel alternative in Williamstown

We offer a wide variety of travel services including:

- *AIRPLANE AND TRAIN TICKETS - DOMESTIC AND INT'L
- *STUDENT AND CHARTER TICKETS TO EUROPE
- *EURAILPASS AND EURAIL YOUTHPASS SALES
- *FREE PASSPORT WITH EVERY INT'L BOOKING
- *FULL KNOWLEDGE OF STUDENT TRAVEL OPTIONS IN EUROPE INCLUDING TRAIN SCHEDULES AND YOUTH HOSTELS

*LOWEST POSSIBLE PRICES FOR YOUR ITINERARY

For travel advice at no cost to you and for immediate delivery of tickets

CONTACT OUR CAMPUS REPRESENTATIVE, DAY OR NIGHT
KEN LEITER: 597-6521

or stop by and give us a try.

618 MAIN STREET (BEFORE PATTEN CARS)

Tel: 458-2156 Hours: Mon-Fri 9:00 A.M. - 5:00 P.M.
458-2157 Thursday until 8:00 P.M.
Saturday 9:00 A.M. - 12 Noon

SALE

Special sale for Williams students and faculty only!

20 - 50% OFF
ALL Winter Clothing

Long sleeve jerseys, jackets, tights, gloves, and booties!

COUPON

THE SPOKE

MORE THAN A BIKE SHOP

408 Main Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
413-458-3456

5-1 Men's Lax at Springfield Thur.

by Marc McDermott

The parents on the sidelines witnessed the best and the worst of the men's lacrosse team last Saturday, as lowly (3-4) Trinity took a 3-2 lead into halftime only to fall victim to a ten goal second half Eph explosion and a 12-4 Eph victory.

Freshman Brent Powell (3 goals, 1 assist) notched the first score for the 5-1 Ephmen, and halfway through the second quarter, Williams held a slim 2-0 lead. Eventually Trinity solved Williams' netminder Dana Weeder '88 and by the time the buzzer sounded the half, the Bantams had touched twine for three unanswered goals off fast breaks and broken plays.

"The first half was very unsettled," said junior attacker Lew Fisher. "Play was up and down the field. We were controlling the game but constantly clearing or riding. But then again, we are a slow starting team, we need something to get us going, we need to show the other team that they are not going to stay with us."

The second half provided that necessary spark, as Williams launched a barrage of shots from close range at Trinity goalie Mark Tenerowicz - yes he is the brother of Williams women's lacrosse captain Lisa -- scoring five in each quarter despite Tenerowicz's ten saves.

"Mark Tenerowicz played a great game," said Williams coach Renzie Lamb. "No goalie in the country, given all those shots, is going to make those saves." The Eph defense played one of its best halves of the season and Weeder added eight saves to hold the Bantams to only one goal.

'War of attrition'

Coach Lamb used his team's superior depth to keep fresh players in the game as the Bantams were slowly worn down by the inclement weather, the pace of the Ephs, and the cheers of the Williams crowd.

"We played more kids, kept the pressure up, and just wore them down," said Lamb. "We used five attackmen and 12 middies to their three attackmen and two middies. That, and the long ride they had to get here, allowed us to win the war of attrition."

Lamb inspires Ephs

Lamb also admitted to using some quiet motivational tactics at halftime. "I told the kids, you don't get anything for nothing, you've got to work for it. Trinity is not going to come in here and say, 'You've got nice uniforms, it's your home field, and your parents are up. OK you can win.' We didn't do anything different in the second half, we just did it better."

Earlier in the week, Williams found itself sorely tested in a battle of goalies as Union keeper John Thorne stopped 12 Eph offerings only to be bested by Williams' Robbie Lambert '90, who had his best game in the net this year, en route to saving 14.

Williams sprinted to an early 4-1 lead, but the Dutchmen romped down Cole Field to tie. When the teams broke for intermission, Williams held a

Continued on Page 9

West Package & Variety Store

"Purple Cow" brands always on sale
Vodka - Gin - Rum - Bourbon

Coors & Coors Light (12 oz. bottles) $11.99 + dep.
O'Keefe Canadian $13.99 + dep.
Stroh's 30 pack $11.99 + dep.
Meister Brau 1/2 Keg $27.00 + dep.

3 Liter Pepsi $1.59 + dep.

Stop by on your way back from Pizza Hut
We really do appreciate your business

663-6081

between N. A. and Williamstown

Colonial Pizza

"The best in America"

Hot oven grinders, salads,
spaghettis, and more!

Now starting delivery to Williams College
From 5:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m.

Fresh dough daily

Nice atmosphere — Fast service

Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014

hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

Levi's
UNIVERSITY CO.

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Men's crew wins Little Three at Amherst

by David X. Katz

In an impressive display of strength the undefeated varsity men's crew swept the Little Three regatta in Amherst this past weekend. For the first time since 1985 the first varsity boat defeated Wesleyan in order to reclaim the coveted Saratoga oar which is presented to the Little Three champions. The second varsity boat soundly defeated its Wesleyan opponents as well, demonstrating the strength and depth of the Williams crew.

Both Williams and Wesleyan came into the first varsity race undefeated. At the start of the race both Williams and Wesleyan gained substantial leads on Amherst with Williams ahead of Wesleyan by approximately four seats. By the 1000 meter half way mark, Williams had opened its lead to approximately one boat length. Despite having been "waked" twice by motor boats, the Eph oarsmen continued to open their lead for the remainder of the race.

Williams crossed the finish line a comfortable seven seconds before a dejected Wesleyan crew and a humiliating 32 seconds before the Amherst first boat. The Williams first boat oarsmen were elated to have the privilege of being the first crew in three years to defeat many of the Dad Vail medalists within the Wesleyan boat.

The second varsity race, which included only Williams and Wesleyan, was a dog fight for the first 1000 meters. At the 1000 meter half way mark the Williams oarsmen took a "power twenty", cutting through their Wesleyan opponents "like a hot knife through butter". The Ephmen had the lead for the remainder of the race and then widened the margin during their final sprint. Williams won by an impressive six seconds.

Rowers elated

The novice men's crew made a powerful showing as well as winning in their heavyweight four and lightweight eight categories. The heavyweight four, containing the four most powerful novice oarsmen, defeated their Amherst opponents by many lengths of open water. In the novice lightweight eight race Williams again claimed victory over both Amherst and Wesleyan by open water. After having defeated their Little Three opponents in their previous races, the novices who had raced in the four and the next most powerful four who had raced in the lightweight eight, combined to form a heavyweight eight. Fatigued from their previous races that day and competing against a much larger Wesleyan crew, the oarsmen in this eight were defeated by a decisive margin. It is fitting to mention that the lightweight novice crew, having rowed in an eight named for Charlie Cost, brought home to Williams the Charlie Cost trophy which was recently dedicated in memory of Charlie who stroked his lightweight freshmen boat and died in 1984.

The first varsity boats record is now 6-0 and within the division the second boats record is 3-0. The Williams oarsmen excitedly anticipate their clash this upcoming weekend with UMass and Lowell University at Lowell.

Women's crew nips Jeffs by 2.3 seconds

by Lisa Marrack

Plagued by high winds and rough water through most of the week on Lake Onoto, the Williams' rowers were pleased to find perfect water conditions on Saturday for the Little Three Regatta on the Connecticut River. The novice women kicked off the races with an exciting win. Even with Amherst through most of the race, the Williams' novice A boat made its move in the last 500m. Said bow seat Lisa Rood, "We realized we would have to make an early move, earlier than planned, so we did. They were strong but we moved through them. It was awesome." The Williams' A boat successfully sprinted past the Jeffs crossing the line with a 2.3 seconds lead. Wesleyan was third, 18 seconds behind the leader. The Williams' B boat was fourth, down 23 seconds. The Williams B boat was pleased that they were able to give the Wesleyan A boat such a close race.

In the varsity four division Williams' lightweight four went up against stiff opposition. They raced the Wesleyan heavy-

Continued on Page 9

Tennis overcomes injuries, weather and the Lord Jeffs

by Ted Hobart

A sprained ankle may have kept the tennis team from keeping its perfect record intact at Colgate last Tuesday, but nothing could keep the men from beating Amherst on Saturday, their first win over the Jeffs since 1985.

Against Amherst, the squad was forced to move inside during the singles matches to escape the weather. After the first five matches, Williams clung to a narrow 3-2 lead with number four player, sophomore Steve Buxbaum's match in the third set. Buxbaum and his Amherst counterpart split the first two sets by identical 6-2 margins and were mired in a 6-6 tie in the pivotal third set. The sophomore buckled down and took the clutch tie-breaker 7-4.

With the momentum from that win, the Ephs proceeded to sweep the doubles matches and seal the victory 7-2. The doubles remained the most solid part of the lineup, even with the roster changes for this match. Due to the injury to Brad Hunt '90, Rob Illig '91 filled in under pressure as Pier Friend's doubles partner, and the pairaced the third doubles match. The normal third team of Buxbaum and Robby Hallagan '89 moved up to second and won in three sets, while the first team of Hoyt Ludington '88 and Marc Caftabiano '90 continued to roll.

Against Colgate, the squad suffered its first setback of the season. The less-than-friendly tone of the contest was set from the beginning when the Colgate coach announced that the match was to move indoors after the players had warmed up outside. Most players felt the weather outside was very playable, and resented "going indoors for no apparent reason," according to Hunt.

The move did take its toll on the Ephs, as the unfamiliar surface claimed its first victim early. As Hunt recovered from making a shot in his singles match, he badly sprained his ankle and was unable to play the rest of the day. Losing Hunt really hurt the team, as his singles match was lost and his usual doubles partner was forced to play with an unfamiliar partner.

The unfortunate injury thus probably cost the Ephs two matches and the contest, as the Red Raiders prevailed 5-4. Caftabiano remained undefeated at the number two spot, and he and Ludington again took the first doubles match.

For the second week in a row, the weather has forced the postponement of the squad's match with Tufts. After yesterday's match with Trinity, the squad now looks forward to defending its NESCAC crown this weekend at Middlebury.

STAR PERFORMER STATUS REPORT

The Food Service Department is proud to present the following students, who are currently on track to receive Star Performer Status this semester. It is people like this, who possess a sense of responsibility and commitment, that help make Williams College Food Service as successful as it is. We salute you and your admirable efforts.

Baxter

Martina Anderson
Carolyn Bachelder
Kathy Carr
Laurel Christoferson
Carin Cole
Bevin Cooper
Chris Cox
Derek Cressman
Joel Foisy
Tara Hurley
Lynn Huddon
Matt Heins
Tim Huang
Jon Howard
Heidi Zimmerman
Phil Knecht
Matt LaPorte
Eugene Langner
Amy Mower
John Nelson
Blair Newton
Cait Osborne
Michelle Sanders
Lee Schroeder
Don Scott
Alex Sessions
Yusong Sun
Ed Vanderploeg
Rob Weisburg
Michelle Yednak
Jessica Yu
Lorri Williams

Dodd

Josh Becker
Geoff Ighuro
Dawn Pettway
Selena Tan
Nancy Gannon
Christina Manos
Rayola Osanya-Nyynegne

Driscoll

Brenda Barry
Alex Glover
Phil Harris
Perin Koskeroglu
Andrea Lee
Stefi Lefko
Bruce Lelong
Tim Pachonka
Shuuna Steele
Tim Twombly
Mochaal Cox
Peggy Kim
Heather O'Leary

Mission Park

Filip Millan
Marcelo DaSilva
Beth Allison
Toni Belle
Stephen Gindling
Bill McRae
Megan Ouchtorloney
Ron Van Belle

Greylock

Tracy Bezdelovs
Nicole Jefferson
Evan McCarthy
Billy Mitchell
Emily Obrock
Joe David
Pam Roblin
Andres Vatter
Bill Hoch
Beth Carey
Steve Ritz
Gil McCabe
Sarah Shull

the College
Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
est. 1848
Betty Burkhardt

458-4808
THE COLLEGE
BOOKSTORE
CAFE

Now Open

Join Us Soon for Lunch!

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

GIFTS: For Special Occasions

We Gift Wrap!

The finest selection of Greeting Cards —

Picture Frames — Blank Books

A treasure trove of Jewelry —

Reproduction and Antique
AND MUCH MORE!

TheLibrary

Track

Continued from Page 14

(31.63), taking second in both events.

The men raked in six victories, two by sophomore Carey Simon in the 400 (49.65) and the 200 (22.56). Fourth in the 400 relay, aided by sophomore John Walker, senior Scott Powers and sophomore Lars Hem, Simon bolted from way back to salvage the relay and win.

The Ephs swept the major events of the long jump and triple jump. Walker surged 6.56 m in the long jump, followed at second by sophomore Geoff Igharo (6.23), and at third by Powers (6.10). Second-place freshman Jason Zimba (12.15 m), and third-place Walker (12.12) seeded to senior co-captain Scott Purdy (12.23) in the triple jump. Purdy also placed second in the 110 high hurdles (16.10). Mike Simpson, sophomore, won the hammer-throw with 38.66 m. After running the steeplechase, freshman Evan Driscoll was persuaded to run the 5000, impressing Coach Peter Farwell with a second-place 15:46.65. Other second place notables were senior co-captain Ted Arrowsmith in the 1500 (4:03.87), junior Dave Nadelman in the 800 (who barely lost to the 1:58.2 time with 1:59.04) and junior David Shatto in the high jump (5'10"). Simon, Powers, Nadelman and junior Jeff Etemad blazed to second in 3 minutes, 31.7 seconds in the final mile relay, in what they thought, prior to the scorekeeper's error, would clinch the meet. The final event before the New England's in May is the NESAC tournament on Saturday, April 23.

5-1 Women's lax guns for Wesleyan

Continued from Page 13

'91, Mo Flaherty '90, and Lisa Tenerowicz '88 all had an outstanding game, Cooper and Flaherty scoring 4 times each and assisting once, and Tenerowicz scoring once and assisting once. Dominating throughout the game, the Ephs stole many more balls than Mount Holyoke did, and kept control over the ball after getting it. The excellent passing abilities and depth of the team was evident in the number of additional team members who scored: Beth Bernheimer '88 had two goals, while Amy Kershaw '90, Abby Burbank '88, Boddicker, and defense player Jeannette Owen '90 all scored one goal each.

The Ephs were more apprehensive about Saturday's game because Smith had recently lost to powerful Trinity by only two points. Coach Chris Mason described the Smith team as one which "once in a while play[s] a really aggressive game." Kershaw set the tone for the game and "psyched the players up," according to Boddicker, by scoring two quick goals at the very beginning. Goalkeeper Jeanne Clappse also had an excellent game, throwing herself all over the net to make two saves against strong Smith shots at the beginning of the game, and continuing to hold off the powerful Smith offense throughout the game.

Second Half

Although Williams ended up winning 12-8, the game was close at the half, with the Ephs leading only by a three-point margin, which in the quick game of lacrosse can easily be changed. Boddicker attributed the Smith points to the faceoffs that they won; she described the draws as pivotal to Saturday's game. Scorers included defense players Boddicker and Wynn Hohlt '89 with three and one goals, respectively. Hohlt scoring for the first time this season; Flaherty and Co-Captain Mara Burnett '88 with two goals each; and Tenerowicz and Bernheimer with one goal each. Williams stalled the Smith team for the last five minutes of the game by controlling the ball and playing it conservatively because the score was getting close; it was then that Hohlt broke free and made her goal.

Next week the team plays two home games — Wednesday against Trinity, which promises to be a close and exciting game, and Saturday against Wesleyan. The team must beat Wesleyan, and later on Amherst, if they want to win the Little Three title.

Caldicott

Continued from Page 7

ter in times of high tension. "Because of the increasing number of computer errors, in a time of heightened tension there's greater than a 50 percent chance of [an accidental launch]," she said.

Caldicott described the recently approved Intermediate Nuclear Forces Treaty as a placebo, since it only removes three percent of the total arsenal. She called for further reductions in long-range missiles, which comprise the majority of the U.S.'s 35,000 nuclear weapons.

Caldicott said that the ongoing economic and political reform in the Soviet Union have increased the possibilities for peace. A comment comparing Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to Jesus Christ drew a mixed response from the audience. Caldicott said that she made the comparison to clarify the uniqueness of Gorbachev's disarmament proposals and the difficulty he has faced attempting to overcome internal opposition to his plans.

Caldicott also generated controversy by calling for a constitutional amendment legislating that Congress be comprised of fifty-two percent women, the percent of the total population they make up. She explained that studies have shown that women display less aggressive tendencies than men. Women are more suitable for leadership positions, since they might be better able to maintain peace, she said.

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

"Say, Will - why don't you pull that thing out and play us a tune?"

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

Times and places never to insert your contact lens.

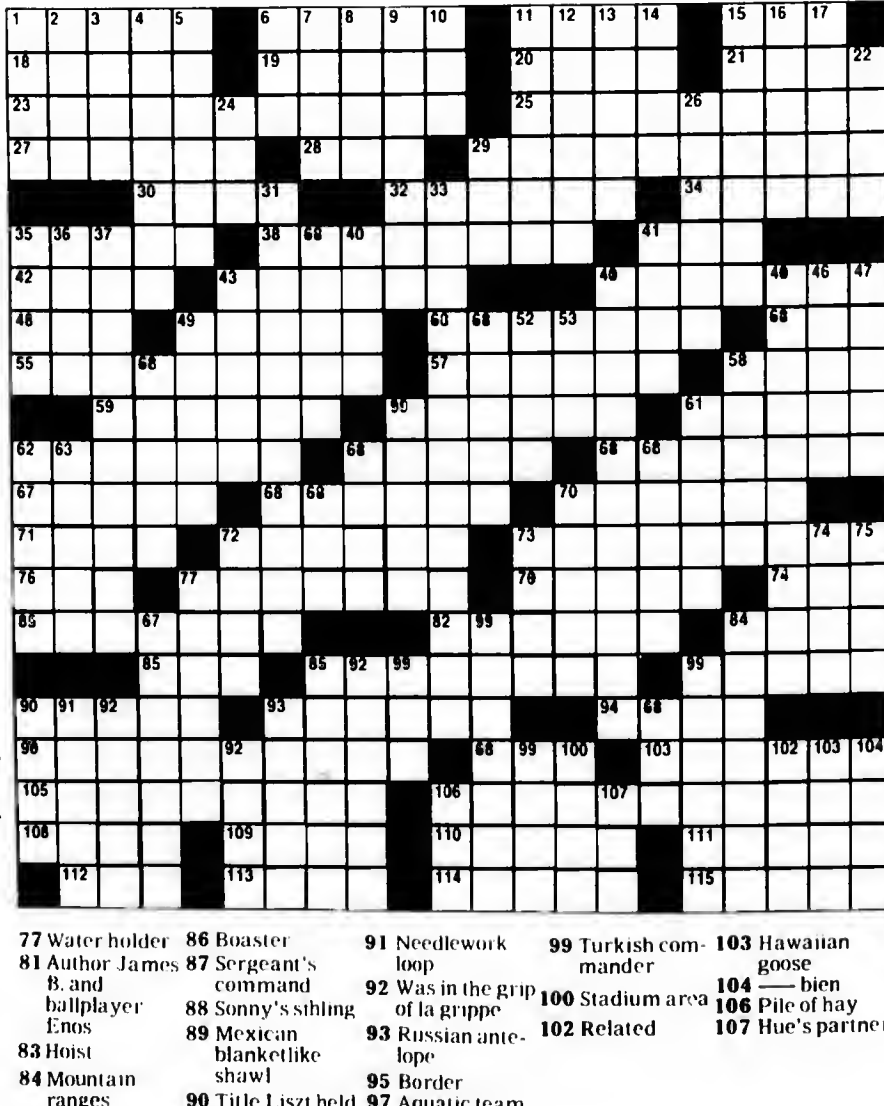

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Office Surprise

BY STANLEY GLASS/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- | | | | |
|-------------------------------|----------------------------------|----------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| ACROSS | 34 Cubic meter | 64 Windshield | 94 S. Korea's first |
| 1 Flashy squawker | 35 Cone-shaped dwelling | 65 Diplomatic oasis | 96 Simple |
| 6 "Cheerchez la" | 38 Summaries | 67 Dictum | 98 Industrial tub |
| 11 Goya's duchess | 41 Charge | 68 Classical odist | 101 Straying |
| 15 Neighbor of Ga | 42 Aujourd'hui's forerunner | 70 Slowpokes | 105 A town between Boston and Lowell |
| 18 Inspiration for a canzone | 43 Electronic pulse maker | 72 Rake over the coals | 106 Johnson as a scorer? |
| 19 Celestial hunter | 44 "The — the wise are as gods." | 73 Allotted, British style | 108 Noble, in Nürnberg |
| 20 Pseudologist | 48 Sea eagle | 74 Manufactures | 109 Components of psyches |
| 21 Form by carving | 49 Preserve | 75 Workers' gp. | 110 Colette's "The — One" |
| 23 Groups of masseurs? | 50 Roundabout | 80 Puccini's "Manon —" | 111 Author of "Common Sense" |
| 25 Foremost | 54 Doctors' org. | 82 Parts of calyxes | 112 Sullivan and McMahon |
| 27 Raphael's birthplace | 55 Traders | 84 Box | 113 Dwindle |
| 28 Execute a slalom | 57 Roman magistrate | 85 Branch of learning | 114 Pail |
| 29 Deposit on a wedding band? | 58 Luge | 86 Petrol | 115 Feudal peons |
| 30 Connects | 59 Kin of hush-hucks | 87 Bully's prey | |
| 32 Jolson's river | 60 Used a mangle | 89 Bully's prey | |
| | 61 Better | 90 Addis — | |
| | 62 I.R.S. "benefactions" | 93 Swift's forte | |

- | | | | |
|-----------------------------|------------------------|---------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| DOWN | 14 Kuwani or Omani | 39 Elements | 62 Confederate, e.g. |
| 1 Word on a Japanese ship | 15 Faced | 40 Martique et St-Pierre | 63 Office Cato once held |
| 2 Asiatic border river | 16 Summa cum | 41 Polo team | 64 Fresh-rushing group |
| 3 The Georgia Peach | 17 Lou Grant | 42 Tolerate | 66 Medieval clubs |
| 4 Judge | 22 Reason d'— | 43 Impassive monarch? | 69 Anglo-Saxon currency |
| 5 Hot dog | 24 Brooklyn's Preacher | 45 Errors at the cash register? | 70 Author of "The Dragons of Eden" |
| 6 Watch chain | 26 Penny pinchers | 46 Agurries | 72 Medieval English chronicle |
| 7 Precambrian and Paleozoic | 29 Butter at Fordham | 47 Like a craze | 73 Conductor Genaro — |
| 8 Coveted pelt | 31 Additional bedding? | 49 "Can't! Don't! —! Won't!" | 74 Greek mil. group of W. W. II |
| 9 Couturiere | 33 Editor? | 51 Irregular | 75 High-sided little boat |
| 10 Annapolis grad | 35 Oates novel | 52 Outlet | |
| 11 Goat or butterfly | 36 Joyce's homeland | 53 Bronx follower | |
| 12 Woody climbers | 37 Fresh load of pigs? | 56 Hen's comment | |
| 13 Erie Canal vessel | | 58 Diminutive | |
| | | 60 Fit to be tied | |
| | | 61 "— Irish Rose" | |

Softball

The tide of triumphs that swept through Williams athletics last Saturday, left the northwest corner of Cole Field dry—the softball team lost its first game of the year, splitting a doubleheader with Smith. Cathy Hancilich '91 pitched a great game in defeat, striking out six (including three in one inning) and allowing only eight hits in the 6-2 loss. Senior Wendy Roy and freshman Julie Carroll had RBI's for the Ephs.

Smith, one of the top teams in New England, played some second stringers in the rematch, which Williams won 9-2 on the strength of freshman Audra Mazder's six hitter and junior captain Nancy Hedeman's perfect day at the plate. The game was Williams' from the first as a Nancy Hearn '90 single was followed by four walks and two wild pitches in a four run rally.

"We played really well," said Mazder, "They were just excellent and great hitters. We only made a few errors, but they cost us."

Earlier in the week, Williams defeated Amherst for the second time this year, 16-2, as well as outslugging RPI 9-7. Amherst's team is only a club and was obviously overmatched against the then undefeated Ephs. Mazder led Williams with her pitching and eight total bases, and Carroll added to the potent offense.

RPI traveled over the Taconic Trail one week ago, and was sent rudely home after an Eph rout. Missy Crouchley '89 went 4 for 4 and Hancilich stifled the Engineer attack with her stellar hurling. After five, the Ephs lead 9-2, at which point, Coach David Caputi switched his defense to get more players in the game. This, combined with Hancilich finally thring allowed RPI to rally for five runs in the final innings before being shut down.

Williams hosts a duo of tough teams this week, playing Mount Holyoke tomorrow at 3:30 and Trinity in a 1:00 Saturday twin-bill. Both teams are among the strongest in New England and should give perspective on just how good the 6-1 Ephs are.

W. Rugby

The WWRFC B-siders took to the road this weekend to battle the feisty yet festive lasses in the green and black of Southern Connecticut. Despite abysmal refereeing which allowed the game to degenerate into a near brawl, the Ephs women maintained their integrity and carried the day. Gina Coleman '90 was a formidable force on the pitch, mowing down dazed Connecticut players as she barreled her way into the try zone. Julie Norton '89 slyly capitalized on Southern Conn.'s confusion as they attempted to control a loose ball in the try zone, touching the ball down herself to score. Williams' fullback Katy Carr '91 was punched in the face but proved to Southern Conn. and to the exceedingly obnoxious referee that she could be a good "sport." The B's returned to Williamstown with many bruises, but another win under their belts.

The concerned faces of parents lined the sidelines of the pitch in Williamstown where the A's and C's combined to play MIT. New coaching by one of the Boston area's more notorious figures in women's rugby has improved the small MIT squad immensely, but it still lacks strength and teamwork in the scrum.

In the first half the Williams A-side consistently won all of the scrumdowns and pushed MIT down the field in a steady scoring drive that led to an easy try for Kerry Kilander '89. The C's took over after the half and allowed MIT one try, but controlled the ball for a majority of the time. Kathy Wolf '88 made several brilliant sprints on the line and freshman scrum-half Molly Foehl exhibited excellent ball-handling skills. Shelly Whelpton '90 was one of the star defensive players of the day as she mercilessly tackled MIT players. WWRFC alum Steph Jacon '87 made a guest appearance at the match, playing second row for MIT. The final score was a 4-4 tie.

The Williams women have a tough week ahead of them as they prepare to play Little Three foes Wesleyan and Amherst at Cole Field on Saturday.

—Cecilia Malm

Golf

The Williams Golf team improved its spring record to 4-1 on Saturday, overcoming intervals of hail and rain to defeat rival Colgate by four strokes at Taconic Golf Club. The bad weather led to relatively high scores and inconsistent play for both teams. Mike Harrington '88 led the Eph attack with an 81. "H" was followed by Junior Co-Captain Ian Lapey's 82 and solid play from Sean Segun '91 who fired an 86 despite the hail.

Last weekend, the Ephs took their sticks to Cape Cod to battle both the wind and foes in the New England Championships at New Seabury. The high winds on the tough Blue Course there led to a great deal of problems for the squad. Co-Captain Tim Frechette '89, however, turned in an outstanding performance, firing a 79-76 '155 to place tenth overall in a field of 200 competitors. Spike's gutsy effort helped Williams to 19th place, 7th in Div. III, and lined him up for a return trip to the Div. III Nationals in May.

Two weeks ago, the Ephs pulled through a four-way match with a 2-1 record, defeating Utica and New Paltz while losing to Nationally ranked powerhouse Skidmore. Freshman Matt Walter fired an 84 and "H" wound up with an 83. Coach Rick Pohle is concerned with the inconsistency of each individual from match to match. "Each time it seems to be someone else that plays well," Pohle said. One limiting factor for the team thus far has been the weather: Taconic Golf Club opened up just last week. This lack of playing time certainly effects the finer parts of one's golf game. The team is also very young, and Pohle expects the team to improve as the season progresses. "I'd like to think that come NESAC time, we'll be better prepared and more consistent."

On Saturday, the linksters will play host to Trinity, Holy Cross, and Union as they prep for the Little Three Championship next week at Wesleyan.

—Ben Wright

W. Lax

Raising their season record to an impressive 5-1, the women's lacrosse team beat both Mount Holyoke at Cole Field last Thursday and Smith away last Saturday. Co-Captain Christine Boddicker '88 expressed the team's satisfaction with their performance: "It's kind of difficult having an easy game before a hard game because you can get sloppy — we were glad we could maintain our level of performance through both games."

Described as a "blowaway" by Boddicker, Thursday's 15-5 win against Mount Holyoke was expected because Williams had beaten them badly in two pre-season games. Bevin Cooper

Continued on Page 12

Rugby stuns Dartmouth

Continued from Page 14

opponents: "They were a nasty lot. They hit hard and when that wasn't enough, the fists and teeth came out. Not unlike the brand of rugby they play in Europe, yet somehow less savory." While cheap shots were the exception to the Dartmouth play, bloody White Dog noses and lips were the badges of victory and testimony to the intensity of play on the pitch.

The Big Mo

As the second half began, a shift in momentum swung the pendulum towards the Big Green. Williams seemed content to lay back and defend their lead while concentrating on smothering the Green attack. As time wore on in the second half, Dartmouth whittled away the White Dog margin. With four minutes left and Williams pinned inside their own 22 meter line, Dartmouth converted a three-point penalty kick to take a 20-19 lead.

While the crowded and partisan side-line was deflated by the Dartmouth score, the Williams A-side fed off it. Having played flat and scoreless all half, the offensive drive of the White Dogs came to life. As Chris Palmedo ripped the ball from a scrum-down and shoved a pass to Kurt Oeler '88, Jon Hollenberg broke on from his fullback position. Taking the ball from Oeler, he fired a kick downfield as Jack exploded down the sideline. The Dartmouth fullback closed on the ball as Jack and Hollenberg converged on him. A crushing blow from the sophomore wing jarred the ball free, and having won the loose ruck, Williams fed the ball out the line.

Mike Goldstein broke free from near mid-field and dished to Captain Sullivan who popped a pass to Hollenberg. As quickly as the fullback had started the play he finished it, giving the WRFC a 23-20 lead. And there was much rejoicing. With two minutes remaining, Williams again assumed a strong defensive posture, but this time with a new strategy. Captain Christofersen summarized, "the pack dominated tight play. And when ball finally came free, Chris [Palmedo], Kurt [Oeler] and Goldie [Mike Goldstein] stylized the Green with great kicking. Awesome." When the final whistle blew, the unthinkable was realized. The WRFC had bested both its opponents and the spectre of defeat that had shrouded the team after the Holy Cross debacle.

As for Dartmouth? Well, the 'RFC wishes 'em the best next week vs. Berkeley. Bowling Green and Air Force at the National tournament. If the Big Green takes the Division I rugby crown, the White Dogs can sit back at home in the cozy Purple Valley and revel in knowing that they've played with the best. And won.

GENUINE

GENUINE

This week's recipients are senior rugger Nils Christofferson and Johnny Hollenberg. Captain Christofferson led the scrum, continually breaking through Dartmouth lineouts and leading the loose forward's pursuit, while fullback Hollenberg scored the winning try and made at least a dozen game saving tackles. Nils, Berger, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

WIN $$$ — ENTER THE QUIZ

As of press time Sunday, the Baltimore Orioles were making a strong run at several major league baseball records in futility:

- 1) What team holds the record for consecutive losses in a season (23)?
- 2) What team holds the record for most losses in a season ()?
- 3) The New Jersey Devils have been to the playoffs only once before in the franchise's history. What city and team were they, and what happened to them in the playoffs?
- 4) Coming into this season's playoffs, the Boston Bruins had not beaten the Montreal Canadiens in a playoff series since _____?

Turn in your answers to Ted Hobart or Marc McDermott or SU 2917 by Saturday morning, or to the Record office (2488) on Sunday afternoon. In case of a tie, a drawing will be held among entries with the most correct answers. Last week's winner, Chris Jeppson, wins a $15 gift certificate to Goff's Sports. Congratulations, Jeppson!

Last week's answers: 1) Flyers - Capitals; 2) Atlanta Braves; 3) Toronto Blue Jays; 4) Lakers, Celtics, and Sixers.

Goff's Sports, inc.

(413) 458-3605
15 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

Baseball nabs twinbill from Redbirds

by Frank Vespe

The only thing that kept Saturday from being an absolutely perfect day for the Williams baseball team was the weather. But even a 15-minute delay caused by sleet couldn't put a damper on the festivities as the Ephs celebrated the dedication of their new Bobby Coombs Field by sweeping a doubleheader from Wesleyan, 5-2 and 11-1.

Freshman John Whalen waits for the late pickoff throw during last Saturday's action versus Wesleyan. (Kaplan)

Pitching was the story in both games. In the opener Chris Conway '89 met Wesleyan ace Jim Lukowski, who entered the game with a 4-1 record and a reputation as one of the best pitchers in New England. By game's end, however, it was Conway who had the upper hand as he tossed a 6-hitter and kept Wesleyan at bay.

The Ephs struck quickly against Lukowski, scoring once in the first inning and three more times in the third to open an insurmountable 4-run lead. Centerfielder Jim Duquette '88 opened the game by doubling to left field. With two outs, third baseman Chris Pachus '88 brought Duquette around with the game's first run as he tripled to center.

In the third inning, Williams took advantage of two Wesleyan errors to tally three times on only two hits. Senior leftfielder Sean Logan led off the inning with a single. Duquette then reached on an error. Two outs later, with the bases loaded, the Wesleyan pitcher seemed to have dodged the bullet when he forced Pachus to hit a grounder to third base — but Wesleyan's third sacker misplayed the ball, allowing Pachus to reach second and Duquette to score. Catcher Brian Harwell followed with a single which drove Pachus in and gave the Ephs a 4-0 advantage.

Williams put the game away in the sixth as Harwell singled and scored. Conway was outstanding on the mound, as he went the distance and allowed two runs on six hits. He walked two.

The Ephs pounded out 15 hits in the second game while pitcher Mike Barbera '89 limited the Cardinals to only four hits. Williams again took command early in the contest, as Duquette led off the game with a triple and scored on Holsten's sacrifice fly. The Ephmen scored two more times in the second inning as Holsten's single scored Logan and rightfielder Todd Strieter '90. Holsten would finish the game with four RBI's to give him a team-leading and record breaking 27 on the season.

On the mound Barbera had little trouble with Wesleyan's vaunted offense, limiting the Cardinals to one hit through the first three innings. In the fourth, Wesleyan finally broke the spell as Lukowski's sacrifice fly scored second baseman Mike Marciello. However, Wesleyan would draw no closer as Barbera allowed but two more hits.

After a delay caused by sleet and generally terrible playing conditions in the top of the sixth, Williams scored five runs while sending 11 men to the plate in the bottom half of the stanza. Duquette, Holsten, and Collins all singled and scored in the inning, while designated hitter Scott Kennedy '89 added a double and later scored, as the Ephs handed Wesleyan pitcher John Hurley his first defeat after four triumphs. Barbera improved to 4-2 on the season.

The Ephs have won their last three starts to improve their slate to 11-8. This week they visit Wesleyan on Monday before hosting Amherst on Tuesday and Colby in a doubleheader on Saturday. If the Ephs can win either of their two Little Three games this week, they will be 3-1 in the competition and in an excellent position to bring home their first Little Three title in several years.

The expression on junior Chris Palmedo's face as he takes the ball weak into the heart of Dartmouth's pack evidences the intensity of play in the WRFC's win over Dartmouth. The Big Green will travel to the national championship tourney this weekend while the White Dogs prepare for Amherst. (Scala)

Men's rugby stuns Green on Hollenberg's last-minute try

by Andy Harris

When you are among the best that Division I has to offer and less than one week away from the Final Four tournament, getting knocked around by an underdog that doesn't even qualify to compete for the national title is not what you expect. But that is what the Dartmouth Rugby Football Club encountered when it rolled onto Cole Field last Saturday. Williams topped the vaunted Big Green 23-20.

Rebounding from a shocking loss a week before to the Crusaders of the Holy Cross, the WRFC brawled through 90 minutes of tough rugby, beating Dartmouth to the ball and playing selfless and hard nose defense. "We surprised ourselves," admitted junior hooker Chas Benedict. "Usually we're slow in the early going. When we get behind early, sometimes we get in trouble. But today we blasted off the starting whistle."

Blast they did. Williams stormed to a 19-6 first half lead off an opening minute penalty kick by Jon Hollenberg '88 and tries by Chris Palmedo '89, Michael Sullivan '88 and Brian Baird '89. Swarming running by Mike Goldstein '88 and Phil Jack '90 set the pace for the White Dog barrage as the line repeatedly broke through the Big Green defense.

While Dartmouth demonstrated superior technique in rucking and mauling, the Dogs quickly adapted to the Green's style of play: rough, low and hard. Sporting a crimson circle of teeth marks on his forearm, Williams flanker Brad Roegge '88 was quick to assess the

Continued on Page 13

Steinbrenner speaks

by Ted Hobart

George Steinbrenner '52 gave local media a taste of his potent quotables when he came to town to participate in dedication ceremonies for the new Anthony Plansky Track and Bobby Coombs baseball field at Weston on Saturday. The outspoken owner of the New York Yankees gave a press conference in the press box at Weston on Saturday afternoon. Steinbrenner was the lead donor for the new track and baseball facilities.

"I wouldn't be able to get in [to Williams now], but it's tremendous to see these young people from Williams and Amherst and Wesleyan that carry the academic load they do and still have time to compete." With the Little Three track meet going on right outside the window, Steinbrenner was questioned about his views on the role of athletics in college, and at Williams as opposed to Division I schools.

"I spent a couple of years in Division I athletics at Purdue and Northwestern and there is a chance that [professionalization of college athletics] can happen, just because of peer pressure, alumni pressure... to produce winners. These [Williams' new facilities] are big-time facilities, but I don't think with the faculty they've got at Williams that that's ever going to happen."

Athletic lessons

By the same token, Steinbrenner emphasized the importance of athletics. "The lessons they learn out here [in athletic competition] are as important as lessons they learn in the classroom. The lessons you learn out here, both the successes and failures, are every bit as important to the character that you're building for your future life as the classroom. They [critics of athletics] haven't been out in the real world. They don't know what the competition is out there. They don't know it feels to get knocked down and have to get yourself back up."

Asked if recent affirmative action programs in major league baseball have improved the situation, Steinbrenner said they have, but noted that people often pay only lip service to such ideals. "We're placing too much importance on words, and twisting words. Place it on deeds." Steinbrenner was recently criticized for referring to his chief accountant as "a young black boy." Steinbrenner explained that in his manner of speaking, he refers to all young people as 'boys or girls', and this was just another example of people putting too much emphasis on words.

'Me and the SAC'

On the drug problem in major league baseball, he was quick to point out that the drug problem is not limited to baseball. "It is the single biggest domestic problem we have. It would take me about two days, I think, to clean up the whole drug problem — me and the Strategic Air

Continued on Page 10

The women's track team won the coveted crown at the inaugural Little Three meet on the Anthony J. Plansky Track. The men's team took a disappointing second, finishing only one point behind Amherst. (Steinman)

Women take Little Three at Plansky Track

by Kristen Tallo

The Williams College Women's track team doused Amherst (57.5) and Wesleyan (26) with a final score of 96.5 in the Little Three meet on Saturday. The men's team needed second place in the final mile relay event to top Amherst by one point, 78 to 77. The team took second, and reigned victorious — that is, until the coach discovered that the scorekeeper had inadvertently attributed a one-point, fourth place Amherst accomplishment to Williams. The correction brought the final score to 77 for Williams, 78 for Amherst, and 42 for Wesleyan.

The events began after the dedication of the new track to Mr. Anthony J. Plansky, Williams track and cross-country coach from 1931 to 1978.

Two school records fell for the women. Sophomore Karlyn McNall siphoned off three wins, in the triple jump (10.22 m), the long jump (4.95 m), and the javelin with a record-setting 30.02 meter throw. Junior Dawn Macauley set a new 15.4 m record in the high hurdles, her 1:06.43 intermediate hurdles time making her a dual champion.

Sophomore Ann Dannhauer hauled in two wins in the 800 (2:18.1) and the 3000 m (11:01.6), shadowed in the latter event by second-place senior co-captain Sarah Pierce with 11:07.8, and third-place junior Mika Brzezinski (11:27.8). Junior Jennifer Morris charged in at first in the 1500 at 4:55.39, senior co-captain Sarah St. Antoine at second (4:55.66). The women crowded out the opponents in the high hurdles with first (Macauley), second (McNall, 16.8 m) and third (junior Noriko Honda, 17.1 m) places. Honda also took second in the intermediate hurdles at 1:13.88. Jumping 4' 10" in the high jump were both sophomore Nicole Jefferson and Macauley, Jefferson taking first because of fewer attempts.

Williams outstripped the other two teams in the 1600 relay (4:14.3) due to the persistence of Jefferson, Macauley, freshman Mary Moule, and senior co-captain Joan Davis. Davis had an individual second-place in the 200 (26.8 seconds), along with McNall in the hammerthrow (25.98). Freshman Meg Brown hurled satellites in the shotput (8.45 m) and the discus

Continued on Page 12

The Williams Record

VOL. 101, NO. 23

USPA 684-680

MAY 3, 1988

Prominent hispanic mayor to speak at commencement

One of the nation's foremost Hispanic politicians and a retiring Williams professor will be the two main speakers during the college's Commencement weekend. Henry Cisneros, the four-term mayor of San Antonio, will speak at the college's 199th Commencement on Sunday, June 5. David Park, Webster Atwell Class of 1921 professor of physics, will speak at the Baccalaureate Service on Saturday, June 4.

In 1981 Cisneros became the first Hispanic-American elected mayor of a large city. Previously he had been the youngest member ever of the San Antonio City Council. Cisneros, now 40 years old, has been re-elected mayor three times with 94 percent, 73 percent and 67 percent of the vote. In 1984 the Democratic presidential nominee, Walter Mondale, interviewed Cisneros as a potential running mate. He is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and of the Visiting Committee of the Kennedy School of Government of Harvard University. He is a faculty member in the Public Administration Program at the University of Texas at San Antonio and a faculty member of the Department of Urban Studies at Trinity University in San Antonio. He serves as a trustee of Notre Dame University and served, in 1985-87, on the board of regents of the Texas A&M University System.

"National Treasure"

Cisneros was a White House Fellow in 1971-72, working as assistant to Elliot Richardson, then secretary of health, education and welfare, who dubbed the 25-year-old Cisneros a "national treasure." He is past president of the National League of Cities and of the Texas Municipal League.

Henry Cisneros

Cisneros earned a bachelor's degree in 1968 and a master's in urban and regional planning, both from Texas A&M. He also earned a master's in public

Continued on Page 4

Senior Faculty stressed and overextended, report says

by Rob Weisberg

Faculty members appear to be stretched somewhat thin by their own willingness to serve and by the college's traditional expectations of them, according to a report made available to the college community last week.

The report was based on the findings of a reaccreditation committee that visited the campus last October. The college is reviewed for reaccreditation every ten years.

The committee also mentioned problems with the tenure review process, academic advising and the science libraries. Although the report cited many strengths, it addressed at some length problems perceived by junior and senior faculty members.

"Some senior faculty feel caught up in what they feel is the increasing complexity and size of the college. They have the perception that there is more administrative work than ever ... It appears to have made for a less satisfied senior faculty than the community at large may fully realize," the report said. "Some faculty feel tension between teaching, on the one hand, and manifold obligations on the other hand. This tension may tend in the future to inhibit experiments and drain energy away from teaching."

Continued on Page 7

Students pitch in to finish playground

by Ann Mantil

Imagine a world that must be close to paradise for a child. Imagine haunted castles, bouncing firetrucks, tire cubes, suspended bridges and huge sandboxes. Now imagine it all right in your own backyard.

This dream has become a reality for the children of Williamstown. Construction on the new Kids' World playground directly behind Williamstown Elementary School began last Wednesday and was completed Sunday night.

Williams College students lent a hand at the site, which is 60 by 80 yards. "The college kids have been wonderful. We couldn't have built the playground without them," Bonnie Clark, co-coordinator of the project, said. "They're always asking, 'What can we do?'"

On Wednesday, when the groundbreaking took place, Clark needed volunteers to set up 150 wooden poles serving as the framework for the structure. "We had 206 volunteers, and most of them were college athletic teams," she said. "So our first day was a huge success, largely because of the physical labor of the college kids."

Council support

"In talking to people working on the site, they said if it hadn't been for Williams students, they would have been under a real constraint," College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 said. "I think they thought that was neat because we're the ones least likely to use it or to ever have kids that will use it."

The council paid for an all-campus mailing encouraging students to sign up for construction shifts. Council members were also asked to sign up people in their residential houses and to ask house presidents for a donation from the house's cultural funds.

The council has not yet donated any money directly. "We decided to address our efforts to labor. Our contribution is bodies," Blankenship said that a money donation would be considered this week.

Clark said that there was usually a rush of Williams students in the early afternoon, and another rush after 4:30 p.m. when parents got out of work. "Friday morning it was really low, so I talked to the guys at WCFM [the college radio station]. I've been calling them a lot and asking them to put out the plea."

Could've used the help

Dave Mochel '88 said he had put in 13 hours at the playground by Friday afternoon, working on projects such as building swings and stringing lights to allow night work. "The organization has been excellent, but they could definitely use more people to help out," he said.

College students are not the only people who have donated their time. Among the community groups who lent a hand were First Agricultural Bank employees, Mount Greylock High School teachers and Viet-

Continued on Page 7

CARE member Kevin Brown '90 talks to a television crew outside Jenness House during the students takeover of the deans office. (Ward)

CARE members unsure of takeover's long-term effects

by Peter Balaban

The takeover of the deans office two weekends ago by the Coalition Against Racist Education attracted national media coverage and sparked discussion across campus. That much is clear. But what does not seem so clear at this point, at least to CARE members, is whether any significant, long-term changes will result from their action.

"We won't know what we have gained for another year or two," said Kevin Hinton '89, a CARE member who participated in negotiations with administrators during the takeover.

Hinton said minority demands that have been agreed upon with the administration in the past have not been kept by the college, and he alluded to the 1969 takeover of Hopkins Hall and demands put forth by the Black Student Union last year.

"I think we have made certain commitments," College President Francis Oakley said. "We will certainly deliver on them."

"Only time will tell," Hinton said, "at this point all we can say is that we have made a lot of work for ourselves. In the short run, I feel we did meet with a moderate rate of success."

Not everyone satisfied

Hinton said that some CARE members who negotiated with administrators said that they felt they had not been as successful as they could have been.

"Not everyone was satisfied with the final agreements. I imagine not everyone on the administrative side was satisfied with the agreements [either]," he said.

Continued on Page 7

Kids' World volunteer Jamie Dubendorf takes a potato chip break during construction last week. (Ward)

INSIDE THE RECORD

Students run weekly debate on TV 4 Women harassed by drunk man 8

Don't stop now

When the Coalition Against Racist Education vacated Jenness House last Monday afternoon it received in return an administrative acceptance of four of its original 13 demands. Although some of the demands pose serious logistical problems, most of them, if granted, would remedy deficiencies in life at Williams. Now that members of the administration have agreed to some of the demands, it is vital that they act to implement them quickly and then follow up with additional steps.

CARE's most realistic demands pertain to student life at Williams. And these were the ones met by the college. Nonetheless, Williams could have acceded to more than it did.

Although the school pledged to offer scholarships with preference given to poor minority students, it ignored the CARE demand for a stepped up recruitment process in admissions policy. Williams needs to intensify recruitment of minority students, however, to compensate for being less attractive to minority students than other schools.

Additionally, the need for a minority special assistant to the president seems especially obvious in light of the protest. There needs to be someone in that office who feels more acutely the problems with minority life at Williams.

On the other side of the coin, some of CARE's demands are simply unrealistic. The organization insists upon two visiting professorships for Hispanic-American faculty effective 1988-89 as well as one black and Hispanic-American tenure track professor in Division III by 1989-90. National statistics show that such individuals are in very short supply. If potential minority faculty do not exist, then Williams cannot hire them. Although it has been suggested that Williams offer higher salaries or lighter teaching loads to lure minority faculty, these benefits have the potential in such a small community for creating a lot of tension and resentment.

By way of the dramatic takeover of Jenness House, CARE has become a prime mover in Williams' assessment of minority policy and forced the administration's hand. It seems to have recognized its importance as a negotiator and not simply a protester.

Although the protest is over, the time for action is now. In 1969, Hopkins Hall was taken over by a concerned group of minority students with 12 demands. When the college agreed to meet them, the protesters agreed to leave. However, as time passed, it turned out that not all of the twelve demands were met.

What CARE needs is a binding promise from the administration to adhere to the terms of the agreement. A public statement is not enough. CARE in three days set the ball rolling for substantive progress in erasing minority concerns at the college. The college must keep that ball rolling.

On The Record . . .

"I think we have made certain commitments. We will certainly deliver on them."

—College President Francis Oakley on the school's agreement with CARE

"It felt great to come through with the home run. I've been waiting four years for something like this to happen."

—Third baseman Chris Pachus '89 on his game winning homer against Bowdoin on Sunday.

"I view the two as complementary."

—Issue publisher Adam Ruderman '88 on The Issue and The Record

DEBBIE SNYDER, Editor in Chief
AL MOTTUR, Executive Editor
RUSS HOLLENBECK, Business Director

PETER BALABAN, News Editor
BETH BROADRUP, Features Editor
TED HOBART, Sports Editor
JED SCALA, Photography Editor
KIRSTEN HASENFUSS, Layout Editor

CHARLES SAMUELSON, Op-Ed Editor
TRAVIS PIERSON, Arts Editor
MARC McDERMOTT, Sports Editor
RICH WARD, Photography Editor
MARY ILIFF, Layout Editor

News Assistants: Stephanie Jones, Scott O'Callaghan, Todd Owens
Features Assistants: Ann Mantili, Rob Weisberg
Photography Assistant: Jay Steinman
Layout Assistant: Lisa Kaestner

Entered as Second-Class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM by Rich Gardella

Letters

Promo doesn't slight community

To the Editor:

In a letter which appeared two Records ago, Bill Hoch accused WCFM of insensitivity to the issue of drunk driving and to the community. Nothing could be further from the truth.

WCFM neither advocates drunk driving nor makes fun of it. Such an accusation is insensitive in itself and merits little response. In terms of its responsibility to the community, WCFM has always gone out of its way to maintain a balance of informative, entertaining and tasteful programming that is a valuable asset to the community.

While the Board of Directors of WCFM is always open to suggestions and criticism, we regret that some people view a letter to the Record as the only means available to voice their opinion. In the future, please address any suggestions, questions or complaints about any programming on WCFM to the General Manager, c/o WCFM, Baxter Hall.

The Board of Directors of WCFM

Chalkings affirm rights and power

To the Editor:

Ken Levy's Op-Ed article, "BGLU's 'techniques of propaganda' further tension and division" was strangely overblown and reactionary in relation to the action that he claimed to assail. Levy's larger agenda to undermine the presence of gay activists on campus was only thinly disguised by his argument objecting to the symbols and slogans underfoot last week.

He first provided a definition for vandalism, and then admitted that, well, the chalkings would disappear on their own. Then he drew violent parallels to the chalkings, overlooking the fact that our chalkings invoked no fear in any members of the community, and were not oppressive or threatening to anyone. (Does Levy not know that pink triangles are the symbols that WE wore in Nazi concentration camps?)

Most significantly, a large portion of the Op-Ed piece stated that activists who are "unsuccessful and uncomfortable" have no right to seek alternative or underground means of promoting their cause. Though he adds parenthetically that gay activists at Williams might not fall into that category, he proceeds to offer gratuitous conjectures about various "self-imposed limitations" that gay people carry, in an attempt to attribute shame and weakness to gay people as a whole.

The sidewalk chalking that took place here was a celebrative act following an euphoric week during which more gay people came out on this campus than ever before. Our statement in the chalkings was that the "Great Power" we hold and will maintain is the power to be proud, and open, about who we are.

Doug Krebbel '88

Question writers of the OED

To the Editor:

Williams College is opposed to racism. I believe that. I also believe that the college is operating under a limited definition of what is racist. Martin Furey's letter in last week's Record provided the Oxford English Dictionary's definition to which he and probably the college's administration subscribe. Let me refresh your memory: "racist (substantially racism): belief in the superiority of a particular race leading to prejudice and antagonism towards people of other races, especially those in close proximity who may be felt as a threat to one's cultural and racial integrity or economic well-being." This well-accepted definition assumes that racism is a premeditated and willful act, but racism goes much deeper. We might ask who wrote the Oxford English Dictionary and formulated the simplistic definition. My guess is that it was white males who have a stake in not labeling themselves racist.

Furey's letter suggested that the name CARE (Coalition against Racist Education) indicates that the faculty and administration are racist. He then dismissed this proposition as ridiculous. Maybe we should not be so quick to dismiss it. All of us, including the administration and faculty, live in a world of institutional racism. We often perform racist actions without realizing they are racist. I have no intention of denouncing individuals for racism, for much of the blame rests on the institutions that perpetuate it.

What institutional racism is there at Williams? There are classes that assume one to be a white Christian. There are students, minority and not, who learn nothing of the diversity of our world. There are few minority profes-

Continued on Page 8

Religion at Williams

Judaism fills many different roles in the lives of students

by Jennifer Eisenberg '90

When as a perspective student I wandered through the admissions office and glanced at the pamphlet on the Jewish association, I vowed that this was one organization I would never join. The pictures showed small groups of people praying, with occasional "action shots" of the sabbath candles being lit. As one who had never been observant at home, this did not appeal.

However, it was apparent from the moment I was dragged to my first service by a friend that the Jewish Association was unfairly portrayed. By the time I became involved, the Association was composed of a vibrant group of people coming together once a week or more to eat, pray and talk. While the pamphlet had addressed the religious side of being Jewish, it neglected the cultural and social aspects which flourished at Williams like in any other Jewish community.

Defining what it means to be Jewish has never been an easy task. It is not simply a religion — one can be an outstanding member of the Jewish community and rarely, if ever, attend services. Nor does one ever have to attest to one's faith or belief in God to be considered a Jew. Instead, being Jewish is to participate on any one or more of three levels: social, cultural or religious. To this end, the Jewish Association sponsors a number of purely social events including pizza and beer nights and Wednesday night snacks. On a cultural level we sponsor speakers, have monthly brunches with discussion topics ranging from the "Situation in the Middle East" to "Jewish Humor," kosher Sabbath dinners, and "Israeli nights" with Israeli folk dancing and traditional food. Of course there are religious events as well: weekly Sabbath services, holiday services and the occasional Havdalah (end of the Sabbath) service. All of these are informal and group led, which actually makes them fun, unlike the boring, lengthy services many of us were forced to attend as children. This slew of activities comprise the fundamental idea of community: a group of people that come together regularly for a wide range of events, and in doing so form a bond that can be relied on in times of happiness, trouble and need.

The Williams College Jewish Association has achieved the enormous task of CARE seeks to address certain unattended needs of community

by Farhan Haq Khan Lodhi '89, Germaine Belle '89 and Muna Ben Barka El Filuri '88

Martin J. Furey III's letter of April 26, 1988 proved to be an empty exercise in wordplay which lacked substantive knowledge and information. Furey not only makes a variety of inaccurate statements about CARE and its purposes, but compounds his errors by proceeding from his mistaken assumptions to make smug and palpably offensive arguments. Particularly misguided is Mr. Furey's assertion — with absolutely no substantiation other than Mr. Furey's own puzzling idea — that CARE had sought to remove Nancy McIntire from office. As members of CARE we neither wanted nor desired such a thing when we asked for a Minority Special Assistant on Affirmative action hiring. Rather, we have been impressed with Ms McIntire's concern for the community and sense of responsibility.

Nevertheless, as Williams College's record on minority faculty hiring shows, more staff for the Affirmative Action office — including, most crucially, an officer particularly aware of minority views and needs — is necessary. Given that, Mr. Furey's mocking allegation that Ms McIntire would be fired because her "skin was not deemed of the appropriate color" is hideously wrong. As much as certain people would like to believe that demanding change are themselves racist, the truth of the matter is that CARE has always strived to improve the community so that minority and white viewpoints would be offered on crucial hiring decisions. In short, we wanted to strengthen Ms McIntire's office, not to eradicate it.

Mr. Furey is similarly misinformed about the "myopic" platform on full scholarships. As the publicly released final agreement between CARE and the administration shows, CARE did not intend to restrict scholarships to low SES minority students from urban areas. Rather, CARE wished to establish scholarships with a preference for low SES urban minorities and a secondary preference for the rural minority students creating a community despite (or because of?) its small size. Williams is about ten percent Jewish, and for this reason, the size of the community is limited. In some respects this brings people closer together faster — it is not hard to become closely tied with a group of people who shove an onion and knife in your hand the first time you come for a kosher Sabbath dinner, and ask you to help prepare the meal. On the other hand, the small size of the community leads to the same fears of marginalization I felt when I first looked at the pamphlet in the admissions office. It is hard to join an organization if it seems that joining jeopardizes one's hard-won position in the mainstream.

time minority." The ethic of the community in its solidity and permanence prevents this from becoming the case. One can contribute one's energies and talents to the community when one is able to, and receive the reassurance of the community when one needs it. This provides a much needed support for those who may come to Williams and not identify with its Protestant past.

Many prospective students from heavily Jewish areas worry that because of its location and history, Williams cannot support a thriving Jewish community. However, as the Association's list of events expands, and as the school builds the new Jewish Religious Center with

The wonderful thing about the Jewish Association is that the fear of marginalization is unfounded.

The wonderful thing about the current Jewish Association is that the fear of marginalization is unfounded. One can be an active member of the community in any way one chooses, and at the same time be a "mainstream" Williams student whose life is enhanced by the experience, not ruled by it. At a small college like Williams, it might seem that in acknowledging one's minority status, one must be prepared to become a "full-facilities that will allow students to keep strictly kosher, the Jewish community will only continue to grow. It is exciting to see the expansion of the community, and the resulting increase in understanding of Judaism among the Williams population at large.

Jennifer Eisenberg is the President of the Williams College Jewish Association.

Furey assumed CARE excluded. Once again, CARE did not wish for the administration to neglect providing sufficient financial aid so as to augment the diversity of the Williams campus; rather, we wished to stress the need to help certain groups that have been most clearly rendered invisible over the years.

Furthermore, Mr. Furey assumes — once again, with no basis for judgement except his own (limited) views as a white male — that minority students have no specific unique social and cultural needs that cannot be addressed by existing school structures. How does Mr. Furey concerns can be brought to the attention of more than a handful of people and minority culture on this campus can thrive.

Thus, Mr. Furey's letter, and its insinuation that the members of CARE are the real racists on campus (presumably, we are worse than those who harassed CARE members over the weekend; or those who persist in flying Confederate flags today), is based on a series of mistaken assumptions — very typical of much of Williams' political "discourse."

The takeover of Jenness House was not designed to impress anyone. It is only natural that it did not impress Mr. Furey. Its basic purpose was a show of protest and a reaffirmation of the urgency of our concerns. Although President Oakley and the administration have shown great care and concern when it comes to minority issues, they have often neglected the viewpoints of the people most directly affected by affirmative action.

As we suggest in conclusion that Mr. Furey and his supporters attempt to become more sensitive to and accurately informed on minority problems on this campus and everywhere before they try to judge the ways in which the minorities themselves strive to deal with them.

The authors are members of CARE.

The takeover of Jenness House was not designed to impress anyone.

know this? In point of fact, a variety of minority organizations have wanted, and genuinely required, a building where groups like VISTA and ASIA can meet. Cultural events such as Indian music or Caribbean dancing should not be shoehorned into remote, and thereby marginal, areas of the campus. In general, we seek a place where minority

SAVE THIS NUMBER VILLAGE AUTO REPAIR
458-8468
Foreign Auto Service and Parts
610 North Hoosac Road, Williamstown turn right at end of Cole Avenue

friends & lovers Astrology's Book Of Love Astrological Profiles

Your friends & lovers report is a counseling astrologer's comparison of two individual birth horoscopes. Each report is twelve or more pages in length, and explores your relationship from several points of view.

How does each of you approach relationships in general? Do you have an easy time becoming close? What parts of either personality will help or hinder a relationship, and how are they revealed in the birth chart?

After exploring these questions for both individuals, the report goes on to see how the two charts interconnect in this unique relationship. How will these two get along? What role does each play here?

The report is calculated just for you (based on your birth dates) and its accuracy can be startling...sometimes it's just too close for comfort!

Let friends & lovers reveal new insights into non-romantic relationships, too: family, friends, business...anyone you'd like to know more about.

Order Form
Your Name: _____
Address: _____
City/State/Zip: _____

Is this report to be written for a:
☐ Romantic ☐ Non-romantic relationship?

First person:
First name: _____ Male Female
Birthdate (mo./day/yr.): _____
Birthplace (optional): _____
Time of day (optional): _____ AM PM

Second person:
First name: _____ Male Female
Birthdate (mo./day/yr.): _____
Birthplace (optional): _____
Time of day (optional): _____ AM PM

Mail $15.00 and this form to
New Age Nuances
P.O. Box 625
Williamstown, MA 01267
Processing takes 7-10 days

New student-run tv show on channel seven

by Stephanie Jones

A few minutes before the cameras started rolling, Jeff Rogers '90 broke a button on his pants. He tried to cover it up with his jacket but did not like the way that looked. Then he decided against using a belt because he was already wearing suspenders. He finally managed to solve his problem with a safety pin.

Rogers' difficulties were typical of the confusion last Friday afternoon at Berkshire Cablevision in North Adams, where a group of students were putting together the second episode of "American Pulse."

The show, which is produced, written and directed by Williams students, is the brainchild of Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew. The students film the show on Fridays, edit it on Mondays and air it Tuesdays at 8:00 p.m. on channel 7.

Before the filming began, the students argued about who had which camera, where to put the clock and whether the Massachusetts or American flag should be behind Drew when he appeared on camera.

The show has two formats which alternate weekly. Russ Hollenbeck '90 moderates the panel discussions, while Rogers moderates the debates between two students. Rogers moderates a show on the presidential campaign that will air tonight.

We're going to turn this into a political powerhouse . . . I mean, this is politics

"We're going to turn this into a political powerhouse . . . I mean, this is politics, this is how you learn, this is media," Rogers said.

Bob Howie '90, a student involved in producing the show, said that next week's show will discuss race relations and the West Bank. He said they hope to convince a member of the Coalition Against a Racist Education to appear on the show.

Drew said he came up with the idea while watching shows like "Crossfire" and "Firing Line." He said he encourages debate in the classroom and wondered why he could not do the same on television.

"People love to watch a fight," Drew said. "We try to get two people we think will tangle with each other." After the taping he said to Rogers, "People are going to hate your guts, but they'll watch the show."

Drew said he feels it is important that the show be completely student-run. He said the students formed their own organization and elected Rogers as coordinator.

But Drew apparently has his own motives.

He is considering running for state office and said he wanted an opportunity to get across his ideas. He does this during a three to four minute segment at the end of the show called "The Drew View."

I sat there sweating, my heart beating about a mile a minute.

Drew said another reason he started the show was to give students leadership training. He said he encourages his students to run for political office and to do that, he said, they have to learn how to be good on television.

Drew said the hardest part of the show is appearing on camera. Howie, who appeared on the first installment of the show, seemed to agree.

"The cameras look so darn menacing when you look at them at first. It's about 6000 watts of light coming down on you. I sat there sweating, my heart beating about a mile a minute," Howie said.

Ten students are involved in the show, Howie said. They take turns working on different aspects of production. He said they are hoping to involve more students and make the show a tradition which will be around in 100 years.

Drew said the show is a lot of fun and the first episode last week received a favorable response. "[The viewers] seemed to feel it was a lot more polished than it really was," he said.

When they finished filming the show last Friday, Drew and the students watched it to see how it turned out. Drew said that everyone looked great. "[Rogers] is the next Mort Downey, Jr.," he said.

Drew considering running for State rep

by Scott J. O'Callaghan

His campaign manager is a freshman. His opponent commands overwhelming support from his constituents. He is registered with the wrong party. But despite the odds, John Drew thinks he might run for office.

Drew, who is an assistant professor of political science, said last Friday that he is "aggressively exploring the option" of challenging state Representative Sherwood Guernsey D-Williamstown for the Second Berkshire District in the November general election. He has not yet announced his candidacy. First, Drew must change his voter registration from Democrat to Republican.

The minute I got involved, they started asking me to run for office. Again and again...

Although he was a Democrat when he was in school, Drew changed his affiliation once he went to work. He said that he registered Democratic in Massachusetts since it is a one-party state, but once here, he found an active Republican Party.

"The minute I got involved, they started asking me to run for office. Again and again and . . .," he said. In February, Drew attended a candidate training seminar and has been receiving weekly packets of information on issues since then.

Split the vote
"The reason the Republican Party wanted me to run is that I would split Sherwood Guernsey's vote in Williamstown and pick up the conservative vote in the other part of the district," he said. Guernsey, a Democrat, is Williamstown's representative in the state legislature. Drew said he expects the race to focus on the popularity and image of the two men involved.

Aaric Eisenstein '91, Drew's campaign manager, said that Drew was asked to consider running for office about three weeks ago. He said he thinks that if Drew decides to run, a formal announcement will be made in June or July.

If he becomes a candidate, he said that he will try to meet some of the special needs of the district. "We have to let businessmen know that we want jobs out here," he said. Creating new jobs must not hurt the environment, however, he said.

"I want government to live within its means," Drew said. He would oppose any increase in taxes or other forms of revenues for the government. "If you give more money to the people than the state, I have faith that the people will know better how to spend it."

Speed it up
He also said that he would like to speed up the time legislators in Boston take to act on local issues. He said that area legislators have stalled action on issues like solid waste disposal and work on the Pyramid Mall and that he favors quick action on both issues.

I want government to live within its means

Professor Emeritus of Government James Macgregor Burns, who ran unsuccessfully for the U.S. House of Representatives in 1958 against Silvio Conte (R-Pittsfield), said, "I think the issue will be Guern-

Society of Time. His book The Image of Eternity: Roots of Time in the Physical World, published in 1979, earned the 1980 Phi Beta Kappa Award "for an outstanding contribution to the literature of science."

Park recently co-edited the book No Way: The Nature of the Impossible. This fall Princeton University Press will publish his latest book titled The How and the Why. He is currently writing a book on mathematical physics.

sey's record in the legislature." Burns, a member of the town Democratic Committee, said that Guernsey's role as a delegate for presidential candidate Governor Michael Dukakis at the Democratic Convention can only help.

"I think the presidential race will reverberate in this district," Burns said. He also said that he did not feel that local issues will be a major factor in the election.

People love to watch a fight

Drew said that he has been interested in public office since he was 14. "Getting a Ph.D. in political science is an expression of that interest." His Winter Study class entitled "Decisions, Decisions" this past year made him think about what he was doing, he said.

"As I was working with the students, it became increasingly clear that I wanted to combine [what I wanted to see done] with political office," he said. This corresponds with the "Drew view" that all people have the capacity to be good leaders, he said.

Drew argues that his experience in running for office and possibly being elected will help his students. He said he would like to involve students in his campaign as much as possible to show them what politics is like.

"Trust yourself," he said he tells his students. "You're all great."

David Park

Campus publications have taken Issue with the Record

by Bill Savadove

During The Issue's founding in February, publisher Adam Ruderman '88 said, "In my opinion, The Record has become stagnant. Its format is static. It doesn't experiment and change the way I feel a campus newspaper ought to."

Although The Issue initially grew out of dissatisfaction with The Record, the publication does not consider itself an alternative newspaper.

"As it developed, it turned into something that you might more appropriately term a news magazine," co-publisher Mike Riley '88 said.

Ruderman said that The Issue provides a forum for examination of issues, and The Record covers events. "I view the two as complementary." "The Issue has staked out for itself a role that's quite distinct from The Record," Joe Thorndike '88, former editor in chief of The Record and consultant to The Issue, said.

Thorndike said he had hoped that a new paper competing head-to-head with The Record, as The Issue originally planned to do, would improve the quality of The Record's coverage. Since The Issue has begun moving away from direct competition, he said, "Only time will tell if The Issue will affect The Record in any demonstrable way."

The Issue is not the first newspaper to attempt to compete with The Record. On February 5, 1970, the inaugural issue of The Advocate, an alternative newspaper, appeared on campus.

Dead kind of fossil

Co-founder of The Advocate Charles Rubin '72 said, "The Record was just this tried and true dead kind of fossil. It needed to be shaken up.... We felt The Record was reactionary, inverted pyramid journalism."

James Grubb '74, who served

Continued on Page 9

Dartmouth College president of nine months James O. Freedman took an unprecedented stand against the conservative student newspaper The Dartmouth Review in early April. Since the paper's beginnings eight years ago, the college had ignored its controversial actions, which include tearing down anti-apartheid shanties and publishing a list of members of a campus homosexual organization. In February, four Review staffers had a confrontation with black music professor William S. Cole. The students were charged with harassing the professor, and three of them were suspended. According to the Chronicle of Higher Education, Freedman accused the paper of "poisoning the intellectual environment of the campus." His remarks were greeted enthusiastically by faculty members, who complained of the intimidation they felt from the paper.

Meanwhile, Christopher Baldwin, editor of the Review until his suspension, has accepted a full-time job offered by conservative columnist William Buckley at the magazine he edits, the National Review. Jeffrey Hart, the Dartmouth English professor and National Review editor who told Buckley about Baldwin, said, "I think the heavy penalties were designed to hurt the newspaper. We felt this was outrageous and that we could help out." The New York Post reports that Baldwin is planning a lawsuit against Dartmouth and has received support from Iowa Senator Charles Grassley and Secretary of Education William Bennett (Williams '65).

Smith

A year-long search for an affirmative-action officer at Smith College has ended in failure. Last week, Richard Williams, the top candidate from a group of 76, turned down the job offer, citing the "no win" situation at Smith. College president Mary Maples-Dunn announced Smith's decision on April 25, a day after a student group called Concerned Students of All Colors threatened to seek prosecution of college officials for civil-rights violations if the college did not agree to their demands for reform. According to the Berkshire Eagle, the group's demands include more minority faculty, higher minority student recruitment, curriculum changes and the hiring of an affirmative-action officer. Minority students also complained that they were not involved enough in the search for an affirmative-action officer. Maples-Dunn said she will hire a consultant to help resume the search to fill the office.

Brandels

The same day that Smith students issued their threat of legal action against their administration, about 50 Brandels University students gathered on their campus to build three shanties which they nicknamed "plgtown." The students' action protests the serving of pork and shellfish in dining halls of the university, which is two-thirds Jewish. The school began serving pork and shellfish last fall as part of an effort to bring a more diverse student body to Brandels and to make them feel comfortable. The protest is part of a larger debate concerning the extent to which Judaism should shape the university. The New York Times reports that a survey taken last fall indicated that 65 to 70 percent of Brandels students did not mind the addition of non-Jewish food. "I think it adds diversity to the school," Daniel Sokatch, part of Brandels' Hillel organization, said. "It's not a detraction."

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Beth Broadrup.

This freshman, packing for home in June 1965, left behind a world of all-male entries on an all-male campus. Twenty-three years later, the Class of '92 will arrive on a co-ed campus with predominantly co-ed entries and no station-wagon privileges for freshmen. (Tague)

Freshman life to undergo facelift

by Scott J. O'Callaghan

Not much more than sixty-five years ago, a freshman living in a double suite in Williams Hall paid less than $175 for the entire year and had to walk across tennis courts to get to Route 2.

Now board for 1987-88 costs $2180, and those tennis courts have been replaced by Sage Hall. Change at Williams seems as inevitable as the arrival of a new class of freshmen every fall.

Incoming members of the Class of 1992 will find many aspects of traditional freshman life changed. Single-sex entries in the Freshman Quad will be a thing of the past. Freshmen will probably not be permitted to have cars at any time during the year, and advisors will be chosen for freshmen based on shared academic interests.

"I think there was a sense that we wanted an additional link [to the advisees]," Dean of Freshmen Joan Edwards said about the change in the faculty advising structure. The new system, which the deans discussed in conjunction with the Committee on Undergraduate Life, will attempt to match students with members of departments, or at least divisions, in which they plan to major.

The committee's proposal also includes expecting that "all full-time faculty members who are in residence for the entire academic year," except those with major administrative duties, act as advisors in two of every three years. Until now, advisors have served students on a volunteer basis.

A survey conducted last spring for a self-study for reaccreditation showed that 44 percent of freshmen responding felt that the advice given by their Faculty Advisor was unsatisfactory. Another 35 percent felt the advice was satisfactory, while only 21 percent called it either good or excellent.

Thrown up their arms

Complaints about the freshman advising system are hardly a new development. In May of 1972, then Dean of Freshmen Lauren Stevens wrote, "The faculty advisor system, in fact, remains one of the weakest points of our freshman program. Various committees that have looked at it—the CUL and CEP—have thrown up their arms in resignation."

In that same letter, Stevens wrote that students found their advisors helpful with academic

Continued on Page 10

What did you think of the CARE takeover?

Interviews by Ann Mantil; Photographs by Rich Ward

"I don't think anything can tighten racial tension on campus more than that kind of radical demarcation between 'us' and 'them.'"

—Michael Szalay '90

"The minority students working on it made progress towards goals they were trying to achieve. I was most shocked to find out about that racist incident in which the girl's room was shaving-creamed. I think it was appalling that something like that could happen at Williams."

—Fiona McConnell '89

"I was in support of it for a lot of reasons. I have friends at home who decided a long time ago that Williams wasn't their kind of place because it wasn't diverse enough. I think it shows that student action can help Williams become a better college."

—Lafa Powell '91

"Protest is an effective form of action; however, I was disappointed that the administration didn't take any disciplinary action."

—Dave Allen '89

"As I believe that President Oakley is committed to an open community, I believe that it was an act of irrationality in a community that above all should prize rationality."

—John Canty '88

"I think it was a nice gesture in theory, but I don't think in practice it worked out very well. I thought the demands were kind of unrealistic."

—Maria Quintos '91

Commencement speakers

Continued from Page 1

administration in 1973 from the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard and conducted doctoral research at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology where he served as a teaching assistant. He earned a doctorate in public administration in 1975 from George Washington University. He has received numerous honor and awards including the National Recognition Award from the Mexican Government for 1985 Earthquake Assistant.

He will be awarded an honorary degree of Doctor of Law at the Williams Commencement.

Taught since 1941

Park, the Baccalaureate speaker, has taught physics at Williams since 1941. He has written several books and numerous articles, for both academic and general readers, many of them dealing with the nature of time. He is former president of the International

ARTS

WCMA explores the surrealistic side of life

by Ivar Kronick

Several cycles and forms of the human subconscious and imagination are currently open for exploration at the exhibition "Surrealism and its Affinities," on view through June 30 in the Williams College Museum of Art. Approximately 35 works by artists such as Salvador Dali, Max Ernst, Joan Miro, Giorgio de Chirico and David Smith are featured in the exhibit which examines surrealism's roots in metaphysical and symbolist works, as well as its influence on later styles such as American abstract expressionism.

Surrealism began in Paris in 1924 with the publication of the first manifesto by the group's leader Andre Breton. From the ideas forwarded by this document, two styles surfaced corresponding to two Freudian essentials: automatism and dream analysis.

Automatism, characterized by a lack of conscious control over the movement of the artistic instrument was, at times, practiced by Joan Miro and Max Ernst.

Miro explained his approach to painting during this stage of his career: "Rather than setting out to paint something, I begin painting, and as I paint the picture, it begins to assert itself, or suggest itself under my brush, the form becomes a sign for a woman or a bird as I work... The first stage is freer and unconscious. The second stage is carefully calculated."

A 1947 untitled watercolor by Miro illustrates this. Its original, bold, abstract lines are transformed into icons of sun, moon, man and woman by more detailed and rational additions, creating a playful but somewhat dark fantasy of the beginnings of life and the cyclical nature.

Dream-inspired images by artists such as Dali and Tanguy dealt with elements of reality and/or imagination incongruously placed together, often depicting the artist's fears or subconscious desires. Andre Masson's 1942 etching and drypoint Reve d'un futur desert (Dream of a Future Desert), produced on the eve of World War II, illustrates a swirling, volcanic, doom enclosing both modern architecture and monuments of the past in what will soon become an apocalyptic wasteland.

Andre Masson's Reve d'un futur desert (Dream of a Future Desert) is featured in WCMA's exhibition "Surrealism and its Affinities."

Giorgio de Chirico, the Italian metaphysical painter, who many consider the nearest father to surrealism, is represented by La Surprise, a 1914 oil painting. The very dense and humanless image of a solitary red tower surrounded by thick huddles of dark brown structures includes De Chirico's characteristic multiple perspectives and his formidable, empty buildings.

Also notable are Herbert Ferber's small watercolor and ink Studies for Heraldic. Done in 1957, these elegant calligraphic strokes recalling automatism seem a operatic counterpart to Franz Kline's jazzy and brutal strokes of the same period.

Although small in scale, "Surrealism and its Affinities" provides a welcome glimpse at the workings of some of the most imaginative artistic minds of this century.

In association with the exhibition, a selection of surrealist films, including Ferdinand Leger's Ballet Mechanique and Marcel Duchamp's Anemic Cinema will be screened on May 5 at 8 PM in Lawrence Hall 231.

Pittsburgh's mysteries are worth exploring

by Travis Pierson

Having one's book lauded as "a Catcher in the Rye for a new generation" might not carry as much weight as it used to. Praise resembling this has been thrown around quite a bit for the last few years, and it seems that every time a young writer comes out with a book, he or she will be called the literary heir to Salinger or Fitzgerald.

No exception to this trend, the dust jacket of Michael Chabon's The Mysteries of Pittsburgh is plastered with notes promising a book containing "as fresh and as promising a voice as the one that gave us This Side of Paradise," and one that "... will find its place beside On The Road."

Whether or not this new bounty of books lives up to their praise is an entirely different matter, however, and when the publicity and flash has dimmed on a number of recent examples, so has the critical and public opinion of their literary merit. The Mysteries of

Pittsburgh has less glitz than works by authors such as Bret Easton Ellis, but it also more substantial, and deserving of some praise.

The book chronicles the summer following Art Bechstein's graduation from college, and his several friendships and sexual involvements during that three-month span. Within a matter of days, Art, sexually confused, and attempting to come to terms with his past, meets and is pulled in different directions by the seductions of a strange and courtly gay man also named Arthur, a beautiful and precise woman named Phlox, and Cleveland, a larger-than-life prep-turned-biker. During this time, Art also attempts to redefine his relationship with his gangster father and other relatives also linked to the underworld.

One of the strongest features of Chabon's first book is the narrator's optimism. Although Art's summer contains sexual tension and indecision, insecurity, and death, he always remains reasonably positive and forward-looking. His somewhat naive character is a refreshing change from the ultra-cynical and jaded anti-heroes which seem to be the norm in coming-of-age novels. This wide-eyed approach allows the other characters to show themselves in a bright and revealing light. At the same time, this weakens the primary voice of the book—Art is too little of a force to really matter one way or the other—so, upon reaching the book's very tidy conclusion, the narrator's imprint on the story seems secondary, the novel feeling more like a group of pastel portraits of Art's summer acquaintances.

But Chabon is a skillful writer, and even though he does his share of glossing over certain scenarios, he manages to create inventive and convincing characters, making The Mysteries of Pittsburgh a step above most other 1980s The Catcher in the Rye's and worth investigating.

Julie Medall's '88, Brian Watson '88, Victoria Rummier '88, and John Andrews '89 performed in the Williams Collegium Musicum last Thursday in Bernard Music Center. (Ward)

Local Movie Listings

(Good through Thursday)

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III

Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802), 442-8179

Casual Sex?
Blood and Deliver
Above the Law

7:05 & 9:05
7:00 & 9:10
7:00 & 9:05

Images

Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

Hairspray
Housekeeping
Moonstruck
The Last Emperor

tonight 7 & 9:00
beginning Wednesday 7 & 9:00
beginning Friday 7 & 9:00
beginning Sunday 7:30

North Adams Cinema

Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873

Colors
Casual Sex?
Boogie Juice
Summer

7 & 9:15
7 & 9:15
7 & 9:15
7 & 9:15

Pittsfield Cinema Center

Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

The Last Emperor
Summer
Colors

7:00
7:00 & 9:15
7:00 & 9:15

Mixed Blues
Above the Law
Good Morning Vietnam
Bright Lights, Big City

7:00 & 9:15
7:00 & 9:15
7:00 & 9:15
7:15 & 9:15

Moonstruck
Casual Sex?
Boogie Juice
Critters II

7:15 & 9:15
7:15 & 9:15
7:15 & 9:15

ARTS IN VIEW

Tomorrow, at 4:15 PM, STUDIO 8, featuring the Williams Student Orchestra, will take place in Bernard Music Center.... On Thursday, at 4:15, STUDIO 9, a student recital sponsored by the Music Department, will be performed in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.... COFFEEHOUSE, featuring Tom Gladstone, steel guitarist, will perform at the Log at 9 PM on Friday.... The Williams Choral Society Spring Concert, featuring Brahms' "German Requiem," will take place at 8 PM on Saturday, May 7 in Chapin.... WALLWORKS—Work in Progress by Sol LeWitt, will take place May 2-6. The finished work will open May 7....

COUNCIL TRAVEL

From NEW YORK Round Trip Starting at LONDON 370
BRUSSELS 458
PARIS 438
CARACAS 320
TOKYO 739

Taxes not included.
ALSO: Work Study Abroad,
Language Courses, Int'l Student ID,
Youth Hostel Passes, EURAIL Passes issued on the spot!

Call for the FREE CIEE Student
Travel Catalog

Amherst
413-256-1261

CARE

Continued from Page 1

But CARE member Farhan Haq '89 seemed more content. "There were some substantial steps [taken]," he said. "There is a major difference between having the administration promise to look into things for us and actually guaranteeing it in front of the community."

In the agreement reached on the final day of the takeover, details of which were distributed to the community on April 25, Oakley promised to follow-up on a number of programs which he had pledged to support in March.

In particular, Oakley reiterated his support for a divisional requirement in minority and third-world concerns. He said in the agreement that he will ensure that a pertinent proposal will reach the Committee on Educational Policy. The Commission on Campus Race Relations is currently working on such a proposal that will probably go to the CEP in the fall.

But besides reassurances about things already decided upon, relatively few of CARE's original 13 demands were met as a direct result of the takeover.

Three demands met

CARE had said that three of their demands could be addressed immediately by the administration on the day before negotiations began. In the agreement reached on the final day of the takeover, these three were the only demands that the administration agreed to for the first time. And one of them seemed to be seriously distilled in the agreement.

CARE demanded the appointment of a Minority Special Assistant to the President be filled by a Black or Hispanic-American candidate, with the specific responsibility of concentrating on non-student affirmative action.

What it apparently settled for was a promise from Oakley that the college will engage consultants in the fall to review its Affirmative Action program as well as the structure and functioning of its Affirmative Action Office. The consultants will also recommend ways to enhance the college's efforts to appoint minority faculty, including, if they deem it advisable, the addition of a minority assistant in that office.

Demands for scholarships and a minority cultural center seemed to be met in full, though.

Four scholarships

CARE got an agreement that beginning with the Class of 1993, the college will establish four named scholarships to support low socioeconomic status students with preference to minority students from urban areas, and secondary preference to minority students from non-urban areas. Oakley said this weekend that the scholarships will be need-based and will not be a departure from existing procedures for awarding aid to applicants.

"We hope that they (the scholarships) will serve as a valuable recruiting device," Oakley said.

The college agreed to establish a cultural center "to serve the unique social and cultural needs of minority and foreign students." The target date for the center's opening had been set at Fall 1988 by CARE, but it was pushed back to fall 1989 in the agreement.

There had been some talk about setting up such a center in March, according to Oakley, but CARE's actions had "brought [the idea] sharply into focus and moved [the idea] along."

Hinton said there was a minimal amount of give and take in the negotiations but he said he thought the administration had given more than it took, and had given more than it wanted to.

Wanted Jenness back

What the college wanted back was its building. Hinton said that Dean of the College Stephen Fix had repeatedly threatened over the course of the weekend that the students would be subject to disciplinary action, and had more than once asked them to leave.

"I made my views clear on what the consequences of any protracted occupation of the building would be," Fix said.

Director of Public Information James Kolesar said last week the college will take no disciplinary action against those involved with the takeover. CARE members said that the number of minority students who had been in and out of Jenness over the course of the protest numbered over 100.

Meanwhile CARE has toned down its rhetoric. "The college has restated their desire to work within their channels. That has been unsuccessful in the past," a statement issued by the group the night of the takeover stated.

But now CARE members seem to be singing a different tune. "CARE has accepted that we need to deal with a variety of committees and the trustees," Haq said last week. "We want support that they [CARE's initiatives] will survive the committees," he said.

Last Friday CARE member Farhan Haq '89 met with Fix to talk about follow-up to the takeover, but he would not say what they talked about. Fix was unable to comment.

MOVIES

page six, The Williams Record

PART TIME — HOME MAILING PROGRAM

Excellent Income! Details, send S.A.S.E. West, Box 5877, Hillside, NJ 07205.

SUMMER HELP WANTED

General maintenance work — lawns, fencing, some painting, simple carpentry, etc. on country residence in Williams-town. Please call 458-3395 for more info.

First Investors Corporation, established since 1930, invites New York Capitol District residents interested in an opportunity in the investment industry to attend an informational seminar to become acquainted with our organization and the positions which we have available in Albany, NY. Contact:

Murray Leonardson
(518) 459-5415

Kids' World

Continued from Page 1

nam veterans from North Adams.

The site was a busy and colorful place. Foremen, who were mostly parents, wore fluorescent pink Kids' World caps and organized teams of skilled and unskilled volunteers to seal wood, put together the cubes and build the actual features of the playground.

The presence of schoolchildren served as a constant reminder to volunteers of what they were working for. Each elementary school class took a turn sanding wood under a tent erected because of a downpour Thursday. The children sang "Old MacDonald" and the Smurf song while working.

Kids helped out

"In school we took a break off and our class soaped nails, so that they'd screw in quicker and the workers wouldn't have to use all their strength," Andrew Tynan, a second-grader, said. His parents were both working on the site while he was in school and his two younger brothers were in a child care program that had been set up for volunteers.

A Kids' World foreman directs a worker on installation of a slide. (Ward)

Clark estimated that by Friday close to $56,000 had been raised toward the project's goal of $60,000. Fundraising events included a penny drive, selling Kidsworld painter's hats and T-shirts and raffling off a trip to London.

Private organizations donated many of the supplies needed, including cement trucks, gravel and sand for the sandboxes. Volunteers served free meals to all the workers.

Architect Robert Leathers designed the playground. His two assistants, who supervised the construction, were the only paid people on the site, according to Clark. "People come and stay... Our goal is to entice them with a good meal so they'll stay and get into the spirit of the thing."

Kidsworld actually opened for children on Sunday, after the supervisors had checked everything over. Clark said Friday, "The kids will count down, 'Ten, nine, eight, seven...' and then all run out onto the playground together."

Reaccreditation

Continued from Page 1

"Certainly over the last 15 years there has been a slow but steady increase in non-teaching, non-research responsibilities that faculty members have," said Professor of Biology William Grant, when asked what he thought of the report's conclusions. "It is distracting."

Grant said that the pressures do not necessarily stem from the amount of work but from the variety of tasks that professors are asked to perform.

Although senior professors interviewed by The Record agreed that faculty responsibilities outside of teaching and research had increased over the years, they expressed some reservations over the panel's conclusion that professors were losing time for teaching and research to other activities.

"None of us takes time away from teaching," Professor of Geology Reinhard Wobus said. "What goes is free time... and we're all very jealous of that time."

The professors noted that the college was aware of their concerns over the amount of administrative work.

But Dean of the Faculty George Goethals said the college was surprised that the faculty indicated it felt as stressed as it did. "We've been aware of this for a while, but the problem came into sharper focus in the report."

Unsure

Goethals said he was not sure that the college is demanding so much more of faculty members than it had in the past. "We require less Winter Study teaching. We have eliminated and trimmed some student-faculty committees, installed second-year course reductions," he said. "We need to understand more exactly what the source of the increased stress is."

The report indicated that junior faculty members also are experiencing some anxiety at Williams. The source of their discomfort, the report said, is a perceived need to live up to the image of the Williams faculty member. "We refer to the image of a polished teacher-scholar-college servant turning in all directions to meet community demands, with style," the report said.

Such an image does exist, according to Assistant Professor of Philosophy Philip Clayton. He added, however, "The pressure here comes from [the fact] that there's not the distance from the school here like at other schools. Most of us live within 200 yards of the classroom. We feel on stage constantly. Whether we want it or not, professors learn to live with that model."

Tenure needs attention

The tenure review process is, according to the report, also in need of attention. A two-year-old requirement for outside letters attesting to a professor's scholarship ability was said to have, in the faculty's view, increased the emphasis on research and publication and the strains on their time.

But some professors said the new letter requirement has only brought Williams in line with the procedures at other schools.

"We are clearly making judgments concerning scholarly ability," College President Francis Oakley said. "The emphasis on research I really do not see. Williams has always been concerned with scholarly ability."

Problems with academic advising at Williams were also addressed in the report. While the panel made many recommendations, it also added, "It is clear that the College is aware of the shortcomings in its advising system, and has begun to address them."

Advising was already on the college's agenda, according to Dean of the College Stephen Fix, with attention to be focused on sophomore peer advising and major advising.

"We will be focusing on freshman advising first—it's clear that it needs the most work. Next year we will focus more on sophomore, major and graduate school advising," Fix said. (For changes in next year's freshman advising system, see related story on p. 5)

The committee also said that the science libraries "seem to fall somewhat short of good standards of service and of space." They recommended that the college consider consolidating the satellite libraries. Oakley said that that possibility has been considered in the past, but because of disagreements among departments and other more pressing concerns this will not be dealt with immediately.

Remember Mother

Sunday, May 8th

Large Selection of Hallmark Cards to say
I love you, Mom.

McLelland's

Stationery and Office Products

458-4920 36 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

George M. Hopkins Co.

ESTABLISHED 1888

UPS DROP OFF • COME EARLY

61 SPRING STREET

458-9001

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.

Letters

Continued from Page 3

sors to teach different perspectives. There is only a small number of minority faculty who can empathize with those minority students who want to escape from this overwhelmingly white atmosphere in which anyone is welcome to fit if they check their difference at the door. The college is caught in a vicious cycle: minority students and faculty will not want to be at a school in which they are not accepted in all their differences while the administration claims they cannot find enough minority students and faculty to come here.

The easiest way to approach the vicious cycle of racism is to admit an inability to act. This is a cop out. We are the number one college in the nation. Shouldn't we be setting the pace in academic diversity? We must heighten our awareness of racism. Then we must take an active role in maintaining the college's commitment to defeat it. The root of the problem goes beyond this isolated town, but we do not have to affirm racism by maintaining its institutionalized forms or by diffusing its power by employing simplistic definitions. We must embrace the issue that last term's panel discussion and CARE's takeover brought to the spotlight.

Randall Fox '88

Worship God, not selves

To the Editor:

On Sunday, April 24, during parent's weekend, a sizable group of Williams parents and students attended an "ecumenical worship" service at Thompson Chapel. Although it no doubt meant well, this service disappointed and even offended many Christians, both students and parents, of different denominations, and seemed to become to many a service worshiping not God but ourselves.

The service started as many services in the Christian church do, with a procession led by a crucifer bearing a cross and two torch bearers. A processional hymn was sung, and a call to worship was read (although its theological references were deeply hidden at best). A psalm was read responsively by the congregation and a reader. But here the similarities ended.

The rest of the service consisted of poetry readings and remarks made by seniors, with a few hymns and a prayer in between. In deference to the choral society, the music was excellent and appropriate for a worship service. But many, if not most of the readings and remarks had little to do with worshiping, or even much to do with God at all. The first poem did refer to a church situation, but from the perspective of a cynic; it made faith seem like something for children, something about which adults strike better. It certainly didn't strike me, and many other Christians, as "worship." Some of the remarks also seemed out of place. Wendell Chestnut '88 began by proclaiming how glad he was that he had been able to talk to God during his college years, not directly (surely no one in the audience would assume that), but through his friends. Yet we are not talking directly to God in prayer, in churches of all denominations, every Sunday? Talking to God is not a radical, fundamental concept; it is something accepted by the whole Church, from Catholic to Pentecostal and everywhere in between. Chestnut's and many other remarks made by seniors, while perhaps beginning with God, seemed to end up extolling the values of their experiences here at Williams. Again, this is not a bad thing, but only in its time and place.

A worship service should be a time when we focus on God, not ourselves. If I may recall a famous quote from Ecclesiastes 3: "for there is a season for everything, a time for every occupation under heaven." God decreed that there should be a time for worship; in the Christian church this is recognized to be Sunday, a day when Christians can gather together and worship God. Let us then use this time to come together, from all parts of the Church, not to give acknowledgement to ourselves and our successes, but to worship the God which binds us together, to whom the chapel is dedicated, and without whom we could not be.

Bill Ayres '91

Come to grips with fear

To the Editor:

Dr. Helen Caldicott's lecture has prompted me to educate myself which I am starting to do by reading Stop Nuclear War by David Barash and Judith Lipton. In doing so, I have found Mr. Erdmann's article to be quite disturbing.

The most important and basic point Dr. Caldicott was trying to convey was the risk of nuclear war. Mr. Erdmann said "she irresponsibly portrayed the risks of an accidental nuclear war as a definite possibility if not a probability." A quote from Stop Nuclear War might indicate that not just anti-nuclear activists see this possibility: "Richard Garwin, brilliant physicist and longtime consultant to the Pentagon, estimates a 50-50 chance of all-out nuclear war by the year 2000. George Kistlakowsky, of head of the Manhattan Project and President Eisenhower's science adviser, estimates 50-50 by the year 1990." Perhaps Dr. Caldicott was irresponsible in not further emphasizing the risk.

Mr. Erdmann's suggestion that Dr. Caldicott's lecture had "almost no intellectual merit" is as pernicious as it is ludicrous. Mr. Erdmann asserts that Dr. Caldicott believes we can "just get rid of [nuclear weapons] at any time." It appears it is now Mr. Erdmann who is distorting statements. It would probably do Mr. Erdmann a great deal of good to find out the methods of disarmament that Dr. Caldicott would suggest by reading her newest book Missile Envy.

It appears that Mr. Erdmann believes that because nuclear weapons have made war unthinkable that it will not happen and therefore the more deterrence the better. This view, however, is flawed. It rests on the assumption that the controllers of the missiles will always be rational. The moral dilemmas are described in Stop Nuclear War: "there is something dreadfully wrong with a society that guards its bombs as its most exquisite treasures, while exposing its children to incineration" and "our method for preventing nuclear war... rests on a form of warfare universally condemned since the Dark Ages: the mass killing of hostages." Even the morally and rationally dubious idea of deterrence is being challenged by threats to the security of deterrence such as the increased accuracy of new missiles (the MX and the D5 Trident II among them). Even more disturbing is the doctrine of victory in a nuclear war: "During the 1980 presidential campaign, candidate George Bush... claiming that victory in a nuclear war could be achieved by 'survivability of command and control... of industrial potential, protection of a percentage of your citizens,' and 'a capability that inflicts more damage on the opposition than it can inflict on you' — this from a man who would be President and control our planet's fate."

"As analyst Lawrence Freedman has pointed out: 'An international order that rests upon a stability created by nuclear weapons will be the most terrible legacy with which each succeeding generation will endow the next. To believe that this can go on indefinitely without major disaster requires an optimism unjustified by any historical or political perspective.'"

In consideration of all this, I hope everyone will seek to come to grips with the reality of nuclear war which is what Dr. Caldicott really was attempting to have her audience do. Furthermore, in educating yourself do not despair, do something. Work for true peace and not the illusion of deterrence and remember Edmund Burke's thought: "Nobody made a greater mistake than he who did nothing because he could only do a little." Peace.

Emiliano Mazien '91

Vigilance is needed

To the Editor:

On Saturday night two weekends ago, a stranger awoke at least four women as he bent over our beds. The man didn't think that he was doing anything wrong. After all, he was drunk and our doors were unlocked, obviously a good excuse and an open invitation to come in, right? Wrong. No one should get themselves so drunk that walking into people's rooms at 2:30 AM or that raping someone seems acceptable.

I used to smile modestly when people told me how quiet I was. I joked about how I couldn't make a fist. I was proud that I did not bother others with my problems.

I have a lot to learn about desirable qualities. I probably couldn't have defended myself if the man had attacked me. I probably wouldn't have screamed even if he had come still closer. My "feminine" qualities make me weak.

Thanks to a small amount of self-defense training, I did convince the man to leave. Then I climbed back into bed, trembling, but thankful that the incident was over. I felt guilty that I had left the door open, I excused him as a stumbling, isolated drunk.

After he left me, he walked into at least three other women's rooms. One of them had to kick him to stop him from touching her. He could have hurt her very badly. Now I feel terrible about not having "bothered" security and others in my dorm as soon as the man left my room.

Now that I think about what I had imagined to be an isolated incident, I hear that there are many such incidents at Williams. Women, we need to support each other, we need to learn to defend ourselves and we need to force everyone to acknowledge that we are being harassed and raped right here at Williams. Please tell the deans, security, your friends and the campus when something happens to you. We need to bother everyone in order to defend ourselves.

Andrea Walter '88

M. Crew

Continued from Page 12

have done extremely well this season and look forward to their final regular season race against Trinity and Union this weekend.

The varsity first boat looks anxiously to this weekend's clash with Trinity and Ithaca on Lake Wausaug. The upcoming final race of the season promises to be the most difficult for the undefeated first boat. No Williams crew in recent memory has defeated Trinity and if the Williams oarsmen are successful this weekend, they will have an undefeated season.

Issue

Continued from Page 5

ferent type of expression." The focus was on personal journalism and creative writing.

As [The Issue] developed, it turned into something that you more appropriately call a news magazine.

Accounts differ on the nature of the relationship with The Record. Gross said, "It wasn't a hostile relationship." He added that everyone knew everyone else.

"The relationship was abysmal," Rubin said.

Toward the end of the paper's life, according to Grubb, it became an effort to get writers to cover stories. The theater on Spring Street used to show three movies in sequence — pornography, a serious film, and fluff. In order to get a movie review for the serious film, the reviewer would have to be bribed with tickets to all three films.

No market

On February 18, 1972, The Advocate and The Record merged to form the Re-Ad.

"Williams was not large enough to sustain two papers," Grubb said. According to Rubin, The Advocate had all of the writers, but The Record had all of the funders. Gross agreed that there was simply no market for another paper.

The Issue has staked out for itself a role that's quite distinct from The Record.

In December of 1969, Rubin and co-founder Mitchell Rapoport '72 printed flyers announcing that the paper was coming. Then, according to Rubin, they went before the College Council to ask for funding. "The council felt like a rubber stamp," Rubin said, because the coming of the paper had already been announced.

Rubin said, "We tried to generate controversy by writing letters to ourselves and then writing nasty replies."

Robert Gross '73, features editor, said that The Advocate "provided the means for a dif-

Ephumor

Where the Purple Cows Roam

on page 2, The Williams Record

M. Lax

Continued from Page 14

Playing the 6-3 Cardinals on Cole field in the first leg of the Little Three tourney, the Ephs skipped their usual first quarter dol-drum, ripping the net three times in a twenty seven second span just minutes after the opening. After Wesleyan struck back for two, Gilbert (3:00) and Powell (0:03) finished off the first period scoring to give the Ephs the first of two five goal periods.

"It was the first time we've done that," said Walker. "It was a nice, different feeling to go on top early."

The second half was rather uneventful except for one Wesleyan shot which the Cardinals claimed went through the net and skittered out of bounds, while Williams goalie Dana Weeder '88 argued otherwise. The referees sided with Wesleyan on the meaningless call.

Next week, the laxmen could play as many as six games, as they are scheduled to play the number one and two teams in New England, Middlebury and Amherst, while also competing in the ECAC tourney. While the seeding was not available at press time, the Ephs will most likely be in the third slot, which would mean a home game on Tuesday. "We're psyched for this week," said Walker. "We did the same thing last year so we have the experience. Our legs might feel it, but were mentally ready."

Graduation Special!

BIANCHI

ALL Bianchi Bikes

10% OFF

Includes racing and mountain bikes.

(GPA of 2.0 Required!)

THE SPOKE

MORE THAN A BIKE SHOP

408 Main Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
413-458-3456

a unique opportunity for Math/Science

(Majors/Minors/Aptitudes)

For you and for the world, Peace Corps will combine your education with training to prepare you for a volunteer position in: • Education • Fisheries • Health • Agriculture • Forestry or other areas. You'll meet new people, learn a new language, experience a new culture and gain a whole new outlook. And while you're building your future, you'll be helping people in developing countries learn the basics of technological advancement.

MATH AND SCIENCE STUDENTS:
The Peace Corps has positions overseas starting this summer. Share your knowledge where it is needed most. APPLY NOW!
For more info call collect: 617-565-5555 ext. 112.

The toughest job
you'll ever love

PEACE CORPS

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Found Objects

70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

GIFTS: For Special Occasions

We Gift Wrap!

The finest selection of Greeting Cards —
Picture Frames — Blank Books
A treasure trove of Jewelry —
Reproduction and Antique
AND MUCH MORE!

TheLibrary

To keep up with campus, keep up with The Williams Record

SPIRIT SHOP

Labatt's Beer and Ale, 12 oz. bottles $14.99/case + dep.
Busch, 12 oz. cans $11.49/case + dep.
Bud Light, 12 oz. exports $12.49/case + dep.
Amstel Light, 12 oz. bottles $12.99/case + dep.
Coors, Coors Light, and Coors Extra Gold, 12 oz. bottles $11.99/case + dep.

Mon. - Sat. 9 a.m. - 11 p.m. MasterCard & Visa
"We're closer than you think"

PROPER I.D. REQUIRED

280 Cole Ave., Williamstown

458-3704

FREE DELIVERY

Saving babies is our goal!

Support the
March of Dimes
BIRTH DEFECTS FOUNDATION

THE CLIP SHOP

THE HAIR SALON FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

THE BEAUTY CENTER

HAIR NAILS
MAKEUP
WAXING
TANNING

We're a
Sebastian Artistic Center

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary®

49 SPRING ST.
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
(413) 458-9167 or
(413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST.
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(413) 447-9576 or
(413) 442-8903

125 NORTH ST.
BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823 or
(802) 447-2648

Frosh

Continued from Page 5

problems "but tend to discount any real relationship with their Faculty Advisors."

Five years later, Stevens described problems with advisors themselves: "I am delighted at the number willing to serve, but members of the faculty will not come clean in their ambition to do only the minimum that students expect of advisors."

Freshmen will face a more immediate and historic change than those in the advising system as soon as they have their first encounters with entry life:

elimination of single-sex entries in the Freshman Quad.

At the time college builders broke ground on a field in 1911 to prepare for Williams Hall and started work on the site of the old tennis courts in 1922 for Sage Hall, the intention was that men, and only men, would live there.

By April 1975, the presence of women at Williams affected quad housing. At this time, Dean Stevens stipulated that Entries E and F of both Williams and Sage would house all-female entries. The third floors of East and Fayerweather would also house women, as well as entire entries in Lehman and Morgan.

Sally Brown '80 and Eric Scheye '80 proposed the first co-ed entries, ushering in the "Morgan Experiment" of 1978. There, both men and women lived in a single entry with a set of common JA's. Realizing soon after that co-ed entries were feasible, college administrators instituted them across campus.

Now in 1988, it seems, co-ed entries have largely eclipsed single-sex entries in popularity among entering students. Few request single-sex living arrangements. In March, Edwards indicated that she would like to phase out some single-sex entries to match student interest.

Sage A woman

The resulting decision means that, while East and Fayerweather entries will remain single-sex, meeting a Sage A woman or a Sage F man will no longer be impossible.

A less sweeping change affects Freshman Days, which will be expanded from three to four days. "We've had a very hectic Freshman Days.... There was a sense students were being herded from one event to the next," Edwards said.

One concern discussed in depth this year, the parking shortage, prompted another change affecting the Class of 1992. Currently, second semester freshmen are permitted to have cars on campus, but they will most likely be off-limits to freshmen next year. College Treasurer William Reed has said that he would prefer that only juniors and seniors have cars since parking is limited.

This debate over freshman cars has historic roots. In 1975, serious discussion centered on allowing all students to have cars, but the idea was never acted upon.

Softball

Continued from Page 11

doubling to score both Jacobson and Crouchley to make it 3-0. Later in the inning, Mazdzer walked Hedeman in with the bases loaded to up the score to 4-0.

The Ephs rose to total domination in the next inning, as they tallied two more runs. The catalyst was again Welder, when she singled, stole second and advanced to third on freshman Dee Goodwin's sacrifice. Jacobson hit a single, scoring Welder, and scored herself on a wild pitch after having advanced to third on an error and a Crouchley ground-out.

The fourth, fifth and sixth witnessed the Ephs scoring four more runs and a long-dormant Holyoke offense coming to life with two runs off of a Eph defense in temporary disarray. Holyoke's last offensive thrust came in the seventh when it succeeded in pulling together a run off of an error, a steal and a grounder.

The squad faces North Adams this week.

W. Lax

Continued from Page 14

Amy Kershaw rallied to raise the score to 4-3, but goalkeeper Jeanne Cloppse '88, despite 12 excellent saves in the first half, couldn't fend off a Trinity tangle which left the halftime score at 5-3.

Pivotal Second Half

Perhaps because of the screaming fans' support, or perhaps because they were just mad, the Ephs were quicker, neater, and stronger during the second half. Although the opening draw went to Trinity, characteristic of most of the game (Trinity controlled about 2/3 of the faceoffs), a goal by Trinity Ali-American Eleanor Pierce was followed by a quick goal by Eph Lisa Tenerowicz '88, with an assist by Flaherty. Play and shifted for a period of time to Trinity turf, largely due to sophomore defense Beth McNulty's excellent interceptions.

The game proceeded like a cat-and-mouse chase: the Ephs would score, then the Bantams, then the Ephs, and so on, still leaving Williams in a one-point hole. Finally, a lightning-quick goal by Jeannette Owen '90, who hit a behind-the-net pass from Cooper past the unsuspecting Trinity goalkeeper, evened the score out to 8-8. After a brief Eph lead and a Bantam rally, Trinity was kept on the defense, and with 12 minutes left on the clock, Kristin Frederickson '90 regained the Williams lead with a goal assisted by Tenerowicz. With less than four minutes to go, Trinity regrouped, and their last resurgence of power led to another goal by Pierce.

The final Bantam offensive surges were repelled by Frederickson, McNulty, and Boddicker who passed the ball to the Williams offense with strong midfield connections. As the last and very long 50 seconds ran out on the clock, the Ephs stalled Trinity by passing the ball around; "three, two, one" was shouted, and players and sidelineers alike started screaming—the final score stood at 11-10.

Win Against Wesleyan

Saturday's game against Wesleyan, then, was understandably anti-climactic; the Ephs scored quickly and easily, and their most important accomplishment, according to several team members, was keeping up their normal intensity and not becoming lazy when playing a team that was less than challenging. The scoring was widely spread out, with Cooper, Kershaw, Burnett, Beth Bernheimer '88, Flaherty, Boddicker, Owen, and Mary Iliff '89 tallying goals. Bernheimer expressed the team's general feeling towards the game: "It was a fun game to play—everything seemed to go right for us."

The laxwomen have a difficult week coming up. They play strong Middlebury on, and may be playing both a tournament game and a game against Amherst during the weekend.

Junior Missy Crouchley's rare victory over the umpire on a call of catcher's interference was the only win the Ephs managed during last Saturday's twinbill versus Trinity. (Scala)

Softball dumped in doubleheader

by James Lee

The softball squad hosted an agonizing doubleheader against Trinity on Saturday, losing 10-0 and 8-2. Earlier during the week, however, the squad triumphed over a tough visitor from Mt. Holyoke in a 10-3 rout.

With the two fresh losses and one win, the Ephs now stand at 7-3 on the season.

Trinity, one of the top teams in New England, thoroughly crushed the Ephs in the first game, as the winning pitcher Leanne LeBrun allowed just one hit in the shut-out. The second game witnessed an Eph offense pounding 11 hits off of the Trinity winning pitcher Kathleen Dowling. Trinity, however, out-slugged the Ephs, firing 14 hits off of three Eph pitchers, Cathy Hanclich '91, Audra Mazdzer '91 and Nancy Hedeman '89, and capitalized on Eph defense errors to complete the twin-victory.

"I don't remember the games very well... except that we got killed," Hedeman said.

On Wednesday, the squad performed far better, as it dominated the game with the hot-hitting line-up of Hedeman, Mazdzer, Jacki Welder '91 and Megan Jacobson '91. The time for Eph lead came when the Holyoke pitcher Katy Nolan walked Welder in the second inning. Welder advanced to second on a sacrifice and stole third.

Julie Carroll '91 singled to bring in Welder home after Jacobson got on base on a fielder's choice. Nolan yielded a walk again, this time to Missy Crouchley '89 to load the bases. Hedeman then took to batting,

Continued on Page 10

EST. 1901

IMPORTERS • TAILORS • FURNISHERS • SPORTING GOODS

Levi's

Levi's Store & Co.

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Apply now!
For more information contact:
Professor Solomon
Psychology Dept.,
Bronfman 306
597-2403

GATES REAL ESTATE

"Berkshire Properties"

Vacation — Lake Related

Farm & Residential

(413) 862-4565

(413) 269-6585

Brokers:
Nancy Gates
Jack Gates

Associates:
Fred Metcalf
Ken Cronin

West Package & Variety Store

"Purple Cow" brands always on sale

Vodka - Gin - Rum - Bourbon

Coors & Coors Light

(12 oz. bottles) $11.99 + dep.

O'Keefe Canadian $13.99 + dep.

Stroh's 30 pack $11.99 + dep.

Meister Brau 1/2 Keg $27.00 + dep.

3 Liter Pepsi $1.59 + dep.

Stop by on your way back from Pizza Hut

We really do appreciate your business

663-6081

between N. A. and Williamstown

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

20 SPRING ST./WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267
SAN. NO. 123-3548/PHONE 413-458-5717

WINTER STUDY IN U.S.S.R.

All students interested in participating in the new Williams / Tbilisi State Exchange program next January should send their names by May 24 to:

Prof. Darra Goldstein
34 Weston Hall

LIVE JAZZ MUSIC

MARY GARY'S

Saturday, May 7 4:30-7:00 PM

COME TO TOWNE FIELD HOUSE IF RAIN

COLE FIELD

PARADE

4:30 CHAPIN

MENU

PRIZES

JAMBALAYA
BEAN SALADS
CAJUN CHICKEN
BOILED CRAWFISH
RED BEANS & RICE PLANTERS PUNCH
CREOLE SALAD BOWL
KING CAKE
BOURBON PECAN PIE
EPH'S BEER BISCUITS
SWEET POTATO NUTTY CHEWS

Costume Contest

Goff's Sports

Screen Printing
NOW - In House

- prompt quality service
- quantity discounts
- quotes available

Custom shirts for your team, events, parties

Only at WILLIAMS SHOP
Screen Printed Garments
AT NO ADDITIONAL COST

Hours: 9:00 - 5:30; Sunday, Noon - 4:00
Thursdays until 8:30

Spring Street

458-3605

Men's crew still undefeated

by David B. Katz

The varsity men's crew continued its winning streak this weekend, defeating powerful crews from UMass and Lowell University. The varsity crew's record now stands at an unblemished 8-0.

The first boat will probably be ranked second in New England, following an undefeated UNH crew that the Williams oarsmen will not face until the Dad Vail Regatta in Philadelphia.

The race did finally start, after a delay because of debris in the water, and right off the line Williams took the lead on both UMass and Lowell. They would continue to open this lead throughout the race.

At the 1000 meter half way mark Williams flattered in order to open up their lead. A flutter is when the stroke rate is elevated for a particular number of strokes. This will usually take an opponent by surprise and allow a crew that performs the maneuver successfully to gain seats on their competition. Williams' flutter was successful in opening up their lead but UMass answered with a flutter of their own that did not allow the Williams boat to pull away as much as they would have liked.

But as all the crews began their final sprints, the Williams oarsmen effectively retained their lead, and despite an impressive surge by UMass in the last 20 strokes which took back some seats, the Williams first boat crossed the finish line three seconds ahead of UMass and four seconds ahead of Lowell.

The second boat was not as fortunate on Saturday because of coxswain error on UMass's part and adverse river conditions. For the first 1000 meters of their race the second boat was leading their UMass opponents.

At this point UMass called a power twenty and took a six-seat lead on Williams. Williams then took back a couple of seats and with 400 meters to go began their sprint. The UMass's coxswain's inability to steer a straight course forced the Williams boat out of its lane in order to avoid a collision, and as a result of this defensive move the Williams boat hit a log just as they began their sprint.

By the time the Williams oarsmen had regained their composure UMass had opened up their lead and they crossed the finish 2 seconds ahead of the frustrated Williams crew. After the race Williams entered a protest against UMass due to their steering error. The officials supported the Williams complaint and UMass was disqualified.

The freshmen first four made a strong showing against UMass and Lowell, easily defeating their fours by open water. In their event the freshmen lightweight eight defeated two eights in a five-boat race which was won by an extremely strong Tufts crew. The novices

Continued on Page 8

Men's rugby falters at Yale; hosts Little Three Saturday

by Andy Harris

The White Dogs, riding an emotional high after their victory last week over Dartmouth, accepted another Ivy League match against Division I Yale. But the aggressiveness and energy that powered the A-side one week before was conspicuously absent on Saturday, and Yale romped, 29-12.

"Hey, I'll say it right now," offered Brian Baird, '89. "When we play hard and get up for a match, we're a good club, we'll play with anyone. But when we lose that fire, we're nothing more than mediocre." The observations of the junior outside-center were buttressed by the play on the field. Yale was not a particularly impressive side. Indeed, Williams took an early lead, 6-0, off nifty line work from Mike Goldstein '88 and Baird before Mike Sullivan '88 touched down for the try.

At this point, Williams seemed primed for victory, but Yale roared back, catching the Dogs flat-footed. Smart running and kicking by the Eli fly-half ran up the score, and the A-side was unable to mount a rally. After the game, Williams flanker Brad Roegge '88 reflected, "You know, it's really too bad (that we couldn't have won this one). They weren't that strong in the pack; I'd even say we're the better side. But where 15 guys had the best games of their lives last week (vs. Dartmouth) the same 15 had their worst today. It's tough to figure it out."

But the WRFC found solace elsewhere. On the same forlorn pitch that had seen the fall of the A-side, the Killer B's stormed to victory with stalwart defense and flashy ball-handling. He of the golden winged feet, Jim Mannix '89, used deceptive speed to lead the emotional charge of the second side. But it was the crafty play of Mark Stepsis '89 and Salvatore Vasi '91 that rocked the Ivy Hosts. Stepsis broke free deep in Yale territory before popping a kick over the fullback's head. As the Eli defender stared in bewildered repose, the Williams' 8-man dashed around him, caught the bouncing ball, and carried it across the try-line. In the second half, Vasi blocked a Yale kick, recovered the loose ball and placed it down between the uprights. Dan Foote '90, converted both kicks for the final 12 point margin.

Farther north, in frosty Hanover, N.H., the C and D sides challenged their Dartmouth counterparts. Out to prove that last week's victory by the A-side was no fluke, the Screamin' C-men crushed the Big Green, 32-0. Five of the front eight scored for the Ephs against the outmanned Dartmouth C's. But fate had more bitter treatment in store for the D-side. Stein-Erik Soelberg '91 got the D's hopes rising, but the Big Green stormed back with 20 unanswered points. Dartmouth rallied from the earlier thrashing with a curt dismissal of Williams, 20-4.

One week remains in the White Dog season. The WRFC hosts the annual Little Three Tournament this Saturday on Cole Field with six games to be played before the last whistle blows. Even though the Dogs triumphed over both these teams in the fall, it was the Lord Jeffs of Amherst that beat Yale three weeks before the Elis defeated Williams.

W. Crew

For both varsity and novice women's crew, Saturday's races at Lowell, Mass. went well for the fours and less so for the eights. The Williams women tested their strength against U. Mass., Lowell, and a few boats from Tufts and Union. Racing on a river dotted with floating logs and trash, all coxswains were warned to think of the safety of their boats first and winning the race second. The first race of the day, varsity heavyweight fours, had two Williams entries, a "veteran" four of seniors and junior stroke, Lisa Marrack, and a "rookie" four of last year's novices. The Williams fours jumped out for an early lead over the Lowell and Union boats and increased it for a Williams first and second, the "rookie" four pulling away in the sprint as a veteran's oar hit a floating basketball.

The novice first eight also split into two fours, Eliza Shin '91 coxing one victory over Tufts and Lowell and Steve Scoville '91 coxing a second win against Lowell's other four.

The eights did not do as well against competition from U. Mass., a powerful crew with more depth than Williams. The novice second eight followed a U. Mass. crew across the line, as did the novice first eight, placing third after Tufts and U. Mass. but beating Lowell. Williams' varsity heavyweight eight, in their second race of the day, had to wait on the water for almost two hours, their race postponed due to the dangerous debris. Like the novice eights, they lost to the fresh U. Mass. crew who had their best race yet this season.

Racing at Lake Waramaug next weekend, the Williams women will be working for speed in practice this week, sharpening for the Dad Vails regatta two weeks away.

—Cara McCallahan

Track

Eleven teams gathered at the recently dedicated Plansky Track this Saturday for the New England Small Colleges Athletic Championships, where Williams women took second with 118½ points, twelve behind Tufts, and the men placed eighth with 31 points, behind champion Trinity's 116.

Competition among the top ranks was tougher than usual for the women's team, a 42.5 point gap separating the top three teams from the pack. An indication of the high standards of the championships is the fact that sophomore Karlyn McNall's school record-setting, fourth place 31.13m javelin throw, and sophomore Norah Vincent's record-setting 29.31m hammerthrow were not enough to secure first. Karlyn broke Vincent's record only half an hour later with a 32.43m sixth-place hammerthrow, and missed second in the long jump by 1 cm.

The women dominated the 800 meter run, with Ann Dannhauer '90 blazing in at first (2:21.01) and Susan Gray '90 at second. The team made a grand appearance as well in the 1500m, Dannhauer again setting a first-place 4:37.05 minute example that qualified her for the nationals, followed at third by Anne Platt '91.

Senior co-captain Ann Davis strode in at second in the 200m (27.33).

Dawn Macauley '89 plucked two wins in her notoriously strong events of the 100 hurdles (15.3), in which she relieved her victory of the previous year, and the 400 hurdles (1:04.92). Both Macauley and Dannhauer were in the running for MVP at this year's NESAC, but the title was given to Vera Stenhouse of Tufts. The MVP among the men was Peter Goodrich, a Bates student and Williamstown resident who won three events.

Despite the fact that Dannhauer, sprinting her third race of the day, dropped the baton when it hit another runner on her way to receiver P. Nicole Jefferson '90, the furious pace of these two runners and Macauley and Davis was still enough to earn the team second. The two-mile relay team of Elisa Dugundji '91, senior co-captain Sara St. Antoine, Jefferson and Dannhauer, avenged this mishap with a victorious 10:01.6 minutes.

The men's team, last year's NESAC champions, plagued the competition with a number of second place positions, including senior Scott Powers in the 200m (23.25). Sophomore John Walker vaulted 6.61m in the long jump, and Dave Nadelman '89 also took second in the 800. It seems fair to speculate that the men may have placed second in the 400 relay, but for an untimely muscle injury in the final stretch that befell Carey Simon '90, who valiantly attempted to nurse his falling leg to the finish line before finally failing.

On Saturday, May 7, the women's team will split from the men who are participating in the Division I New England at Bowdoin, to travel to the Division I New England at Northeastern.

—Kristen Tallo

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Fly travelogues

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

The untold ending of D.B. Cooper

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Middle-Name Madness

BY JOEL D. LAFARGUE/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- ACROSS
- 1 Leave out
 - 5 Nero's successor
 - 10 Place
 - 15 "The Rig"
 - 18 When Columbus sailed
 - 20 Book by Andre Maurois
 - 21 Seats splitter?
 - 22 Ancient
 - 23 Line of cliffs
 - 24 Orozco work
 - 25 Break time, for some
 - 26 Aitch preceider
 - 27 Actress turned
 - 31 Confirmed
 - 32 Hamartiologist's topic
 - 35 Rats!
- DOWN
- 1 Harvest goddess
 - 2 Singer Davis
 - 3 Deckers' org.
 - 4 Hard rains
 - 5 Reproductive cell
 - 6 Cuckoo-pint
 - 7 Calabrian coin
 - 8 Smokey, for one
 - 9 "Little Women" actress: 1949
 - 10 Very smooth
 - 11 Even
 - 12 Slave of old
 - 13 Fictional lamp owner
 - 14 Reduce in dignity
 - 15 Boston landing spot
 - 16 Fragrant resin
 - 17 Skillful
 - 18 Frightens
 - 19 — generis
 - 20 Cause of inflation?
 - 30 Where Suda Bay is
 - 31 Musical term
 - 32 Cape for John Paul II
 - 33 Brought down the house, abroad
 - 37 — Torrance, marshal in "The Rifleman"
 - 38 Mythical flier
 - 39 Puffed a barn
 - 40 Dormouse
 - 41 Betelpalm
 - 66 "Blue?" 1929 song
 - 67 Della and Pee Wee
 - 68 Actor who comes for breakfast?
 - 75 Peak in 30
 - 76 American songbird
 - 77 Some tests
 - 78 Top bowling score for
 - 81 Harriet al.
 - 83 Fateful date
 - 84 "Fur" — Beethoven
 - 85 Mitchell estate
 - 86 Going before: Abbr.
 - 87 Relig. title
 - 88 — Bator
 - 89 Raring to go
 - 90 Balanced actor?
 - 96 Part of a buttercup
 - 99 Break bread
 - 100 On in years
 - 101 TV star who cleaned up his act?
 - 107 Pro — (for the time being)
 - 108 Hungarian hero
 - 109 Kind of nest
 - 110 Main artery
 - 114 Author LeShan
 - 115 Celebrate
 - 116 Francis of the N.H.L.
 - 117 Board members?
 - 118 With 95 Down, a Tarzan
 - 119 Terror
 - 120 Deceives
 - 121 Kidnapped

Continued from Page 11

doubles match this year. But the doubles became a bigger disappointment. Ludington and Caltabiano, second seed in A doubles, dropped their first round match to Colby, 6-7, 5-7.

Both the second and third doubles teams fared considerably better, though. Both had simultaneous marathon matches in the first round and had to stave off match points before securing victory. Both pairs then beat duos from Hamilton to advance on. The third round marked the end of the line for both. Hallagan and Buxbaum at three ran into a powerhouse Bates pair that overwhelmed them, 6-1, 6-3. Friend and Illig lost their match to Tufts after being up 4-0 in the third set.

Caltabiano expressed the team's frustration, "Most disappointing is how poorly our doubles did. Being second seed (with Ludington), that put a lot of pressure on us." The tourney had to be regarded as a setback for this team, which had been surprisingly strong in matches this year. "We play better as a team," said Caltabiano, "when we focus on one match." Next action for the Ephs is this weekend at Wesleyan.

Title defense fails as tennis finishes sixth

by Ted Hobart

The defending NESAC champions went to Middlebury this weekend for the annual NESAC tournament in hopes of retaining the tournament trophy but came back with a rather disappointing fifth place finish. Evenual champion Bates dominated play in every phase of the tournament.

Last season the squad came from behind on the last day of doubles competition to steal the title in exciting fashion. This year's tourney started out in similar fashion, as none of the singles players was able to advance past the second round. In the A bracket, co-captain Hoyt Ludington '88 lost in the first round to the number two player from second-place Connecticut College, while number two Marc Caltabiano '90 beat Wesleyan's number one before bowing out to Bates' second player.

Robby Hallagan '88, Steve Buxbaum '90, and freshman Rob Illig, playing in his first varsity singles competition, all won their first matches before faltering in the next round. Co-captain Pier Friend '88 lost to Middlebury's fifth man in a heartbreaking match which featured two tiebreakers.

Although the squad entered Saturday's doubles play in not very strong point standing, hopes were high given the fact that the team had not lost one

The Williams Ultimate Frisbee Organization is currently ranked number one in the Northeast, following its emotional win in the SUNY Albany tournament last Sunday.

Jeanne Closspe '88 had twelve first half saves against Trinity as she helped lead the women's lax team to a stunning 11-10 win over the Bantams last week. Closspe has a .578 save pct. in net. Stand-out scorers thus far for the lady sticksters include Mo Flaherty '90 with 26 pts., Bevin Cooper '91 with 20, senior co-captain Mara Burnett with 15.

Juniors Rob Blanck and Grae Davis competed in and finished the Boston Marathon two weeks ago. The daring Ephs ran side by side for the duration of the race and finished in 3 hours and 38 minutes. Davis and Blanck both trained casually for two weeks preceding the race. Asked if he would do it again, Blanck replied, "I'd run by Wellesley College again."

Just 24 hours after the Baltimore Oriolers downed the White Sox 9-0 to break a 21 game losing skid, the Williams Club Baseball team broke an even longer losing streak — two years. Club 'B' beat Williston-Northampton, Mass. 7-5, scoring two runs in the top of the last inning.

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS.

GENUINE

This week's recipient is Senior second baseman Steve Holsten. The Minnesota native broke the single season record for RBIs (26) last Sunday. So far this season, Holsten has chased home 33 runners, with 6 games still remaining. Cubby, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

WIN $$$ - Enter the Quiz

- 1.) What country club hosted The Caddies Tournament that Danny Noonan won with a clutch putt on 18?
- 2.) Los Angeles Lakers' star forward Irwin M. Fletcher is listed at 6'5". How tall is he with the Afro?
- 3.) For what type of organization did Burt Reynolds play football in "The Longest Yard"?

To win the quiz, send your answers to S.U. 2817, Ted Hobart or Marc McDermott. Last week's winner, Erol Onel, will receive a $15 gift certificate to Goff's Sports. Congrats, Erol!

Last week's answers: 1.) 1961 Phillies; 2.) 1962 Mets; 3.) Colorado Rockies lost in 3 straight to the Flyers; 4.) 1943.

RATE-A-RESPONSE!

Playtest a new Prince Response cassette and receive a Response T-shirt...FREE.

Goff's Sports, inc.

(413) 458-3605
15 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

Baseball takes 3 of 4

Pachus homers in 10th to beat Bowdoin

by Scott Mozarsky

The Williams baseball team continued its impressive late season surge this week by winning three games and losing one, while pushing its record to 15-9. The team's busy week concluded in dramatic style on Sunday as Chris Pachus '88 hit a three-run homer in the last inning to lead Williams to a 13-11 victory over Bowdoin.

The week began on a down note as the team lost to Amherst 6-5. The most disappointing aspect of the loss was that the Ephs had a 5-0 lead before Amherst came back to win in the last two innings. The Ephs took the lead behind a superb pitching performance by Mike Derussey '91, who held the Lord Jeffs to two runs through seven innings, and four Amherst errors. The Jeffs came back in the late innings as Derussey tired and was replaced by losing pitcher Bill Ryan '88.

The Ephs bounced back over the weekend as they swept Colby in a doubleheader and beat Bowdoin. In the first game against Colby, which Williams won 9-3, the Ephs were paced by the solid pitching of junior Chris Conway (4-1), and the strong hitting of Steve Holsten '88 and John Wahlen '91. According to standout senior Jim Duquette, "Conway did a great job mixing up his pitchers and keeping their hitters off balance." Wahlen, who has been in an offensive groove as of late, put in a 3 for 4 hitting performance from at the plate.

Holsten snaps record

The performances of Conway and Wahlen were overshadowed by Holsten who broke the Williams RBI record. Holsten notes that, "it felt great to break the record, but the most important thing was getting the win." Holsten's record shattering season is even more impressive because he broke the record with eight games left to play.

SWEEP!

In the second game of the doubleheader, Williams won 10-7 behind the pitching of Mike Barbara '89 and the hitting of Pachus and Chris Perry. The Ephs took a 10-0 lead early on and coasted for the rest of the game. According to Duquette, who had two hits in the game, "once we got out to that lead, we kind of sat back and enjoyed the game the rest of the way." The win pushed Barbara's record to 5-2.

Tenth inning homer

The most exciting game of the weekend was the Ephs' win over Bowdoin. Solid pitching performances were given by Billy Schwartz '90, who gave up three unearned runs in four innings, and Ryan who got the win in relief. The hitting star was Duquette who collected four hits. Duquette was driven home by the powerful hitting of Wahlen, Holsten and Pachus, each of whom had clutch hits. The biggest hit of all was Pachus' last inning blast that won the game. Pachus notes that, "I was really excited to be up in that situation and it felt great to come through with the home-run. I've been waiting four years for something like this to happen."

Senior Lisa Tenerowicz, who notched a goal and an assist in the laxwomen's thrilling 11-10 win over power Trinity, takes on the entire Bantam defense in a scoring attempt. (Ward)

Laxwomen get long-awaited revenge; beat Bantams 11-10

by Mariam Naficy

The women's lacrosse team expected a tough game last Tuesday against Trinity, and they got one. What they weren't expecting, though, was an 11-10 win against a team that is one of the strongest in Division III and that has beaten them consistently for the past three years. Tuesday's game was more than a grudge match; it, and the team's 20-3 victory over Wesleyan last Saturday, were crucial to Williams' chances of gaining a top-four playoff berth for next weekend's Division III tournament. The selection committee's decision was made yesterday.

Tuesday's game started off badly, as the nervous Ephs didn't score until almost the middle of the half, when freshman Bevin Cooper's goal followed three Bantam ones. Sophomores Mo Flaherty and

Continued on Page 11

Freshman Brent Powell added four goals to his team leading total of 25 in last Saturday's win over Wesleyan. (Scala)

Men's lax downs Springfield on TV; one step closer to playoffs

by Marc McDermott

The men's lacrosse team took two giant steps towards both the Little Three and ECAC titles last week by steamrolling Springfield and Wesleyan, 13-10 and 14-6 respectively.

The Springfield contest (televised on the New England Sports Network) was the tougher of the two. The Indians entered the game ranked fifth in New England, only one spot behind the Ephmen, and had the home astro turf advantage. Williams, playing its first tough opponent this year, scored first and never lost the lead, always maintaining a one to three goal margin.

Springfield managed to keep it close, matching nearly every Eph goal by utilizing a fast break offense. Coach Renzie Lamb countered the Indian attack with a riding defense, using midfielders Dan Calichman '90, Doug Gilbert '89 and Ed Anderson '90 to contain and prevent the fast break. Senior captain Eric Churchill made the plan work by limiting Springfield scoring machine Ed Carey, last week's ECAC player of the week, to two goals.

Indians tire

In the end, the Ephs simply outran the thin Springfield attack, using their greater depth to wear out the Indians. "We let them run their transition game," said senior middle Jimmy Walker, "by the end of the third quarter, they just couldn't run anymore."

Lamb commented on the game, saying, "We made the smart passes, took the right shots, and in the third period, when it was a one goal game, Robbie [sophomore goalie Rob Lambert] came up with some great saves."

High scorers for Williams were Brent Powell '91 with four tallies, captain Chris Swindell '88 with a hat trick and Gilbert with two.

Continued on Page 9

WWRFC mauls Jeffs and Cards

by Cecilia Malm

The WWRFC tasted its sweetest victory of the season this weekend as both A and B sides captured the coveted title of Little Three Champions, soundly defeating the Lady Jeffs and the Wesleyan Cardinals.

The Killer B's were the first to face Amherst, who, anticipating defeat, refused to honor the long-standing tradition of betting jerseys on the outcome of the match. The 'Herst met with the full force of the B's fury and fell by a humiliating score of 33-0. Gina Coleman '90 was the highest scoring player of the day, contributing three tries in a mere fifty minutes, her personal best. Also racking up the points were Sue Pitcher '90 with two tries, and Dagny Maidman '90 and Ann Arnason '89 with one each. Upstart fullback Katy Carr '91 added one conversion and a penalty kick to the final damage.

Meanwhile the A-side was embroiled in a brutal contest of strength and wits with Wesleyan. Play ricocheted from one side of the field to the other, but neither team could seem to initiate a steady scoring drive. Sharon Burke '88 also helped the squad advance with several well-placed squibs and pop kicks. The match remained scoreless, however, and a tie was declared, bringing the Little Three Title down to a question of who could score more points against Amherst, Williams or Wesleyan.

Williams' B's then met with Wesleyan B' and fatigue began to take its toll in the form of frequent injuries and errors. The B's came alive again in the second half, however, as Julie Norton '89 went speeding, not once but twice into the try zone. Norton's tries added to two earlier penalty kicks by Carr to make the final 14-0. The B's thus finished the day without a single point scored against them.

Inspired by the B's example, the A's faced their moment of truth. With Wesleyan beating Amherst 8-0, the spectre of scoring at least two tries and a conversion loomed large over the pitch as surely as the black rain clouds that were swiftly moving in.

Within the first five minutes of the half, however, Raquell Holmes '90 ran a picture-perfect play on the line, breaking at least four clumsy tackles to touch the ball down while Amherst women stood around her gaping.

Williams maintained control of the ball for much of the second half and, with the collective effort of the scrum, managed to push Katie Gerber '88 over the try line to score that crucial second try. Windy conditions thwarted junior fullback Lauren Boeschstein's conversion kick attempt, but the Ephwomen were now determined to score again in the remaining then minutes. And score they did. Kerry Kilander '89, who has scored in virtually every game this season, demanded her try and drove dramatically into the Amherst zone to bring the tally up to 12-0 and the Little Three Crown to her joyous teammates.

The Williams C's played the final match of the day against Wesleyan. Aggressive tackles by Rebekah Timin '90 in the scrum and excellent bursting on the line by Timmie Friend '90 did little to unnerve the Wesleyan women bent on revenging their comrades, and the C's lost 12-0.

Williams next will host the traditional Ball of Inverness Tournament featuring Dartmouth and Middlebury.

The Women's rugby team utilized a fierce defense to hold both Amherst and Wesleyan opponents scoreless en route to winning the Little Three Title.

The Williams Record

VOL. 101, NO. 24

USPA 684-680

MAY 10, 1988

Faculty OKs new grievance procedure

by Michael Reisman

The faculty unanimously approved a proposal to reform the college grievance procedure at its meeting last week.

The proposal, which was drafted by the Commission on Campus Race Relations, includes guidelines for the formation of a standing grievance committee and reduces the amount of time that a student must wait before filing a formal grievance.

The legislation will take effect at the beginning of next semester and amends the grievance-filing procedure for students who feel that they have been discriminated on grounds of race, color, religion, creed, gender, handicap, sexual orientation or national or ethnic origin by a member of the faculty or staff of the college.

The proposal calls for the formation of a grievance committee made up of six members of the faculty or staff to be appointed by the President, and four students to be appointed by the College Council, with the stipulation that each group must include at least two minority representatives.

Assistant Professor of Political Science Timothy Cook presented a revised grievance procedure developed by the Campus Commission on Race Relations to the faculty last week. The faculty passed the measure unanimously. (Ward)

The CCCR was established last May by College President Francis Oakley with the charge of reviewing college grievance procedures with attention to their visibility and the degree to which they are adequate in responding to allegations of racial insensitivity.

Process is drawn-out
The CCCR concluded from its year-long review, which included meetings with members of the deans office and members of minority student organizations, that the current grievance process is very drawn out and somewhat ad hoc, according to Assistant Professor of Political Science Timothy Cook, the commission chairman.

The current grievance process is very drawn out and somewhat ad hoc, according to Assistant Professor of Political Science Timothy Cook, the commission chairman.

CEP to recommend more courses on Latin America

by Stephanie Jones

Strengthening the Latin American Studies program and retaining several Afro-American Studies professors on campus at the same time will probably be the key recommendations of the Committee on Educational Policy's report to the faculty tomorrow.

The CEP will make a report on how the curriculum relates to racial and ethnic minorities and the world outside Europe and the United States.

The CEP conducted a similar review of the curriculum seven years ago and is repeating it at the request of College President Francis Oakley. The current study will look at courses offered between the 1984-85 and the 1987-88 academic years. The CEP was expected to approve the report at a meeting yesterday.

The college needs to pay immediate attention to the Latin American Studies program by hiring new faculty, Professor of History John Hyde, chairman of the CEP, said at the May 2 meeting. He also suggested finding a way to coordinate leave patterns so that interdisciplinary programs, such as Afro-American Studies, would have enough faculty and courses every year.

Associate Professor of German Bruce Kieffer, a CEP member, suggested recommending an introductory course in Afro-American Studies. He also said that the French department, which should be expected to offer courses on Francophone literature, had no courses on these subjects.

Trade-off involved

Sarah Ryan '89, a member of the CEP, said that offering certain courses more often might help increase their popularity. Dean of the College Stephen Flx agreed. He said, however, that a trade-off was involved: the price of offering courses more frequently would be the diversity of courses offered.

The CEP looked at two separate categories of courses, those devoted primarily to racial and ethnic minorities and the non-Western world, and those devoted in part to these subjects.

They compiled a list of the courses primarily devoted to minorities and the non-Western world that have been offered since 1984.

"The purpose of the list is to indicate change over time," Hyde said. These sorts of courses have had considerable but uneven

Continued on Page 7.

Class of 1992 numbers 560; housing shortage foreseen

by Bill Savadove

For the first time in 30 years, the size of the incoming freshman class will be larger than anticipated, according to Director of Admissions Philip Smith.

Other differences include a large jump in the percentage of minority students who will be attending, a drop in the percentage of students on financial aid and a drop in the male-female ratio.

As of Friday, May 6, the Class of 1992 numbered 563. Admissions had originally projected a class size of 510-515 students. "I think we did a little better head to head with our competition," Smith said. He added that he did not know the specific reason for the increase.

As a result of the increase, no students will be accepted from the waiting list. Smith said that by the fall the class will probably number around 540 because some will decide either to delay

Continued on Page 7

The varsity men's first eight has put together Williams' only undefeated season this year. The oarsmen are shown here at the Head of the Charles Regatta last fall. For story see page 14.

Chamorro says he lied about Contras for CIA

by Scott J. O'Callaghan

Edgar Chamorro said that he never considered himself a CIA agent. "But once you accept money, in the U.S. you are considered 'recruited' by the CIA," he said in a lecture last Thursday.

Chamorro was the principal media spokesperson for Nicaraguan rebels, known as Contras, from 1982 to 1984. He said he worked to deceive the media about the work of the U.S.

backed rebels.

"I didn't think, really," Chamorro said, describing his work with the contras. "I assumed [the CIA] knew. I guess that was the problem."

The objectives in the war have changed as time went on, Chamorro said. At first, the CIA's objectives were to cut Nicaragua's ties with the Cubans and Soviets, stop the exportation of the revolution and implement a democracy. He said when the CIA realized the first two weren't there, the third objective became crucial.

Chamorro said the CIA recruited him because they needed to improve the image of the contras, both within the country and for the press. He said, "At that time, I thought the U.S. should have really well-trained democratic fighters."

Manual at issue

A CIA psychological operations manual was at the heart of

Continued on Page 9

Alums Byrne Kelly '77 and "J.D." '77, who were on campus this weekend for WUFO's "Crafty Vets" tournament, mooched some crawfish at Food Service's "Mardi Gras" on Cole Field Saturday. (Ward)

INSIDE THE RECORD

Students to serve as psychologists

4

New Wallwork up at WCMA

6

Dean Kenyatta resigns

7

Restore tradition to baseball

13

Designer jungle gym

The 80 yard-long fantasy-land that is Kids' World represents over 70 hours of work donated by over 200 volunteers. Not only time for physical labor but months of planning and tens of thousands of dollars went toward making this dream a reality.

That the Williamstown community can mobilize its resources—human and otherwise—is commendable. The project showed the community's concern for and dedication to one segment of its population. Couldn't the same kind of energy be channelled toward more deserving segments of the community? It is a little unnerving that so much time, money and effort was dedicated to a designer jungle gym that replaced a not entirely inadequate facility.

Now that town residents and Williams students have demonstrated their ability to harness such community spirit, why don't they direct their efforts toward building resources that would benefit more needy groups in the area? The question that those who volunteered (and those who didn't) need to ask themselves is did the ends of building a neat playground for Williamstown's kids justify the means of devoting so much work to it that might have been better spent in other ways?

On The Record . . .

"I'm going to go in there [mini-camp] with the attitude that I'm going to make it."

—Senior Scott Powers on his upcoming tryout with the Philadelphia Eagles.

"I think we did a little bit better head to head with our competition."

—Director of Admissions Phil Smith on why there will be 45 more incoming freshmen than expected.

"We're going to have Log talks like they have BGLU talks."

—Jane Penner '90, the student activities coordinator for the Log.

With this issue, the Record ceases publication until September. We would like to thank outgoing editorial board members Peter Balaban '90, Beth Broadrup '90 and Russ Hollenbeck '90 for their dedication. We look forward to the return of Katie Albright '89 and Stu Verdery '89.

DEBBIE SNYDER, Editor in Chief
AL MOTTUR, Executive Editor
RUSS HOLLENBECK, Business Director

PETER BALABAN News Editor
BETH BROADRUP Features Editor
TED HOBART Sports Editor
JED SCALA Photography Editor
KIRSTEN HASENFUSS Layout Editor

CHARLES SAMUELSON Op-Ed Editor
TRAVIS PIERSON Arts Editor
MARC McDERMOTT Sports Editor
RICH WARD Photography Editor
MARY ILIFF Layout Editor

News Assistants: Stephanie Jones, Scott O'Callaghan, Todd Owens

Features Assistants: Ann Mantil, Rob Welsberg

Photography Assistant: Jay Steinman

Layout Assistant: Lisa Kaestner

Entered as Second-Class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973, under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

WHERE THE PURPLE COWS ROAM

by Rich Gardella

Letters

Cartoonist offers an explanation

To the Editor:

I was dismayed to learn that some had found last week's "Where the Purple Cows Roam" cartoon, depicting student protest of a broken Sawyer Library entrance door, offensive in its apparent mocking of CARE's recent efforts on behalf of minority concerns at Williams. Although one editor suggested the one-line response, "It's a joke," I feel it necessary to offer a more substantial explanation to those accepting such an interpretation.

My objectives have never included seriously offending any individuals, organizations or other groups of any kind. Aware that the sensitivity of issues of race, discrimination and minority concerns preclude appropriations of any such issues as vehicles of satire, I have refrained in recent weeks from references to any subjects closely related to the takeover of Jenness House, despite that event's current prominence in the collective consciousness of the Williams community (such prominence is of course an essential criterion for choosing a strip topic that will appeal to the widest variety of individuals).

After allowing several weeks to pass, however, I decided that an appropriation of the paradigm associated with the Jenness event — the paradigm of peaceful protest — was no longer inappropriate, and so incorporated such a scene into last week's cartoon. I simply intended the protest to exaggerate the annoyance generated by the inconvenience of a disabled Sawyer door (several individuals have since communicated their appreciation of the inherent humor). At the same time, anticipating closer scrutiny, I chose to depict the students protesting the inconvenience of one unrepaired door among five other functional ones as "selectively apathetic" and "fair-weather activists." I believed these labels to indict those who protest absurdly trivial inconveniences (which seem to affect them directly) with much greater vehemence than they protest more serious injustices (which do not). At no time did I intend to indict any individuals affiliated with CARE, whom I am convinced are neither selectively apathetic nor fair-weather activists.

In order to protect a partial collaborator from any further criticism, I also must assert that Katie Brennan's '90 only contribution to this particular strip was the notion of the broken Sawyer door as subject; at no time did she suggest anything including a protest scene.

Finally, I think it quite interesting to note that, for whatever reasons, the offending door has been repaired since the cartoon appeared.

As a graduating senior, I would like to take this opportunity to extend my thanks and appreciation to the editorial staffs of the Record for granting me weekly presentation of my attempts at humor during the past three years. I have greatly enjoyed the experience, and can only hope that others have equally enjoyed its products.

Rich Gardella '88

Students deserve a pat on the back

To the Editor:

A very big thank you to all of you who helped with the Kids World playground this past week, from the athletic teams to the individuals who worked down there on their own to lend a hand. As Williams has left its mark on you, so have you left your mark on Williamstown.

As a parent, I am very grateful and as a faculty member I am very proud of the spirit and hard work of the Williams students.

Please do not print my name, as I speak for many other faculty and staff who have echoed these sentiments.

Am I thought of as a 2-D image?

To the Editor:

An incident that happened to me on Friday has been on my mind this whole weekend. On Friday night I was visiting with some friends at Lehman, and we were sitting outside on the back steps. There was a gathering in the basement and there was a continuous flow of people in and out. Four male students, whom I had seen before in Mission, walked up the steps between us and went to their car. A strange atmosphere was settling around us that comes when people have been drinking heavily. We continued talking until we overheard their voices behind us. They were arguing loudly across the car, "I think she's black... No, Indian... Maybe half black..." I turned around to confront them. I asked them if they were talking to me, and why they were discussing my race. The two men in the front looked at one another and

Continued on Page 3

Graders in ARTH 101-102 should meet standards of other courses

by Philip M.J. Culhane '88

At a recent panel for admitted students, an admissions officer asserted to the prospective students that no course at Williams is either taught or graded by a graduate student. As any student enrolled in Art History 101 or 102 will attest, this is simply not true. Presently, graduate students do much of the grading of both exams and papers, and in past years they have even taught conference sections.

Why is this a matter for more than passing concern? Because presumably one of the reasons that people choose to attend Williams over a large university is precisely because they do not want to be graded by graduate students who do not yet know the ropes of teaching and grading. We choose Williams because we want the expertise that the Williams faculty has to offer. It seems inconsistent that at an institution that prides itself on its teaching faculty and its commitment to excellence, that there is no public discussion of a practice that seems to violate one of the school's most publicized and prized values—a value that is an integral part of the educational philosophy that sets Williams apart from so many institutions.

As far as I know, at no point during the general lectures for the course is it ever announced that graduate students will be doing a substantial part of the grading. It strikes me that an audience that has no particular reason to assume that a course will not be taught and graded by professors is being taken advantage of. In one conference this spring, students did not find out that a graduate student would be doing the grading until after spring break when they got their midterms back—a point at which it clearly too late to question the process.

Is Art History 101-102 too big? Maybe so. If administering the course requires the use of graduate students. One of the reasons we are willing to pay sixteen thousand dollars to attend Williams is because we know the educational experience is worth the money. Even though graduate students doing some of the U.S. foreign policy should support the commitments that it makes

by John Canty '88

As hopes for peace, once so bleak, now turn bright in Nicaragua, with a new round of talks between the Sandinista government and the insurgent contras showing unprecedented hope for a peace that will last in that war-ravaged land, the attention paid to it has markedly diminished. This event is striking in light of the salience which the issue of United States support for the Nicaraguan rebels assumed in our own national debate and the strident tones so characteristic of that debate. Such a phase is not new to our consideration of American foreign policy. When circumstances offer some opportunity to dispose of—better yet, to forget—a vexing and divisive policy, we as a people quickly grasp for it. The arrogance with which we often enter situations is then exceeded by the manner in which we extricate ourselves.

This result is not only ultimately destructive of our long-term national interests; it is also fundamentally unworthy of a nation which, as John Kennedy described it, was "by destiny rather than by choice" called to world leadership. In the fluctuation between intense interest and willful neglect, we frequently fail allies who had counted on a sustained American commitment. We embolden if we do not reward countries who bank upon the converse, national impatience. To all the community of nations, we send out a message irresolute and disturbing. Finally, we ourselves lose touch with the frailties of the world as we continue the search for the Perfect Policy.

Item: The emergence of Corazon Aquino as President of the Philippines through a revolution of "people's power" captured the national imagination at the outset of 1986. Who did not see something noble at play? Here a brave and popular figure led her people in a movement to reclaim their future for themselves, in the process ousting a corrupt dictator whom, as Raymond Bonner details in Waltzing With a Dictator, for years the United States had generously backed but whom it finally disavowed. All applauded; congratulations poured in from American politicians.

Now that country is attempting to redeem the promise of the 1986 revolution. President Aquino faces the challenges of a burden of debt made crushing by the corruption of Marcos, a troubled economy with a degree of poverty made severe by the disregard of Marcos, and an increasingly violent Communist insurgency made appealing by the Marcos legacy. Fear of wonders, she is attempting to deal with these threats while restoring democratic institutions.

Has the United States matched its words of support for President Aquino with concrete actions? No. Aid has been, if anything, more sparingly given. The creditor banks have shown, in their negotiations over the Philippines' debt, a greed that asks for interest, not hope for democracy. Even "free" attempts to aid the Filipino economy by dropping the American sugar import quotas and opening our markets to that country's critical sugar crop have foundered against the special interests of Washington.

If ever a people deserved our support, this is the case. If ever a time came when we could use our power to fulfill our sense of national mission, this is the moment.

Has the United States matched its words of support for President Aquino with concrete actions? No.

Item: The negotiations underway in Nicaragua give evidence to some that the United States should recede from its involvement in that conflict. An inescapable conclusion, however, lies in the fact that diplomacy and the advent of the talks required the threat of power. The contra aid opponent must join the supporter in agreeing that the record of Presidential and Congressional support for the insurgents forms some kind of a commitment to which the United States has obligated itself. If we choose (unwisely, I believe) to withdraw from this commitment, the way must be found which does not consign people who believed in the word of the American nation to abandonment and a night of the long knives.

To overcome these problems, we must discern the new need for partnership in a shared American foreign policy. We must understand with clarity the goals which the conduct of our foreign relations furthers: this requires education and intelligent debate among ourselves as well as a vision which finds America's greatest strength in the unity of her people. The President must recognize the legitimate role that Congress has in foreign policy, just as the legislative must defer to the primary role the Executive has in framing that policy: this requires forging a consensus on policies which will have the enduring strength of popular support. Finally, we must together as a people see the real responsibilities which our liberty and our power pervasively impose upon us. As citizens of a free society, we can do no less.

John Canty, a former Op-Ed Editor of the Record, has recently completed a History thesis on South Vietnam.

Letters

Continued from Page 2

snickered. The one on my left near the passenger's seat pulled out a black velvet canvas of a nude black woman crouching on her knees. She was a caricature of a woman, not proportioned to human dimensions. Her huge brown breasts and pink lips consumed the picture. Two of the men laughed and I was silenced with that image, unable to respond. They continued laughing and shortly drove away in a big shiny white car. I was left with that image in my mind wondering. Wondering if that had all been done for my benefit.... If they had done the same thing to other women of color by making a practice of carrying that picture around in their car, anticipating the opportunity to discuss their racial make-up, and then showing them the picture. I wondered if they had just bought the picture, and I had happened to glimpse their conception of women of color. Only because they had been drinking and were in a parking lot with that picture, instead of in their rooms.

I am left with the fear that my presence here is for some men a flesh and blood embodiment of the racial stereotype, that was embraced in that picture. That picture seemed to represent all that they needed to know about women of color and therefore me, as a black woman. My name, my character, and my voice are irrelevant. I feel vulnerable and threatened, psychologically and physically, by men that think that a two dimensional image contains all of what I am. How seriously can they take me academically, politically and intellectually if they equate me with a crouching nude woman.

Donna Murch '91

Beware perils of the road of death

To the Editor:
Last week, we were witness to and, indirectly, the cause of an accident on Route Two. As we approached the crosswalk in front of Morgan West, a car crested the hill going east, slowed, and stopped for us. As we entered the crosswalk, a second car came over the hill, and not having time to react despite traveling within the speed limit, crashed into the back of the first car. Although our fast reflexes (alright, pure luck) made it possible for us to write this letter, one driver was not as fortunate and had to be rushed to the hospital with a head injury.

The college and the town must take action to make this section of Route Two safer for all. Traffic lights and lower speed limits may be unsightly and inconvenient, but, compared to the consequences of inaction, are of trivial concern. This was not the first such incident on Main Street and if something is not done to make this hazardous stretch of highway safer, it will not be the last.

Alexi Kritas '89
Marc McDermott '89

ASIA denies relation to CARE

To the Editor:

I would like to clarify ASIA's role in the Jenness takeover and in the articulation of the demands made by CARE. I believe that there is a misconception that ASIA, Williams College's Asian student organization, actively participated in the Jenness takeover and that it fully endorsed CARE's demands. The truth is that the organization had no involvement in the planning stages of the takeover whatsoever and its name was cited in the demands without its approval. I am certain that various ASIA members support CARE's actions. However, CARE neglected its responsibility to discuss the issues with the proper officials of ASIA before implicating ASIA's name.

Soon Kim '88

College plans to award 6 honorary degrees

The college will award honorary degrees to six people who have distinguished themselves in areas including education, business, politics and poetry at commencement on Sunday, June 5, on West College Lawn.

Keith Thomas, Preston Parish and Henry Cisneros will receive Doctor of Law degrees. Thomas is a historian and the president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Parish is the former chairman of the executive committee of The Upjohn Company and is retiring as the college's senior trustee. Cisneros is the mayor of San Antonio. Gwendolyn Brooks, the Pulitzer Prize winning poet, will be awarded the Degree of Doctor of Letters. William Fowler, the Nobel Prize winning astrophysicist, and An Wang, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Wang Laboratories, Inc. will receive Doctor of Science degrees.

Brooks is one of the most celebrated of contemporary poets. She has written 15 volumes of poetry, a novel,

Maude Martha and an autobiography, Report From Part One. In 1950, she became the first black to win a Pulitzer Prize, for her book Annie Allen. For almost two decades she has been the Poet Laureate of Illinois, a post she has used to promote poetry in schools. She has taught at several colleges and universities and has served as poetry consultant to the Library of Congress.

Much of her poetry deals with the experience of urban American blacks, but critic D.H. Melhem said, "... she communicates the drama of current affairs with a concern that begins in the spirit. She enriches both black and white cultures by revealing essential life..."

Fowler shared the Nobel Prize for Physics in 1933 with Subrahmanyan Chandrasekhar. According to The Who's Who of Nobel Prize Winners, "Fowler and ... Chandrasekhar have detailed the steps leading to the synthesis of the entire roster of substances from which stars, planets and people are formed."

Most of Fowler's work has dealt with nuclear activity deep within stars, what he calls "nuclear astrophysics." He has been awarded the Medal for Merit by President Harry Truman and the Eddington Medal by the Royal Astronomical Society.

Parish was born in Chicago in 1919. After graduating from Williams in 1941, he served in World War II with the U.S. Marine Corps and was awarded the Bronze Star. He joined The Upjohn Company in 1949 as a production engineer. He was elected a director in 1955 and in 1969 became vice chairman of the board and chairman of the executive committee. He retired from the pharmaceutical company in 1984 and formed his own business consulting firm.

He has served as director of several businesses and organizations including The American National Bank & Trust Company of Michigan, Jobs for America's Graduates and Junior Achievement, Inc. He is a former chairman of the Food and Drug Law Institute in Washington, D.C. He also has been a trustee of several institutions, including Kalamazoo College.

Gwendolyn Brooks

William A. Fowler

Parish has served as a trustee of Williams since 1966, most recently as chairman of the board's executive committee. He was national chairman of the college's Capital Campaign for the Seventies.

Thomas has written extensively on the lives of ordinary people living in England between 1500 and 1800. His book Religion and the Decline of Magic won the Wolfson Literary Award for History. He has been joint literary director of the Royal Historical Society and is chairman of the editorial board of the journal "Past and Present."

He is a Fellow of the British Academy and a foreign honorary member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He became president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1986.

Wang was born in Shanghai in 1920 and earned his B.S. degree from that city's Chiao Tung University in 1940. He received his M.S. in 1946 and Ph.D. in 1948, both from Harvard where he remained as a research fellow working in the Harvard Computation Laboratory.

In the early 1950s he invented the magnetic pulse controlling device which was used as the medium for computer memory for the next 20 years. He patented the invention and in 1951 founded, with $600 in savings, Wang Laboratories, Inc. which now does several billions of dollars worth of business every year and employs 30,000 worldwide. In 1965 he introduced the desktop computer which was the forerunner of the electronic calculator.

Wang is a trustee of Northeastern University and of The Museum of Science in Boston. He is a former overseer of Harvard University and a former member of the board of directors of the Bank of Boston and the Massachusetts Board of Regents. At the re-lighting of the Statue of Liberty in 1986, President Reagan presented Wang with the Metal of Liberty, an award given to twelve distinguished naturalized Americans for outstanding accomplishments in their fields.

Cisneros will deliver the commencement address.

Preston Parish

Keith Thomas

An Wang

Consultants: town should monitor project

by Michael Reisman

Last week, Director of the Physical Plant Winthrop Wassenar told the town Planning Board that Associate Professor of Geology David Dethier, who recently received tenure, believed that the college's planned faculty subdivision on Pine Cobble mountain was not located on a water recharge area and would thus not endanger the town's water supply.

Planning Board member Susan Schneski humorously observed that as a tenured faculty member Dethier is now eligible to build a house in the proposed subdivision.

Two independent consultants hired by the town said that Williamstown should seek further testing to see if the 70-lot subdivision would affect the town's aquifer. At the same time, state and local agencies have begun an environmental review of the development. The Planning Board extended the date for its decision on the subdivision to May 24.

The consultants, Linda Marler and Blake Martin of Groundwater Associates Inc., said that there was a low probability of a threat to the town's water supplies from the project. But since tests done by college engineers were not deep enough, they were not certain whether the springs located at the development site penetrate to the bedrock below.

Aquifer problems?

Town officials and residents are concerned that the project may affect the town's aquifer, which is located near Pine Cobble.

Assistant Director for Construction Services Antonio Janairo said that the threat to water supplies was minimal and that the college plans to install catch basins to avoid contamination.

The consultants said that it might be more cost-effective for the town to closely monitor the construction and maintenance of sewer and water pipes than to do extensive studies. Schlesinger said that the Planning Board will decide whether or not to pursue further study before it makes its decision on the subdivision plan.

The college's sanitary, sewer, water and wetlands plans were nearly rejected by the Department of Environmental Quality Engineers two weeks ago for lack of adequate information, but this issue has been resolved, according to Janairo.

The Conservation Commission recently held a hearing on the college's notice of intent to perform construction work in a wetlands area.

Under state wetlands law, a developer must obtain a set of guidelines for construction before it may alter wetlands.

Wetland alterations

The college says it proposes to alter .16 acres of wetlands to facilitate work on a drainage system and to realign an access road to the development with North Hoosac Road. To comply with the Wetlands Protection Act, the college plans to recreate the disturbed wetlands area at two locations nearby.

Conservation Commission chairman Harvey Goodell said that the commission will not make a final decision on the project for another six weeks, pending more information from the college and recommendations from DEQE.

The college has also filed an Environmental Notification Form for the subdivision with the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act unit. The college was required to file because of the extensive sewer work that will be done for the project. The state will review the form and determine whether the lengthier Environmental Impact Report will be required for the project.

The ENF assesses the potentially adverse environmental impacts of the development. "[D]evelopment of roads and house lots will cause some loss of some trees and shrubs and possibly some wildlife habitat," the report said.

Will transfer land

The college is planning to transfer ownership of all land above 1,300 feet, about 90 acres, to the Williamstown Rural Lands Foundation to be preserved and managed as open space. Open space within the area of developed land below that level will be managed by the college's Center for Environmental Studies.

The executive director of the Rural Lands Foundation, Nan Jenks-Jay, is also Assistant Director of the CES. "[The CES] has worked with the college from the inception of the plan," she said. "This might not be the best site [for a subdivision], but development has to occur," she said.

The college will build roads, water, power and sewer lines, and then sell the lots to faculty members at development cost for them to build homes.

"We have a very tight and expensive real estate market [in Williamstown] and we have a desire to keep faculty and staff close to the college," Provost Neil Grabois said.

Students to serve as psychologists

by Rob Welsberg

Students who feel uncomfortable discussing personal problems with a professional psychological counselor now have another option. Beginning last week, a peer counseling program became available to students on a limited, pilot basis.

"When a student comes to a professional, they often have the notion that they have to have a big problem. If it's not big enough, they're taking up someone's time, or it's not worth it," Director of Psychological Services John Howland said.

Howland said that the program is designed to offer another option to students who want counseling, but for one reason or another do not want to speak with a professional.

"A lot of people are reluctant to go down to [Psychological Services]. For some people there's a stigma attached to going to an official counselor as opposed to a peer," said Robin Faigles '90, one of the five students who will serve as peer counselors.

John S. Howland complex emotional and social system," he said. "Having thousands of common reference points can be an advantage."

Don't claim to be pros

"We're not professionals and don't claim to be. As of yet, we haven't defined what we're going to do," peer counselor Hee-Sun Hong '90 said. Because the program is so new, it is not yet clear how the meetings with peer counselors will differ from those with professionals, Howland said. "Part of the reason for starting it now is to get a sense of whether people want to use it."

Howland said he got the idea for peer counseling from other campuses, where it has been successful. He said he read literature and solicited information from other schools on their peer services, and then

"For some people there's a stigma attached to going to an official counselor as opposed to a peer."

Howland said he feels that peer psychological counselors have an advantage over professionals in their relationship with students.

"A peer counselor is someone who is immersed in the same discussed the idea with student leaders of existing peer programs at Williams, including Ten-to-One, Peer Health and Junior Advisors.

"They unanimously sup-

Continued on Page 9

New Log not rolling so smoothly

by Ann Mantil

Everyone on campus has heard about the revitalization of the Log: the new program of nightly entertainment, the College Council's allocation of $5930 for this semester alone and the recruitment of professional talent to attract the droves of students that used to fill the Log.

But has it really been successful? Was the Council merely throwing money away trying to breathe some life back into the Log?

The Log has cut its losses in half this year, according to manager Dave Lamarre. Attendance has also been picking up. "On an average night with entertainment, there are probably forty to fifty people there," Bill Hilty '88, member of the Log Committee, said.

"Attendance will never compare to what it was for the old Log," Lamarre said. "But so far it's gone really well, as well as can be expected. Some people had the impression that they'd introduce this new plan and by the end of the semester it'd be a raging success."

"The product that's in demand down here isn't a cup of soda."

Discussing results of the Log Committee's recent student survey, Liz Beshel '90 said, "Most people said we were doing a good job, but it would take time. The most popular events are bands, singing groups and 21 Nights. And a lot of people said they wanted pitchers," she said.

By far, the most successful nights in terms of both financial receipts and attendance have been the 21 Nights every Wednesday.

Not a cup of soda

"The product that's in demand down here isn't a cup of soda," Lamarre said. "When they changed the Log three years ago, the big cry was that it should be open to everybody. But when people realized the seriousness of the enforcements of the alcohol policy, freshmen, sophomores and juniors had no reason to come here if there wasn't some form of entertainment."

One of the proposals being considered for next year is

Continued on Page 8

The old and the new: a reflection is all that remains of the old Pappa Charlie's to those whose favorite hangout moved a few yards down Spring Street last week. (Ward)

A defense against cancer can be cooked up in your kitchen.

There is evidence that diet and cancer are related. Follow these modifications in your daily diet to reduce chances of getting cancer:

1. Eat more high-fiber foods such as fruits and vegetables and whole-grain cereals.
2. Include dark green and deep yellow fruits and vegetables rich in vitamins A and C.
3. Include cabbage, broccoli, Brussels sprouts, kohlrabi and cauliflower.
4. Be moderate in consumption of salt-cured, smoked, and nitrite-cured foods.
5. Cut down on total fat intake from animal sources and fats and oils.
6. Avoid obesity.
7. Be moderate in consumption of alcoholic beverages.

No one faces cancer alone.
AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

To keep up with campus, keep up with The Williams Record

What do you think of studying in Sawyer Library?

Interviews by Erik T. Burns; Photographs by Ana Pinto

"I never study there, only when it's absolutely necessary. It's a great place to go if you want to see people, but I can't get anything done there."

—Michelle Yednak '91

"I don't know, I'm not there very often."

—Matt Daley '89

Recent concern with the noise level in Sawyer led to the appearance of signs like this one around the library. (Ward)

"Third floor is the social hangout. Right around this time it's pretty hectic. You can feel the tension. When you're through with exams, you don't belong here."

—Kirsten Froberg '90

"The library is the only place I can concentrate, usually. Sometimes people are distracting when they're noisy. But that's okay . . . You have to be tolerant."

—Lisa Goldberg '90

"It shouldn't have to happen to anyone. I guess what makes me sad is that I'm a senior, and I just figured out how to find books here."

—Alex Glover '88

"I wish I had a box of water balloons to bomb people as they walk by below."

—Chris Gascon '88

in other IVORY TOWERS

UMass Amherst

Communist president barred

Although Jason Rabinowitz and Shari Silkoff ran for student government president as co-candidates and won, they have been barred from taking office. The University of Massachusetts student court invalidated their election on the basis of a student government constitution forbidding co-presidents. The real issue, however, seems not to be a co-presidency but the political views of Rabinowitz, who is a Communist. Rabinowitz and Silkoff ran on a platform calling for more financial aid and an end to racial discrimination and violence, according to the New York Times. During their campaign, Rabinowitz was criticized for his politics. One poster read, "Jason Rabinowitz is president of a Communist youth league. Don't vote Communist." UMass student Andrew Blankstein said, "Jason represents a more left viewpoint that scares people." Rabinowitz and Silkoff have asked the student court to reconsider its ruling. "If we don't win this challenge, I'll seriously doubt there's any justice in the world," Rabinowitz said.

Univ. of Illinois

"Hash Wednesday" violence

The annual University of Illinois mass marijuana smoke-in, started in 1977 as a defiant protest of marijuana laws but failing in recent years as students lost interest, erupted in violence April 20 as police arrested 11 students. On April 21, students protested the police crackdown on the event, which the university had left unmolested in past years, but were locked out of a building they had hoped to occupy for a sit-in. "There is growing public concern about the tolerance of drug abuse and trafficking," UI Police Chief Paul Dollins said in explaining his troops' change in tactics on "Hash Wednesday," which drew about 600 students this year, according to the College Press Service.

Rice

Senior prank swivels statue

As a result of one of the most elaborate senior pranks of the year, Rice University has fined a student $1500 and placed him on probation. Rice Proctor E.C. Holt announced that Patrick Dyson, 23, was being disciplined for organizing an April 12 midnight raid on a one-ton campus statue of university founder William Marsh Rice. The College Press Service reported that Dyson and 10 still-unnamed cohorts, using a 12-foot wooden triangle they constructed for the occasion, managed to swivel the bronze statue on its base so that it was facing in a different direction. While they accomplished the feat in a little less than an hour with just the homemade lever and the knowledge they retained from engineering classes, Rice officials had to pay professional movers—who used a crane and needed most of a day—$1500 to return the statue to its original position.

In Other Ivory Towers was compiled by Beth Broadrup.

Minimalist Wallwork has maximal effect

by Jon Ward

A bold new presence has recently taken control of the entrance atrium of the Williams College Museum of Art. Sol LeWitt's unique brand of maximized Minimalism, the work of his assistants and the Moore-designed space have conspired to make this fourth and final Wallwork the most successful of the series.

The Wallworks project is unique in its approach. Four different artists were selected to create temporary works in the irregular three-story wall of the atrium. To date, murals by Richard Haas, Mike Glier and William Ramage have been conceived, executed, viewed and destroyed. The subject matter has varied considerably, from a depiction of the horrors of the AIDS epidemic to a trompe l'oeil representation of the architectural elements of the museum's rotunda.

The formal concerns demonstrated by each artist have varied no less. Ramage, for example, attempted to highlight the perspectival qualities of the space, while Glier, on the other hand, tried his best to ignore them. The success of the Wallworks idea hinges on the different artistic responses and visions toward a fixed and very challenging space. LeWitt's piece fits brilliantly into this scheme.

Sol LeWitt has been recognized for some time as a master of installations and large scale wall drawings. To date, he has completed over five hundred mural projects, all of which testify to his conceptual concerns. To this end, his working methods are precisely prescribed, completely formulaic, and executed by the hands of assistants. Even LeWitt's colors are mixed according to specific recipes, leaving nothing to chance. This approach removes LeWitt from the production itself, enabling the concept of the art to take precedence over its execution or the personality of the artist.

In his seminal essay "Paragraphs on Conceptual Art," LeWitt wrote, "The idea becomes the machine that makes the art." His works are never signed, but are accompanied instead by a certificate of authenticity, typifying his notion of art as process or experiment.

The artist himself was only at Williams a few hours for the Wallworks piece, to examine the wall and the viewing context, and left without picking up a brush. Despite LeWitt's contrived absence in its creation, the work is a very successful one.

The work itself is large, occupying the entire expanse of the wall. It is composed of a series of concentric arcs, radiating from the upper right hand corner of the wall, which prescribe multicolored bands of equal width. In true LeWitt fashion, the execution of the work is entirely formulaic and impersonal. The colors themselves are LeWitt's primaries, mustard yellow, a dulled red, and a toned-up blue. Even the manner of application is carefully controlled by LeWitt: cotton jersey is soaked in wash solutions, wrung out, and applied in a regular motion.

The resultant work is a triumph of simplicity. The manner in which the paint is applied lends the work a surface texture, which from a distance looks like a depth. The airy, permeable feel of the paint recalls the both the lightness of fresco painting and the rich inconsistencies of watercolor. In marked contrast to this sense of depth is the presence of the wall itself, a profundity of surface, not a perspectival window.

The simplified, patterned composition explores and highlights the architectural space, something all murals ought to do. Its radiating form tickles the boundaries of the wall, exploring each nook and its relation to the space around it. The motive arcs suggest an expansive circular form, forcing the viewer to consider the wall dimensions and limits as part of a larger plane.

Although the work is immediate and powerful from any-

Sol LeWitt's Wallwork, the fourth and final installation in WCMA's series, will be on display through August. (Ward) where in the atrium, it is ideal to make use of Moore's architectural playfulness and view the Mural from several different vantage points. LeWitt's constructions are normally created for and upon traditional rectangular walls. In this instance, the success of the work comes out of the interplay between the expansive, bold mural and the unique, airy space. LeWitt's Wallwork will remain for several months.

(Ward)

An installation taking the transitory nature of movements and the limitations of human nature as some of its subjects has been on display for the past week in Dodd Gallery. The piece, an Independent Art project titled Cross Purposes is the work of seniors Rachel Silver and Paul Vignaux, who took last year's Baxter lawn crosses and transformed them in different ways to make the room-size assemblage with the controversial anti-apartheid signs as its focus.

"The piece refers to how the symbol is used—its cross-political meanings and how people deal with it," Vignaux said. In one corner of the piece, a sandstone colored chair sits under hanging sandstone crosses. The crosses become lower as one gets closer to the chair, forcing the participant to sit in it. Once in the chair, the viewer's attention is focused on a small, gold-framed photograph of several black crosses in a toilet and the dizzying overhead crosses and their resultant shadows.

Silver and Vignaux stressed that they didn't want to place any finite definitions of the project, but that one point was to rekindle a recognition that these crosses were used in political terms, and are now used in different ways—being placed in a fish bowl, covered with glass, or stuck in dirt.

"We weren't trying to point fingers at anyone as being wrong or right," Silver said. "Just to point out that something lost the recognition it had."

Updated Music Festival Listings

Saturday, May 14

B.M.A.	11:00
Critical Skirmishes	11:40
Two Dart Out	12:20
Rubber Band	1:00
Clambake	1:40
Wee Jam	2:20
The Bust	3:00
Wooly Mammoth	3:40
The Rhythm Method	4:05
Blue Herring	4:25
Warehouse Blues	5:00
Ransom Jenks	5:40

Local Movie Listings

(Good through Thursday)

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802), 442-8179

Casual Sex?	7:05 & 9:05
Shakedown	7:00 & 9:10
Above the Law	7:00 & 9:10
Friday the 13th Part VII: The New Blood	starting Friday

Images

Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

The Last Emperor	7:30
The Unbearable Lightness of Being	beginning Friday 7:30

North Adams Cinema

Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873

Colors	7:00 & 9:20
Shakedown	7:00 & 9:20
Beetlejuice	7:00 & 9:20
Sunset	6:00
The Last Emperor	8:00

Pittsfield Cinema Center

Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

The Last Emperor	7:00
Sunset	9:15
Colors	7:00 & 9:15
Shakedown	7:00 & 9:15
Biloxi Blues	7:00 & 9:15
Good Morning Vietnam	7:00 & 9:15
Dead Heat	7:15 & 9:15
Moonstruck	7:15 & 9:15
Casual Sex?	7:15 & 9:15
Beetlejuice	7:15 & 9:15
Critters II	7:15
Salas	7:15 & 9:15

Newsbriefs

Kenyatta submits resignation

Mary Kenyatta

Associate Dean of the College Mary Kenyatta has resigned and will leave Williams at the end of September 1988. She said that a national search will begin soon to find a replacement.

Kenyatta said that she does not know who will take over her role as administrative liaison to the Williams Black Student Union. "It's likely that it may remain in the deans office," she said. She said that she thinks that Incoming Dean of Freshmen Roberto Iffill may consider the job.

"I have been at the college for a number of years and have been doing the same job for all those years," Kenyatta said. "There's really no place else for me to go at the college." Because she is not a faculty member, Kenyatta cannot be appointed to a senior administrative position. She has been at Williams since 1980.

"In terms of the number here and the diversity of black students [the situation here] has been improving for blacks," she said. "There has been some improvement, but I'm very frustrated with the number of adult blacks on campus," she said.

ACSR asks Ford to cut S.A. ties

By a vote of three to two, the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility supported a proxy asking Ford Motor Company, of which the college is a shareholder, to sever all economic ties with

South Africa at its meeting last Monday.

The proxy on the Ford Company defined the cutting of economic ties as "no longer providing services, products, or technology." According to College Treasurer William Reed, the company is technically already out of South Africa.

"The notable thing is that they really have a close working relationship with what used to be a subsidiary," Professor of Political Economy Paul Clark said. "Disinvestment has occurred, but they have continued relations."

Clark added that although the parent company has pulled out, local management continues to sell products to the South African government despite a previous agreement.

The ACSR has recently voted against other proxies calling on companies to sever economic ties with South Africa, but the committee's rationale in those cases seemed to be that the companies had already withdrawn and were only continuing to sell products to South Africa.

The ACSR advises the Board of Trustees on issues of shareholder responsibility, and makes specific recommendations on how the college should vote on shareholder balloting, or proxies.

Employment in Ireland
Also at last Monday's meeting, the ACSR voted unanimously against a proxy that requested outside monitoring of the Ford Company's fair employment policy in Northern Ireland.

The committee also approved a resolution asking the Tenneco company to withdraw from South Africa. One committee member abstained. Another resolution calling for Tenneco to do more to report how it has assisted detainees or worked to abolish apartheid was approved six to one.

The committee also voted unanimously in favor of a proxy asking the company to terminate sales to the South African military, to which it sells farm and construction equipment.

"There's no doubt [Tenneco] is in the country in a big way," Reed said.

The committee supported a proxy, with two abstentions, asking Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing to withdraw from South Africa. The company manufactures tape, adhesives, pharmaceuticals and other health care products.

By a unanimous vote, the committee voted against a proxy requesting an independent review of the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant, which is owned by Texas Utilities.

—by Bill Savadove

Gargoyle sets up Senior Days program

Juniors who have felt cheated because Freshman Days only happens once during their college career may now have an opportunity to relive those days as seniors.

The Class of '89 will be able to come back two and a half days early next year, on September 5, 1988, as part of a new event called "Senior Days".

"It should be a great opportunity for people who've been away [or] JA-ing to get back together and socialize," said Hal Hermanson '89, the member of Gargoyle Society who is organizing and overlooking the event. The idea was originally the brainchild of Gargoyle alumna Jordan Hampton '87.

The Office of Career Counseling is planning a series of workshops called "Senior Starters", which are scheduled to run for two days. The workshops will provide seniors with starter tips on resumes, GRE's and LSAT's, as well as other pertinent information, according to Hermanson.

Other more social aspects of Senior Days will include a cookout on Monday evening, Outing Club hikes and frisbee and golf tournaments.

Every care is being taken, according to Hermanson, to avoid potential conflicts with Freshman Days. "Our activities will be solely for Seniors," he said. "We really discourage any other classes to come back early," he also said.

The class of '89 will be notified in greater detail over the summer through letters and will be expected to pay some dues to defray food costs. But Hermanson said the deans office and Food Service have agreed to cover the cost of most of the meals.

—by Alex Oh

CEP review

Continued from Page 1

growth, he said. The coverage of Asia has grown the most, while there were actually fewer courses on Latin America offered than in previous years. Hyde said that the coverage of racial and ethnic minorities seemed to focus almost exclusively on American blacks.

The committee concluded that there were relatively few courses that have been offered that were partially devoted to these topics. Few courses offer a direct comparison with more traditional subject matter, he said.

Many gaps

Kieffer said that many gaps, such as the literature of the Middle East, exist in the Williams curriculum. Flx said that they should acknowledge that a college of Williams' size could not do everything, but he thought the choices made were correct based on student and faculty interest.

In a separate interview, Assistant Professor of Political Science Tim Cook, chairman of the Campus Commission on Race Relations, said that science courses should address the issues with attention to the perspectives of minorities and the non-Western world. The CCRR spent several weeks reviewing the curriculum this semester and sent their findings to the CEP.

"We were just sort of assessing the overall curriculum," Cook said. The CCRR focused on introductory courses, he said. According to Cook, the representation of these concerns is better in the overall curriculum than in introductory courses.

"Building up our capacities in the curriculum on Latin America seems to be the most important step we could recommend," the report the CCRR sent to the CEP said. According to the report, gaps in the coverage of Korea and South Asia and Hispanic and Asian-Americans also exist.

Staffing problems

The report said that besides Latin America, the college has a reasonably impressive list of courses primarily devoted to these concerns. Problems of staffing, however, must be dealt with in many areas, such as Afro-American Studies, which may be expected to become majors. The report said that any department not offering these types of courses should have to justify why it does not.

"It is ironic that race often becomes a central aspect of the course while discussing the politics of black voters, the economics of black families or a novel by a black writer, but never when discussing the politics of white voters, the economics of white families or a novel by a white writer," the report said. It said that many introductory courses are restricted to the Western European tradition and this should at least be indicated in the course description.

Oakley charged the CCRR with looking into the possibility of a requirement of these sorts of courses as a response to the issues raised by the Coalition against a Racist Education. Cook said that they decided to wait until the fall to begin, since the committee will have new members. After the CCRR makes a recommendation, it will be brought to the CEP which will vote on it and bring it to the faculty.

Class of '92

Continued from Page 1

matriculation for a year or not to come to Williams at all.

Housing is a problem

"Housing is our main concern," said Dean of Freshmen Joan Edwards. Currently, the college has housing for 515 freshmen. Housing options being explored include using upper class housing, making larger singles into doubles, using common rooms, or bringing in temporary modular units.

"None of these solutions are ones I feel quite comfortable with," Edwards said.

Minority students will constitute around 24 percent of the class. Smith said the yield for minority students was higher than it has been for any previous class. Eighteen percent of the class of 1991 was minority students, which was the previous high. Twenty eight and a half percent of students admitted anticipated, Smith said. Based on available figures, he said it will be 59 to 41. The Admissions office had expected a 55 to 45 male-female ratio. Smith said that the college is trying to assure a more even ratio, and he does not know why it is so uneven. The ratio of men to women accepted this year was 55 to 45, the same as last year, but last year the ratio of those attending was 55 to 45.

One action that Admissions will take next year to improve the ratio involves the PSAT search. Instead of searching the top 10,000 students, Admissions will begin searching equal numbers of men and women.

The number of students on financial aid is down to 35 percent from 38 percent last year. Smith said that less middle-income students applied this year. Next year the Admissions Office plans to emphasize that Williams has need-blind admissions.

Smith said that the college is trying to increase the number of financial aid students to 40 percent, which was the percentage he expected in the Class of 1992 based on the number of financial aid students accepted.

'We compare very favorably to any small college in the country.'

'Housing is our main concern.'

this year were minority students, as opposed to 24 percent last year.

Of the 563 who said they will attend for the class of 1992, 56 are black, 30 are Hispanic and 49 are Asian, and two are Native Americans. "We compare very favorably to any small colleges in the country," Smith said.

"I think it's just simply following the pattern we set some years ago," Smith said when asked about the reason for the higher minority yield.

Fewer women to attend
The male-female ratio will not be as close as originally

You're smart enough to calculate the size of a Hydrogen atom.

And you're still smoking?

U.S. Department of Health & Human Services

Faculty OKs grievance procedure — Log

Continued from Page 1

procedure may serve to discourage justified grievances and may not protect the rights and privileges of the accused, Cook said.

The composition of the standing committee was the only major point of contention at the faculty meeting. Assistant Professor of Physics Jay Pasachoff objected to the proposal's stipulation that two of the faculty-staff members of the committee be minority representatives appointed by the President. Pasachoff proposed a motion to delete this requirement from the proposal.

"This amendment will provide more of a sense of fairness to people," Pasachoff said. "It's a bad precedent for the college to set up an unnecessary quota."

Minimum standard

Cook said that having at least two minority faculty-staff representatives was a minimum standard of adequacy. "We're dealing with matters of perception. We're trying to get a committee that will not only be fair but look fair and legitimate and be diverse along racial and sexual lines."

Assistant Professor of English Suzanne Graver said that if the requirement of two minority faculty-staff representatives did not remain in the proposal, they would not be on the committee, because the percentage of minority faculty and staff is not that high.

Pasachoff's motion, which applied only to faculty and staff representation on the committee, was rejected by a voice vote.

The reform shortens the period of time in which the Dean will mediate a complaint by a student from one month to two weeks. Under the new procedure, if a student is not satisfied with the Dean's mediation, he or she may file a formal grievance, which will be heard in a private hearing before a standing grievance committee.

'Offensive behavior' may be stopped more quickly and efficiently through informal mediation ...

Within two weeks of its hearing, the committee will decide whether the grievance is legitimate and will recommend to the Dean of Faculty or Vice President for Administration an appropriate course of action to remedy any harm done to the student. Cook said that any decision against a faculty or staff member would require a majority of both the faculty-staff and the student parts of the committee.

A faculty or staff member found by the grievance committee to have behaved in a discriminatory manner may appeal that finding to the President, whose decision will be final. The proposal states that the committee will report to the college community the details of the cases it has heard, in a way which will protect the privacy of the parties to the case.

The creation of a standing grievance committee would ensure the expertise of the committee and make the composition of the committee well-known, making the grievance process less intimidating for the student while protecting the rights of the accused, Cook said.

Cook also said that it was important to retain a period of informal mediation by the Deans. "Offensive behavior may be stopped more quickly and efficiently through informal mediation than through formal grievances," he said. Whether or not a student decides to file a formal grievance, a confidential file of allegations of discrimination will be maintained by the Deans.

The proposal stipulates that the CCRF and the faculty will review the new procedure by the end of the 1991-1992 academic year.

Increasing the number of 21 Nights to two or three nights per week and serving no alcohol on the other nights.

The proposal met with general opposition when discussed at a College Council meeting two weeks ago, however. "The College Council felt like that's not the best approach to take," President Trace Blankenship '89 said. "When we gave them the money, we were hoping we could revitalize the Log within the drinking constraints that the law imposes."

"If there's a night when nobody's coming down anyway, then you're not really losing anything. But it would only be open to a quarter of the Williams population, and I think the Log should be for everyone," Beshel said.

Jane Penner '90, the new student activities coordinator for the Log, said she wanted to encourage the council and the Williams community to have an open mind about the proposal. "I can see the frustration that Dave Lamarre has gone through. Having events that try and draw the whole campus doesn't work."

The Log habit

"I understand [the council's] reasoning in that it does seem somewhat limiting to make the place available to only one-fourth of the campus half the time ... But people aren't in the habit of going to the Log. People who are in the habit are seniors who go for 21 Night," Penner said.

Penner said that Food Service wanted the proposal to be discussed within the college community before any action was taken. The Log Committee ran a survey in The Issue on May 6 asking what students thought about 21 Nights and about parttioning the Log into a bar and a student activities area.

Hilty and Beshel said that no changes would probably be made until Winter Study or second semester of next year. "The big problem this year was that it took a whole semester to get the money," said Hilty. "The basic events will still be the same first semester [next year], and then we'll evaluate."

Penner said that plans for next year also included publicity aimed specifically at freshmen. "We're going to have Log talks like they have BGLU talks."

The Log budget request submitted to the College Council for next year is for approximately $12,000, according to Beshel. This figure is almost the same as the council's allocation of $5930 for this semester. $400 a semester go into Penner's salary, and $300 a week goes toward entertainment.

"Our expenses can't be offset by the volume of business that we do," Lamarre said. "The College Council money is very important. Money isn't spent at the Log on evenings when 80 percent of the audience is under 21. People only buy one soda or one cup of coffee."

"The College Council wouldn't drop the ball on what we started this year. Our commitment to the Log will be the same, but we're hoping the college will share some of the financial burden," Blankenship said.

Lamarre summarized the semester as a move towards renewed popularity. "Over the last few months the Log's been the busiest it's been over the last few years. This place will come around again, and may see some degree of self-sufficiency, but it just takes a little longer than people think it should take."

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY
Help us keep winning.

bolle
Sunglasses from $24.00

THE SPOKE
MORE THAN A BIKE SHOP

408 Main Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
413-458-3456

Contras— Students serve as counselors

Continued from Page 1

In this process, Chamorro said. In 1983, he worked with a CIA agent to develop a manual to teach the contras how to fight and to tell them what they were fighting for. "It reflected the philosophy of the guerilla warfare the U.S. was exercising in Nicaragua," he said.

'I believe that the Sandanistas should face Nicaragua and let the Nicaraguan people decide.'

But when Chamorro saw the final copy he was appalled. Among the methods called for were the "neutralization" of enemies and the hiring of professional criminals. "Literally, hire professional criminals," Chamorro said. "What [the CIA] is telling me is that I am a professional criminal."

Conflicts between Chamorro and the CIA in the press led the CIA to request his resignation in November 1984. He said that the CIA did not appreciate his increasing candor with reporters on actions taken by the CIA.

Now, Chamorro said that he believes the war in Nicaragua is over. "I believe that the Sandinistas should face Nicaragua and let the Nicaraguan people decide [on a government]," he said. Chamorro also said that he believes the Sandinistas are actually working toward democracy and will allow a fair election.

12 impossible conditions
He described the peace initiative of 1983 as 12 impossible conditions that would allow the contras to justify a war with Nicaragua. He said that it was engineered by the CIA for this very purpose.

"The Sandinistas aren't going to accept this," Chamorro said he told the CIA about their peace initiative. He said the CIA response was "that's the point ... You say [that] you, the good guys, are willing to stop the fighting."

In an interview after the lecture, Chamorro said that a Contra offensive against the town of Octal in 1983 was staged to impress Congress and get them to allocate more money to the contras. "So you really should question if all these things are to keep the CIA in business," he said.

'I want to be a priest of death. I want to inspire people to die.'

Chamorro described one CIA man, a veteran of Vietnam and Cambodia, who dressed in black. He said this man told him, "I want to be a priest of death. I want to inspire people to die." Chamorro said the young people in the contra camps called the man a baseball umpire. "They're telling me they don't want to fight; they want to play ball," he said.

The lecture was sponsored by the Marcel Pallas Fund, which an anonymous donor established in memory of Marcel Pallas '76. Pallas was related to General Anastasio Somoza, the Nicaraguan dictator who the Sandinistas overthrew in 1979. He joined the Sandinistas in July 1979 and was assassinated later that year by people who thought he was betraying the Somoza family.

Continued from Page 4

ported the idea. We tried to decide if it should be worked through existing programs or if it should be separate," he said. As the function and purpose of peer counseling seemed to be different from how the other groups perceived themselves, Howland added, the decision was made to make the program a separate entity.

Been meeting weekly

At the beginning of the semester, Howland discussed the program with students interested in becoming peer counselors. Since then, he has been meeting weekly with the five who were the most interested as part of the students' training.

In addition to Hong and Fajgeles, Rebecca Buchanan '90, Guy Beadie '90 and Lorraine Santy '90 are participating in the program.

'We're not professionals and don't claim to be.'

Buchanan said that the meetings alternate between lectures, discussions of various concerns students may raise and role playing. Howland said that problems brought to the counselors this month will help to focus the discussions. "We may find areas to focus on more, and other areas where we won't need to bother," he said.

Assistant Dean of the College Stephen Wright said he feels that peer groups developed both because of the greater complexity of college life and because of a perceived need among the student body.

Endlessly grateful

"We're endlessly grateful to these organizations—they function in ways we cannot," Wright said.

The new program is part of a nationwide trend of increased demand for counseling services at colleges, Howland said. "We have increased our [professional] staff progressively over the last three years, and have seen demand increase ahead of that," he said.

Howland also said there has been a change in the general cultural acceptance of psychological assistance.

'Having thousands of reference points can be an advantage'

"People don't feel that you have to be extremely sick, and more people are coming to Williams who have received some form of help during high school," Howland said he expects this trend to increase at colleges nationwide.

ANSWERS TO CURRENT PUZZLE

GIVE YOURSELF SOME CREDIT!

George M. Hopkins Co.
ESTABLISHED 1888

UPS DROP OFF • COME EARLY

61 SPRING STREET 9:00 - 5:30 458-9001

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. PARKING IN THE BACK

GATES REAL ESTATE
"Berkshire Properties"

Vacation — Lake Related
Farm & Residential

(413) 862-4565

(413) 269-6585

Brokers:
Nancy Gates
Jack Gates

Associates:
Fred Metcalf
Ken Cronin

Colonial Pizza

"The best in America"
Hot oven grinders, salads,
spaghettis, and more!

Now starting delivery to Williams College
From 5:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m.

Fresh dough daily

Nice atmosphere — Fast service

Williamstown
Spring Street
458-9009
458-8014

hours: 11 a.m. - 3 a.m.

The shortest distance between you and campus

The Williams Record

SUMMER HELP WANTED

General maintenance work — lawns, fencing, some painting, simple carpentry, etc. on country residence in Williamstown. Please call 458-3395 for more info.

COX "popup" camping trailer in excellent condition, quality 1407. Army Duck Canvas: vinyl road cover, converts into awning; 10 ft. long box-size folds out to 18 ft. overall length; built-in storage compartments; sleeps 6. $1,995. Call 458-4874 evenings or anytime on weekends.

PART TIME — HOME MAILING PROGRAM!

Excellent Income! Details, send S.A.S.E. West, Box 5877, Hillside, NJ 07205.

Lifestyle Accessories
Antiques
Furniture

70 Spring Street
Williamstown
Mass. 01267
413-458-3436

GIFTS: For Special Occasions

We Gift Wrap!

The finest selection of Greeting Cards —
Picture Frames — Blank Books
A treasure trove of Jewelry —
Reproduction and Antique
AND MUCH MORE!

TheLibrary

Levi's
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Softball finishes at 9-4 with Little 3 win

by James Lee

The women's softball team surged to resounding victories over a hapless Wesleyan squad in a doubleheader on Saturday after suffering a defeat at the hands of the tough North Adams State Mohawks last Tuesday. The team overpowered its Little Three opponents, crushing them 10-7 and 17-10 and sealing its fourth straight Little Three championship. By contrast, the team managed only two hits throughout the entire 6-0 rout by North Adams.

Leading the Ephs' charge over the Cardinals on Saturday was co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89, who pounded out three triples, two doubles, and five singles, and driving in ten runs in the two games. Hedeman also was the winning pitcher of the second game, striking out 7 and walking 11 while surrendering 12 hits.

Sharing the offensive limelight with Hedeman were Jacky Weider '91, with a triple and three singles, and Missy Crouchley '89, who hit one homerun and five singles. Cathy Hanelich '91 struck out

2, walked 6 and yielded 12 hits in picking up the win in the first game, despite a finger injury incurred during the Trinity loss.

The Eph scoring machine started its engine in the very first inning of the first game when Hedeman tripped with the bases loaded, scoring three runs and paving the way for a five-run inning off Cardinal losing pitcher Nikki Feldman. In the fourth, Hedeman doubled with runners on second and third to drive in two more runs.

Wesleyan responded by scoring two runs in the second and five runs in the fifth. Hedeman, however, cemented the Eph victory in the sixth when she doubled again to bring in another run and laid the groundwork for one more run later in the inning. The Ephs closed the game with a final run in the seventh to ice their victory.

The second game witnessed a repeat of the early Eph dominance exhibited in the first game, as the score stood at 8-0 at the end of the second inning. Weider started things out in the first as she singled. Crouchley then followed with a homerun, registering the first two runs. Later in the inning, the line-up of Julie Carroll '91, Monica Brand '91, Dee Goodwin '91, Tiffany Holmes '90 and Emily Donovan '90 combined to produce three more runs. The Ephs added another three in the second, with triples by Hedeman and Audra Mazder '91.

The Cardinals, faced with the overwhelming 8-0 Eph lead after the second, managed to pull out 4 runs in the fourth and 6 in the seventh. The Eph onslaught, however, continued right till the end with 9 more runs in the last four innings to secure victory.

"We played well enough to win even though we didn't play as well as we were able to.... As for the North Adams game, we didn't hit the ball, period," said Coach David Caputi. "The season went very well. We beat a lot of teams to whom we lost last year," said Holmes, noting that the squad's record on the season now stands at 9-4, the team's best in years.

Sandwiched between the tournament games, Williams traveled to Amherst to battle for the Little Three Championship. For the legions of Williams fans who traveled along the same path that Zephaniah Swift Moore took in 1821 with his treacherous defectors, the final score of 14-13 was a blow almost too hard to handle.

After a hard fought 55 minutes, the score stood knotted at 11 when the Jeffs stunned the Ephmen with three quick goals to take the proverbial "insurmountable lead" 14-11.

The impossible almost happened, however, when Williams rallied, scoring a goal with a

M. Lax

Continued from Page 14

where Williams played the Panthers to a first half tie before falling behind, Middlebury had this one from the start, going ahead 5-3 at the half before outscoring Williams 4-1 in the third.

In the semi-final game, played Friday on Cole Field, Williams grabbed an early lead before riding the tide of six second half goals to victory over third ranked Bowdoin.

Against the Polar Bears, the Ephmen went out on top 2-1 only three minutes into the game, but by the half could not increase their margin. In the second stanza, however, freshman Ian Smith took control, notching three goals to lead the Ephs to their 10-6 win and into the finals.

Next year, the 'Herst may not be so lucky, as Williams Lax will see the return of their top four scoring leaders; freshmen Ian Smith and Brent Powell, sophomore Bobby Santry, and junior Doug Gilbert. To get an idea of their scoring power, consider this; the three underclassmen combined for nine goals and five assists versus the Jeffs.

On the other hand, the mid-field and defensive starting lineups read like a graduation announcement. Gone will be senior tri-captains Chris Swindell, Eric Churchill and David Crompton. Middles Jon Edie, Billy Boyd, Chris Oldham and Jimmy Walker will all be lost to graduation. Renzle's raiders will need sophomores Jeff Stripp and Rob Lambert to lead the team on D, while juniors Gilbert and Fuller will have to pull the midfield together for the team to succeed.

"They are an incredibly strong team," said Burnett of the Ephs' final-game opponent. "It's amazing that any team kept us to four goals." The Ephs expected Sunday's game to be difficult; Tufts has only lost two games in the past three years.

Tenerowicz and Bevin Cooper '91 scored during the first half, but Williams still trailed by three after the first half. And despite goals by Tenerowicz and Boddicker during the second half, Williams was downed 11-4. Leading the way for Tufts was sole senior Sara Richardson, who scored five goals during the game. Sunday's game was the last tournament game for seniors Bernheimer, Burnett, Boddicker, Tenerowicz, Abby Burbank, goalie Jeanne Cloppse, and Lisa Phillips.

Last Tuesday's game against Middlebury was also difficult, and the Ephs lost by the close score of 12-8. Most importantly, last Thursday's 11-7 victory against Amherst won the Little Three Title for the Ephs and set their record at 9-3, the best season the team has ever had. Today at Cole Field at 4:00 the women had a chance to enter the double digit mark in victories with a game against the Dutchwomen of Union, the squad's last contest of the season.

Chemists, Biologists, Geologists needed for summer employment. Positions available locally and in all areas of MA or NY. Send resumes to: W.S.T., 2211 Main St., Buffalo, NY 14214.

First Investors Corporation, established since 1930, invites New York Capitol District residents interested in an opportunity in the investment industry to attend an informational seminar to become acquainted with our organization and the positions which we have available in Albany, NY. Contact: Murray Leonardson (518) 459-5415

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE HAIR SALON FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH ST. BENNINGTON, VT (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2648

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center®

The salons that make the difference between ok and extraordinary.®

THE CLIP SHOP

HAIR:

We've Carved Something Special For You.

It's more than a haircut. It's the modern way to look at hair. Come to our Artistic Center.

Salon and learn how to cultivate a curve. Or construct a carved silhouette.

You'll also find exciting new products like Molding Mud, Crema Re-Sizing Creme, He Contrast Gel and Gracie, which will keep all these shapes in place.

1986 Sebastian International, Inc.

49 SPRING ST. WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH ST. PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-

Women rugburs win season final

by Cecilia Malm

More than four and twenty rugburs came down to the annual Ball of Inverness Tournament this weekend, and when the Ball was over another fine WWRFC season had come to an end.

The first match of the morning set the Williams Psycho Killer B's against the Mean Green of Dartmouth College. Gina Coleman '90 barreled into the try zone early in the first half, assisted by a well-timed pass from Ann Arnason '89. Stunned by the ferociousness of this young squad, Dartmouth slowly fell apart, allowing three tries in the second half, first by scrum-half Kara Lynch '89, then fullback Katy Carr '91 and finally Arnason. Including conversion points, the final score stood at a triumphant 20-0.

The A's were not able to emulate the B's as they faced the mighty 'Mouth. A penalty kick by Lauren Boeschstein '89 gave the Ephs a 3-0 lead, but Dartmouth quickly retaliated by scoring a break-away try and a conversion. Dartmouth kept Williams on their toes throughout the game with clever line-out plays, scrums and frequent over-loading of the line.

Senior hooker Carolyn O'Brien had one of her best games and Cathy Paper '89 was also an essential factor in the great success of many scrum-downs, but ultimately Williams as a team was unable to match Dartmouth's superior athleticism and carefully coached plays. Dartmouth carried the day, 10-3.

Undaunted by this defeat, however, the A's went on to trounce Middlebury soundly. Raquel Holmes '90, whose tackle the referee later noted were "the best I have seen on either

(the men's or the women's) fields today" scored the first try of the game. Kerry Kilander '89 added two tries to her incredible season total and Katie Gerber '88 brought the tally up to 16-0. Senior lock Noreen Harrington tirelessly supported her teammates on the line and Jean Janson '88 refused to go down in the face of many vicious Dartmouth attempts at tackling her.

The B's also beat Middlebury easily with fearsome Jackie Graves '90 scoring twice and Robin Snyder '91 breaking through a sea of confused blue Panther jerseys to also drive the ball into the try zone. Shelley Whelpton '90 made a spectacular debut at full-back, sprinting after her own mile-high kicks and flattening anyone who dared to catch them.

The A's ended their season with a fantastic record of 6-1-2 while the B's were virtually undefeated with a record of 5-1.

The baseball team's ECAC and Little Three hopes slid away last week when the Ephs dropped four straight, including two to Amherst. (Scala)

Baseball slugged out of ECAC contention after winless week

by Scott Mozarsky

How the mighty have fallen! The Williams baseball team finished off the most horrendous week of its season, during which it went 0-4, by losing both games of a doubleheader to Amherst on Saturday.

The Amherst sweep dropped the Ephs' record to 15-10, and eliminated virtually any chance that Williams had of gaining the ECAC playoff berth that appeared so attainable as the team began the week 15-6 and in the midst of a three game winning streak.

The Ephs began their week of infamy by taking a 4-2 lead into the late innings against AIC. Williams took the lead behind the pitching of Chris Pentz '91. Brian Harwell '90, who is batting .361, notes that, "Chris pitched a great game by using a combination of fastballs and off-speed pitches to keep AIC off balance." Pentz tired in the seventh, however, and AIC took a 5-4 lead.

After Williams tied the game at 5-5 in the bottom of the eighth, the game appeared to be heading for extra innings. Things are not always as they appear however. In the ninth, AIC scored two unearned runs as shortstop

Continued on Page 11

Tennis takes Little Three with shutout

by Ted Hobart

"Everybody played up to their potential," said senior co-captain Hoyt Ludington in summing up the surprising success of the men's tennis team this season. The netters dropped just one dual match all season, and that a very close loss to Colgate.

"We played the season about as well as we could have," Brad Hunt '90 said. "I don't think any of us thought we'd be as strong as we were."

On Saturday, the squad walked the Wesleyan Cardinals 9-0 to capture its first Little Three Title since 1985. Only one match even went to the three set limit, that Steve Buxbaum's at number four. The two co-captains, Ludington and Pier Friend '88, allowed Wesleyan only a single game between them.

The team's success in dual matches and relative weakness in the NESCAC tourney, where it placed fifth, is partly explained by the fact that the Ephs did not face some of the toughest teams in dual matches. NESCAC powerhouses Bates and Connecticut

Continued on Page 11

Senior set to soar with Eagles

by Debbie Snyder

When Scott Powers filled out the questionnaires he began receiving from professional football teams, he remembers they all asked, "Why do you want to play in the NFL?"

"I always put, 'Who wouldn't?'" said the senior. For Powers, who punted and played free safety for the Ephs, the thought of playing in the NFL remains almost as much a fantasy as when he began playing at the age of nine. Although a good athlete, he said he has always considered himself too small—he stands 6'2" tall and weighs 185 pounds—for professional football.

In addition, Powers said he did not expect scouts to notice players from Division III schools such as Williams.

But Powers will get his chance at the big time, with the Philadelphia Eagles. He has the chance to become one of a few Williams graduates to play in the NFL, following Jack Maitland '70, who played for the Super Bowl Champion Colts in 1970, and Scott Perry '76, who played for the Cincinnati Bengals.

A representative of one cooperative NFL scouting service contacted Powers in the spring of his junior year after he was the only punter named to the Associated Press All-New England team. The team consists of players from all three divisions.

"Sometimes, I look at it," Powers said, "And I think I had no right to be on that list." Powers tested for NFL Scouting while at MIT for a track meet. He ran a 40-yard dash and took a 12-minute aptitude test. The Los Angeles Raiders contacted him in the second week of August and questionnaires from seven other teams followed during and after the football season.

Scott Powers

He soon felt overwhelmed and turned to Roger Caron, new assistant football coach and two-year NFL veteran with the Indianapolis Colts. "He's been a big help, because he's gone through it and played," Powers said. Caron suggested an agent in Boston, Neil Abbott. It was from Abbott that he learned the details of draft selection, salary scales and financial management.

As expected, Powers was not selected in the eleven rounds of the draft last Sunday, and he subsequently signed with the Eagles as a free agent. He will report to mini-camp in July and later to summer camp before signing a contract with the team. The base salary for free agent punters is $50,000.

"I'm going to go in there [mini-camp] with the attitude that I'm going to make it," Powers said. "That's the way I have to do it."

He attributed his intensely competitive attitude to growing up as the fifth of seven children.

"I was always more competitive than most because of my older brothers," Powers explained. "They were my best fans, too." Playing sports with his five brothers gave him an edge over his peers and a tradition to follow, he said. He and all his brothers were the number 15 in basketball.

Despite his determination to succeed, Powers said the thought of playing in the NFL remains somewhat unreal.

"It's going to be no different than when I was in fourth grade. When I go to mini-camp, I'm going to have my chin on the floor. I'm going to be asking for autographs, making an ass out of myself."

Powers may well see some familiar faces on the pro gridiron. Coach Roger Caron has already reported to the New Orleans Saints' mini-camp. Rich Romer from Union, Ali-American defensive end, was drafted in the sixth round by the Bengals, and noseguard Leroy Brantley from Amherst has signed with the Patriots.

Season Scorecard

Men's Lacrosse Regular Season — 7-3; ECAC Runner Up to Middlebury; Lost Little Three Title to Amherst

Women's Lacrosse Regular Season — 8-2 (hosted Union today); Won 4th Straight Little Three Crown; ECAC Runner Up to Tufts

Baseball Regular Season — 15-13 (two games left)

Softball Regular Season — 9-4 (played at North Adams yesterday); won Little Three Championship

Tennis Regular Season — 6-1 (two games left); Won Little Three and finished fifth at the NESCACs

Golf Lost Little Three by three strokes to Amherst; finished second at NESCACs

Men's Track Injuries hurt squad as Little Three Title evades male tracksters

Women's Track Won Little Three Title; Travels to ECAC Division III Championships on Saturday

Men's Crew Finished season undefeated with 10-0 record; The Little Three Champs are ranked first in New England

Women's Crew Runner Up to Wesleyan in Little Three; Travels to Philly for Dad Vail Championships this weekend

Men's Rugby Won Little Three; Upset Dartmouth

Women's Rugby 6-1-2 squad won Little Three Crown

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

"Well, that's an interesting bit of trivia — I guess I do only dream in black and white."

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Paddock Interview

BY FRANCES HANSEN/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Malaska

- ACROSS
- On — (Wall St. risk)
 - Baba liquor
 - Major or minor bear
 - Turner or Louise
 - Comedian Jimmy of yesteryear
 - Stiller's partner
 - Astronaut Armstrong
 - Copter part
 - Who was your W. W. I hero?
 - Rommel, the Desert Fox
 - He didn't win, place or show
 - Pain in the neck
 - Not hip
 - Marshall, for one
 - Solemn vow
- DOWN
- N.Y.-New Orleans dir
 - Glacial hill of Iowa
 - Wicked
 - Join a cabal
 - Eat one's words
 - Chemistry Nobelist 1944
 - Neighbor of Ayr
 - Radio pioneer
 - Free Dobbin from the traces
 - Hitler's Third
 - Jockey's blouse material
 - The works
- 30 The Brown Bess
- 31 Fit of temper
- 32 Kind of acid for hides
- 33 Stepping liquid
- 34 Wee bloomer
- 41 What do you call your balky mate?
- 42 Rotten
- 43 Neural network
- 44 "Whoo!" enforcer
- 45 Shade
- 46 Cousin of an oryx
- 47 Archer's bow
- 48 Your happy-hour canapés
- 49 Repulsive to youngsters
- 50 Gay Paree's Place
- 51 Silly
- 52 Hidden store
- 53 Ultima
- 54 (farthest point)
- 55 Make an all-out effort
- 56 Reasoning
- 57 Kind of finish
- 58 Like Lam's writings
- 59 Merrimac's ironclad foe
- 60 Start of a G.B.S. title
- 61 Your favorite actress?
- 62 Seventeenth Greek letter
- 63 Blessed woman
- 64 M.G.M.'s lion
- 65 Shopping list entry
- 66 Poke at
- 67 Canto
- 68 Calla's forte
- 69 Your favorite book?
- 70 "I," 1941
- 71 Wilson song
- 72 Knitter of ravel'd sleeves
- 73 Did you enjoy your cruise?
- 74 Cordial flavor
- 75 Hawaii's state bird
- 76 Colorful decade
- 77 Helmut's "thank you"
- 78 Small
- 79 Saute
- 80 Hussy
- 81 Move boxcars
- 82 Bizarre
- 83 Case-man Gardner
- 84 Within the law
- 85 She's in the henhouse
- 86 The South
- 87 Ryan or Tatum
- 88 Little and to spend a little less
- 89 R.L.S.
- 90 Keyman concern
- 91 Popular word game
- 92 Not for, in
- 93 Saint — fire, sea
- 94 Phenomenon
- 95 Misplace
- 96 Stroke one's teachers
- 97 Arabian bigwig
- 98 Dull surface
- 99 Avignon's river
- 100 Author Prevost
- 101 The Cooper museum is here
- 102 Bearing
- 103 Bizarre
- 104 Loss of
- 105 Dull surface
- 106 Powerful, poetically
- 107 Akbar's capital
- 108 "Ay, now" thickens
- 109 Villiers
- 110 Athlete-actor
- 111 Arab
- 112 Vinland discoverer
- 113 Var
- 114 Of the eye
- 115 Start of a French toast
- 116 Crestfallen
- 117 Broad valleys
- 118 "The fat" — the fire
- 119 First name in spydom
- 120 "A Man"
- 121 The movies, in Madrid
- 122 Chancel area
- 123 Pelvic bones
- 124 Urban light
- 125 Slangy assent
- 126 Palm off
- 127 With 109
- 128 Across, a "Heliappop"
- 129 "star"
- 130 Slangy assent

Men's rugby finishes season at 9-3

Continued from Page 14

wrenching come from behind victory, the Killer B's scored 14 second half points — including two tries credited to Mark Stepis '89 — to stun a hard-hitting Jeff team, 14 to 9. "Oh, my God be praised," breathed a relieved C. Alki Michaelis. I never thought we were gonna pull that off. When the 'Herst went up (by 9 points) in the first half, I thought it was over. We really showed some character, huh?" Yes, they did. And victory over the Jeffs this spring was particularly satisfying after last fall's B-side match ended in a scoreless tie.

What else needs to be said? Well, we could talk about the Screamin' C-men's embarrassment of the Wesleyan B-side by 40 points. Jeremy Schroeder '91 put down a pair of scores in that one. Or we could revel in the sweet satisfaction of knowing that the A-side battered Amherst 3 times this year, while competition against Wesleyan left the 'RFC's Little Three record at 5-0. September will bring another season and another challenge from the Jeffs. But why don't we leave it all to rest right now. We'll let those black and purple jerseys do the talking.

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS.

GENUINE

This week's recipients are Mo Flaherty '90 and Tim Frechette '89. Flaherty, the team's leading scorer tied the Banians in OT to help send the laxwomen to the ECAC finals while Frechette came in second at NESCAC's golf tournament to qualify for his third straight nationals. Mo, Spike, o this Bud's for you!

From The Locker Room

by Marc McDermott and Al Mottur

THE 1987 WORLD CHAMPION ... minnesota twins. Yes the Twinkies are now defending their crown in the national pastime. While great teams of the past brought to mind such images as the Murderers Row or the Boys of Summer, last year's World Series participants bring to mind woefully different memories.

Homer hankles, cellophane outfield fences, decibel meters, turf toe, and the running rabbits of the White Rat are trappings more fitted to garnish an antiseptic game such as box lacrosse than a game founded on tradition. About the only thing that remains traditional about the game of baseball today, is its inherent racism.

Yet fans, the true patrons of the game, stand by idly, complying with any get rich scheme the avaricious owners can implement through their unholy alliance with televised media.

The last 15 years have seen the playoffs renamed the overlong "League Championship Series" (LCS to announcers, those depraved lieutenants of TV) and lengthened to 7 games, thereby reducing the appeal of the World Series. Fans have mourned the loss of grass, the loss of sunshine (through the twin evils of the dome and the night game — yes, even in Wrigley), the loss of the pitcher's turn at bat and, most heartwrenching, the movement of World Series games to "prime time" — meaning the fans of the future, children, were forced to go to sleep before Mookie's grounder went through Buckner's legs in '86.

Now Peter Ubberoth, pushed by the ever-present Media, is setting wheels in motion which will bring about the ultimate destruction of the game — EXPANSION. Uncle Uble wants to spread the game's already thin talent among 30 teams in 6 divisions. Imagine what the staffs of the woe's and Twins would look like after such a move. Probably like pennant winners.

Far more insidious, the evil E would lead to expanded playoffs, interleague play and the Buffalo Bisons. Before the owners, whose most concerned with the bottom line, than the action between the lines, allow such horrors to unfold, they ought to rectify the current problems with the sport — you know something is wrong when Frank Viola stares past the plate and sees not the tense faces of his fans, but the spinning blades of the climate controlling electric fans.

What baseball needs is for N.L. pres. & baseball purist A. Bartlett Giamatti to ascend to the commissioner's throne and for Homerin' Hank Aaron to claim the vacated Presidency of the senior circuit. Giamatti's first move will undoubtedly demand the abolition of the DH, the seemingly innocent bastard child of Bill Veeck — yes he of the exploding scoreboard and the midget batter — in the early 70's. Meanwhile, the all-time home run king will purify the N.L., ridding it of astroturf fields with all their inherent defects including turf hits and pop-up doubles.

Bart and Hank will prevent the Braves from gaining a wild-card berth as they would in the NBA and NHL, where the Toronto Wilted Leafs and the San Antonio Slurs join the league elites. Baseball has and must always avoid diminishing the importance of the regular season.

We need the Gashouse Gang, not Herzog's harriers. The Fall Classic of 2 years ago, with Fenway, grass, New York, Boston, and teams with an average of 102 regular season wins under their belts, was worthy of the great series' of the past. If the game is not soon steered from its current path of self immolation, we may never see another.

Last week's answers:

- Bushwood Country Club ("Caddyshack")
 - 6'9" with the Afro ("Fletch")
 - Penitentiary ("The Longest Yard")
- Last week's winner was Sean Lev '88. Congratulations, Mahatma!

Summer Ski Storage

Now until Sept. 30

$15.00

Goff's Sports, inc.

(413) 458-3605
15 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

Senior Austin Kelly tries on his newly-captured Lord Jeff jersey. The White Dogs of the WRFC downed the Jeffs for the third time this year and captured the Little Three Title in the process. (Scala)

Male ruggers take shirts en route to Little Three crown

by Andy Harris

"Yes. We did it. We took 'em to the go-go's," said Club President Tom Higgins as he donned the purple and black jersey fleeced from the back of his Amherst opponent.

It is a time-honored tradition between the two rugby clubs — the betting of shirts — and as Williams slipped past the Lord Jeffs 13-6, 15 more jerseys found new homes with the WRFC. The A-side had drubbed Wesleyan, 28-8 to take the first jewel of the Little Three crown last Spring. Amherst followed with an equally humiliating trashing of the Cardinal first side, which set up the championship match between the White Dogs and the Lord Jeffs.

Kurt Oeler '88 registered his finest offensive performance of the season as he accounted for two tries, including the game-winner, and consistently fed clean passes to the line from his scrumhalf position.

The Amherst side was a formidable one, continually frustrating Williams line play, but unable to pierce the defensive phalanx of the White Dogs. A brief moment of controversy and tension erupted mid way throughout the second half when the Lord Jeff Flyhalf seemingly punted the ball between the uprights. As the referee whistled, indicating a drop goal for three points, the sideline crowd stammered in bitter amazement as the Jeffs pushed within three, 9-6. But Oeler's second try finished the Jeffs and all was, for maybe just a moment, set right in the world of rugby.

Actually, the Williams jersey tally for the afternoon totalled 30 with the B-side victory earlier. In a heart-stopping gut-

Continued on Page 13

Women's lax ends best season ever

by Mariam Nafley

Not many lacrosse teams have to play four tough games in a six-day period. Fewer still emerge with impressive results. The women's lacrosse team, however, did exactly that, winning its fourth consecutive Little Three title and placing second at its first ECAC tournament in the process. In the ECAC final game last Sunday, Tufts finally stopped the Ephs' rampage with an 11-4 beating.

Sunday's loss could have been caused in part by effort spent in Saturday's ECAC semifinal game against Trinity. The Ephs played a difficult and exciting game against the team they had beaten by one point last week, this time winning 12-11 in a six-minute overtime. This game, like the last one against Trinity, started out ominously for the Ephs, as the Bantams quickly took a 2-0 lead.

Williams caught up quickly again; within the first five minutes of the first half, Lisa Tenerowicz '88 and Amy Kershaw '90 had notched goals to tie the score. Subsequent goals by Beth Bernheimer '88 and Tenerowicz still left Trinity with a 5-4 lead until Kershaw stepped in to retie the score with 1:28 left on the clock.

The Ephs took the lead for the first time in the game with sophomore Net Owen's goal 5:27 into the second half; Owen was the player who tied the game with Trinity last week. The poised Bantams responded with four straight goals which left the score at 9-6 and darkened the Ephs prospects. Williams' strong offense, however, broke deep into the Trinity defense, resulting in goals by defender Wynn Hohit '89 and leading scorer Mo Flaherty '90.

With 2:59 left to go, the Ephs were still at a one-goal deficit.

Last-minute heroics

How fast a game is lacrosse? The last minute of the second half answers the question pretty well. With 42 seconds left to go on the clock, Flaherty tied the score again with an assist from Kershaw. No wimps they, the Trinity team decided to be aggressive instead of stalling to let the game go overtime. With 15 seconds left in the game, their attempt was successful and the scoreboard changed to 10-9 in favor of the Bantams.

At the resulting faceoff, however, Flaherty took the ball and sent it to Bernheimer, who with six seconds left on the clock scored to tie the game yet again.

"We were mentally tough and physically tough. I've never seen us play at such a level of intensity," said co-captain

Continued on Page 10

The women's lacrosse team posted its best record ever this season, notching nine wins against three defeats. In its first ECAC tourney ever, the team reached the finals before falling 11-4 to a Tufts team that has lost only two games in the last three years. (Scala)

Laxmen checked in ECAC finals

by Marc McDermott

And so the season ends. With an 8-4 record and a second place rank in the ECAC, Williams lacrosse completed its best season since 1981 when they were 8-4 and, yes, also second in the ECAC.

Last Sunday, Williams traveled to Middlebury for their fourth game in five days and their second against the Panthers in that stretch. After a heartbreaking 14-13 loss to Amherst the day before, the ECAC championship game would make or break the Ephs' season. Williams was up against long odds—the Panthers were the defending ECAC champs and had downed the Ephs 11-6 only five days earlier.

The championship once again eluded Coach Renzie Lamb as his laxmen fell in an 12-6 onslaught. Unlike the first game

Continued on Page 10

It took saves like these for Bowdoin's goalie Morgan Hall to limit Eph superscorer Brent Powell '91 to only one goal in Williams' ECAC semifinal victory. (Scala)

Men's crew rows to first undefeated season, 10-0

by David B. Katz

For the first time in at least 12 years the varsity men's crew defeated Trinity, in its final regular season regatta last Saturday. Defeating crews from both Trinity and Ithaca College, the varsity boat completed its season with a perfect 10-0 record.

This year's men's heavy-weight varsity eight is the first to go undefeated in the history of Williams College crew. It is fitting that this year's varsity eight accomplished this feat considering that this is also the first year that crew has official varsity status at Williams.

The racing conditions at Lake Waramaug this last weekend were turbulent as the varsity eight rowed to the start. Because of high winds the first 1000 meters of the race course was extremely choppy and even subject to white caps. At the starting line it took some time for the Williams, Trinity, and Ithaca crews to get aligned due to a vicious cross wind.

Once alignment had been achieved all three crews took off into a powerful head wind. When rowing under choppy conditions and with a head wind, it feels as though one's oar is moving through molasses, but despite this the Williams eight took off the start at a rating of 39 strokes per minute and gained a six seat lead on Trinity and open water on Ithaca.

The Ephmen rowed powerfully through the chop of the first 1000 meters, holding their lead on Trinity and soundly gaining considerable open water on Ithaca.

At times the Trinity boat would attempt a surge and gain back a few seats, but the Ephs always countered with a "power ten" that would once again distance them from their Trinity opponents. Throughout the race Williams' lead would vary from four seats to almost open water. With 200 meters to go Williams had approximately 6 seats and Trinity began their sprint, hoping to move through the Williams oarsmen. Williams countered with its own sprint and powered across the finish line 2.2 seconds before Trinity and 26 seconds ahead of Ithaca.

The J.V. race against Trinity was rowed under similar conditions and Williams once again

Continued on Page 10

Panel discusses civil rights

By Stephanie Jones
Congressman John Lewis, Charlayne Hunter-Gault, the Reverend Ralph Abernathy, Ruth Baisan, Burke Marshall and Rosa Parks, along with Professor of Political Science Gary Jacobsohn participated in a panel discussion entitled
"The Civil Rights Movement: Perspectives" Friday night. The panel was moderated by Professor of History Dennis Dickerson and drew a crowd that filled Chapin Hall.
"I had no idea that [the civil rights movement] would happen in my lifetime, but I always hoped my people would come alive and fight for our freedom," Parks said.
The panel agreed that although they have come a long way in the struggle, they still have far to go.
Abernathy said that, as demonstrated by the problems in Yonkers, racism is even stronger now than in the 1950s and 60s.
According to Hunter-Gault, people are wrong to treat the problems today as problems of economics, not race. "Race is still a factor in American life. We do injury to the solution when we don't correctly construct the equation."
"I think that what is happening on college campuses today is much more disturbing [than in the late 1950s]," Hunter-Gault said. "I see a mean-spiritedness today that I didn't see even with the riots and hostilities that went on."

Bigoted young people
Baisan said that the movement had always looked to young people.
"One of the things that's been hard for someone of my generation to understand is that there are bigoted young people," she said.
"I think not just on the campuses,
but throughout society, the issues are much more complex... much harder to come to grips with."
Marshall said. In the 1950s and 60s, he said, it was a clear-cut battle against legal oppression.
Lewis said that another big difference was that in the 1960s, civil rights activists felt that the government was sympathetic. When we were in the streets in Selma, in Birmingham... at least we knew we could pick up the telephone and call someone at the Department of Justice. But if you're in the streets today, I don't know who you would call."

According to Lewis, massive governmental intervention is needed.
"If we are to survive as a nation, we have to look out for those who have been left behind."

College President Francis Oakley awards an honorary degree to Rosa Parks. (Steinman)

Lewis: optimistic about future

By Stephanie Jones
Representative John Lewis (D-Georgia) spoke at Convocation
Saturday on "The Civil Rights Movement: A Bright Ray of Hope."
College President Francis Oakley said, "Here at Williams the significant moment in our history that we wish to evoke today is the 100th anniversary of the graduation in 1889 of our first black student Gaius
Charles Bollen." He said that the Convocation events focusing on the civil rights movement mark the opening of a year-long series of events in honor of the centennial.
Lewis talked about growing up in the segregated South in the 1940s and 50s. He said, "The evil system of segregation had been built on a foundation of racism, greed, hatred and the denial of rights. It was a closed society, and everywhere I turned I found closed doors."
According to Lewis, the civil rights movement changed all that. "I don't mind telling you that today my hometown is a very different place.
Blacks own stores I could not enter
25 years ago."
Lewis said that the 1955 Montgomery Bus Boycott brought a ray of hope to him and to blacks throughout the nation.

"Martin Luther King, Jr., more than any other human being of the 20th century, had the power to bring people together to do good...
His message was love. His weapon was truth. His method was creative nonviolence."

Involved as student
Lewis said that as a college student he became involved in the civil rights movement. "We became so committed to bringing an end to the evil system that we were willing to suffer beatings, go to jail and risk our lives for that purpose," he said.
According to Lewis, the freedom rides, which challenged segregation in interstate travel, were one of the milestones of the movement.
"It was this struggle for liberation which marked the beginning of black political participation in the South,"
he said.
"We realized that, in order to control our own destinies, we had to intensify our efforts to change the political system which had enslaved us. Thus, we began to pursue liberation through political action."
Lewis said that the Voter Education Project was formed in 1962 to encourage black voter education.

At that time, some political subdivisions in the South, despite being 80 to 90 percent black, did not have a single black registered voter. "The tactics used by whites to keep blacks out of the political process ranged from economic retaliation to outright murder," he said.
According to Lewis, the struggle for the right of blacks to vote came to a head when a small band of unarmed women and children on a march from Selma to Montgomery, Alabama on March 7, 1965 were attacked by police officers.
One week later, President Lyndon Johnson spoke to a joint session of Congress in support of their cause, and in August, the Voting Rights Act was passed into law.
Increase in black voters
Lewis said, "In 1964, there were only one million registered black voters in the 11 southern states of the Old Confederacy. Today, there are over 6 million. In 1964, there were fewer than 100 black elected officials in the South. Today there are over 6,000."
This is a better country today because of the civil rights movement, Lewis said. "We have wit-

College plans new junior faculty housing

By Rob Weisberg
Williams College is proceeding with a plan to add several units of junior faculty housing between Park Street and Tyler House, according to College Treasurer William Reed.
The plan, approved by the Board of Trustees at their annual meeting in April, is expected to make Williams more attractive to junior faculty thinking of coming to Williams and those already at the College, Reed said. Many such professors have family situations that make housing near the campus an important consideration,
he said.
"There is a shortage of houses close to campus, and we are trying to address this," Reed said. "These new houses will certainly have an effect: a significant upgrading in the attractiveness of Williams."
According to Reed, the college is currently looking at schematic drawings prepared by the architectural firm of Schwarz and Silver of Cambridge, Mass. "We are looking at four different buildings, town houses with a number of apartments - these will look more like residential homes."
Reed said that a committee composed of himself, Assistant Professors Tamar Heller, William Lenhart and Thomas Murtagh, Associate Professor Patricia Tracy,

Executive Assistant to the Provost
Esther Young, Director of Physical Plant Winthrop Wassenaar and Assistant Director of Construction Services Antonio Janairo have agreed on the floor plans for the houses, which will contain a combination of studios, one-bedroom and two-bedroom apartments.
"We have a shortage of options for different family situations," Reed said, "such as just a couple, or a couple with two young children.
We will be able to accommodate a variety of families this way."
According to Reed, the cost of the project has not been determined.
It is still too early to say when the actual construction will begin, much less when the houses will be completed, Reed said.
When the College assigns Williams-owned housing to junior faculty members, each professor is assigned a number of points based on tenure and taking into account

Troubles plague campuses in Dukakis' wake

By Julie Lanza
AMHERST, Mass. (CPS) -- If he's elected president in November, Gov.
Michael Dukakis will take with him education policies that have left students in Massachusetts with more financial aid and campuses with more buildings, but that have also gotten the state's public colleges in deep budget troubles.
This fall, for example, some schools are turning away students, replacing teachers with computers and raising tuition 8.5 percent -- a higher price hike than the national average of 4 percent -- to cope with deep budget cuts.
In general, the Dukakis administration has been both a boon and a bust for colleges and universities.
The boons have been considerable: since beginning his second term in 1982, after a four-year absence from the governor's office and a stint teaching at Harvard,
Dukakis has raised student aid, faculty salaries and the budgets of other programs on public campuses to promote his high tech agenda for the state's economy.
As the federal government reduced aid to students, the Dukakis ad-

Governor Michael Dukakis

ministration picked up the slack:
since 1983 the state's scholarship fund, for example, jumped from $19 million to $84 million.
Earlier in 1988, moreover, Dukakis signed legislation to initiate more than $400 million in massive construction, maintenance and repair projects on several campuses, a bill that was a top priority for education officials.

continued on page 7

Michelle Reznik, 19

By Beth Broadrup
Michelle Reznik '90, 19, was remembered by the faculty and fellow students who gathered at a service in her memory held Thursday as the force that revitalized Williams' Jewish Association. She was killed in a car accident on June 29 in Chappaqua, New York.
"She didn't have the superficial qualities of a leader. She didn't want to be president [of the Jewish Association], but because she loved it so much she took it on... She was willing to do things nobody else was," said Jewish Association
alumna Naomi Friedman '87.
In addition to her work as what
Chaplain of the College Carol
Pepper called "the fourth chaplain," Reznik served as Israeli Affairs Coordinator during the latter half of her sophomore year, keeping students informed of the increasing problems in Israel. She spent six weeks during the summer of 1987 working as a volunteer in Israel.
Reznik was a member of the women's track team and served on the Brofman Committee for Jewish Studies. She was a double major in English and History.
She was raised in Chappaqua, N.Y.,
where she graduated from Horace
Greeley High School in 1986.
Reznik is survived by her parents,
Lewis and Louise Reznik, and a
younger sister, Donna.
Gifts in memory of Michelle
Reznik may be directed to The deans' office, Williams College,
Williamstown, Massachusetts.

assistant professor of philosophy and faculty advisor to the Jewish Association, said at the memorial service. He called her work "the beginning of the flowering of Jewish life at Williams."
"She didn't have the superficial qualities of a leader. She didn't want to be president [of the Jewish
Association], but because she loved
it so much she took it on... She was willing to do things nobody else was," said Jewish Association
alumna Naomi Friedman '87.
In addition to her work as what
Chaplain of the College Carol
Pepper called "the fourth chaplain," Reznik served as Israeli Affairs Coordinator during the latter half of her sophomore year, keeping students informed of the increasing problems in Israel. She spent six weeks during the summer
of 1987 working as a volunteer in Israel.
Reznik was a member of the women's track team and served on
the Brofman Committee for Jewish Studies. She was a double major in English and History.
She was raised in Chappaqua, N.Y.,
where she graduated from Horace
Greeley High School in 1986.
Reznik is survived by her parents,
Lewis and Louise Reznik, and a
younger sister, Donna.
Gifts in memory of Michelle
Reznik may be directed to The
deans' office, Williams College,
Williamstown, Massachusetts.

Drew embarks on campaign for state rep

Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew kneels for a photo opportunity on the steps of Pittsfield City Hall. Upstaged by School Committee Chairperson Dorothy van den Honert. (The Berkshire Eagle)

By Scott J. O'Callaghan
Working on an academic calendar gives professors three months to pursue interests. Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew used his summer vacation to campaign for State Representative.
Drew, a Republican who formally announced his candidacy for the State House's Second Berkshire
District on June 7, will face Incumbent Democrat Leonard Guernsey in the November 8 election.
Drew said that if elected he will remain a full-time professor at Williams. He said he would try to schedule classes for early Monday mornings and Thursday and Friday, so he could be free Monday through Wednesday afternoons when the Legislature is in session.
"The Legislature was originally designed to be part-time," Drew said. He added that his practical experience as a politician will add to his teaching in the political science department.
Drew's insistence this summer that he could accommodate both jobs because Williams requires only about five hours a week teaching prompted a Berkshire Eagle editorial stating, "That should be an interesting revelation for parents paying close to two-thirds of Mr.
Drew's annual salary... for a child's one-year tuition at the college."
State registration deadlines almost did not allow Drew to run for office. Drew changed his registration from Republican to Democrat af-

continued on page 6

Record enters computer age with desktop publishing. PAGE 4.

McInerney's new book
panned. PAGE 5.

Junior runner first Eph to win at nationals
since 1920. PAGE 10.

The Williams Record

Invisible Demons

Any veteran reader of fairy tales knows it's a lot easier to confront fire-breathing dragons than invisible demons. And it's also easier to cheer the knight who slays the dragon than hunt down demons yourself, particularly when those demons lurk within you.

Protesting racial inequalities in the '50s and '60s when those inequalities were legal and tangible, members of the convocation panel on civil rights said, was in some ways a simpler struggle than fighting racism today. Past inequalities such as segregation, although not any less painful or wrong, possessed a palpability that permitted attention and debate to be focused on their eradication rather than on their existence. Racism today exists in subtler, more insidious, almost invisible ways.

The large attendance at the panel and the warm reception given the panelists attested to Williams students' admiration for the accomplishments of the panelists and support for their actions.

Yet Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy seemed to suspect a discrepancy between the audience's support for the righting of past, obvious wrongs and its attitude and actions regarding current forms of racism. He exhorted the audience to channel the enthusiasm being shown for the speakers into efforts to fight racial inequality.

Rev. Abernathy challenged the segment of Williams that has not yet been directly challenged to respond to minority concerns—the student body.

The administration and faculty have taken steps, some based on their own initiative and some because of persuasion from organizations such as the Coalition Against Racist Education, to integrate minority concerns into academic and social life.

Although the power and control at Williams, as at any school, generally lies with the administration, it is in this instance students who are less manageable, and without the cooperation of students the fundamental attitude toward minority concerns at Williams and the experience that minority students have at Williams cannot improve.

It is well past time for us to respond to Rev. Abernathy's chal-

Senior Days: A Success

It didn't take more than a couple of parties and some orientation sessions at the Office of Career Counseling to make the first attempt at senior days a success. The reunion of the class of '89 a few days before registration provided an opportunity for students returning from a junior year abroad to reacquaint themselves. It also allowed OOC staff a chance to reassure seniors who have clutched at the realization that they have to decide what to do next year even if they don't grow up. The members of the Gargoyle Society who organized senior days are to be congratulated upon starting what should become another tradition at Williams.

On The Record . . .

"... [T]here aren't many professions where genius is a requirement."

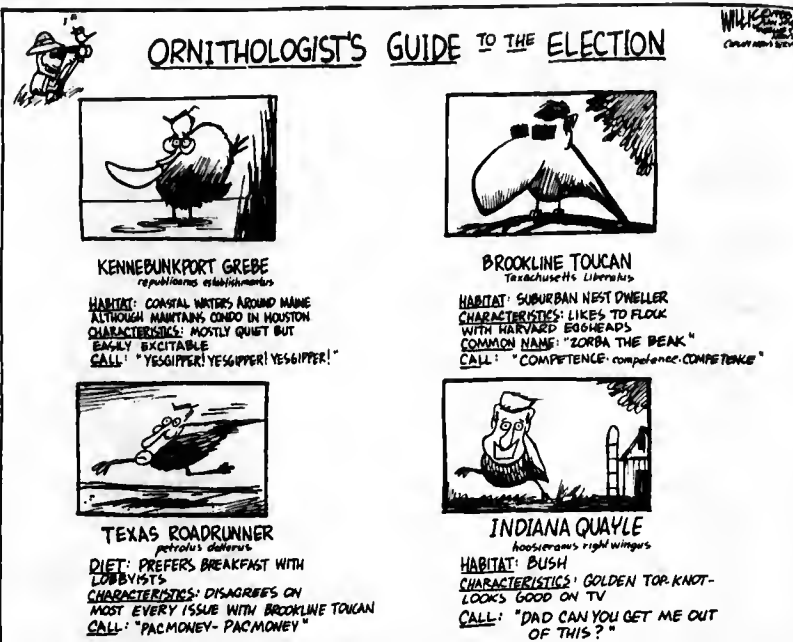

— Bolin
Fellow Andreas Corrada-Emmanuel on his decision to become a theoretical physicist.

"I think it came as a shock to the system, the degree of racism and mean-spiritedness that existed on campuses."

— Charlayne Hunter-Gault on nationwide issues of campus racism which occurred last year.

"You have the money — go to work."

— Gov.
Michael S. Dukakis to Thomas Krens, chairman of MassMoCA Cultural Development Commission.

Be a journalist (or just look like one)

WRITING
• News
• Features
• Arts
• Opinions

ARTS
• Photography
• Layout
• Desktop Publishing
• Graphics/Caricatures

BUSINESS
• Local Sales
• National Sales
• Bookkeeping
• Circulation

Come to a recruitment meeting TONIGHT, 8:30, Room B12, Baxter Basement

The Williams Record

DEBBIE SNYDER, Editor in Chief

TODD OWENS
News Editor

CHUCK SAMUELS
Op-Ed Editor

MARC McDERMOTT
Sports Editor

TED HOBART
Sports Editor

JED SCALA
Photography Editor

RICH WARD
Photography Editor

KIRSTEN HASENFUSS
Layout Editor

MARY ILIFF
Layout Editor

TRAVIS PIERSON
Arts Editor

DAVID MEYER
Business Manager

News Assistants: Stephanie Jones, Ann Mantil, Scott O'Callaghan, Bill Savadove, Rob Weisberg
Sports Assistant: Mariam Nafficy
Layout Assistant: Lisa Kaestner
Photo Assistants: Jay Steinman, Karl Thomas

Entered as Second-Class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the ACT of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01287. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Interview: Hunter-Gault expects 'painful readjustment'

By Todd Owens
RECORD: Ms. Hunter-Gault, last night at the convocation panel, you said that the "best" part of the civil rights movement was over.
MS. CHARLAYNE HUNTER-GAULT: As far as the media was concerned, I think, and I was speaking generally, I don't think there's been the kind of attention to black issues and concerns ever again that in the sixties. In the sixties, the civil rights movement was the story — not only in America but all over the world. Then, of course, the war came along and everybody's attention focused elsewhere. And I don't think there's ever been the kind of concerted, concentrated attention. And also, it was a sympathetic media, by and large. It's like the way the media was in the height of demonstrations against South Africa in the past couple of years. That interest has waned now also, in part because of government restrictions. But, as long as the media was there, covering the resistance, covering the challenge to the system, I would say that it was a sympathetic media. That is not to say an advocacy media. But there were two sides — one side was lawlessness and the other side was obeying the law and I think the media took its cue from that. If anybody defended the status quo things that have to happen. I would say, as the professor [Professor of Political Science Gary Jacobson] said last night, that the constitution is color blind. But I would say that there are significant laws on the books now that give us a point of departure for how we fashion remedies to address inequalities in this society. But I think that one of the things that has happened since the late '60s and early '70s, is that in the effort to use some of the tools, somewhere along the way through a combination of all kinds of forces, the commitment that we had to equity and justice — civil rights — has somewhat waned. And everything else falls in its wake. There isn't the kind of aggressive, dynamic national interest in issues, for example, like poverty, the underclass, drugs, the homeless, those kind of issues. I'm not sure that I would put all of those in the category of civil rights. I think there is enough under that umbrella. But there are social problems which have emerged in this society since the '60s and '70s which nevertheless affect many of the people who have been on the bottom rung of society.

RECORD: You referred a moment ago to a lack of interest in some of the social issues which are now confronting this nation. Do you think that is reflected on college campuses?
HUNTER-GAULT: Yes, I do. In an ideal world, you like to think of a college campus as kind of closed off from the rest of society where you spend four years studying the arts and humanities to become an educated person. And then you go out into the world and use that preparation to make a better life for yourself and your fellow man. But I think that's largely a myth. I think that it's very difficult to maintain in the modern world given television and mass communication. I have seen reflections of the larger society on college campuses. In effect, I think they are little microcosms.

RECORD: Do you think that in order for more progress to be made in Race Relations — as almost a continuation of the civil rights movement — the attention of the media will again have to be captured?
HUNTER-GAULT: I think that it is not a question of the continuation of the civil rights movement as it were, it is another phase in the progression towards equity in this country. I do think that the media is critical because there are still or segregation, then they were defending breaking the law — and that's how the media went. I think in South Africa, generally, the western media all seemed to be pretty much anti-apartheid. That's something we don't have time to go into, but, yes, I think it was essentially a sympathetic media in the '60s.

... lack of aggressive, dynamic national interest in issue. . . .

RECORD: Do you think that this is the same situation as there was in the '60s?
HUNTER-GAULT: No, I think it was very different in the '60s. I think that there was a movement that caught the attention and the imagination of students all over the country. As I said last night, the issue was clear cut — you were either for or against the law. It was a really dynamic movement. You didn't

I thought that the South Africa protests might spark renewed commitment, or similar energy, and to a certain extent it did. But I think that it's very difficult to maintain in the modern world given television and mass communication. I have seen reflections of the larger society on college campuses. In effect, I think they are little microcosms.

RECORD: Do you think that this is the same situation as there was in the '60s?

HUNTER-GAULT: No, I think it was very different in the '60s. I think that there was a movement that caught the attention and the imagination of students all over the country. As I said last night, the issue was clear cut — you were either for or against the law. It was a really dynamic movement. You didn't

Interview: Lewis urges youth to act

By Cassandra Kirk
RECORD: There were some things that the panel didn't quite clear up, and I just wanted to talk to you about them. The first question is, do you agree that Mr. Hunter-Gault's analysis of the racial problems on campus being more disturbing, as Mr. Marshall said, there is no longer simple racial discrimination. Do you have any comment on that?

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN LEWIS (D-GEORGIA): I can't agree with the panelists who spoke to that issue last night, that racism was not quite as overt, was not quite as open as demonstrated in the '60s. But it is much more serious, and is much more institutionalized, in some instances. These scars and stains that are a result of racism are still deeply imbedded in American society. It is very disturbing to see the apathy and the complacency on the part of young people, on the part of college students, who are not organized, who are not speaking out against racism. And if this generation of college students and young people fails to speak out, fail to act, then when they become adults, we will continue to feed and to foster a system of racism in this country.

... racism is much more serious and institutionalized. . . .

RECORD: I'd like you to reiterate a point you had made about institutional racism. I wonder if you could expand on that.
LEWIS: What I mean about institutional racism is that it is not just individuals, but people in position, whether in organizations, whether in government — in the Congress, or in the particular administration, in the state government — or in a major corporation, where you don't have a systematic way to combat it, and you just let it continue to grow and develop.

RECORD: I think most of the panelists would agree that the dramatic events during the sixties were the main thrust that helped them get legislation passed in righting the wrongs that were happening then. What event do you see as making the President or Congress decide that something must take place to stop perpetuating the problems caused by racism?

LEWIS: It's hard to say, but I don't think you're going to see any major or dramatic action on the part of any political leader, whether it be a President, a leader of Congress or someone in the business community, making any dramatic moves on their own. I think we have to, the movement, black leaders and white leaders have to create an environment, a political climate to make the political leaders and the business community see that it is in their interest to do something. I don't think we're going to see the initiative coming from the Chamber of Commerce or the American Medical Association to do something about health care, from someone in higher education; we've got to create the climate. And I don't know what it's going to take for that to happen — I think it's going to be some dramatic action that comes along at some point that will force people to act.

RECORD: Getting back to the political leaders, you said last night that it was important that President Kennedy backed you up. I was wondering, if he hadn't backed you, do you think that you would have proceeded as you did with the march on Washington, etcetera?
LEWIS: I think we would have swim against the tide to be a part of that movement. It was socially acceptable, everywhere except within the forces of resistance. But certainly on college campuses which tended to be more enlightened and the communities from which a lot of these students came, particularly in the North. There were large contingents of students who came from everywhere. And it was a simple issue — how do we get the South to obey the law and, more specifically, a good many of them went to direct action protests — freedom rides, sit-ins. I would suspect, though I've never studied this, but I would suspect that the larger number of black and white students who came from places other than the South and from the south, were involved in voter registration.

Charlayne Hunter-Gault

I thought that the South Africa protests might spark renewed commitment, or similar energy, and to a certain extent it did. But I think that it's very difficult to maintain in the modern world given television and mass communication. I have seen reflections of the larger society on college campuses. In effect, I think they are little microcosms.

RECORD: In terms of improving race relations, what role do you perceive for college students?
HUNTER-GAULT: I think that they have to look within the boundaries of their own campuses, look for the evidences of institutional barriers that still need to be dealt with. Look at your school newspapers, the Williams paper may be unique, but in most of the campuses that I have been on, there are very few black students involved in the paper, particularly in the leadership. Look to your student government organization. Look to the relationship that the black student union has with other organizations, and if there is no relationship or if it is backwards or contentious, try to figure out the reasons why. I think that the campuses could be laboratories for dealing with these kinds of issues of equity because, as I said, they are mirror images of a lot that goes on in society and especially where you have an enlightened leadership as you appear to have on this campus — which is not to say that they don't make mistakes, too. But they get involved in the business of identifying problems and then communicating. You see, I think that there are limits to what communicating and the media can do. I think that we have not tested those limits.

I also think it is important not to get tired of the issue. Do you think I sat there last night and said anything I hadn't ever said before? But I have to continually tell myself that although I've said it all and said it again, it is important to say it until the last vestiges of institutional and individual racism no longer manifests itself. Now institutional racism is important. They used to say in the South that you can legislate morality. But individuals who harbor antagonistic racial or sexist feelings is a tougher nut to crack. But when institutions do their job, then that affects the climate in such a way that it becomes very difficult for individuals to hang on the ancient prejudices.

RECORD: Do you think that college campuses are beginning to deal with the issue of race relations?

HUNTER-GAULT: I think last year was a pretty horrendous year. I think it came as a shock to the system, the degree of racism and mean-spiritedness that existed on campuses. They are still trying to recover from the shock of what was out there. I think the public administrators are beginning to see that they have to deal with this issue. I know that at my own university, Georgia, the new president just hired in excess of 15 new black faculty. You don't do that for the sake of equity, necessarily. You do that for the sake of what institutions of higher learning are supposed to be about — which is diversity. I think that a lot of the problems that exist on these campuses in terms of race could go a long way toward being resolved or at least ameliorated by the presence of more integrated faculty and administration because that would result in different kinds of policies and different kinds of policies and programs. I've been invited to a lot of colleges. And many times I get invited as a journalist to talk about journalism. But the number of speeches I give in February, due to black history month, or January, for Martin Luther King, far outnumber any other. I've never been invited to talk about racism in March or October. One month. The black history celebrations in that month deals with it for the rest of the year. This is an ongoing thing.

... make black faculty an offer they can't refuse. . . .

RECORD: Getting back to what you said about integration of college faculty and administrators, do you think that colleges have a responsibility to improve race relations?

HUNTER-GAULT: Colleges, from the very beginning of time have had a responsibility to educate their students. And what is education? Education is providing them [the students] with the best thought that has been offered up over the centuries and preparing them to live in the world. I wouldn't be so narrow as to say they have a responsibility to improve race relations. They have a responsibility to educate. Within that, they have a responsibility to prepare students to deal with the world in which they live.

RECORD: Do you think college's are really trying to integrate their student bodies, administrations and faculties?

HUNTER-GAULT: I think in some cases there is at least lip service to that idea. But what I continue to hear from administration after administration all over the country is that we would, but we can't find any. We're out of the way and blacks don't want to come here. Or, we've looked for blacks in some exotic field because that is where we have an opening. But I'm telling you that if the University of Georgia, in Athens, Georgia, given its history, can find 15 new black faculty in a variety of disciplines, it gives the lie to the impression that we can't find any. Because who wants to go to Athens Georgia, you could say. My position on this has been that if you make them an offer they can't refuse, then you will integrate your faculty. But you know that means in some cases doing things a little differently. I hesitate to say bending the rules, because I know that that means in an academic institution, I hear a lot of lip service to the concept, but I have not yet seen in practice enough to say that I am encouraged by what I hear. But to be fair — or to give them the benefit of the doubt — at least to acknowledge the problem is part way to the solution.

RECORD: Given what is going happening on college campuses around the country, what do you think is the future of race relations in this country?

HUNTER-GAULT: I don't have a crystal ball, so I can't say. My feeling is that given the kind of tensions that have arisen in the past few years, we are in for some painful readjustment on the issue of race. Some redefinition. It's going to be a challenging time. I don't think the civil rights era as we experienced it in the 60s will come around again. Race in America is something that will continue to come around. Each time it comes the Democratic Party to carry us much further down the road towards freedom and an open society. If the Republican Party and Mr. Bush are in, I think we're going to have even something worse than the Reagan philosophy.

RECORD: In the sense that you were talking about stretching and expanding, in the same way the Civil Rights movement have somewhat moved off the focus of black issues and is now focusing upon the needs of non-blacks: the homeless, the unemployed, the handicapped, homosexuals, is that the way that you envision civil rights — not just being civil rights for a certain people but civil rights for all, everyone who wasn't in the mainstream?

Representative John Lewis

LEWIS: I think that was the dream, that was the idea — to create more than just a civil rights movement, but a truly human rights movement. To create a situation where we would have an open society that wouldn't discriminate against people because of the color of their skin, or national origin, or religion, or their status in life or their sexual preference. The Housing Act we passed about a month ago, and the President is going to sign into law, I believe, on Tuesday, dealt with the whole question of discrimination, not just against people of color, but against the handicapped, and against children, so the movement is not just to liberate blacks, but to liberate all people.

RECORD: Since you were young student leader, specifically of the black community, what would you say to other student leaders, first in the black community, and then in the white community, as a whole, to help ease these problems?
LEWIS: I would say to young black student leaders that you should continue to get an education, but at the same time, even while you're being educated, get involved on are becoming more selfish and materialistic. There's a disturbing trend called "Rise of the Bupples [Black Urban Professionals]" in the black middle class. What do you see as the fate of young black people today?

LEWIS: I don't think it's a great majority of blacks, young people, who are selfish, who are mean, who lie, who don't care about the larger community. Because I think people care, but in so many instances, many of these young people are just one or two steps, like their parents or grandparents, from poverty, and they're trying to hold on to what they have. But they care about their brothers and sisters that have been left out and left behind. I think it's important for young professionals not to forget those who have been left behind, and try to reach back to help them. If all of the young black professionals and people in the black middle class did all that they could, it wouldn't meet the unmet needs, and that's why I insist that we must not put the burden on the victim, like we like to do in this country. The burden must be placed equally, more so, really, on the government and the institutions in America that had a deliberate policy of keeping black people down and out.

RECORD: As I was walking back from the panel last night, I heard a white student saying, "What are we supposed to do; they didn't give us a solution?"

LEWIS: I don't think we have the solution, the blueprint or the road but I do think what we all said and what we've been trying to say is that whatever situation people find themselves in, whether in the academic community or the religious community or in business or in the political arena, they should use their resources, use their positions to help eradicate the problems that are still affecting our society: hunger, homelessness, poverty, racism.

RECORD: Since you were young student leader, specifically of the black community, what would you say to other student leaders, first in the black community, and then in the white community, as a whole, to help ease these problems?

LEWIS: I would say to young black student leaders that you should continue to get an education, but at the same time, even while you're being educated, get involved on your campuses, and in your community and neighborhood where you can. Learn as much as possible about the sixties: the successes, the failures, the mistakes that were made. That, I think, will prepare people and help people as they move into the 21st century.

I would encourage all people, black and white and others, to realize that this planet that we live on is becoming smaller and smaller, and realize that the people in Alabama and Georgia and Mississippi have an impact not just on the people of America but on the people of the world. We should start looking beyond the problem of race — we've got to solve this problem. It's a burden on American society, the issue of race, we've got to lay this problem down, and stop wasting so much of our time and so much of our resources. We're losing so many of our young people, black and white — we have to spend more money, more resources, on education and training and less on bombs, guns and missiles.

... the burden must be placed on the institutions in America that kept black people out. . . .

RECORD: You spoke at the march on Washington 25 years ago, and that was a very powerful moment. As convocation speaker today, what do you hope to impress upon the young people of this school?

LEWIS: Well, I want to say to the young people here today that we have made some real progress in this country, that we have used the techniques and the tactics of non-violence. We had young people, black and white, who were willing to put their bodies on the line, at the sit-ins, the freedom rides in the sixties, and there's a need now for people to go out, around this country, and continue that struggle to bring about social change. And I will speak about a sense of hope and a sense of optimism in this country today, and there are going to be some disappointments, some setbacks. But as a nation and as a people, we're going to make it to what Martin Luther King called the "beloved community." We're not going to go back; we're going to

Seniors and freshmen have their days

By Rob Weisberg
Hal Hermanson '89 went to pick up 225 pounds of ground beef for the senior days cookout, and was confronted with disaster: The hamburger had not been made into patties.

"I thought it was all over then," he said. "But we had a burger-making party. It was fun, even though it was a gruesome job."

Such were the trials and tribulations of the organizer of the first try at senior days. The class of '89 reunited three days before the beginning of classes for career counseling, a cookout, and a few parties to start off the year. They were preceded by the class of '92, which arrived on Sunday to find four freshmen days waiting for them instead of the traditional three.

Hermanson, the Gargoyles Society member who was the chief organizer of the senior days, said the event was created to give returning seniors an advance idea of how to prepare for their post-Williams careers, and also to reunite the class separated by being JA's and studying abroad junior year.

cerning fellowships and graduate studies.

OCC packed "Two-fifths of the senior class went to the OCC orientations, which was good, considering we didn't advertise it too heavily. And we don't even know how many people went to Dean Wagner's talk - it must have been 200 to 300 people. The OCC was packed and Dean Wagner was overwhelmed. They may have to hold it in Brooks Rogers next year," said Hermanson.

The event opened with a cookout on Pomeroy Flats, followed by a party at Dodd with the band Ransom Jenks. "It was really good, even if we had a big party," Hermanson said. Another band, Cajun Slim, played at the following night. Both bands performed for free, which Hermanson said was a large part of the success of senior days.

Julia Norton '89 said she thought the social events of senior days, such as the cookout and the party at the Log, were the best parts of the entire orientation. "With so much of the class away, it was like a big reunion," she said. "It's a great idea. I thought it was a blast."

The question of senior days as an annual event is still up in the air. Hermanson said that Andrea de Majewski '90 and Liz Beshel '90 have agreed to organize next year's senior days, but he added that the class of '90 has to want it to happen.

pen. He said that the Gargoyles Society will be distributing a questionnaire to juniors, but that with significant numbers of the class away, it may be hard to gauge the response.

Fresh days improved Freshman days, however, are here to stay, and so is the extra day added this year. According to Dean of Freshmen Roberto Illi, the additional time was necessary to relieve incoming students of the feeling that they were being rushed through their orientation.

"Things did seem to swirl around the freshmen, coming at them too quickly, during past freshman days," he said.

The freshmen found it easier to take care of all the necessary tests and departmental open houses with a more relaxed schedule, Illi said. "There was definitely enough time with this schedule. Even on the day when all the open houses and the library tours, we had the time to see what we wanted. It was really relaxed," said Rebecca Ratner '92.

In fact, the four days provided almost too much time, according to Liz Johnson '92. "After we exhausted talking about where we were from and what we might major in, we had a lot of extra time," she said. Still, she said she thought the schedule provided plenty of time for freshmen to get to know their entourage.

"Getting to know everybody was the best part of all of Freshman Days. It was awesome getting this done before class," Ratner said.

JAs benefited Junior advisors also benefited from the extra time, Illi said. "We could also get the JAs into better shape, with more time to prepare for the freshmen, to learn how to handle their concerns."

Amy Steele '90, a JA at Williams B, agreed. "We all [freshman and JA's] had time to adjust," she said, adding that the freshman reaped social benefits from having the extra time. "They had more time to make friends, and especially to sit around and unwind. They need time to shoot the bull," she said.

In the future, Illi said he hopes to add another entry meeting during Freshman Days, so that issues like race relations at Williams can be addressed right at the beginning of a freshman's time at the college.

"Freshmen need an awareness of the racial diversity at Williams, and I would like this to happen when the freshmen have time to think about it, time to explore the problem of racial diversity on campus," he said.

"We did a very good job of preparing the freshmen," Illi said. "All the people involved - Food Service, the JAs, Buildings and Grounds - worked well together, and that's why the last four days went so well."

Record makes switch to newsprint, laser typography

By Bill Savadove
The editorial board of The Record recently withdrew its $10,460 college council funding request, which would have been the third largest drain on the council's funds.

This followed a decision by the editorial board to print The Record on newsprint. It is now being printed on larger format 30-pound paper, as opposed to the former 50-pound weight. Editor in Chief Debbie Snyder '89 said this change will cut printing costs, the largest of the paper's expenses, in half. The paper is now laid out and typeset using a computerized desktop publishing program.

The reduction in expenses will allow The Record to finance itself solely on advertising and subscriptions revenues, she said.

Snyder said that the newspaper is considering incorporating this year in an effort to become financially independent from the college.

According to College Council President Tracey Blankenship '89, the money previously earmarked for The Record will be helpful because of the lack of surplus funds this year. In the past, there have been funds left over from the previous year. Last year, however, the council supplied the money for the revitalization of the Log and for a new publication, The Issue.

greater flexibility for CC "The reserve that usually goes from year to year is much less," Blankenship said. "It gives the College Council greater leeway to fund new organizations and greater flexibility to look at funding requests for events as the year progresses."

A total of $243,999 has been requested by various organizations thus far, with $145,000 available. College Council money comes from the student activities tax, the $87 that each student pays as part of the term bill. The trustees raised the tax by two dollars for 1988-89 at the request of the College Council.

Although the student activities tax generated $174,000 for student organizations this year, funding requests will have to be cut by $100,000, according to Council Treasurer MaryEllen Sullivan '89. Former Treasurer Mark Ralston '88 originally requested a four dollar raise in the tax.

Instead of the second-person narration of Bright Lights, Big City, Story of My Life employs another gimmick, by using a female narrator, a cosmopolitan and unhappy young woman named Alison Pool.

Alison has had all of her material needs satisfied all of her life. Her emotional desires have not been met equally fulfilled however, so she seeks comfort from the horrors of her family life through sex, drugs and drink. Living in Manhattan, she and her girlfriends are now struggling for money to maintain their lavish lifestyles, and manage by borrowing their boyfriends' credit cards or faking pregnancies for abortion money.

Nothing differentiates McInerney's depiction of wealthy urbanites in the late 1980s from similar depictions of them written in the early 1980s except the use of newer clubs, bars and restaurants, and the occasional references to AIDS (which seem slipped in, as if the mere presence of the word would make the book topical).

She has recently broken up with her boyfriend, Skip, and is trying to recommit herself to her acting classes. But her constant late night excursions make a commitment to anything difficult. Alison is not alone for long, however; she soon finds another male diversion named Dean to temporarily occupy her lusts. The rest of the story, which takes place over the next few weeks chronicles Alison and Dean's ups and downs amidst an orgy of parties, bars, and rolled-up bills, until one of them gets out and the other breaks down.

Alison repeatedly cries for the truth, often claiming that nothing else matters - she just does not want to be a victim of lies. Her concern echoes Holden Caulfield's hatred of the phonies surrounding him, but Alison's problem seems not to versions is playing truth-or-dare, an adolescent game of giddy curiosity metamorphosed into an adult tell-all of sexual admissions, misdeeds and exhibitionism. By the end of the book, Alison and her friends have set themselves on the path to redemption, but their reentry into sanity feels hollow. Bright Lights, Big City used the hip-rock-bottom-then-rise-and-fix-yourself-up format to a much better end, mainly because its author was somewhat likable and intelligent, qualities which Alison, on the whole, lacks.

McInerney has a quick wit, but one liners cannot save his invertebrate story. Its characters are too much hype, their emotions too shallow, and in the end, it falls like a dead jellyfish.

Perhaps Story of My Life, a quick read at 188 pages, is, in fact, the perfect book of the late 1980s - short on substance and originality, full of glamour and post-modern exaggeration.

One can only hope that McInerney and the other voices of his generation recover from what seems to be a nasty case of laryngitis before they become the paradigm for the next generation.

Hernandez replaces Kenyatta in assistant dean appointment

By Ann Mantil
Andrew C. Hernandez has been appointed to serve as assistant dean of the college for 1988-89. Hernandez was formerly involved with housing and minority affairs at the University of California at Santa Cruz.

The appointment marks the third change in the administration this year. Joan Edwards, dean of freshmen last year, was appointed acting dean of the college. She is filling in for Stephen Fix, who is on sabbatical. Lecturer in Economics Roberto Illi was selected to take Edwards' place as dean of freshmen.

Hernandez was hired to replace Associate Dean of the College Mary Kenyatta, who has taken a position elsewhere. The appointments of Edwards, Illi and Hernandez followed the takeover of Jenness House last year by the Coalition Against a Racist Education. One of CARE's 11 demands was an increase in the number of minority faculty and administrators.

"We've had a minority presence in the Dean's office since 1969, so it's not a new phenomenon," Assistant to the President for Affirmative Action Nancy McIntire said. "We hired Dean Hernandez because he has terrific experience in residential life and minority affairs." His year's takeover of the dean's office was not the reason for Hernandez's appointment, it was the reason he chose to accept the position.

Andrew Hernandez

Impressed by administration "I was impressed by the administration's response to it," Hernandez said.

desaid. "I think the entire campus was sensitized by the experience and the agreements that came out of it. I thought there was energy here that was heading in a positive direction."

Hernandez has been involved with several programs for minority students. As an undergraduate and graduate student at Boston College and Harvard University, he worked with the city of Boston and the University of Massachusetts, encouraging minority high school students to stay in school and go on to college. At Santa Cruz, he coordinated counseling programs for minority science students which exposed them to research and pointed them towards doctorates in the sciences or careers in clinical medicine.

At Williams, Hernandez will serve as the dean's office liaison to VISTA and Asian Students in Action and will be a member of a committee investigating the development of a multicultural center on campus. He is also the campus coordinator of the Ford-Mellon Research Scholars Program, which allows minority undergraduates to work with faculty on research projects.

During the summer, however, some students decided to defer their admissions or attend another school, bringing the class down to its current level, and the state have gone in search of the hairy honeysuckle four times. In total, 31 patches of the ground hugging plant have been discovered over the 235 acre area. This is the third sighting of the plant in Massachusetts; a plant is considered endangered if there have been less than six sightings.

According to College Treasurer William Reed, the college is awaiting revised cost estimates on the project before soliciting contractor bids in late September or October. Clearing will begin late in the fall, and construction of the roads and installation of water and sewer lines will begin in the spring. Construction should take one year. The lots will then be made available to faculty members for the construction of new homes.

Hairy honeysuckle holds up housing on Pine Cobble tract

By Bill Savadove
What's green, hairy and endangered? The answer is the hairy honeysuckle, and patches of this rare plant are a thorn in the side of the college's $3 million, 70-lot faculty housing project.

The college has no legal obligation to save the hairy honeysuckle, Assistant Director of Construction Services Antonio Janairo said. However, the college has been negotiating with the Massachusetts National Heritage and Endangered Species Program to find a way to save the plant.

"We struck hopefully a happy medium in terms of trying to establish an area to preserve the plant," said Janairo. After a meeting on August 24, the college agreed to shift four lots in order to preserve the large patches in the southwest corner of the Pine Cobble development. However, the college still plans to go ahead with the project, said Janairo.

The Williamstown Conservation Commission and Zoning Board of Appeals also gave their final approval to the college's plans. The proposal had already been approved by each committee last spring. According to Lawrence Wright of the Zoning Board, the project now has all of the necessary clearances from the town.

There are additional patches of the plant, including some in the path of the proposed access road, the college is studying how more plants may be set aside or transplanted. At this time, Janairo said, nothing has been finalized.

Since the college became aware of the existence of the plant in June, representatives of the town, the

Extra freshmen pose no housing problem

By Dan Skwire
Despite the unexpectedly large number of freshmen arriving on campus this fall, there are plenty of rooms and beds for everyone, according to Assistant Dean Andrew Hernandez.

About 30 rooms were expanded to accommodate the extra students, said Director of Admissions Phil Smith. The biggest changes were made to Fayette, East and Morgan, all of which had their spacious singles converted into doubles. Only the recently-renovated Lehman Hall has the same number of occupants as last year.

"I think it's worked out surprisingly well," said Smith of the housing changes. "We could have gotten up into the high 550's with those rooms, but we didn't want to add too many freshmen per junior advisor. In the Quad, I don't think more than one person was added to any one entry."

The freshman class currently numbers 545, but it was feared last spring that the number might be much higher. "There was certainly a fair amount of apprehension," admitted Smith. "We were up in the 560's at one point, and that would have meant a great amount of difficulty."

Thus far, most people seem satisfied with the new living arrangements. "I have yet to hear any freshmen complain about the size or location of their rooms," said Illi. He added that despite changes to some of the common living rooms, particularly in the Berkshire Quad, where some have been eliminated, each JA is still provided with a single room.

Several administrators pointed out that even with the tighter living quarters this year, the freshman housing at Williams is far better amount of upper-class housing that will be available when the current freshman become sophomores and juniors. "We really have to be careful about using off-campus housing in a safe way," said Hernandez, citing community discontent and the limited number of off-campus units available as drawbacks to that solution. "It would, however, be an option if more students were encouraged to spend their junior year abroad."

"Junior year abroad is a terrific program," conceded Phil Smith, "but I don't think we should use it to tailor our own situation. What we did in the spring was admit fewer transfer students, so we wouldn't all of sudden hit upper-class housing with a surge of extras."

"There is no thought anywhere of expanding the size of the college," Smith went on to say. "It's not unusual that you get a glitch in your acceptance rate. It's happened to everyone else, and it was inevitable that it would happen to us. [Because of our size] we just don't have very much leeway."

"So far, from what I can tell, there haven't been any real problem areas. Having 30 fewer students than normal would have been distinctly worse. Besides, if you have a budget deficit, [the extra students] will be sure to make a friend of the provost."

art museums in the world. The state has authorized $35 million for renovation of the buildings, should the plan be feasible. Compiled from newspaper sources by Scott J. O'Callaghan

Economist appointed provost

By Ann Mantil
After twenty-five years as an economics professor at Williams, Gordon Winston has been appointed Provost of the College. He replaces Nell Grabola, now president of Colgate University.

Grabola is the second Williams professor to serve as president of the Institution. Vincent Barnett, Jr. served as chairman of the Political Science Department at Williams before his appointment as president of Colgate in 1962. In 1969 Barnett returned to Williams as a political science professor.

Winston was selected as provost in May, and will not teach any courses during the fall semester of this year while he is adjusting to his new job. He described his specialty as development economics and economics theory. "I've been interested in the economics of higher education, and especially economics at Williams."

"A very important part of what's happening in colleges across the country is that the cost of higher education is rising," he said. "We're worried because it's not that we're wasting everyone's money. We're running a very tight ship. So how do we slow down the cost increase without decreasing the quality of education?"

As provost, Winston is responsible for the long-range economic planning of the college and for drawing up the annual budget.

Dukakis gave Krens a check for $1.75 million to cover costs of a feasibility study on the proposed museum. No money for actual construction will be released by the state until this study is completed.

The commission named Joseph Thompson '81, a former special assistant to the director of the Williams College Museum of Art (WCMA), as executive director of the planning group for the pro-

Duke OKs MassMoCA study funding

"You have the money - go to work," Governor Michael Dukakis said last month to Visiting Professor of Art History Thomas Krens, director of the Solomon R. Guggenheim Foundation and chairman of the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art (MassMoCA) Cultural Development Commission.

Dukakis gave Krens a check for $1.75 million to cover costs of a feasibility study on the proposed museum. No money for actual construction will be released by the state until this study is completed.

The commission named Joseph Thompson '81, a former special assistant to the director of the Williams College Museum of Art (WCMA), as executive director of the planning group for the proposed museum. He and his staff of seven will oversee the feasibility study. The study will include plans as to what the museum would look like, estimates of construction time and cost, impact studies on traffic and transportation, studies of how many and what type of people would come to the museum and an environmental analysis of any industrial contaminants on the site.

Applications to work as the project's design team were first received last Wednesday. The deadline for the applications is October 7. Some time later that month, the commission will meet again to select the actual design team.

The commission, named in late July, consists of Krens, Williams College President Francis Oakley, North Adams Mayor John Barrett '84, North Adams State College Professor Peter Markov, Carmen Gimenez, director of national exhibitions in Spain's Ministry of Culture; Meyer Fruehr, president of the Battery Park City Authority in New York City; Norman Rosenblatt, secretary of exhibitions for the Royal Academy of Arts in London; David Ross, director of the Institute of Contemporary Arts in Boston; and Elyn Zimmerman, an environmental artist in New York City.

All of the commissioners except Gimenez met in North Adams last month to set a common plan for the future. At that time, Krens was elected chairman. Barrett was elected vice-chairman and Markov was elected secretary. John DeRosa was named legal counsel to the commission. Krens appointed Oakley to serve on the commission's committee on art and architecture and the committee on finance and community development.

Krens conceived the idea of MassMoCA in 1986, while serving as director of the WCMA. The projected museum would change 28 buildings of a 13.5 acre nineteenth-century mill complex into one of the largest contemporary

Review: McInerney's Story has little life

By Travis Pierson
What could be worse than spending a few weeks surrounded by a self-centered, spoiled, generally brainless bunch of socialites who have nothing more to contribute to life than half a kilo? Not much, except for reading about them talk about themselves, which is what Jay McInerney would like us to do in his new novel Story of My Life.

Story of My Life could be subtitled "The Less Than Zero kids take a trip to New York." The promise of McInerney's Bright Lights, Big City has diminished significantly here, and its conversational but superficial tones more closely resemble the works of Bret Easton Ellis.

Nothing differentiates McInerney's depiction of wealthy urbanites in the late 1980s from similar depictions of them written in the early 1980s except the use of newer clubs, bars and restaurants, and the occasional references to AIDS (which seem slipped in, as if the mere presence of the word would make the book topical).

She has recently broken up with her boyfriend, Skip, and is trying to recommit herself to her acting classes. But her constant late night excursions make a commitment to anything difficult. Alison is not alone for long, however; she soon finds another male diversion named Dean to temporarily occupy her lusts. The rest of the story, which takes place over the next few weeks chronicles Alison and Dean's ups and downs amidst an orgy of parties, bars, and rolled-up bills, until one of them gets out and the other breaks down.

Alison repeatedly cries for the truth, often claiming that nothing else matters - she just does not want to be a victim of lies. Her concern echoes Holden Caulfield's hatred of the phonies surrounding him, but Alison's problem seems not to versions is playing truth-or-dare, an adolescent game of giddy curiosity metamorphosed into an adult tell-all of sexual admissions, misdeeds and exhibitionism. By the end of the book, Alison and her friends have set themselves on the path to redemption, but their reentry into sanity feels hollow. Bright Lights, Big City used the hip-rock-bottom-then-rise-and-fix-yourself-up format to a much better end, mainly because its author was somewhat likable and intelligent, qualities which Alison, on the whole, lacks.

McInerney has a quick wit, but one liners cannot save his invertebrate story. Its characters are too much hype, their emotions too shallow, and in the end, it falls like a dead jellyfish.

Perhaps Story of My Life, a quick read at 188 pages, is, in fact, the perfect book of the late 1980s - short on substance and originality, full of glamour and post-modern exaggeration.

One can only hope that McInerney and the other voices of his generation recover from what seems to be a nasty case of laryngitis before they become the paradigm for the next generation.

Alison repeatedly cries for the truth, often claiming that nothing else matters - she just does not want to be a victim of lies. Her concern echoes Holden Caulfield's hatred of the phonies surrounding him, but Alison's problem seems not to versions is playing truth-or-dare, an adolescent game of giddy curiosity metamorphosed into an adult tell-all of sexual admissions, misdeeds and exhibitionism. By the end of the book, Alison and her friends have set themselves on the path to redemption, but their reentry into sanity feels hollow. Bright Lights, Big City used the hip-rock-bottom-then-rise-and-fix-yourself-up format to a much better end, mainly because its author was somewhat likable and intelligent, qualities which Alison, on the whole, lacks.

McInerney has a quick wit, but one liners cannot save his invertebrate story. Its characters are too much hype, their emotions too shallow, and in the end, it falls like a dead jellyfish.

Perhaps Story of My Life, a quick read at 188 pages, is, in fact, the perfect book of the late 1980s - short on substance and originality, full of glamour and post-modern exaggeration.

One can only hope that McInerney and the other voices of his generation recover from what seems to be a nasty case of laryngitis before they become the paradigm for the next generation.

Alison repeatedly cries for the truth, often claiming that nothing else matters - she just does not want to be a victim of lies. Her concern echoes Holden Caulfield's hatred of the phonies surrounding him, but Alison's problem seems not to versions is playing truth-or-dare, an adolescent game of giddy curiosity metamorphosed into an adult tell-all of sexual admissions, misdeeds and exhibitionism. By the end of the book, Alison and her friends have set themselves on the path to redemption, but their reentry into sanity feels hollow. Bright Lights, Big City used the hip-rock-bottom-then-rise-and-fix-yourself-up format to a much better end, mainly because its author was somewhat likable and intelligent, qualities which Alison, on the whole, lacks.

McInerney has a quick wit, but one liners cannot save his invertebrate story. Its characters are too much hype, their emotions too shallow, and in the end, it falls like a dead jellyfish.

Perhaps Story of My Life, a quick read at 188 pages, is, in fact, the perfect book of the late 1980s - short on substance and originality, full of glamour and post-modern exaggeration.

One can only hope that McInerney and the other voices of his generation recover from what seems to be a nasty case of laryngitis before they become the paradigm for the next generation.

Record makes switch to newsprint, laser typography

By Bill Savadove
The editorial board of The Record recently withdrew its $10,460 college council funding request, which would have been the third largest drain on the council's funds.

This followed a decision by the editorial board to print The Record on newsprint. It is now being printed on larger format 30-pound paper, as opposed to the former 50-pound weight. Editor in Chief Debbie Snyder '89 said this change will cut printing costs, the largest of the paper's expenses, in half. The paper is now laid out and typeset using a computerized desktop publishing program.

The reduction in expenses will allow The Record to finance itself solely on advertising and subscriptions revenues, she said.

Snyder said that the newspaper is considering incorporating this year in an effort to become financially independent from the college.

According to College Council President Tracey Blankenship '89, the money previously earmarked for The Record will be helpful because of the lack of surplus funds this year. In the past, there have been funds left over from the previous year. Last year, however, the council supplied the money for the revitalization of the Log and for a new publication, The Issue.

greater flexibility for CC "The reserve that usually goes from year to year is much less," Blankenship said. "It gives the College Council greater leeway to fund new organizations and greater flexibility to look at funding requests for events as the year progresses."

A total of $243,999 has been requested by various organizations thus far, with $145,000 available. College Council money comes from the student activities tax, the $87 that each student pays as part of the term bill. The trustees raised the tax by two dollars for 1988-89 at the request of the College Council.

Although the student activities tax generated $174,000 for student organizations this year, funding requests will have to be cut by $100,000, according to Council Treasurer MaryEllen Sullivan '89. Former Treasurer Mark Ralston '88 originally requested a four dollar raise in the tax.

Instead of the second-person narration of Bright Lights, Big City, Story of My Life employs another gimmick, by using a female narrator, a cosmopolitan and unhappy young woman named Alison Pool.

Alison has had all of her material needs satisfied all of her life. Her emotional desires have not been met equally fulfilled however, so she seeks comfort from the horrors of her family life through sex, drugs and drink. Living in Manhattan, she and her girlfriends are now struggling for money to maintain their lavish lifestyles, and manage by borrowing their boyfriends' credit cards or faking pregnancies for abortion money.

Nothing differentiates McInerney's depiction of wealthy urbanites in the late 1980s from similar depictions of them written in the early 1980s except the use of newer clubs, bars and restaurants, and the occasional references to AIDS (which seem slipped in, as if the mere presence of the word would make the book topical).

She has recently broken up with her boyfriend, Skip, and is trying to recommit herself to her acting classes. But her constant late night excursions make a commitment to anything difficult. Alison is not alone for long, however; she soon finds another male diversion named Dean to temporarily occupy her lusts. The rest of the story, which takes place over the next few weeks chronicles Alison and Dean's ups and downs amidst an orgy of parties, bars, and rolled-up bills, until one of them gets out and the other breaks down.

Alison repeatedly cries for the truth, often claiming that nothing else matters - she just does not want to be a victim of lies. Her concern echoes Holden Caulfield's hatred of the phonies surrounding him, but Alison's problem seems not to versions is playing truth-or-dare, an adolescent game of giddy curiosity metamorphosed into an adult tell-all of sexual admissions, misdeeds and exhibitionism. By the end of the book, Alison and her friends have set themselves on the path to redemption, but their reentry into sanity feels hollow. Bright Lights, Big City used the hip-rock-bottom-then-rise-and-fix-yourself-up format to a much better end, mainly because its author was somewhat likable and intelligent, qualities which Alison, on the whole, lacks.

McInerney has a quick wit, but one liners cannot save his invertebrate story. Its characters are too much hype, their emotions too shallow, and in the end, it falls like a dead jellyfish.

Perhaps Story of My Life, a quick read at 188 pages, is, in fact, the perfect book of the late 1980s - short on substance and originality, full of glamour and post-modern exaggeration.

One can only hope that McInerney and the other voices of his generation recover from what seems to be a nasty case of laryngitis before they become the paradigm for the next generation.

Alison repeatedly cries for the truth, often claiming that nothing else matters - she just does not want to be a victim of lies. Her concern echoes Holden Caulfield's hatred of the phonies surrounding him, but Alison's problem seems not to

Review: McInerney's Story has little life

By Travis Pierson
What could be worse than spending a few weeks surrounded by a self-centered, spoiled, generally brainless bunch of socialites who have nothing more to contribute to life than half a kilo? Not much, except for reading about them talk about themselves, which is what Jay McInerney would like us to do in his new novel Story of My Life.

Story of My Life could be subtitled "The Less Than Zero kids take a trip to New York." The promise of McInerney's Bright Lights, Big City has diminished significantly here, and its conversational but superficial tones more closely resemble the works of Bret Easton Ellis.

Nothing differentiates McInerney's depiction of wealthy urbanites in the late 1980s from similar depictions of them written in the early 1980s except the use of newer clubs, bars and restaurants, and the occasional references to AIDS (which seem slipped in, as if the mere presence of the word would make the book topical).

She has recently broken up with her boyfriend, Skip, and is trying to recommit herself to her acting classes. But her constant late night excursions make a commitment to anything difficult. Alison is not alone for long, however; she soon finds another male diversion named Dean to temporarily occupy her lusts. The rest of the story, which takes place over the next few weeks chronicles Alison and Dean's ups and downs amidst an orgy of parties, bars, and rolled-up bills, until one of them gets out and the other breaks down.

Alison repeatedly cries for the truth, often claiming that nothing else matters - she just does not want to be a victim of lies. Her concern echoes Holden Caulfield's hatred of the phonies surrounding him, but Alison's problem seems not to versions is playing truth-or-dare, an adolescent game of giddy curiosity metamorphosed into an adult tell-all of sexual admissions, misdeeds and exhibitionism. By the end of the book, Alison and her friends have set themselves on the path to redemption, but their reentry into sanity feels nessed a nonviolent revolution, a revolution of values and ideas. We have come a distance, but my fear is that we have not come far enough."

Convocation

The nature of the civil rights movement has changed, he said, but it is not dead. "We must restore sanity and sensitivity to our nation - a nation which can tolerate widespread hunger, poverty, injustice and growing polarization among its people."

Lewis said he felt optimistic about the future. "We are one nation, one community, one family - the American family."

In 1959 and 1960, Lewis helped organize the first lunch counter sit-ins in the South. From 1963 through 1966 he was the chairman of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee, which was largely responsible for the sit-ins and other activities of students working for civil rights. During the 1960s, Lewis, who spoke at the March on Washington, was jailed 40 times and was severely beaten for leading peaceful marches and demonstrations throughout the South.

During the ceremony, College President Francis Oakley awarded Lewis an honorary degree. Degrees were also awarded to Charlyne Hunter-Gault, an award-winning national correspondent for the MacNeil/Lehrer NewsHour and the first black woman to enter the University of Georgia; the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, who organized the Montgomery Bus Boycott and was the successor to King as president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Ruth M. Batson, president and executive director of the Museum of Afro-American History, who worked for desegregation in the Boston Public School system in the early 1960s; Burke Marshall, the assistant attorney general of the United States in charge of the Civil Rights Division from 1961 to 1965; and Rosa Parks, whose refusal to surrender her seat to a white male passenger and subsequent arrest sparked the Montgomery Bus Boycott.

Danhauer

continued from page 10

doughnuts before the race. Despite her success, she still felt that her chances of placing at Nationals were very slim.

On May 26th, Danhauer competed in the trial heat of the Nationals, held at Carleton College in Northfield, Minnesota. She won the heat in 4:35.6 and set a stadium record. Two days later, Danhauer was ready. She had just watched fellow Eph Macaulay's race the day before, and had found it inspiring. Coaches Farwell and Larry Bell were also there to watch the race, thinking that she had an outside chance at sixth place, and that she would trim a second off her time.

"Our heart beats were probably going faster than hers," says Farwell.

Danhauer made her move soon after the gun had sounded, pulling ahead after the first lap and leading for the rest of the race. "Nothing dramatic," Danhauer says. Winning with a time of 4:28.67, she sliced 7 seconds off her time in the space of two days, bested her own Carleton stadium and Williams records, and came within two to three tenths of a second of the all-time NCAA record. Farwell attributes her win to hard workouts under the supervision of Coach Bell, perfect positioning, calm attitude before the race, speed, and obvious natural talent. He says of her performance, "It was the best race I've ever seen anybody run. She is a great competitor."

Danhauer's attitude toward running is relatively relaxed. She simply states, "I enjoy running and I like winning. I know I can't expect too much of I'd be disappointing myself all the time." Modesty aside, however, it seems that Danhauer has far from exhausted her potential and will continue to surpass her own expectations in the future.

Bolin

record he said I couldn't be a theoretician, like I am now, but maybe an experimentalist. [Harvard thought] you had to be out of this world to be a theoretical physicist, but there aren't many professions where genius is a requirement."

Currently, Corrada-Emmanuel is finishing his doctoral thesis at the University of Massachusetts, entitled "The K-T Transition on Multi-Connected Surfaces." This spring, he will be teaching Physics 100.

"I'm going to teach it my way," he said of the course. "I want to get students interested in a subject that terrifies them. We will study physics as a cultural phenomenon and explore how physical concepts are related to the society from which they arose."

Eager to teach Corrada-Emmanuel was a teaching assistant at U. Mass., and he said he is eager to teach again, especially at Williams. "What I ter the March 2 deadline for registration as a candidate. To enable Drew to run, David Chivers of Dalton placed himself on the ballot and then withdrew, allowing Drew to take his place. Drew was not then restricted by the earlier deadline. Quernsey was reported in the Berkshire Eagle as calling the move "shenanigans, pure shenanigans" but acknowledged that it was legal.

Drew

Announced his candidacy Drew made the announcement of his candidacy from the site of the Pyramid Mall, a $57 million retail development in Lanesborough. At the time of the announcement, it seemed that the State Department of Environmental Quality and Ecology (DEQE) would not grant permission for the mall to open due to conflict with the state's wetland protection laws. Drew now says that the mall, scheduled to open last Friday, will probably open sometime later this week.

"The driver in Boston's rates are artificially lower and ours are artificially higher," Drew said. "We're subsidizing him."

Over the summer, Quernsey introduced a bill that would lower rates immediately. The vote failed by one vote. According to Drew, this shows Quernsey's failure as a politician since he came so close but could not get the necessary vote. Under the "Drew Compromise", the rates would change over a four year period, in a hope to gain votes from those who had some reservations about overnight change.

Drew said that one of his major media events in June worked against him. He went on his knees on the front steps of Pittsfield City Hall to beg Mayor Anne Wojtkowski to support a proposal for a Route 7 bypass. Unfortunately for Drew, as find attractive about a small college, headed, "Is they appreciate that you are a well-cultured and knowledgeable person, and not just a specialist. I feel that this is a very intimate place, and I like the accessible atmosphere."

He said he would like to make teaching his career, but he is less each year. Bolin Fellows concentrate primarily on finishing their dissertations, but have the added opportunity of teaching a one-semester course of their own design in the spring.

he got to his knees, so did School Committee Chairperson Dorothy van den Honert, who held a sign calling for an end to the proposal.

Regrets his action "People shied off from that kind of stuntmanship," Drew said. He said that although he thought the idea good at the time, he now regrets the action.

In his first three months as a candidate, Drew raised $5000 and visited 2700 homes in Williamstown and Dalton. He said his contact with the voters has shown him that his priority should be reducing auto insurance rates.

"Under a state-regulated system, it's going to be biased toward the powerful eastern part of the state," he said about the rates. At present, rates are fixed across the state by a legislative body in Boston. According to Drew, drivers in the western part of the state should have lower rates to correspond with the lower accident rate.

"The driver in Boston's rates are artificially lower and ours are artificially higher," Drew said. "We're subsidizing him."

Over the summer, Quernsey introduced a bill that would lower rates immediately. The vote failed by one vote. According to Drew, this shows Quernsey's failure as a politician since he came so close but could not get the necessary vote. Under the "Drew Compromise", the rates would change over a four year period, in a hope to gain votes from those who had some reservations about overnight change.

Drew said that one of his major media events in June worked against him. He went on his knees on the front steps of Pittsfield City Hall to beg Mayor Anne Wojtkowski to support a proposal for a Route 7 bypass. Unfortunately for Drew, as find attractive about a small college, headed, "Is they appreciate that you are a well-cultured and knowledgeable person, and not just a specialist. I feel that this is a very intimate place, and I like the accessible atmosphere."

He said he would like to make teaching his career, but he is less each year. Bolin Fellows concentrate primarily on finishing their dissertations, but have the added opportunity of teaching a one-semester course of their own design in the spring.

To keep up with campus, keep up with The Williams Record

Football

continued from page 10

bit more diverse offensively this season," said Farley. "We are much more advanced than we were at this time last year."

Youth and inexperience

Defense has traditionally been a Williams strong suit. This year, however, Farley feels the offense may have to carry the defensive unit in the early going. Unlike the senior-studded offense, the defense suffered several important losses from the Class of 1987.

The defensive line is anchored by senior tri-captain Dave Montgomery, who will lead a group trying to overcome the loss of such stalwarts as Don Aseltone and Greg Kelly. Senior Mark Duff, moved inside from defensive end last year, will likely join Montgomery on the line, although Farley is quick to note that no position has been decided as yet. Others fighting for time on the line include sophomores Dan Newhall, Mike Abruzzese, and Jay Powell.

Linebacker and defensive end perhaps the biggest question marks on the defensive side of scrimmage. Senior tri-captain Dan Pritchard moves to linebacker from defensive end to shore up the inside, leaves sophomores Ted Rogers and

Dukakis

"I think we were treated reasonably fairly," said Franklin Jenifer, chancellor of the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Yet Massachusetts students and administrators maintain they're frustrated by what they see as a bias toward private institutions, by scandals that pushed several campus presidents out of jobs and by Dukakis' failure to maintain adequate operations budgets for state colleges.

Jenifer, for one, said operating budget cuts have "most paralyzed the state higher education system. Public campuses will receive $638 million this year, $21.3 million less than last year. Current operating budgets are 'not conducive to maintaining programs.'" Jenifer said. Fitchburg State President Vincent Mara called the reductions the most severe blow to public institutions since the state's fiscal crisis during Dukakis' first term in 1975.

Several schools say they'll accept fewer students this year because of financial woes. To save money, they'll cut back on teaching assistants, freeze faculty hiring and tap maintenance funds to try to provide the same level of services as last year. The University of Massachusetts at Amherst, the state's flagship public university with more than 20,000 undergraduates, is charging students a special one-time $230 fee to raise emergency cash.

Students throughout the state public system face an 8.5 percent tuition hike in the coming year and a substantial increase in dormitory fees.

Many University of Lowell students will receive instruction from computers, instead of faculty members, in order to cut costs. Those students will have to pay a $100 fee to use computer labs.

"Without the faculty we have to do something," said President William T. Hogan.

It could get worse. State campus budgets, Dukakis said during a March hearing on college savings bonds, "cannot be expected to continue to grow at anything like the rate they have over the past few years."

Some students, however, are upset most by Dukakis' support of a measure that would allow schools to keep excess revenues generated

Ken Dilanian as the only experienced defensive ends.

Strong secondary

The defensive secondary may be the strongest part of the unit. Senior Dave Clawson, returning from last season's knee injury, moves to free safety. Junior Rich Williams (All-NESECAC in 1987) returns at strong safety, and senior Dave Willey can play either inside position. Sophomore Mike Hyde will start at one cornerback post, while senior Eric Moe hopes to improve on last year's fine performance at the other corner.

Overall, this year's defense is blessed with a number of good athletes, according to Farley. However, he says, "Depth and inexperience are a little bit of a problem." The Ephs will count heavily on a number of players who have had only limited game experience.

The first test for the Ephs comes this weekend in New Hampshire in a scrimmage against Bowdoin (which was dropped from the regular season schedule for the next few years). One week from Saturday comes the season opener, and perhaps the Ephs' toughest game, as the Hamilton Continentals (17-6 versus last year) come to Weston Field.

Lewis

continue to move towards a truly multi-racial, integrated society.

RECORD: So integration is the key?

LEWIS: It is a key towards enhancing the quality of life for all people. It is a key towards forgetting about race, and seeing people as people, and that's the idea. And that's down the road, I will probably not see that in my lifetime, but it will come about.

RECORD: So what do you think of Dr. Fulani's message that blacks should try to establish an independent party and run on that ticket?

LEWIS: Some of the ideas and some of the things that she is suggesting are good, but I just don't think that the black voters and the black people in America will make it alone. I don't believe in hope in our future with some predominantly or all-black party. It must be a coalition, along the lines that Jesse Jackson is suggesting, between blacks and whites, hispanics, other minorities, women, senior citizens and others. The only way we're going to make meaningful changes in this country in the years to come will be through viable, political coalitions.

RECORD: So you say that in order to make gains blacks have to align themselves either with the Democratic or Republican Party. There are no other choices?

LEWIS: Maybe down the road someplace we may see the need to create what I like to call a third force, or there may be the need to take the best out of the Democratic and the Republican Party. But I think more and more in this country the whole question of party may become a little irrelevant, and people will start gravitating to those men and women with set ideas, with set principles, and I think that will be in the best interests of the American people, and black America in particular. At this point, I'm not preparing to cast my lot with a third party, and I think the great majority of blacks want to continue for years to come to support the Democratic Party, to make the Democratic Party something different.

RECORD: And that's basically because the other parties aren't established yet?

LEWIS: Right. It's not established, and . . .

RECORD: You'd be taking a chance?

LEWIS: You're taking a chance, and then you become a minority in a minority . . .

RECORD: And you become isolated?

LEWIS: That's right, and with the Democratic Party you can have a greater impact on a larger part of society.

Hunter-Gault

around we've seen evidences of progress. People argue that the 60s were an aberration, that we leapt forward in such a dramatic way that it was really against the normal historical tide. And that may be true. We may inch forward and inch forward.

I asked a friend of mine the other day, who is a South African living in exile. I said "how do you feel when you come to America, which I assume you look to some kind of beacon of racial progress, and you find black people still complaining about racism?" He said they never looked to America for its achievements in race relations; they looked to America for the nobility of its struggle. I think that is where we are going to be: Attempting to carry on the struggle and hoping to keep in noble.

You're smart enough to calculate the size of a Hydrogen atom.

And you're still smoking?

The shortest distance between you and what's going on on campus

The Williams Record

ATTENTION STUDENTS! WELCOME TO TOWN!

OUR TRAVEL OFFICE IS CONVENIENTLY LOCATED AT THE END OF SPRING STREET

ACROSS FROM THE GULF STATION.

WE ARE OPEN . . . MONDAY - FRIDAY

9AM TO 5PM

THURSDAY UNTIL

8PM

SATURDAY

9AM TO 12PM

WE HAVE BEEN IN BUSINESS FOR OVER 20 YEARS AND ARE FULLY COMPUTERIZED. WE OFFER LOW AIRFARES ANYWHERE DOMESTICALLY OR AROUND THE WORLD, ON SCHEDULED AIRLINES OR LOW COST CHARTERS. WE ALSO SELL AMTRAK, MAKE HOTEL RESERVATIONS, AND BASICALLY HELP YOU WITH ALL YOUR TRAVEL NEEDS. THERE IS NO CHARGE FOR OUR SERVICES!!!! WE EVEN GIVE YOU FREE PASSPORT PICTURES IF YOU TRAVEL WITH US.

FINALLY WE'LL GET YOU HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS, HASSLE-FREE! YOU MAY EVEN PAY FOR YOUR PARENTS CREDIT CARD!!

STOP BY AND SAY HELLO! OUR FRIENDLY TEAM IS EAGER TO SERVE YOU.

TRAVEL STORE, INC.

105 SPRING STREET • WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267 • (413) 458-5786 • OUTSIDE MASS. 800-225-5052

280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704

"Free Delivery"

Schmidt's Cans $8.99/case + dp.
Rolling Rock bottles $12.99/case + dp.
Labatts cans $14.50/case + dp.
ice cold legs in stock

Low Prices

Monday - Saturday 9am to 11pm

MC VISA

The largest selection at the lowest prices

SALE
Mardi XII 90
2-packs
$3.99

Toonerville Trolley Records
131 Water Street 458-5229
open 10-6; Sundays 12-4 until October

SEPTEMBER 19 & 20 ONLY
WILLIAMS CO-OP
25 SPRING STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN

SAVE UP TO $60

"This year I'll get organized"

And this year I really mean it. So I'm buying myself an IBM® Personal System/2® computer to help me do everything from organizing notes and revising papers to creating high-quality graphics, and more. And not only is this IBM PS/2 easy to learn and use, but if I'm eligible, I'll save up to 40% with my discount.

Who knows, with this IBM PS/2, I may be so organized even my socks will match.

Stop by the IBM PC Fair
on Friday, Sept. 16th
in the Baxter Lounge
from 9:00 AM until 2:00 PM

Students, Faculty and Staff
can now purchase with a 40% discount

IBM and Personal System/2 are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation.

Summer in Billsville

Pro-lifers gave Governor Michael Dukakis a less-than-warm welcome last August.

Presidential candidate Michael Dukakis' annual visit to the Berkshires included a stop at the MassMoCA site, where he spoke with MoCA mastermind Thomas Krens.

photos by Jed Scala

Senior Shannon Pennick spent the summer in a Bronfman Laboratory conducting brain experiments on rabbits.

Andre Agassi defeating Paul Annacone for the Volvo International Championship. The Stratton Mountain tournament is directed by former Williams coach Sean Sloane.

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

On-the-Job Swifties

By FRANCES HANSEN/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- | | |
|--|---|
| ACROSS 1 Make picots 4 Feigns 13 Over, in Urm 17 Wire nail 18 Biblical verb 19 Sun: Comb. form 20 Scruff 21 Brings down the house, in Kew 22 "You're all litterbugs," said the janitor 24 "I'm on TV," said the chef 26 Muezzin's place 27 Kipling poem 28 "These truths," said the poet 30 "I'm petrified," said the quarrier 31 Sky Whale 32 Rtd Rover of insects 33 C. Burr's role 34 Asp's cousin 35 Skier Jean Claude 36 "Forever" girl 37 "I'm in a rut," said the ditchdigger 41 Peace, in Pamplona 44 Parrigiana candidate 45 Yum-Yum, e.g. 46 Wagers 47 Game fish 48 The whole shebang 49 "Blast it!" said the dynamiter 53 Pound unit 54 "Alice" — these 55 Mrs. Will Durant 57 Not mounted, as a diamond 58 Rank-smelling 59 Topknot 60 Caesar's gold coins 62 Sky blue 64 This could be grand 65 Kennedy compound, e.g. 67 Distort, in a way 68 "We need water," said the gardener 70 Slip 72 Exaction 73 See 85 Across 74 Dry, cold wind 75 TV ad award 76 Marnee's friend 77 "No juice," said the electrician 81 Dallied 82 Like a Morse message 83 Nine: Comb. form 84 Trevarian's "The Sanction" 85 With 73 Across, an earth belt 87 With full force 88 "I'm all ears," said the corn farmer 92 "Viva —" 1952 film 93 Savory dance 94 Bassanio's friend 95 "It's permanent press," said the saleswoman 97 "Excuse my gear," said the truck driver 100 Salk's conquest 101 Bookbinding leather 102 Ex-Dodger 103 U, in Mexico 104 N.J. governor 105 Chevel 106 Grant or Bayard 107 "I —," said the seer 108 With 73 Across, predictably | DOWN 1 Namely 2 "... clock scholar" 3 "Wore Red," 1960 film 4 Scutum in the sky 5 "The Young Bugler" author 6 Math form 7 Wire measure 8 Hairy legume 9 Rude 10 Thai money 11 Finals 12 Dau. or hro 13 "Tight shorts," said the boxer 14 "I'll," said the harbor — 15 "... who lived in —" 16 Street of fiction 17 G.I. awards 21 A Chaplin 22 Earlier 23 Harps (on) 24 Of the cur 31 Tenet 32 Simple song 33 Col. Tibbets' whale's food 35 Bell sound 36 Oahu drink 37 Dissolve 38 "I'm packing it in!" said the cotton picker 39 On a disk 40 Red as — 41 "They es-caped," said the pig man 42 A Johnson 43 Kind of suit 44 Half of CMXXIV 45 Yearned 47 City in Crete 49 Stage direction 50 Caldwell or Vaughn 51 A Castle 52 Cap projection 53 "Oklahoma!" hero 55 Perfumery ingredient 56 Quarter 57 Teed off 58 U.S. rival 59 Recorded proceedings 63 Kind of lens 64 Yearned 65 Col. Tibbets' mother 66 HOMES part 67 Knocked 'em dead 68 "Little Eyolf" dramatist 69 Wand 70 This gives you a sign 71 Wad 72 This gives you a sign 73 — goose (ruin) 77 Share 78 Boucher's teacher 79 Hindu land grant 80 Hidden 81 "Mattinata" composer 82 Branches 84 Charged 85 Old card game 86 Pnlish city 87 Book of maps 88 Reichstag tender before Ebert 89 Fireplace, in Yorkshire 90 De Gaulle's birthplace 91 Spinner or weirdo 92 A code in the head? 93 Spill over 94 Altar above 95 Not gross 96 "—" said the hansom driver rightly |
|--|---|

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Gridders aim to keep Little Three title

By Frank Vespe and Mike Barbera

"Nothing will surprise me after sixteen years," said head football coach Richard Farley of the upcoming season on the gridiron.

Certainly after last year's exciting Little Three Championship season, Farley has reason to believe he has seen it all. After a rocky 0-3 start, Williams made a complete turnaround, rolling to four victories in its final five games, including drubblings of archrivals Wesleyan (35-7) and Amherst (25-7). The squad claimed its first Little Three Championship since 1981.

Farley hopes the momentum gained by last season's successful stretch drive will carry over into the 1988 campaign. The second-year mentor (he spent fifteen years as former head coach Bob Odell's assistant) will count on an experienced offensive unit to provide a ball-control style offense, mixing a bruising rushing attack with an opportunistic passing game.

Strong-armed senior quarterback Scott Kennedy returns for his third year at the helm of the Eph offense. The sophomore tri-captain is a multi-talented performer, who can keep opponents off-balance with strong running that complements his passing threat.

Bruising Backfield

Kennedy will be joined in the backfield by a corps of experienced and talented running backs. Junior tailbacks Neal Chesley and Maurice Holden formed the backbone of the Eph ground game last season. Both are able to break big plays either off tackle or around the end. Leading them through the line will be their classmates and bone-shaking blockers John Perryman and Lars Hem, giving Farley a quartet of proven ballcarriers.

The Ephs lost the services of Kennedy's favorite short-yardage target, tight end Lewis Collins, to graduation. Sophomore Rick Bales and junior Chris Towle will vie for the post this year. Juniors Todd Strieter and Kevin Brown, along with Scott Shean '91 will be seeing action at the wide receiver slots. The Ephs' receiving corps started off shaky in 1987 but improved dramatically as the season progressed, and this year they look to provide sure-handed targets for Kennedy's aerials.

Charged with the dual task of protecting Kennedy and opening holes for the backs is the Ephs offensive line. The unit is an imposing one, certainly one of the biggest in NESCAC. Anchoring the line is senior Joe Thompson, an All-NESCAC performer last year. He and classmate Andy Coyne will bookend the line from their respective tackle slots. Flanking center Brian Stevens '90 at the guard positions are sophomores Matt Fair and Andy Alich.

"I think we have the talent to be a

continued on page 7

Danhauer takes success in stride

By Mariam Naficy

As a freshman on the Williams track team, Ann Dannhauer '90 "couldn't make it to the finish line" of a 1500m (one mile) run, according to Coach Pete Farwell; thus he never placed her in a 1500m race. Last spring, running that very event, Dannhauer became the first Williams runner since 1920 to win the Nationals in a race lauded by Farwell as "an exquisite performance." Adding to Williams success at the Nationals was Senior Dawn Macauley, who placed fourth in the 400m intermediate hurdles in her third consecutive year at the Nationals.

Recruited as an excellent high school runner, Dannhauer was very frustrated with her running during her freshman year; "I was getting slower and kept wondering why—I couldn't feel my legs." The turnaround in her performance came when Farwell, suspicious of Dannhauer's poor running despite her hard training, had her tested for anemia. The answer to Dannhauer's problem was found; she had an 8.6 blood count, out of a normal range of 12 to 14. She began taking iron supplements during the spring of her freshman year, and almost immediately her performance began to improve. By the fall of her sophomore year, Dannhauer could run three miles under 20 minutes and placed consistently among the top four runners on the cross-country team. Her experience with anemia had a psychological effect on her, however. "I still had a real fear that all of a sudden I'd get real tired and wouldn't be able to keep up," she says. Setting a goal to qualify for the

Ann Dannhauer

Nationals in the 800m, Dannhauer trained all winter on her own, alternating days of short distance/speed workouts with days of 7-12 mile runs. By the time spring track started, Farwell discovered, "I was struggling to keep up with her during our hill workouts." Her winter workouts helped her in ways she hadn't expected; although she didn't meet her goal in the 800m, she surprised herself in the 1500m. Dannhauer attributes this to the fact that her workouts were more geared toward a longer race. It was soon apparent that Dannhauer had a chance to make Nationals in the 1500m. She set a school record of 4:43 on April 2nd in the Duke Invitational, but heartbreakingly missed the qualifying time for Nationals by one second.

However, the slim one second barrier did not long hamper Dannhauer, as she won the NESCAC's in 4:37 against All-American Nancy Benson of Tufts a month later. However, Dannhauer says she was not overjoyed. "At first I thought I'd be really happy, but when it happened it wasn't too much of a relief." She kept training with the team and went on to win the ECAC's, eating a snack of Wonder Bread, hamburger bun, and sugar

continued on page 6

Women's soccer faces tough opener tomorrow

By Ted Hobart

With tomorrow's season opener against the North Adams State Mohawks looming very large in the women's soccer team's future, Coach Lisa Melendy still had some concerns about key positions. Though five starters were lost from last year's 10-3-2 squad (second in NAC tourney and rated fourth in New England), most of those spots could be filled by upperclassmen with playing experience.

However, there were two members of the class of 1988 whom Melendy will surely find difficult to replace—Joyce Rogers and Christine Boddicker. "We lost the girl who held all the goalkeeping records and the girl who held all the scoring records," said Melendy. Indeed, Rogers was a perennial standout in goal and scoring ace Christine Boddicker packed a powerful punch up front.

On the front line, the team will look to junior Kelly Collins and sophomores Ginny Grandison and Audra Mazzzer to take up the offensive slack. Newcomer Liz Naser '92 should also help strike fear into opposing netminders.

The midfield is anchored by All-New England selection and co-captain Lori Schaen '89, who led the team in scoring last season. She is supported by talented juniors Susie Piper and Lynne Brenner, as well as Danielle Boyd '91.

"I feel we're really there," said Melendy of her stalwart defense. Her confidence would appear to be justified given the experience of the Ephs' backfield, led by senior co-captain Amy Duncombe (who may also play midfield) and All-New England Carin Cole '91. Returning starters Neil Owen '90 and Heather Martinez '89, joined by sophomores Elyse Carson and Brienne Colby, and Jennifer Plansky '92 solidify what should again be a stingy defense.

The most obvious question mark for this team is in goal, where rookies Valerie Santiago '92 and Becky Borden '91 have been competing for the hot spot in the box.

No time for pre-season jitters, however, as one of these two goalies will soon get a baptism under fire. The tough home opener tomorrow is followed by Saturday's matchup at SUNY Albany. Hopefully this year's squad can start off faster than last year's, which lost its two opening games against these same two opponents before rattling off a twelve game unbeaten streak.

"There are no easy games for us this year," emphasized Melendy. "We're looking for a good, strong effort every game. We had a lot of one-goal games last year, and I wouldn't be surprised to see a lot this year. We're usually one of the smallest teams in NESCAC, but this year we're bigger so we should be able to play a tougher, more physical game and not get pushed off the ball."

The men's soccer team is working hard to continue last season's successful trend (little three and ECAC Champions with a 17-1 record). At left, senior Sam McIlvain heads a ball on net during practice. Right, senior netminder Rob Black shows the form that earned him a school record twelve shutouts last season.

WIN $$$$ - Enter the Quiz

- 1) What plant grows on the walls of Wrigley field in Chicago?
- 2) Which Hall of Famer is known as "Mr. Cub"?
- 3) Which Cub is second on the National League's all-time consecutive games played list behind Steve Garvey?
- 4) What year did the Cubs last reach the series?
- 5) Who owned the Cubs before the Tribune Co.?

Send your answers to Ted Hobart, Marc McDermott or SU 2817 by Saturday, or call the Record office Sunday between 1 and 5. Winners will be drawn at random from those entries with the most correct answers.

20-60% OFF ALL SKI EQUIPMENT & APPAREL

Goff's Sports, Inc.

(413) 458-3605
18 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

No boredom for sports enthusiasts on campus

by Al Motter

Well, its fall again and that can only mean one thing—we're back to Williams for another year of fun, playing, partying, and, yes, studying. But, as you remember this is a sports column, so I have to talk about sports. For those of you who are new to Williams or for those who've just returned from a year abroad and have forgotten the college's many benefits, let me enlighten you.

Over 50 percent of Williams students have participated in some form of intercollegiate athletics, which is great. But what about the other 1000 people? There are probably more opportunities here at Williams to lead an active sporting life than at most small schools in this country. Let's face it—we live at a country club, and we ought to take advantage of it.

For those Jack Nicklaus wannabes out there, Williams has provided the student with the Taconic Golf Club, arguably one of the fine college courses in the nation, and a mere ten to fifteen minute walk from most points on campus. Not only is Taconic a great course, but its cheap to play on. It only costs $75 to get a season pass and have one's clubs stored at the course. And for free, you can play on weekdays in conjunction with taking Phys. Ed. golf.

If you think that's great, did you know that Williams has more tennis courts than any school of its size in the country? I'll bet you didn't. And not only do we have 24 courts, but twelve of them are clay, which allows the weekend hacker more exercise and less wear and tear on the shins. There are also four indoor courts located in the hockey rink, but they are only in use in the early fall and late spring. For those more serious athletes, we just got a brand new athletic facility with two full hoop courts, and a state of the art swimming pool that is among the most technologically advanced in the world. And if you are in search of pipes and pees, in two weeks the new two-tiered weight room will open in Lasell Gymnasium, with every nautilus machine known to man, and a new set of free weights as well. You have probably noticed several walking advertisements of the weight room around campus. The old weight room atop Lasell will remain in use, albeit in limited access.

And for you freshmen out there afraid of putting on the dreaded "freshmen ten", we have a beautiful new track down on Weston Field, although I think the area provides more scenic running vistas than our football stands and baseball field. Among the most beautiful and challenging are Gaie Road, Blare Road, or Buckley routes, not to mention the famous late-night marathon to McDonald's.

Thus far I've mentioned many individual sports. Williams offers much to the team oriented player as well. Three of the more popular intramural leagues are Keg Soccer, Sunday Night Hockey and Sunday Night Basketball, which get started in Winter Study. All these leagues have talented athletes in them, and the competition is high, but at the same time, there are no cuts, grueling practices, or coaches to answer to—a benefit many varsity athletes must often long for.

There are many things I've left out, such as our excellent cable television service which allows us to WATCH sporting events around the globe while keeping in shape by doing curls of the twelve ounce variety.

Whatever your pleasure, Williams probably offers it. It just takes a little digging to find it out. And just because Williams is the number one liberal arts institution in the United States, doesn't mean you can't have fun on campus playing sports.

The sun sets on day baseball in Chicago

By Marc McDermott and Ted Hobart

And so another tradition falls by the wayside. Just as grass stains were replaced by turf burns, fresh summer breezes by redirected air conditioning and the Polo Grounds by a parking lot, so too has the warm Chicago sunshine been dimmed by the incandescent glare of thousands of wait spotlights. Yes, night baseball has come to Wrigley Field.

Once again the almighty dollar has laid the bottom line at the expense of one of our national pastime's most charming traditions. Although the Cubs have always been financially robust, the switch to night baseball will undoubtedly prove highly lucrative as larger crowds and prime time television spots insure greater revenues. Indeed, day baseball is considered so antiquated that in the unlikely situation that the Cubs were to someday find themselves in post season play, the powers that be in baseball had already decreed that temporary lights would be installed so as not to interfere with the televised media's nighttime schedule.

It would be easy to lay blame on the owners of the Cubs for ravenously greed, or to admonish the Chicago City Council for knuckling under to the club's demands (a mere three years after promising that night ball would never come to Wrigley), but they made the correct choice. There is, after all, the theory that the Cubs' yearly August swoon which has kept them from the World Series since before World War Two is caused by the extra seventy days a Cub plays in the heat.

But whether or not playing at night will bring the Cubs their day in the sun, the fact is that sooner or later Wrigley itself would have withered from the summer heat. A new stadium would have been built to appease the owners. It would have been 330 down the line, 405 in dead center and had a perfectly semicircular fence. It would have had lights, four decks of stand-maybe even a dome. There would be no ivy, no bleachers, no bums no manual scoreboard and absolutely no character whatsoever. In short, baseball in Chicago would become like baseball in Seattle.

So, all fans of baseball, do not be angered at the injustice of lights in Wrigley, but simply shed a tear of sorrow and respect at the setting of the sun. For when the owners and television moguls are done balancing their ledgers and the crack of the bat pierces the calm Chicago summer night, one thing is clear: while Wrigley with lights is contemptible, baseball without Wrigley is unimaginable.

Educators wary of Bush's vow to be 'education President'

(CPS)—"I have been going around the country saying that I want to be known as the 'education president,'" George Bush said during a campaign stop in California this summer. The reason is simple: Opportunity is what America is all about, and education is the key to opportunity."

An educated workforce, Bush believes, is the key to a prosperous economy. To prepare that workforce, he promises more student aid, plans to help families save for their children's education and programs to bring more minority students to campuses.

He says his U.S. Dept. of Education would avoid the confrontational style of President Reagan's Education Dept. under William Bennett.

And while all that might sound very attractive to a national college community buffeted by eight years of budget cuts and White House criticism, a lot of people in higher education think George Bush is full of bunk.

Bush "will do whatever his advisors tell him to do to get elected. Hell, it's politics," said Dr. Robert Clodius of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

While Dr. Alma McGuiness of the Education Commission of the States thinks "you can take the vice president at his word: he wants to be the education president," he wonders whether Bush would take the political heat of funding college programs at the expense of, say, defense.

"Whoever is elected president has to face three major budget problems," McGuiness said. "They will have to deal with the budget and trade deficits, the high priority placed on defense spending and the commitment to entitlements for older people, such as Social Security."

"He can't do anything (about education) if he doesn't address those problems first."

McGuiness, Clodius and other education professionals noted Bush offered public support for -- and certainly no public resistance to -- the Reagan administration's budgetary attacks on federal college funding.

But now the vice president calls for maintaining work-study, the still-unproven income-contingent loans program and Pell Grants for low-income students.

For middle-class students, the vice president, like his Democratic opponent, Gov. Michael Dukakis, proposes creating a College Savings Bond. The bond would be similar to U.S. Savings Bonds, except that interest earned would be tax-free if the bond is applied to college expenses.

Helping students pay for college should be "one of our highest priorities in the 1990s," Bush says.

"The only thing he's wedded to is the college savings bond plan," said Becky Timmons of the American Council on Education (ACE). "It's something we're interested in. It could be an important vehicle for the middle class. But Bush has not laid out concrete plans for the poor."

"He's ignoring a whole sector of the population," Janet Lieberman of the United States Student Association (USSA) said.

The vice president, a Yale grad, does have a long record of supporting black colleges. Many black college presidents credit Bush with helping their institutions secure federal grants.

Bush, too, has been a long-time supporter of the United Negro College Fund, donating half the royalties he receives from his autobiography "Looking Forward" to the fund.

While a Texas congressman from 1967 to 1970, Bush did vote for the major education funding bills that arose.

Education, in fact, is one arena where Bush appears eager to distance himself from the Reagan administration, but

Continued on page 4

The college is spending $60,000 to have asbestos removed from Perry House. (Ward)

College tackles asbestos problem in Perry, Sage

by Mariam Natley

Two million dollars worth of asbestos has been removed from college buildings over the past four years, but according to Special Assistant to the Director of the Physical Plant Christina Cruz, removal work is continuing this fall. The college has hired independent contracting firms to continue the removal of the asbestos from several more college buildings, she said.

"It's overwhelming—we're trying to tackle the worst cases first. There's a time constraint and a money constraint," said Cruz, who directs the asbestos removal program.

In most campus buildings, the asbestos present is completely sealed and contained, and is located in the boiler rooms and other mechanical areas of the buildings, Cruz said. She added that any college buildings constructed prior to 1970 are likely to have asbestos in them.

Cruz said that as long as students stay out of the restricted areas and the asbestos remains covered, there will be no health threat.

Current asbestos removal projects include the basement of Perry House and the tunnel between Lasell Gymnasium and the heating plant, with work on the Baxter Basement boiler room slated to begin next week, Cruz said. Most of the asbestos in Sage was removed over the summer and the remainder has been completely sealed off with homocote board, she said.

Found in student rooms
The asbestos found in Sage Hall, unlike most of the asbestos cases on campus, was located in student rooms. It was not listed on the 1985 campus asbestos study that the Physical Plant depends on for its asbestos removal program, Cruz said.

Cruz said that she never looked at the survey to see whether asbestos was present in Sage. The asbestos was found by accident during a summer inspection of Sage in conjunction with the college's plans to renovate the building.

The bill for removing asbestos from Sage was approximately $100,000, said

Cruz, and Perry will be another $60,000. Woodbridge House is next on the asbestos removal list, she said.

Cruz said that her office was considering the idea of an all campus mailing concerning the asbestos problem.

Perry House residents received a mailing last week notifying them of the asbestos removal that will take place in their house, she said. In the mailing, Cruz wrote that a certified industrial hygienist "monitors the work, does visual inspection, and tests the quality of the air. Air tests are done before, during and after removal in the removal area and the surrounding area."

"It has turned into a massive program, more involved than any of us (at the Physical Plant) had expected," Cruz said. Asbestos removal started at Williams in 1984 with faculty housing. Since January 1987, the work has continued nonstop, she said.

Shocked, counselors say colleges fail to stop rapes

(CPS)—Shocked when 16 victims of campus rapes came to it for help within a six-week period, the Rape Treatment Center of Santa Monica (Cal.) Hospital last week publicly asked college presidents to step up efforts to prevent sexual assaults on campus.

The center decided to issue its report, called "Sexual Assault on Campus: What Colleges Can Do," after treating the 16 women, an "inordinate number proportionate to our clientele," recalled Marybeth Rodeo of the center.

"Universities," she said, "have a responsibility to protect students."

While sexual assaults on the nation's campuses seem to be happening more frequently, colleges themselves do not know how to prevent them or treat them when they happen, the report claimed.

As an example, the report cited a case in which a rape victim at one college lived down the hall from her assailant for several weeks after the attack while campus officials ground through their disciplinary procedures.

Such intransitivity amounts to "reticentizing" the victim, the report said.

The Santa Monica report wasn't the only effort to draw campus attention to the problem last week.

Indiana University students rebuilt a "shanty" aimed at shaming administrators into funding a rape crisis center.

"Campus is not a safe place," explained junior Laurie Nicholson, "and a crisis center is a valuable system that other universities provide."

Keeping the shanty up, moreover, has become a political issue in itself at Indiana.

ana. It has been torn down six times and vandalized 16 times since it was first built May 7. The structure was almost destroyed in August when somebody threw a homemade firebomb in it.

Some believe the shanty has been vandalized to support Indiana basketball coach Bobby Knight. Knight outraged many -- but apparently not all -- Indiana students when he told an interviewer, "I think that if rape is inevitable, relax and enjoy it."

But the shanty, said Indiana alumna Mike Evans, was built to increase awareness of campus sexual assaults that happened long before Knight's statement.

A lot of awareness may be needed on campuses nationwide.

In a 1987 survey of 6,000 students at 32 colleges, one in six female students reported being raped during the previous year. The majority of the assaults were "acquaintance rapes" in which the victim and the assailant knew each other.

In the same study, conducted by University of Arkansas researchers, one of every 15 men said he had committed rape or had attempted rape during the same time period.

To stop it, the Santa Monica report urges colleges to adopt official policies that condemn sexual assaults, establish procedures to change living policies when the alleged assailant live in the same dorm, implement educational programs about sexual assault, improve security measures and start better programs to treat victims.

Such programs wouldn't be popular, if the persistence of Indiana's vandals is emblematic of general campus thought. IU's Evans doesn't have high hopes for the rebuilt shanty. "If we keep it up for the first two weeks of school it will be a victory."

Bolin Fellow seeks solitude of Billsville

by Dan Skwire

Many people used to be hostile and hostile of New Haven might find Williamstown a little slow. But for Stuart Clarke, a Bolin Fellow in the political science department, the peace and quiet of the Berkshires was exactly what he had in mind.

"The most important things [Williamstown] affords me are time and peace to do my work," said Clarke, who is spending this year at the college working on his dissertation. "I imagine there will be things I'll need or want that I won't be able to find here, but whatever shortcomings there are will be more than compensated for by time and peace."

Clarke comes to Williams from Yale University, where he is working on a dissertation tentatively titled "The Afro-American Dilemma: Liberalism in Black Political Thought." This spring, he will be teaching "Twentieth Century Black American Political Thought," a course based on his doctoral research.

The road to Williamstown has been a long one for Clarke. Born and raised in Queens, he entered Lafayette College as an engineering major in 1976.

"At the time, I guess, I was pretty good in math, so it seemed like a practical thing to do," he said.

Engineering a major mistake

In retrospect, however, Clarke said he feels the decision to study engineering was one of the major mistakes he has made. "I saw it as a way to make money for law school," he said of his one-time major, "but that plan kind of dissolved during my sophomore year, when I realized that my indifference to engineering was very high."

"The reason why I'm in political science now can be traced to the people I took courses with at Lafayette. I was always interested in humanities, and the work I do now could just as easily be in history or American studies, but my relationships with the faculty in college directed me into political science."

After earning his degree from Lafayette in 1980, Clarke spent a year working in South Dallas with Volunteers in Service to America. There, he helped to put out a community newsletter and work with disadvantaged tenants in public housing projects.

While he worked in Texas, many of his friends from Lafayette were continuing their education at law schools and graduate schools. It was after observing their experiences that Clarke decided to enter graduate school.

This decision posed one problem: grades. "My college transcript wasn't all I would have wanted it to be," Clarke

Continued on page 4

Junior Lynne Bremner works the ball past a SUNY Albany opponent in Saturday's rainy 3-0 victory. (Sola)

College Council kicks off new year

The College Council devoted its first meeting this year to the discussion of recurrent campus issues, such as the shortage of textbooks, and new twists on perennial favorites, such as the dining service's point system for purchasing food.

In-depth examination of issues will be saved for meetings after this week's, when the council will set its agenda for the year. President Tracey Blankenship '89 said he hopes to set a new, more informal tone.

"Last spring was a little too stiff for me," Blankenship said. "I'd like to see it more open, less of a once-a-week meeting, more of a body, a group of people who work together."

The council addressed the problem of the high cost and widespread shortages of textbooks. The council plans to send out a questionnaire to students and professors to find out about specific problems and incidents concerning the Williams Bookstore this year.

New programs
Blankenship applauded two programs new this year: the PE Independent jogging program and the food service point system. The jogging program allows students to get physical education credits by running independently for at least 30 minutes on 13 days over the quarter. Participation in the program, however, is limited to 20 students.

The food service point system is another instance where the council has succeeded in catering to student wishes. Students will be able to use points to purchase items at the snack bar and at The Log.

In hope of politically energizing the campus, the council is forming a non-partisan coalition with the College Democrats, Republicans, the Disarmament Forum, and Massing to encourage and facilitate voter registration for the upcoming November presidential election, and to give instructions on receiving and using absentee ballots. There will be a table in Baxter on September 26 and 27.

Alcohol Awareness Week
National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week is October 16 through 22, and the council is planning to create a campus wide awareness effort. Tentative plans include coordinating with the Dean's office, as well as other groups such as Peer Health and Ten-to-One, and initiating a panel for discussion of the issues surrounding alcohol use and abuse.

The meeting concluded with a moment of silence for Mabelle Reznik '90, who died in a car accident during the summer. There was a unanimous vote to donate $100 to her memorial fund.

Physics Prof. to build $135,000 clock.

PAGE 3

Rasputin's music box reviews
A-R-Kane's Sixty-nine.

PAGE 5

Women's volleyball spikes
Clark and Trinity.

PAGE 8

The Williams Record

Too Close for Comfort

The recent struggles on behalf of the deans and the housing office to provide sufficient housing for the class of 1992 have served as a pointed reminder of the college's need for a new dormitory. Rumors of a new upper-class dorm have been floating around campus for some time now, but Director of Housing Tom McEvoy reports that as of now no definite plans for the construction of new student housing exist. It's time the college started getting definite. The 30 extra members of the freshman class may have been a fluke, but the size of the student body has for some time exceeded the number of available rooms. If we should find ourselves with an extra 30 students, say, three of the next five years—an increasingly common phenomenon at colleges—there would be a terrible crunch on upper-class housing.

This, after all, is the issue of real concern. Although many freshman rooms can be, and were, subdivided to provide a fair amount of extra accommodations, most upperclassmen live in fairly small singles arranged in suites. It is difficult to imagine squeezing any more students into the Greylock Quad or Mission Park.

One alternative to additional student housing would be to encourage an increase in the number of students living off campus. Off-campus housing, however, poses at least two problems aside from opposition from town residents. It increasingly costs as much as $350 per person per month, as opposed to the college room rate of $310 per month. Off-campus housing also contradicts Williams' commitment, which it reaffirmed last year, to remaining a residential college.

The construction of new student housing would create the rooms needed by those students currently living in Mission Park living rooms and those surplus freshmen who next year will need rooms in upperclass housing. Ideally, that housing would take the form of co-ops or student apartments, since the increase in the number of students who apply for co-ops and live off campus indicates a desire for comprehensive housing units.

A new building would undoubtedly be expensive to construct, but if Williams wants to maintain its commitment to guaranteeing housing for every student every year, the resources must exist for meeting that commitment. The need for a new dormitory is clear, so let's get busy before our housing problems get too big to handle.

On The Record . . .

"It has turned into a massive program, more involved than any of us had expected."

—Christina Cruz, Special Assistant to the Director of the Physical Plant, on asbestos removal.

"I think that if rape is inevitable, relax and enjoy it."

—Indiana University basketball coach Bobby Knight.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words, and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication, either typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Chuck Samuelson at (413) 597-2289.

DEBBIE SNYDER, Editor in Chief

TODD OWENS
News Editor

TED HOBART
Sports Editor

JED SCALA
Photography Editor

KIRSTEN HASENFUSS
Layout Editor

TRAVIS PIERSON
Arts Editor

CHUCK SAMUELSON
Op-Ed Editor

MARC MCDEARMOTT
Sports Editor

RICH WARD
Photography Editor

MARY ILIFF
Layout Editor

KATIE ALBRIGHT
Business Manager

News Assistants: Stephanie Jones, Ann Manili, Scott O'Callaghan, Bill Savadov, Rob Weisberg
Sports Assistant: Marianne Naffey
Photography Assistants: Jay Steinman, Karl Thomas
Layout Assistant: Lisa Kaefer
Layout Staff: Karen Duggan, Elias Dugundji, Faye Park, Bill Philpott, Alex Shah

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Hallucinogens and Twinkies

by Laura Sheabeo

Settling into a chair in Chapin Hall, I was distracted from Dr. (Bert) Jaffe's opening Freshman Days remarks by shaggy Labrador trotting up the center aisle. Hmm. Bad sign — shows the administration people are too casual, too informal, not, in the final analysis, serious enough about our education. On the other hand, it shows that they're kind to and lenient with unruly animals, which makes them the perfect keepers of college students. Then again...

For two weeks I've gone back and forth like this, trying to figure out Williams by studying its idiosyncrasies. My scientific observations have led me to the following unbiased conclusions:

1) On Friday nights, the combined assorted beverages on campus could fuel the space shuttle.

2) Lehman West is the greatest entry on campus; if not on the face of the earth.

But these almost axiomatic statements still leave something to be desired. What is Williams — as a community of scholars, as a learning environment, as a place to play ultimate Frisbee? I doubt even a J.A. — the font of wisdom to a freshman — could define it exactly, but my preliminary impressions are as follows:

First of all, Williams is Big and Scary. My fellow freshmen did not seem to realize this when they arrived, and I remain awestruck by their composure. Williams is big, despite all the brochures describing it as a small liberal arts school, and scary by virtue of the fact that every day thousands of Williams people rush around doing things about which you know absolutely nothing.

Second, Williams is beautiful. Walking outside is like stepping into a book of postcards; the lines of the buildings are so sharp against the blue sky, and mountains are visible behind everything. Most days present landscapes that make you actually want to climb four miles up the side of Pine Cottle or bicycle to Vermont. The scenery works like a hallucinogen that way.

At least for the first few days, Williams is a continual series of errands. The registrar, the faculty advisors, and the professors all have to be bullied or pacified, processes that usually involve numerous signatures and paperwork. Simply finding the people is a challenge — I still don't know where Weston Language Center is. Finally there's the constant race to Spring Street to buy things you can't believe you forgot — like clothes — or things from home you now find incompatible with your sophisticated College Student Image — like clothes — or those essential food items, Twinkies.

All this, plus classes, leaves little time for the realization that Williams is also a place of live people. They may be just as overwhelmed as you, but they are open to interaction. Signs all over campus urge you to join clubs, try activities, or simply talk to people with interests similar to yours; the challenge is deciding what things to do. In the absence of a Chocolate Happy Eaters of Williams club (CHEW), I, along with most freshmen, must choose how to spend my free time.

But above all Williams is a place of learning, from hard labor, and the most succinct definition of the college that I have heard came from a person immersed in scholarship. "What do you think of Williams?" I asked my suitor. She considered and kept her eyes on her economics book, tapped her pen to the words "Nice place."

What do polls really tell us?

by George Marcus

The New York Times reported, on Wednesday, September 14th, that the most recent New York Times/ABC poll showed that among the 1159 "expected voters," out of 1,606 adults polled, 47 percent would vote for the Republican ticket and 39 percent would vote for the Democratic ticket. In other national polls the expected vote produces different results. Gallup reports a 49 to 41 percent lead for Bush. The same lead but many fewer "undecided voters." The CNN/USA Today poll reports a 48 to 46 percent lead for Bush. The Roper poll reports Dukakis with 49% and Bush with 43%. The polls, all taken during the same period, show Bush running ahead of Dukakis by a lead of 8%; 8%; 2% or running behind Dukakis by 6%. All polls report "margins of error" of about 3-4%.

There are three main conclusions we can draw from these results. First, political polls are big business. Second, not only the public but many polling experts do not understand how public opinion polls work — or if they do understand it, they cannot explain it correctly. And third, even when properly done, trying to predict the vote is a tricky business. I will take up each point in turn.

Twenty years ago only the Gallup, Roper and Harris organizations regularly conducted political polls. Today, not only these three organizations but all three major networks, most national newspapers (LA Times, NY Times, Boston Globe, Miami Herald) and many smaller newspapers are regularly conducting political polling. In addition, many newspapers and radio stations are pooling their resources to conduct state-wide as well as national polls. Hundreds of newspapers, radio stations, television stations and polling organizations large and small are now conducting and generating news stories from their political polls as a regular staple of their news reporting.

One reason that polling has become such a staple of the news media is that it enables the media organizations to control the news. By conducting polls the media organizations can ensure a regular flow of "news" that they themselves produce. To that extent, the media does not have to wait upon the news events of the day (and the horrors of the "slow news day"). After all, newspapers have to be printed every day with every page filled, and broadcast news has to go on the air with 30 or 60 minutes of time to fill — less commercial! Most media sponsored polls are honestly done, but that does not mean they are well done. So, what do we get from this explosion of polling?

This brings us to my second point: many of the people who conduct these polls do not understand how sampling theory works. The most popular story reported from such political polls is the "horse race" story. Who is ahead? Who is going to win? Should we accept such reports as face value? In a poll, even a poll based on a large survey of 1000 or more adults, to be believed when it shows Bush ahead 48% to 46%? Is that so? Well, assuming the pollsters can count, these percentages certainly describe the 1000 (or so) that have been interviewed. But we are really not interested in these interview results as a guide to what Americans in general believe. Thus, while we want to make the inference that what we find in the poll — the 1000 or more interviewees that make up the sample — and claim these results as an accurate description of all Americans (the population).

Sampling theory can tell us the risks often associated with generalizing from random samples to the population. Media polls often report these risks by providing a sampling error statement. You may have seen or heard such statements as "the margin of error of sampling error is plus or minus three percentage points." Do you understand what it means? Do you think the people conducting the poll understand what it means? Let us turn to an expert, Professor Michael R. Kagay of Princeton University who in a lengthy New York Times article on September 12, attempted to explain "sampling error" and other aspects of political polling. What follows is Professor Kagay's explanation of sampling error:

"[T]he sampling error statement is often understood to mean that any number within three of the percentages cited is equally likely to reflect the results that would have been obtained if all likely voters in the country would have been interviewed. 'But the single most likely result was, indeed, the Bush 48, Dukakis 46 result that was likely findings were Bush 47, Dukakis 47 and Bush 49, Dukakis 45, the two sets of percentages that each deviated by one percentage point from the poll's findings. Differences of two percentage points would be somewhat less likely, and three point deviations would be even less likely. Differences of more than three points would not occur more often than once in 20 polls, according to sampling theory.'"

So if the poll reports Bush leading 48 to 46 over Dukakis, that is the most likely result. Unfortunately, that is not true. That is not what sampling theory tells us. The explanation provided by Professor Kagay is perhaps the most widely accepted misunderstanding of how polls work.

Continued on page 4

Physicist adds new dimension to time

by Rob Weisberg

Professor of Physics Stuart Crampton is trying to build a better clock, but it's not one you can put on your wrist. The National Science Foundation has given him a $135,000 grant to develop a new atomic clock that can measure the movement of atoms at temperatures much colder than even Williamstown sees in February.

Crampton has also received grants from the Research Corporation and the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, which tracks satellites for NASA.

"Basically, what it takes to make a clock is something which ticks regularly," he said. "In the hydrogen maser [the particular type of atomic clock he is working on], electrons and protons in hydrogen atoms are vibrating relative to each other, and they vibrate very regularly. That's what is being measured."

Most atomic clocks are for navigation. Crampton said. If a ship reads a pulse from some source, and knows the time the pulse was sent out, it can figure out its distance from the source.

"In plain navigation at sea, it's not always necessary, but if you want a space vehicle to fly by Venus at just the right altitude, or use the gravity of one planet to fly to another, then you need the most precise measurement you can." The support from the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, he continued, is because his work can help their Deep Space Tracking Network.

A navigation problem. Precise atomic clocks are also used to track the movement of drifting continents. "It's essentially a navigation problem," Crampton said.

The grant from JPL was the first to come in for his current project, to build an atomic clock that functions at tremendously low temperatures, but, according to Crampton, the $10,000 from JPL was only enough to design and plan the maser. It was the NSF money that allowed the project, still a couple of years from fruition, to continue, he said.

Two students and one graduate, Katrina Spraggins '90, Phil Yu '89 and John Krupczak '80 are working with Crampton on the new hydrogen maser.

"We're still just designing it, we've been working steadily since April," Crampton said.

The true NSF interest is not in the clock itself, but in the fact that the clock can work at such extremely low temperatures as -260 degrees Centigrade.

"The clock times the atoms themselves, which behave very differently at these temperatures," Crampton said. "Building this clock is the only way to get at the fundamental physics involved; this will allow us to experiment with this kind of physics."

Crampton's first work with atomic clocks came at Harvard, where he was a graduate student from 1960 to 1964. "The connection between physics and timekeeping had always been an interest of mine," he said. He came to Williams in 1965, interested in teaching at a small college and researching the connection between physics and timekeeping. By focusing on atomic physics, which does not require an accelerator, instead of nuclear physics, Crampton could work at a small college. He said that his present project is a combination of his work back at Harvard and some ideas he had about 10 years ago about the low-temperature properties of this kind of atom.

The actual work with low-temperature measuring began in 1980, he said, and the large grants from NSF begin about that time. Crampton said that he has been receiving grants from NSF at varying levels, since 1966.

This level of grant support is not unusual for faculty members, Crampton said. He said he believed that about half of the science and math professors here are presently making use of grants for their research, and that every professor has received a grant at one time or another.

NSF is also funding $32,690, which Williams has agreed to match, for the Precision Time Transfer Lab, which is being created at the school. Crampton said the lab, which will allow students to use atomic clocks for their own experiments, will be the only one of its kind in an academic setting. The lab's first use, he added, will be in a course, "Finding Time: Physics, Philosophy, Technology," that Crampton will be teaching along with Assistant Professor of Philosophy Alan White and Assistant Professor of Physics William Wooters. The course will focus on the nature of time.

"Time is a very mysterious thing," Crampton said. "There have been questions about it since Plato. It is there

House works on cutting edge of surgery

by Ann Manili

Donald House is trying to put computers on the cutting edge of surgical procedure.

House, an assistant professor of computer science, is developing a computer simulation of arthroscopic surgery on the knee. The simulation would allow doctors to "practice" the technique before performing a real operation.

"The procedure is very delicate and uses tiny instruments," House said. "Right now new surgeons are training on real patients."

'right now new surgeons are training on real patients.'

The relatively new technique of arthroscopic surgery involves the use of an arthroscope, an instrument which doubles as a light source and video camera, he said. It transmits images of the inside of the body to a television screen in the operating room. The arthroscope is inserted through one incision, and an operating instrument through another.

"Instead of the surgeon opening up your body, he works through very small incisions. It does minimal damage to the patient, who will be healed up within a week. It also lowers cost and reduces the risk involved," House said.

For the surgeon, however, the procedure is not an easy one, House said. He compared it to trying to cut out with scissors while looking in a mirror. "The number one problem is psychomotor coordination...It's not medical training at all, just learning a very special skill."

Like looking through a peephole

The anatomy of the knee also looks different through an arthroscope, House said. The surgeon can only view a small area at a time. "It's like looking through a peephole," he said. House said his part of the project deals with the problem of modeling soft tissue on a computer. He said his main contribution thus far has been the particle system approach. The tissue is represented as small particles interacting with each other, and House has succeeded in developing graphics using this approach.

He said he is also concerned with the "dynamics" of tissue, or how it responds when acted on by the doctor. He is working now to refine a simplified version of the model.

House conducts his research at the Center for Interactive Computer Graphics at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. He and his team have involved through Dr. Arthur Ellison, a well-known orthopedic surgeon. Ellison founded a company called Medial Simulations Foundation, Inc., in Williamstown three years ago. House said that Ellison first conceived the idea of building a simulator to train surgeons in arthroscopic surgery.

Ellison contacted companies involved in flight simulation, in which airlines use computer simulators to train pilots, but didn't get much of a response, House said.

Simulate a doctor's impact on knee

"The technology is miles apart," House said. "The main difference is in simulating an airplane, you don't have to simulate what you're flying through. It's just open air. But in surgery that's the most important thing—you want to simulate the effect of what the doctor is doing on the knee."

Ellison then approached House, who began his research during a sabbatical

Assistant Professor of Computer Science Donald House working at his computer. House is developing a computer simulation of arthroscopic surgery. (Ward)

In 1986-87. "My main interests are in modeling and in computer graphics," House said of the project's appeal. "I worked in industry for ten years, simulating engines and electrical power kinds of things, but it was still simulation."

'You want to simulate the effect of what the doctor is doing on the knee.'

Unfortunately for his research, the Medical Simulations Foundation has gone out of business, House said. He said he has obtained funding from the

Professor of Physics Stuart Crampton in the lab where he is developing super accurate, low temperature time-keeping instruments. (Ward)

Kalamazoo College. Cheesy Olympics. A Summer Olympics like no other was held last month at Kalamazoo College, Michigan. For their second annual Rat Olympics, 50 Kalamazoo psychology students have trained 11 white rats to crawl across a 2-foot-long, quarter-inch-wide high bar, jump hurdles and climb a 5-foot vertical screen. Tempted by a piece of a chocolate chip cookie, the rats in the Tri-Rathlon also had to climb a 5-step ladder and make their way through a tunnel and a pan filled with an inch of water.

Professor Lyn Raible said that the Olympics were started as a way to teach her students about learning and conditioning, but that it turned into a sensitivity seminar as well.

"In some of my classes we do live animal experiments with the rats and I found this teaches sensitivity," Raible said. "They realize that rats have personalities and feelings, and it makes them think twice before they do their experiment."

The competitors were all females, Raible said, because male rats are too ugly, fat, and lazy. Although no overall winner was announced, the consensus among the crowd of 75 was that the champion was Elle Dopa, named after L-Dopa, a drug substitute for dopamine, a brain chemical.

Indiana University. Contra War. Someone is conducting an anti-war campaign against video game machines in and around the Indiana University campus. In two calls to the Indiana Daily Student, IU's campus newspaper, an anonymous man said he vandalized a video game called "Contra" at Indiana's Memorial Center to protest the Reagan administration's "illegal and immoral human rights violations" in Central America. The caller also took credit for damaging a "Contra" game at a video arcade near the IU campus. The caller, who jammed gum into the machines' coin slots, said the campus game would be "permanently" destroyed if it were not removed. But Bally Corp., the owner of the machines, refuses to remove them. The game, which features Rambo-like soldiers fighting in a jungle, is not political in any way, says Chuck Stapleton, who manages the machine in the IU Union for Bally.

Compiled from College Press Service and college newspapers.

What do you think of the new Dining Service Point System?

"Points should be allocated inversely proportional to the percentage of body fat per body weight." — Jason Priest '91

"You should get points for meals you don't eat, instead of having to buy them." — Fiona Smythe '91

"Are they redeemable at the spirit shop?" — Tim Haines '91

"There must be something wrong with the food bar when you always finish your food in line." — John McKeon '91

"I really don't understand the point." — Robin Lloyd '91

"I think it would be a better idea to credit all meals you don't use to your point system." — Matthew Fair '91

GATES REAL ESTATE
"Berkshire Properties"

Vacation — Lake Related
Farm & Residential

(413) 862-4565
(413) 269-6585

Brokers:
Nancy Gates
Jack Gates

Associate:
Ken Cronin

2 for 1
an EVERYDAY Film Developing Special

- FREE 2nd set of prints. (at time of developing)
- 4"x6" superprints or 3 1/2"x5"
- 24-hour service (ask for details)

Photoworks Building
4 Water Street
Williamstown, Mass
413-538-3131

SPIRIT SHOP
280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"

Schmidt's cans $8.99/case + deposit
Rolling Rock bottles $12.99/case + deposit
Labatts cans $14.50/case + deposit
Ice cold kegs in stock
Low prices

Monday - Saturday 9am to 11pm

Bush

Continued from page 1

many campus denizens, unrepentantly resentful of Reagan, wonder where he was when they needed him.

"The question is, where has he been for the last eight years?" asked Michael Edwards of the National Education Association. "For a lot of people, it is going to take some convincing, and they're going to doubt his credibility."

But Terrell Bell, President Reagan's first Education secretary, noting vice presidents are supposed to play subversive roles, didn't think it fair to say the vice president should be responsible for the president's policies.

Although Bush avoided criticizing the Reagan administration's education policies in public, Bell said, he did so often during cabinet meetings.

"I believe he will continue to emphasize the value of education for all people," said Bush advisor Shirley Gordon, president of Washington's Highline Community College.

"Just the phrase 'education president' indicates he wants to give education a higher priority, a different emphasis than we've seen under President Reagan," said Dr. Richard Rosser of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

And even Bush keeps a delighted the vice president is paying attention to them, meeting with them and including them in his speeches.

"That he speaks to education is a healthy sign," said Lieberman of the USSA, perhaps one of the Reagan administration's most outspoken education critics.

"I'm delighted he's put so much attention on education," added Prof. Olorio from California's Mission College, another Bush advisor. "I think Bush will work better with education than Bennett has."

Still, the ACE's Timmons cautioned all the good intentions in the world won't count without cash.

The vice president's proposal to freeze federal spending for one year to reduce the budget deficit, she maintained, "would constrain the prospects of doing anything for education that's current and vital."

"The real gutsy stuff is what his priorities will be when it comes to budget requests," Clodius said. "It's well nigh impossible to determine what Bush will mean for higher education when you think about it in those terms."

"The next president must be ready to make education at least as important as national defense," said Rosser. "If he doesn't, we'll continue to have problems with education."

Marcus

Continued from page 2

How do polls work? First, sampling theory requires that the polling randomly select people to be interviewed (that means that everyone in the population has the same likelihood of being selected as every similar combination of people). Although there are many complicated designs, sampling theory is based on simple random selection. Many polls do not use random selection designs (for example, the Gallup Organization does not). The only difficulty with non-random samples is that we cannot know the accuracy of such samples.

but in any particular poll we will not know how good an estimate we got

Non-random samples do not sound very useful, so let's decide to use only random samples. Then what? Sampling theory provides a "long term" guarantee. Sampling theory tells us that if we take lots of random samples from a population then the results in these polls would cluster around the true population value. And, the larger each of the samples the closer the samples would cluster around the population value. Indeed, if we take the average of all these samples that average will be very close to the actual value if we were able to interview every member of the population. Technically, we would need to collect an infinite number of random samples, all at the same moment. Not an easy task! But that is one reason it is called sampling theory!

The sampling error statement tells us how close a group of samples of a given size would cluster around the population value. Thus, we should read a 3% margin of error to mean that most of the samples would produce an estimate within 3% of the population value. And, as Professor Kagy correctly tells us, 19 out of 20 times a sample would be within that range and only 1 time out of 20 would a sample produce a result that is outside that range. So far so good.

Have you caught where Professor Kagy went wrong? We don't know the number of people in the population who prefer Bush (or Dukakis) - if we did we would not need a poll. Thus, we don't know whether this sample is one of the 19 that is close to the true value or one of the 20 that is not. Professor Kagy is confusing the sample result that this poll is reporting with the true value of the population. Simple theory gives us the confidence that if we use random sampling we will - over the long haul - get the best possible results short of interviewing every single person. But in any particular poll we will not know how good an estimate we got - a good one or a bad one.

If the New York Times cannot correctly explain sampling error in a major story, what do you think of the state of knowledge in the media field generally (this question is an example of non-random sampling)? The best way for you to use the polls, since there are now so many of them reported, is to gauge the average of the many polls as the campaign unfolds. Any movement or shifts in public opinion, if they are random, are likely to show up in the overall pattern.

Now to my third and final point. There are many other risks in taking "horse race" polls seriously. When interviewed, many people will answer a question about who they would vote for. But many of these people are being kind and responsive - they have not yet made a firm decision. Many current polls are reporting 6-8% don't know or undecided. This is a gross underestimate of the volatility of the voting electorate. We have now come to another problem: if we interviewed 1606 adults, do we report the vote preference for all these people? Almost half of these people will not be voting in November. Voting turnout in Presidential election has been about 55% in recent years. Which of the 1606 adults will vote in November? There is no accurate way to identify the "expected voters," although each polling organization has devised ways of sorting out "voters" from "non-voters." If we underestimate the probable turnout this November, we will produce a Republican bias. If we incorrectly guess a high turnout, and keep more of the 1606 respondents as "voters" than we will produce a Democratic bias. There are other complications. Does the pollster ask the voter "how are you going to vote in November, or haven't you made up your mind yet?" or should the question be "if the election were held today, who would you vote for, Vice President Bush or Governor Dukakis?" Each version will produce a different result. Should we put the vote preference question at the end of the poll, after questions about issues, the state of the economy and so forth? If we do, we may be prompting the respondent to think about politics and, perhaps, generate some of the deliberation that may occur between now and November. Or, should we put the "horse race" question at the beginning of the poll so that the political questions do not shape opinion - at the risk of getting a very casual and ill-considered response?

even the best of polls provide only approximations of what is going on at the moment

Each polling organization makes its choices and each choice can move the percentages around.

This year's Presidential campaign has two rather unknown Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates (just think, did anyone - beyond Senator and Mrs. Quayle - imagine "President Quayle" a few weeks ago?). Much is likely to happen between now and November and polls can be helpful in telling us what the rest of us think. But even the best of polls provide only approximations of what is going on at the moment. And, most polls are not the best of polls. So, read poll stories with care and caution.

Professor Marcus is also the Director of the Roper Center/Williams College Public Opinion Program for Journalism.

Clarke

Continued from page 4

said. "Part of the problem was my first year when I studied engineering, but I also overestimated myself with student government, theater and radio. As a result, a friend and professor from Lafayette suggested I enter an M.A. program in political science to show that my college performance wasn't typical."

Clarke earned his master's degree from the University of Delaware in 1984. While there he taught some courses and acquired an enthusiasm for teaching that pervades his communication. His experiences teaching at Delaware convinced him to continue working for a doctorate.

After leaving Delaware, Clarke entered Yale in the following autumn. He appreciated living in a larger city, but missed the intimacy of the program at Delaware.

"I wasn't really thrilled with my course work there," he said. "There's not much incentive for faculty to pay attention to the quality of their teaching, and I was disappointed, because I had always enjoyed teaching. It just was a different experience, but it was passable."

Taught at Wesleyan

When Clarke's three-year fellowship at Yale expired last year, he assumed nearly full-time teaching duties at Wesleyan University. Although his teaching responsibilities reduced the amount of time he spent on his dissertation, Clarke enjoyed teaching and called it "a fair trade-off."

"I'm really excited about doing the course in the spring. I taught it at Wesleyan last year, and there are so many similarities between the two courses I would like to do again and do differently."

Clarke said he is not sure about his plans after this year at Williams. He does not expect to have finished his dissertation, and until he does, he said he will not accept a full-time position.

"In a way, coming to Williams is like going back home again academically. This is the kind of place where my most important and significant academic experiences have taken place. It's a beautiful setting, and I've been very warmly welcomed by the people I've met."

There are three million Americans alive today who have had cancer. And now one out of two cancer patients get well!

Join us with your generous contributions of money and time.

Commemorating 75 Years of Life

The Vusiizwe Players

South African play shows humor and drama

by Timothy Moore

"The road to freedom is a long one with many hills to climb." This line from You Strike the Woman, You Strike the Rock, the most recent production at the Adams Memorial Theatre, expresses the overall tone of the production. This theme is not very new or innovative, and is arguably overdone, but this did not make the production any less enjoyable.

The story of South African Black women and the problems that are unique to them is a fresh topic, and although the political message is this production could have been clearer, the story, and particularly the players themselves, were interesting and vital. The background of the story is long and very involved, and the production did well not to mire itself in giving the audience a history lesson. There were some historical references in the production, but these were strategically placed at necessary spots, and a brief history of Apartheid and South African Black women was included in the program. This gave the players the freedom to be much more personal in what they chose to share with the audience. What made the production so enjoyable was the players' sense of the everyday and their ability to convey these things to the audience.

There was one sequence where the players acted out the scenario of a long bus ride, including characters such as the crying baby being changed by its mother, the obnoxious cigarette smoker in the next seat, and the woman insistent on having her window open regardless of the temperature. This was one of the many separate incidents in the production where the players leapt into their roles and acted ings they stirred up among audience members. The fact that a good deal of the production was not in English only caused speculation about how much more powerful this production would be for native Black South Africans, rather than making it less powerful for an English speaking audience.

The production was not without problems, however. It started with a flurry of noise and whirling lights which immediately grabbed one's attention, and the play kept that attention almost throughout, but it began to drag toward the end.

It seemed as though what had been put forth for the audience to see and evaluate was being reiterated and summarized, and that was not really necessary. Another problem was the excessive number of segments not in English, and some parts which were simply unintelligible.

These two problems were more than tolerable, though, because the production as a whole was so enjoyable. These women were able to make an audience laugh, as they themselves were laughing, in a situation filled with sadness. It is that talent, or strength, to find humor in the midst of tragedy that made You Strike the Woman, You Strike the Rock such a powerful production, and induced the audience on Thursday night to give a ten-minute standing ovation.

None of the songs were in English, but this did not detract from the impact the songs had, and the feel-

Local Movie Listings (Subject to change after Thursday)
Bennington Cinemas I, II, III Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179 A Nightmarer on Elm St.-Part 4 Big Bull Durham	7:10 & 9:10 7:05 & 9:05 7:05 & 9:10
Images Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612 Boyfriends and Girlfriends A World Apart beginning Friday	7:00 & 9:00 7:00 & 9:00
North Adams Cinema Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873 Tucker A Nightmarer on Elm St.-Part 4 The Great Outdoors A Fish Called Wanda Married to the Mob	6:50 & 9:15 9:10 7:00 & 9:20 6:50 7:00 & 9:20
Pittsfield Cinema Center Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639 Tucker (no early show), A Fish Called Wanda, Young Guns Moon Over Parador, Beirayed, Midnight Run Mon-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sun 7:00 & 9:30 Who Framed Roger Rabbit, Cocktail, Big A Nightmarer on Elm St.-Part 4, Married to the Mob Mon-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sun 7:15 & 9:15

Robert Adam and Kedleston on exhibit at the Clark

The exhibition Robert Adam and Kedleston: The Making of a Neo-Classical Masterpiece is currently open at the Clark Art Institute. Robert Adam

Arts

Kazan's autobiography combines the candid and the cathartic

Ella Kazan: A Life
By Ella Kazan
648 pages, illustrated, Alfred A. Knopf, $24.95.

by Travis Pierson

Ella Kazan has had his ups and downs. As an undergraduate at Williams College, he was a lonely outsider. As a stage and cinema director, he became one of the most powerful men in the entertainment industry. He then fell out of favor with many people in 1952, when he became a cooperative witness before HUAC. But he reemerged victorious with movies such as On the Waterfront, and a career as a novelist.

His lifetime of creative output has now brought forth his autobiography, Ella Kazan: A Life, and his personal epic is as illuminating and entertaining as his legendary fictional outputs. Ella Kazan was born in Turkey in 1910 with the last name Kazanjoglou. In 1912, his father moved his family to America after having established the Kazan Carpet Company, Inc. in New York. Kazan claims not to remember much about his childhood, other than that he was passionately wanted to be an American. "...to have what other American kids had, a daily life like theirs, to be accepted by them, to enjoy what they were enjoying."

Difficult early years
His relationship with his father, who wanted Kazan to enter the rug trade, was a difficult one. Kazan resisted becoming a merchant, and with the help of a teacher and his mother, he applied and was accepted to Williams College, where he says that his life was full of "unexpressed longings," felt that "Williams would be my liberated life;

Ella Kazan

I'd be on the right track at last." But Williams was not the haven he had pictured. In the years 1936-1939, Williams oozed with an aura of the New England elite and affluent. Kazan, with his carbanular complexion and decidedly unWASPish looks was not privy to much of the exclusive aspects of Williams, and spent his days in the library or working in the dining hall of a fraternity. He writes that at graduation in Chapin Hall, he thought about the cars, jobs, and girls that his classmates had waiting for them, and how he craved what they had.

Creative Success
His first great theatrical success was as the director of The Skin of Our Teeth and Harriet, followed by the film A Tree Grows in Brooklyn. He discusses each of his plays and movies in detail, and readily admits that the success of his first plays and films owe less to his direction than their actors and writers.

After Kazan had directed A Streetcar Named Desire for both the stage and film, and Death of a Salesman for the stage, he had the ability to choose any project he wanted on either coast. The projects he worked on were no longer simply directing another artist's vision, but works in which he had a stake and creative input. He had gained the technical skills necessary for filmmaking and no longer needed to rely as heavily on the abilities of other people to make his films.

In 1952, the House Committee on Un-American Activities in Washington called Kazan to testify. Kazan discusses in detail his eventual decision to voluntarily name names. Although he was shunned by people previously close to him, and subject to much mud-slinging for his decision, he stands by his actions, and resigned from around 1940.

Continued on page 6

Rasputin's Music Box

Reviewed by Garth Wolfson, Travis Pierson and Rasputin

Richard Wagner, "The Ring" Without Words (Telarc) CD only
Telarc discs, known for their exemplary quality (and occasionally cheesy titles - e.g. Bachbustlers) has come out with this incredible selection of highlights from the Wagner's Ring cycle. Much care has obviously been taken in the production of this disc, which unlike most recordings of "Ring" highlights, does not seem fragmentary by virtue of smooth transitions placed between all of the selections. But before you Wagnerphiles cry "blast phemy," take note that conductor Lorin Maazel has taken extraordinary care in making sure the disk remains true to Wagner's complex original. Every note is Wagner's own, set in a chronological, free-flowing synthesis beginning with the first note of Rheingold and ending with the last chord of Gotterdammerung. Most of the music that was originally written for orchestra without voice is included, and that which isn't often uses instruments to double for the absent voices. Recorded by the Berlin Philharmonic in December 1987, the performance is both emotive and subtle. This is definitely one of the best classical CDs released this year. -TP

Sonic Youth, Sonic Death (SST)
Sonic Youth's new LP is a refreshing break from the busy, refined, and, yes, more subdued post-punk neo-psychedelia evidenced in their most recent releases. It's a compilation of live sessions representative of early Sonic, 1981-83, set in a raw and unadorned framework of discord and atonal sound. The spirit of Sonic Youth is still heard, however: although more angry and powerfully neurotic, the music has an immediate effect on the psyche, even if it is a disturbing one. Early Sonic is an intense musical experience, but not for the easy-listener. Dear to those with open minds, Sonic Death provides an assault on the senses that will leave you stunned. -GW

McCarthy, "Should the Bible be Banned?" (September 12) Import only McCarthy, a indie band from England is still little known in the states but they are quickly making their name known in American urban centers and elsewhere. This politically oriented quartet, armed with three guitarists and one drummer simultaneously assaults with a wall of sound impact and seduces with the lead singer's slightly effete voice and humorously morbid lyrics. This new gem, a two-minute saga about a murderer inspired by Cain and Abel is a perfect example of this band's ironic wit and brilliant guitar playing which brings something new to the currently stale four-piece band format. -RP

Arts in view

Tonight, Artist Signe Stuart will present a lecture and slides about her work in Lawrence 231 at 8:00 PM. Stuart works primarily with thin layers of acrylic paint, as well as collage. Her lecture will emphasize the roles of rationalism and preconception in concert with intuition in the making of art... This Friday at the Log, Sammy Brown will perform old and new piano and guitar music. It starts at 9 PM...

Robert Adam, Design for the South Front, 1760.

was the designer and architect of Kedleston Hall, Derbyshire, England, which is considered the finest surviving example of his skills. The house was built more than 200 years ago by Nathaniel Curzon, first lord of Kedleston since the twelfth century. In 1760, two years after Curzon inherited the property, Adam was placed in charge of designing a grand new house and the grounds surrounding it. The surviving collection of architectural drawings, more than thirty of which are on view in the current exhibition, is one of the finest in any English country house. They include not only plans, elevations, and sketches for walls, ceilings and furnishings but also designs for pleasure grounds and garden buildings - a heaegon temple, a grotto, a peasant house, a cold bath and a boat house.

In connection with the exhibition, a symposium will be held Saturday at 2 PM on Saturday. Speakers will be: Ceresse Jackson-Stops, architectural adviser to the National Trust and organizer of the exhibition; Joseph Rykwert, chairman of the Ph.D. program of architecture and professor of architecture, University of Pennsylvania; and John Harris, curator and author, The Architect and the British Country House. Admission is free.

GREAT AMERICAN SMOKEOUT

TAKE A BREATH ON NOVEMBER 19

the Cottage

CLOTHING • JEWELRY
POSTERS • CARDS
BEDSPREADS • RUGS
BASKETS

South Street
Pittsfield

OPEN 7 DAYS
SINCE 1989

Water Street
Williamstown

THE CLIP SHOP

Just for you...

A Warm Welcome and Best Wishes for a Successful School Year To All The Students and Faculty of Williams College.

• Hair Salon
• Perms
• Color
• Eyebrow
• Eyelash
• Makeup
• Hair
• Nail
• Manicure
• Pedicure
• Hair
• Waxing
• Hair

40 SPRING STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
458-5612

125 NORTH STREET
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
443-9639

132 NORTH STREET
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
443-9639

WE ARE A SEABASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER. THE SALON THAT MAKES THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OK AND EXTRAORDINARY FOR MEN AND WOMEN

RICHARD D. SIMPSON

G. VINCENT CONVILLE

the College Book Store

of Williamstown, Inc.

BETSY BURBANK

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4808

Star Performer Dinner

On Thursday, September 15, a Special Dinner was prepared for the following people in Baxter Hall. The purpose for this special meal was to thank these people for the extraordinary commitment and responsibility they displayed last year. Because of these efforts we in Dining Services had a very successful year, and hope for nothing less this year with such great people returning.

Anderson, Martina
Gannon, Nancy
Neicht, Phil
LeLong, Bruce
McCabe, Gil
Mitchell, Billy
Pachonka, Tim

Class of 1989

DaSilva, Marcelo
Hoch, Bill
Langner, Eugene
Manos, Christina
Millan, Felipe
Newton, Blair
Ritz, Steve

Class of 1990

Bachelder, Carolyn
Cressman, Derek
Harris, Phil
Mower, Amy
Ouchterloney, Megan
Twombly, Tim
Vander Ploeg, Ed

Class of 1991

Barry, Brenda
Allison, Beth
Becker, Jesh
Christoferson, Laurel
Cole, Carin
Cox, Michael
Gindling, Stephen
Heins, Mathew
Holderman, Chris
Huang, Tim
Hurley, Tara
Lee, Andrea
McRae, Bill
Osborne, Caitlin
Sanders, Michelle
Carr, Cathy
Colby, Brienne

Howard, Jon
Hudson, Lynn

Cox, Chris
McKenzie, Francine
LaPorte, Mike
Lefko, Stephi
Osanya-Mynneque, Rayola
Pettway, Dawn
Schroeder, Robert
Kim, Peggy
Sessions, Alex
Yu, Yusong
Yu, Jessica
Zimmerman, Heidi
Vesneck, Michelle
Folsey, Joel
Hansen, Kris

EST. 1901

Williams Corp.

PROPRIETARY • FURNITURE • FURNISHINGS • SPORTING GOODS

Levi's

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Rackel Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

Kazan's A Life

Continued from page 5

He writes that this part of the book was the most difficult part to write, and he does not try to justify his actions, but he persuasively demonstrates his political concepts and the validity of his decision. Kazan, after number of other successful films such as East of Eden and On The Waterfront, started exploring some more personal themes in his work, and traveled to Eastern Europe a number of times to explore his own heritage, and eventually create the novel and movie, America, America, which he names as his favorite film. After a few more films, Kazan turned exclusively to writing, and has written several best-selling novels, including The Arrangement.

Expressive detail One of the facets that makes Kazan's book so rewarding is the portraits of certain people in his life. Tennessee Williams, Clifford Odets, Arthur Miller, Marlon Brando, and his wife Molly, are treated not always with gushing love, but with a deep respect and honesty that seems to give dimension to their lives and characters. He also includes accounts of Marilyn Monroe, James Dean, John Steinbeck, and Tallulah Bankhead, among many others, which are sometimes loving and sometimes brutal in their frankness, but which also seem a step above kiss-and-tell titillation. Kazan claims to write this book out of a need to reassess his own life, and in order to do that he must present people as he knew them.

The book contains incredible detail from all parts of his life and can be attributed to Kazan's many diaries and journals which he kept throughout his life and from which he occasionally quotes directly. Ella Kazan: A Life presents its author as a sometimes angry and self-admittedly unloving man, but also as a compassionate and extremely wise one.

Towards the end of the book, he writes "People have often accused me of being selfish and self-centered. They're quite right. All artists are. They protect like hell what's most precious for them—the privilege to exploit their full range of curiosity. On the other hand, in my case, brought up as I was, I also wanted a steady home, a good, strong roof over my head," and "I imagine that, from time to time, you've thought my book unfair, ugly, and hateful. Here and there it is vulgar too, but that's a word from which I don't shrink. I've tried to tell the truth about the people I've known but especially about myself."

Kazan's document of his life and search for a philosophy offers a vision of humanity as rewarding as any novel and speaks with a voice of authority that seems to keep a knowing handle on the essence of humanity.

A few "quilt tips"

Hide all ashtrays, matches, etc. Lay in a supply of sugarless gum, carrot sticks, etc. Drink lots of liquids, but pass up coffee & alcohol. Tell everyone you're quitting for the day. When the urge to smoke hits, take a deep breath, hold it for 10 seconds, & release it slowly. Exercise to relieve the tension. Try the "buddy system," and ask a friend to quit too.

TAKE A DAY OFF...

...from smoking. Join the Great American Smokeout on Thursday, November 15. Millions of Americans across the country will make a fresh start and try not to smoke for 24 hours. How about you? Or, if you don't smoke, adopt a smoker for the day and promise to help that friend get through the 24 hours without a cigarette!

84 (10/88) NO 5680 LE

SAVING BABIES...

Famous model IMAN talks about babies:

"I don't believe there is anything more beautiful. But the death rate for Black babies is shockingly high! If you think you are pregnant, go to a doctor right away. The March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation works to save babies, but you have to help. For more information, contact your local March of Dimes chapter."

Support March of Dimes

THE ARTS SECTION PAGE 5

*MOVIES

*MUSIC

*THEATER

*DANCE

*ART

*BOOKS

The Williams Record

MOUNTAIN BIKE SALE

Bicycle Repairs

the Mountain Goat

130 Water St.,
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-6445

Complete repairs on all styles of bicycles

VISTA

VOLUNTEERS BRING OUT THE BEST IN AMERICA

VISTA (Volunteers In Service To America) offers you the challenge of a one-year full-time commitment to fight poverty in America. Use your education and your talents to help the poor. Gain experience while developing your skills. Additionally, VISTA volunteer service qualifies you for deferment of many student loans and for partial forgiveness of National Direct Student Loans. By the end of your service, you'll know the satisfaction and accomplishment, the confidence and pride that VISTA offers—the opportunity to truly make a difference. Join VISTA. Serve in the U.S.A. For more information on VISTA, call 1-800-424-8867.

VISTA is a part of ACTION

Jeff Heuer '89 launches a drive on the par four thirteenth hole at Taconic Golf Club on Sunday, part of the team's two-day tourney. (Ward)

Golfers hack to ninth place on home course

by Ted Hobart

Home was certainly not sweet this weekend for the golf team at the Taconic Golf Club. The squad placed ninth out of fifteen teams in the two-day Williams Invitational Tournament.

The finish was particularly disappointing because the Ephs were unable to capitalize on the advantage of playing on their home course—knowing how to read each green, how to play each hole. No Eph even mustered a score below 80 on either day.

Salem State took the team title with a five-man, two-day total of 608, followed by St. Lawrence at 612 and Amherst at 628. Williams ninth-place was 663. Kevin Pleuch won the individual low score honors with rounds of 73 and 74 for a 147 total, followed by Salem State's Tom Tobin with 150.

Leading the host team was sophomore Sean Seguin, who fired matching rounds of 81 on both days. The Canadian native's first round was marred by a two stroke penalty for hitting the wrong ball. After pushing his drive into the woods on the par five tenth hole, Seguin hit his second shot not knowing that one of his opponents had duffed his second shot into the woods. The ball was the same brand but a different identifying number. Seguin neglected to check the number and thus incurred the penalty.

Co-captain Tim Frechette '89 was next in for the Ephs, with a first-round 83 followed by 81 on Sunday for a two-day 164 total. Sophomore Mike LaPorte fired rounds of 86 and 84 for 170 and the third Eph finish. Classmate Matt Walter posted scores of 85 and 89 for a 174, while Jeff Heuer '89 shot a frustrating 93 on Saturday but redeemed himself with Sunday's 82 for 175 total.

Williams B squad combined for a twelfth place tourney finish. Seniors Rob Shapard and co-captain Ian Lapey, along with sophomores Chris Perry and Scott Eckert and freshman Jeff Alexander combined to make up the second unit.

Coach Rick Pohle was disappointed but not upset at his team's performance. "It's a depth situation. We've got a lot of young guys out there (six of the ten Ephs were sophomores or freshmen)," said the pro at Taconic Golf Club.

Pohle compared the situation the young players face to a baseball pennant race. "The guys that have been there before find a way to win; the other guys find ways to lose. Some of our guys found ways to play badly. They know they're playing badly. I don't have to tell them." Pohle also stressed that Taconic is a very difficult and frustrating course for players who are not well used to it.

This weekend the squad travels to Middlebury to play in the green mountains of Vermont. Pohle said he will likely take players who have not played in this situation before in hopes of getting them battle-tested, asserting "We'll get better. There's no doubt about it."

Tennis tops Mohawks 8-1 in cakewalk

by Julie Jacobson

The women's tennis team scored a convincing 8-1 win over North Adams State on Saturday, despite bad weather and the absence of number one player Amy Davidson '90.

Heading the Williams lineup, senior captain Missy Crouchley easily defeated number one Mohawk Marie O'Sullivan, 6-2, 6-1. In the two and three sets, Beth Lash '91 and Hillary Cairns '92 crushed their opponents in 6-0, 6-1 and 6-0, 6-0 matches, respectively.

Katherine Stearns '91 did not drop a game in her rout at number five, either. Sophomores Lisa Brayton and Ashley Clarey rounded out the undefeated singles with 6-1, 6-2 and 6-4, 6-0 victories.

With the singles victories complete and the match win sealed without the loss of a single set, the top seven got to take a break as some younger players took over the doubles. Miriam Marcus '91 and Abigail Lash '92 won easily in the first doubles, dropping only three games in two sets. The number two team of Kristen Forbes '92 and Kim Rice '91 won in straight sets as well, 6-1, 6-1.

The only Eph loss of the day occurred in the last match, at number three doubles. Stephanie Salmon '92 and Sophia Muir '91, after splitting the first two sets, lost a tiebreaker which was substituted for the third set. This move was made because of time constraints incurred when the match was moved indoors because of rain.

Coach Gail Ramsay was very happy with the victory, explaining, "Williams was just too strong for North Adams. Hopefully our next match will be a little tougher." The team is trying to improve on last year's 6-4 mark in an up and down season. Last year the netters won the Little Three Title and finished a strong fifth in the New England tournament. The next test for the squad comes this weekend at Vassar.

Men's soccer gears up for Middlebury showdown

continued from page 8

The game took a while to warm up, even though the Ephs were " itching to get the season underway," according to Masters. The first goal came 23:27 into the first half when Sam McIlvain '90 served the ball to Masters, who then assisted Peter Lyn '91 for the Eph's first goal of the season. Only two minutes into the second half, Masters once again took control, stealing the ball on Hamilton turf. He drove it down the field and passed it to Brooks, who turned in the second and last goal of the game 2:36 into the second half.

Coach Russo cited the performance of the defense, led by Colthman and Black, and the performances of Lyn, Rob Lake '91, Andy Stern '90, and John Walker '90 as key to the team's success.

'Out to get us'

The win serves as an important morale booster as the team prepares to face Middlebury this weekend, a game which Black and Masters have predicted will be their most challenging of the season. Middlebury finished second in New England last year behind the Ephs and, Black says, "They're out to get us—everyone wants to beat the number one in New England." In addition, Middlebury has a 2-0 record so far this season.

Masters believes that this year's team has the potential to do even better than last year's, since it has several returnees and promising freshmen. Also, the team is excited about its new Assistant Coach Peter Mulder '86. Ranked second nationally in Division III, with a 1-0 record, the Ephs are optimistic—and they seem to have reason to be so.

Women ruggers fall to crafty alumnae 10-0

by Laura Whitman

This weekend the WWRFC welcomed back its venerable alumnae, the Used Bagges, for the annual reunion match and traditional festivities. Bagges came from far and wide, casting aside briefcases and support hose in favor of their old maroon and gold jerseys. This year, experience proved too much for the youth and exuberance of the collegians, as the Bagges triumphed 10-0.

Due to WWRFC mistakes, the doddering Bagges quickly took the offensive during the A-side period. Ann Marie Plankey '88 brought the ball near the try-line amid fierce rucking and mauling. The scrum was for the most part Bagge controlled, under the superb hooking of Diane Roberto '86. Becky Miller '86 nearly scored a try but was foiled by Gina Coleman '90.

The WWRFC was finally saved from the aggressive Used Bagge onslaught by senior Lauren Boesehenslein's deftly placed kick. All myths of the Bagges' enfeebled physiques were dispelled by the brilliant runs of Suzanne Biemiller '87, Kate Gerber '88, and Cindy Litton throughout the period. Only the fine teamwork between Cathy Lapey '90 and Heather Adams '90, and the desire to ham it up in front of senior Kerry Kilanders' mom's videocam kept the score at 0-0.

The competition was fierce during the B-side period, when the fully warmed-over Bagges demonstrated their fluid mastery of the game of rugby. Steph (Otto of the magical haidos) Jacob '88 got the ball out quickly, and Sharon Burke '88 had some good runs. Full-back Mary Peterson '87 kicked with precision and power, allowing the Bagges some defensive room against the desire of the WWRFC's led by scrumhalf Kara Lynch. The Bagge boots were confidently countered by young upstart Katie Carr '91, who was always there in the clutch. Cecilia Malm '87 prepped skillfully and shook the confidence of the less experienced players.

It was a scoreless game until the C-side entered the fray, thus pitting the greenest of undergrads against the weariest of Bagges. The Aged Ones rallied, however, and emerged victorious. Sunny Edelstein '85 scored two tries, one of which was assisted by Otto '88. Mary Peterson '87 converted the first, bringing the final score to 10-0. Once again our beloved Used Bagges proved to us that, "If you keep on rucking, you'll never grow old."

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Academe

BY BARBARA LUNDER GILLIS/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

ACROSS	DOWN
1 Panier handle	1 Book of the Bible
5 Pen	2 Capital of Okinawa
8 Small container for liquids	3 Classics
14 Rose fruits	4 Gentlemen just below knights
18 Hit musical	5 Alley
10 Aunt, in Avila	6 Obsession
20 Actor Oscar: 1899-1976	7 Tibetan ox
22 Chinese nurse	8 Transplant expert
23 Part of a typing exercise	9 Aussie mar supals
20 — dixit	10 "Coalition" initials
27 Gompers or Gompers	11 "Golden Treasury" item
28 Berliner's 44 Down
29 Broad of pheasants
30 Pep up the punch
31 Post-physician from 32 — dithered
34 Cava or contracta
35 Fanfare
36 Alarm
38 Scrams
40 Carols
41 Innocent
42 Soil aggregate
43 Misfortune
44 Darling
46 Parrots
47 Norma or Charlotte
48 Troubles
50 Peace pipe
54 Lips
55 Converter
57 Epiphany trio
58 Old Italian cinn
60 Actress Pola
61 Postponed
63 Turkie or Mongolic language
64 Scatter
65 Smart, swift equines
66 "Three Lives"
67 Philbrick
68 Firth in Scotland
73 Tel —
74 Small hand drum
70 Pout
77 Thesmothe
79 Pilaster
80 MOMA display
81 Small talk
83 Companion of file
86 Curve
87 High degree
88 Desdemona's detractor
89 Old Italian cinn
92 " —
93 Promise, send no private end: Pope
94 Sliced or diced vegetables
95 River in Switzerland
96 Lackaday!
97 Of immediate interest
98 Wooden cap
99 Longa
71 Paris subway
72 Jazzy Jelly Roll
75 Pique
76 Any sudden aid
78 French art colony
81 False topazes
82 A Madison Ave. method
83 Ruse
84 Draw

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

"Oh, good heavens, no, Gladys — not for me. I ate my young just on hour ago."

REACH FOR THE POWER. TEACH.

No other profession has this power. The power to wake up young minds. The power to wake up the world. Teachers have that power. Reach for it. Teach. For information call

1-800-45-TEACH.

Recruiting Young Teachers, Inc.

Sports

Volleyball faces toughest test tonight at Chandler

by Bob Nishikawa
On Saturday, the Ephwomens opened their 1988 volleyball campaign with resounding victories over both Clark and Trinity. The key to both games was the great hitting by the Ephs tail front row.
"If our hitting percentage wasn't up," coach Nancy Roberts said, "We would have been blown out of the game."
Leading the way for the Ephs were captain Nancy Hedeman '89 and Shelly Whelpton '90. Other noteworthy front row performances were registered by Kathy McConnell '90, Laurie Hartsoe '91 and Holly Hedeman '92. Also joining this devastating quintet this year is Marianne Lande '90, an exchange student from Smith who racked up her share of kills.
Going into the first game against New England's seventh ranked team, Clark, the eighth-ranked Ephs were pumped. Already leading 7-2 in the first game, Holly Hedeman served up six straight points, mixing in three aces in the process and thereby putting the first game out of reach. Hedeman, who is playing on the front row with her sister Nancy, made quite a splash in her Williams debut, finishing the day with seven kills, four aces, and a block.
After taking the first game from Clark 15-6, the Ephs struggled a bit in the second game before finally prevailing 15-13.
In the second match against a tenacious Trinity squad, Williams used its superior size to pound away at the helpless Trinity Bananas. Only the tough defensive play by Trinity prevented a total wipeout by the intense Ephs. Assistant coach Mitch Wong '89 also noted that the superb setting jobs turned in by Shelly Whelpton and Ruth Burdick '90 kept the Bananas on their heels. The Ephs won the match with identical scores of 15-6.
Thus the Ephs are going into tonight's important match with perennial powerhouses Amherst and Smith at Chandler with an unblemished 2-0 record. Tensions are high, but optimism is contagious for the Ephwomens, who are trying to improve upon last year's number two ranking in Division III, and from all indications have a fighting chance of doing so. In the words of co-captain Whelpton, "We have potential to win ECAC's this year. Williams women's volleyball has never had so much potential and we plan to use it."

Men's soccer impressive in opening shutout win

by Marlam Naficy
It looks like the men's soccer team (fifth ranked in Division III last year) is on its way to another impressive season—the Ephs routed Hamilton 2-0 last Saturday in their first game of the season.

The Ephs may find their own act hard to follow. Last year's team ended with a 17-1 record, their only loss a 3-2 decision to Division I Dartmouth. They finished up the season winning 12 straight games in a row, and were Little Three, ECAC New England, and ECAC regional champions.

Furthermore, the Ephs outscored their opponents 46-8, and their coach Mike Russo was chosen as National Division III Coach of the Year. They achieved the most wins, the most shutouts (co-captain Rob Black '89, the most goals, and the most individual goals (co-captain Mike Masters '89) in a season. Finally, Masters and Dan Calichman '90 were first team All-Americans, and Doug Brooks '90 was an All-New England player.

Though, as Black stated, "We were clearly the better team," Saturday's win against Hamilton was still significant. Playing on Hamilton's slippery artificial turf (the squad's first game on astro-turf), the Ephs still managed to control the game, outshooting Hamilton 15-0 and allowing Hamilton only one shot on goal.

Continued on page 7

Football rolls over Bowdoin in scrimmage, prepares for Hamilton

by Ted Hobart
"On paper, it looks like we had a good day," remarked head football coach Richard Farley of Saturday's 35-0 scrimmage victory against Bowdoin at Exeter Academy in New Hampshire. However, as the tone of his words implies, the coaching staff has some long hours ahead of it in preparation for this Saturday's season opener against Hamilton at Westoo Field.

After the coaching staff got a quick look at the films of Saturday's action, it became painfully clear that much work remains to be done. "There were a million errors," according to Farley, "I'm just glad it was Bowdoin and not Hamilton."

Farley expressed his surprise that Bowdoin turned out to be such a weak opponent, especially since they returned to many players from last year's team, which spent part of last season atop the New England rankings. "They're certainly not a Hamilton caliber team," said the second-year head coach.

Although his comments may not sound like those of a coach whose team won 35-0, Farley did have some positive comments on his squad's performance. "I was pleased with the intensity we showed. The kids really went at it."

Goal line failures
The offense, expected to be the strength of the team, was able to move the ball effectively, as the score would indicate. However, the squad failed to capitalize on several opportunities near the Bowdoin goal line. Farley said the team will have to improve its goal line play because those opportunities are too precious to let slip by. "The score was 9-0 at the end of the first half, and it could easily have been 27 or 30-0," Farley noted.

There were several bright performances turned in on the offensive side of scrimmage by the Ephs. Senior Rob Neuner and sophomore Chris Hevesy both played outstanding, leaving the position of backup quarterback behind tri-captain Scott Kennedy '89 still hotly contested. While the spot is not decided, it is encouraging to the coaches to see such strong play from the reserves in the event that Kennedy were unable to play.

It is important to note, however, that the offense did not pull out all the stops in its play selection but rather kept operations simple. This was done in part because the scrimmage was mostly useful in evaluating personnel rather than plays, and also because of the desire not to divulge too many secrets to the Hamilton scouts in attendance.

The defense, which at this stage is the biggest unknown about the team, is still sending mixed signals to the staff. While it's hard to argue about a shutout, serious questions remain about this unit's ability to stand up to the strong offense it will likely face on Saturday. "We're basically a young team on defense. They're learning," said Farley.

The more experienced parts of the defense, the down linemen and the secondary, played more consistently, as expected. The secondary nabbed four Bowdoin pass attempts while the interior line shut down the run. The linebackers and ends were fooled a few times, according to Farley, but they still have five practice days this week to work out the weaknesses (working against one of NESCAAC's best offenses, the Ephs).

Tough first weeks
Looking forward to Saturday, the Ephs will start out the season hosting the Continentals of Hamilton, probably the toughest team on the 1988 schedule. Last year Hamilton handed Williams a 17-6 loss. Hamilton is one of few teams in the league that can match the size and strength of the Ephs up front, so the first contest promises to be very physical. Things do not get a lot easier in the following two weeks, as the Ephs travel first to Medford, Massachusetts to face the Jumbos of Tufts and their potent wishbone offense, and then to Hartford to counter the aerial attack of the Trinity Bananas, who last year walloped the Ephs 28-0.

Senior scrumhalf Marc McDermott chases down his Olde Fart counterpart after a scrumdown in Saturday's traditional alumni reunion match. (Scala)

WRFC alums have sweet homecoming

by Mark Stepals
After a good night's sleep the creators and defenders of Williams rugby traditions made their way to Cole field for that most traditional of matches—the Olde Farts game. The wily Olde Farts prevailed against all sides the WRFC could field.

The Farts fielded a quick and experienced side against the Williams first fifteen. The first minutes of the abbreviated half saw ball after ball won by the Olde forwards.

Especially noteworthy play came from Fart Prop 'Bone' (actual name and class better left unknown). Weak defense by the Williams fly-half allowed his opposite number to sweep past him a number of times. One break resulted in a ruck at the goal line from which lock Dan 'The Broom' Maynard '83 scored.

Controversial Call
Maynard's try was a watershed for the Williams men. After play restarted, the white-shirted forwards won a greater share of ball for their attacking backs. In one controversial play, fly-half Mark Stepals '89 snatched a loose ball and fed explosive center Bryan Baird '89 into a defensive gap. Baird beat two defenders before dishing the ball back to his number 10, who drew would-be tacklers out of position in order to hoist a floating pass to Senior Scrum Captain Sherwood Smith—five meters from the line. Smith touched down but, alas, Olde Fart referee Paul Hogan '86 ruled the pass forward.

Vets run up score
In the C-game ace standoff Denis Newcomer '87 consistently kept the ball available for his disciplined yet creative line, even after forcing two or three white shirts to commit to him. Newcomer opened up the scoring on a switch pass from Ed O'Toole '86 which sent him on a 50 meter dash down the sparsely populated center of the pitch. Three more tries were scored by veteran winger Mark Evans '85, Tompkins, and Chris Swindle '88.

If the third game was the appetizer, the fourth was the main course. The Olde Farts held nothing back and ran the ball from everywhere, well-supported at all times by the forwards, who beat Williams time and again to the breakdown of play. Transplanted scrum-half Gene Mazzaro '87 foiled sophomore Barry Clifford's attempts to provide his backs with good ball, and close support by flanker Hogan meant many a break behind the White forwards. Mazzaro scored the first try in the far corner which classmate Tompkins mirrored minutes later in the near corner. Tompkins, famous for keeping the ball alive, momentarily forgot about keeping his teammates alive and at one point lofted a pass in heavy traffic which only the kindhearted could call 'hospital.'

Living History
Forward Blake Martin '84 scored next but the Farts unleashed some of the swiftest wings in Williams rugby history. Andy Harris '88 and the balding blonde Evans. Evans had a number of searing breaks down the touchline, two of which resulted in tries. Wedged between the Evans duo was a gem by the weaving Harris.

The venerable Alexis Belash '81 completed the tally with a snipe around the blind side of an Olde Fart maul 20 meters out. Belash was in fine form as scrum half throughout the day, providing nothing but good ball for his backs. Combined with finesse kicking by prop Bill Mead '88, the Farts sustained the attack all day long.

Shades of the future were seen, however, as freshman hooker Ivan Fermon impressed everyone by burrowing into a seemingly stalemated maul and emerging with the ball before penetrating the Ancient Ones' territory. Though his run was squashed by the burly Olde Fart tight forwards, his daring inspired many. True, experience triumphed, but a great time was had by all. The beauty of the Williams-Olde Farts match is that everyone was the third half.

Next week Williams' regular season begins against the University of Massachusetts in the first of many difficult Division I games.

Women's soccer improves record to perfect 2-0

by Kerr Houston
For a while it seemed as though the steady rain that fell during Saturday's women's soccer match between Williams and SUNY Albany was going to wash out any successful attempts at offense by either squad. The Ephwomens, however, refused to give in to the adverse conditions, and eventually walked away with a solid 2-0 victory. Williams, now 2-0, clearly dominated throughout the game, hustling to loose balls, controlling the midfield, and outshooting Albany 25-4. It was not until midway through the second half, however, that the Ephs lit the scoreboard on a ball deflected by an Albany defender into her own goal.

Three minutes later, Liz Nasser '92 rolled a penalty kick to captain midfielder Lori Sehnen '89, who blasted the ball into the upper right corner of the Albany net for Williams' second goal.

Nasser also assisted on Williams' final tally, setting up junior forward Kelly Collins, who scored on a header.

The three goals seemed only just reward for the Ephwomens, who consistently outplayed and outworked their opponents. With Schach unveiling some dazzling moves and junior midfielder Susie Piper pounding dangerous crosses toward the Albany net, the Ephs threatened throughout the game. Williams also played "real solid defense," according to coach Lisa Melendy, who noted that defenders Karin Cole '91 and Jen Piansky '92 both turned in solid efforts.

"I'm definitely happy with the way we played," coach Melendy concluded, but she also stressed that "we have a lot of room to grow, a lot of work to do." The Ephwomens will try to get some of that work done in their next contest, at Skidmore on Thursday.

Men's cross country routs Panthers while women take second to Bates

by Steve Brody
The men's cross country team got its season off to a rousing start Saturday, running away from the Middlebury Panthers in an 18-45 rout. The men took eight of the top ten places in the meet, led by senior captain Oli McCabe's victory in 26:38 over the 4.9 mile course. In the women's meet, the squad overcame injury and absence to take second place (49 points) in a four team field, trailing Bates (26) but beating Middlebury (60) and Albany (105).

The men's race looked as if it might be competitive at the mile mark, with five Panthers running even with the Ephs' first six. But the Williams runners began to pull ahead on Varsity Hill during the first loop on the Taconic Golf Course, and they held six of the top seven places at the two-mile mark. McCabe pulled away from the field and worked the last three miles alone at the front for his twelve second victory.

South Street Struggle
Behind McCabe, freshman Bill McKinley battled Middlebury's Brian Schilling for the second spot. The two ran a riddle for stride up South Street during the final mile. With a little over 400 meters remaining, Schilling broke into a sprint, expecting McKinley to fade. But McKinley held on, and it was Schilling who fell behind, losing seven seconds down the stretch as the Williams freshman finished in 26:50.

Finishing the scoring for Williams were Dylan Cooper '91 in fourth, Dale Johnson '90 fifth, and Brian Coan '92 sixth. Williams also captured the seventh, eighth, and tenth spots.

the Williams runners began to pull ahead on Varsity Hill

Captain Peter Farwell was very pleased with the team's performance. "We ran in a good pack at the front," he said. "It's great to get the season off to this kind of start. Now we can go into the Invitational next week with some confidence."

Bates Unbeatable
In the women's race on the 3.2 mile course, Bates' top four dominated the race, taking four of the top six spots. Williams' Heidi Beebe '91 cracked the top three, with a strong second place finish in 20:34, just fifteen seconds behind Bates' Kerry O'Leary. The times this year were particularly fast, as Beebe's second place finish was faster than last year's winning time.

Beebe's finish was most encouraging for the Eph faithful, as she was hampered last year by injury.

"She had a great summer training," said coach Larry Bell. "She's the one to beat."

Second for the Ephs was senior captain Cathy Cox at ninth, followed by Andrea Cady '92 in tenth place, Mika Brzezinski '89 thirteenth, and Sherry MacAuley '92 fifteenth.

Cox Bell was not upset about the race, as Bates was nearly unbeatable and his own team was depleted. Ann Dannhauer '90 missed the race entirely, and last season's standout Anne Platt '90 is just coming back from a stress fracture.

This weekend the women's and men's teams host the Williams Invitational at Mount Hope Farm, featuring some of New England's top teams.

Captain Masey Crouchley '89 crunches a forehand in Saturday's 8-1 romp over North Adams State. Crouchley played number one in the match which was forced inside because of rain. See story on page 7. (Ward)

The renovation of Hopkins Hall is proceeding ahead of schedule. Construction will be finished by December. (Ward)

Consultant gives favorable review

By Soojin Kim
Williams' affirmative action program compares favorably with those of other schools, a consultant hired by the college said last Monday.
Vanessa Alleyne, the first of three consultants engaged for the Fall of 1988 to review Williams' affirmative action program, met with individuals and groups on September 19 and 20. She is the assistant dean of administration at Seton Hall Law School and formerly served as the assistant to the president at Wellesley College.
Last April, the college agreed to invite affirmative action consultants as a result of an agreement reached between the college and the Coalition Against Racial Education (CARE).
"All consultants give verbal reports to the president and then write formal reports," said Assistant to the President for Affirmative Action and Government Relations Nancy McIntire.
McIntire would not comment on the effect the reports would have on Williams' affirmative action policies until all consultants make reports.
She described her role as that of a listener, inviting suggestions on ways to enhance the Williams Affirmative Action program—specifically, to enhance efforts to appoint minority faculty.

At the meeting Alleyne listened to the concerns of five people: Professor of History Peter Frost, chair of the Asian Studies department; David Kane '88, two representatives from the Blackual, Gay, Lesbian Union; and Professor of History Jim Wood, chair of the faculty steering committee.

Small pool of minority applicants
Wood expressed a concern that the size of the pool of available minority applicants for faculty positions at Williams and at other colleges and universities.
"I think I can speak for 20 or 30 people when I say that there's frustration with affirmative action...a helplessness because the pool of available candidates is small and getting smaller," Wood said.
According to the National Research Council, the number of Black students receiving doctoral degrees dropped by nearly 27 percent over the last ten years from 1116 in 1977 to 820 in 1986. Of 12,517 degrees granted to U.S. citizens
Continued on page 6

Dukakis' new student loan plan opens to mixed reviews

By Michael O'Leary
(CPS)—Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis unveiled a plan September 7 to let students repay their college loans at a rate that depends on how much they earn after they graduate.
The idea—which in fact has been tried at a number of campuses—immediately drew mixed reviews.
Bruce Carnes, deputy undersecretary at the U.S. Department of Education, said it would "ask" students who got well-paying jobs after graduation.
He predicted students training to take higher-paying jobs would refuse to join the program, forcing the federal government to kick in dollars to cover the loan costs of lower-paid students who would never repay all that they owed.
Dukakis aide Thomas Herman was more enthusiastic.

"This is not only feasible, it is desirable," he said. "It will allow everyone who is qualified and wants to go to college to go to college."
"We're extremely pleased that one of the presidential candidates has come forth with a new and imaginative program for college loans for people from all walks of life," said Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.
Janet Lieberman of the U.S. Student Association, which represents campus student governments in Washington, D.C., said, "It's a very creative program to help middle-class families, but it doesn't really address the needs of low-income people."
"What low-income people need is grant money," said Dave Merkowitz of the American Council on Education.

"They're the least likely to take out loans. Both presidential candidates need to develop plans to address the needs of the neediest."
The Dukakis plan would allow any student, regardless of family income, to get a federally guaranteed student loan, repay it through mandatory payroll deductions during the student's working years for as long as they work, or "buy out" of the program at any time by paying a lump sum.
As a result, graduates who find jobs with high salaries could pay back more than the interest and principal on their loans, while low-income students may never pay back all they borrowed.
"The problem with (Dukakis's) plan...is it depends upon people who are likely to make reasonable incomes being willing to get soaked," Carnes contended.

Rosser believed the federal government will have to subsidize the program to keep it viable—something that Dukakis says won't be necessary—but in the long run would deal "with the student default question in a very effective way," thus saving taxpayers millions of dollars.
Because the government would take its payment directly out of graduates' paychecks, the default rate—at least theoretically—would be minimal.
"It's nice that under this plan you can graduate and go into a low-paying job like teaching and nursing and not worry about paying off your loans," said Lieberman. "We appreciate the creativity."
Yale University had a similar loan program for 3,600 students from 1972 to 1978, in which students could borrow a portion of their school tuition from the school and begin repaying it after graduation at a rate of four-tenths of one percent—or $4 per year—for each $1,000 borrowed.

Dukakis' plan, by contrast, would have students repay their loans at a rate of $8 per year for every $1,000 borrowed.
"We still think it's a plausible idea," said Yale's Donald Routh, director of financial aid.
Routh said Yale dropped the idea because it required massive amounts of capital to maintain it. Administrators figured it would take 17 years before payments would reduce the outstanding balance owed the university.
Yet fears that students anticipating a high income would not participate in such a program proved not to be true, Routh added.
Carnes' own U.S. Department of Education also has promoted an "income contingent loan" program, now being tested at 10 campuses.

In his last two federal college budget proposals, in fact, President Reagan asked Congress to replace virtually all Guaranteed Student Loans with income-contingent loans, but Congress, heeding educators' testimony that it was too early to tell if the idea is workable, opted for a pilot program instead.
Under the Reagan plan, all borrowers would have to repay all the principal and interest they owed in a prescribed time.
Under the Dukakis plan, loan repayments would come directly out of graduates' paychecks, much like their Social Security payments.
Graduates would not have repayments deducted from earnings over a
Continued on page 9

WCFM fund-raiser

station to replace aging equipment

by Rajesh Swaminathan
WCFM, the campus radio station, launched its biggest fund-raising endeavor in the last ten years at the end of August 1988. According to Paul McGreal '89, general manager of WCFM, $45,000 goal has been targeted in order to finance the replacement of existing capital stock.

Of the $45,000, $20,000 will be petitioned from the provost's office, McGreal said. WCFM hopes to raise the remaining $25,000 by soliciting from Williams alumni who were formerly involved with the activities of the radio station.

WCFM's last major fund-raising campaign took place in 1978, when a total of $15,000 was raised. The capital stock that had been purchased with those funds has not been renewed since, and much of the broadcasting equipment is in urgent need of replacement, McGreal said.

The costs of purchasing new equipment are not covered by the standard operating budget, which is obtained annually through college council. The budget funds are used to cover the maintenance costs of the equipment and for broadcasting.

McGreal said that many vital broadcasting components need to be replaced. Chief among these is the 18-year old transmitter, which has a projected life-span of only 15 years, McGreal said that the current transmitter may break down before the end of the academic year. Two mixing boards, used to coordinate various sound systems, will also be replaced.

Necessary to renew license
The station also needs to procure broadcasting equipment that the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) considers necessary for a station wishing to renew its license. McGreal said that all necessary purchases should begin next year, well before WCFM's license is due for renewal in 1990.

Money from the drive would be used to buy compact disc technology, which would enable the station to broadcast
Continued on page 7

Deep in the bowels of Baxter, WCFM DJ Stephen Brody '90 supplies tunes to the campus. The radio station is embarking on a $45,000 fundraiser. (Belliveau)

Provost Gordon Winston contemplates how to keep spiraling college costs down. Winston, who was appointed provost this year, has made a study of college costs. (Ward)

Provost hopes to slow rising college costs

by Justin Smith

College costs have been increasing rapidly, especially in the last eight years, because "the nation wants high quality education and is willing to pay for it," said the newly appointed provost of the college, Professor of Economics Gordon Winston.

Winston, a twenty-five year veteran of the faculty and an expert on the college's post-World War II financial history, said that the problem of rapidly escalating costs is an issue that he and the College administration will tackle in the coming years.

As the college's strategic economic planner, Winston stated that he will study ways to slow the rate of growth of costs rather than cut them. He said that academia is a boom and bust industry and the college must prepare for an inevitable economic downturn.
Winston originally studied English and worked in the financial industry after graduate school. He later returned to graduate school, studied economics, and received his Ph.D. in economics from Stanford before coming to teach at Williams. Since then he has concentrated on economic development and economic theory. In recent years he has become an expert on the financial history of the college and the accompanying periods of economic boom and bust.

Demand for education growing
The college prospered in the 1950s, Winston explained, because of a healthy national economy and increasing demand for higher education. More and more Americans wanted to go to school. In contrast, the late 1960s and 1970s were a time of hardship for colleges and universities across the country because of poor economic conditions. Demographic changes had only minor impact. In fact, Winston said, the demand for higher education has been increasing so much so that the applicant pool has been increasing each year despite the fact that the pool of teenagers has been declining because of low birth rates since the 1960s.

Although the last eight years have been a time of prosperity for colleges like Williams, costs have been rising in part because of what Winston calls "The Chivas Regal Effect." In the 1980s, according to Winston, Americans have demanded high-quality education as well as high-quality consumer goods. Such demand has resulted in greater curricular diversity and the addition of new classes, such as classes in Asian languages.

Winston said he believed the high budget deficits created during the two Reagan administrations are respon-

Continued on page 6

Record interviews
Kitty Dukakis.

PAGE 4

Music review: Jon Bon Jovi's incredible vision.

PAGE 5

Sophomore snares athlete of the week honors.

PAGE 9

The Williams Record

On The Record . . .

"I'm a young person with a new face, and to many people that is a good sign."

-- Paul Babau, candidate for the Berkshire County Commission and a North Adams State student.

"The problem is that [Hopkins] is not quite as subtle as if it were designed by Richardson himself."

-- Professor of Art Whitney Stoddard

"I'm wondering if the students adamant about certain affirmative action programs are themselves going into the field of education."

-- Professor of History Jim Wood on the problems of a shrinking pool of available applicants for faculty positions.

"It says something, it speaks to the whole issue... whether we're going to spend our money on Star Wars or star schools."

-- Kitty Dukakis, wife of Presidential Candidate Michael Dukakis, on the importance of budgetary issues.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words, and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication, either typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Chuck Samuelson at (413) 597-2289.

DEBBIE SNYDER, Editor in Chief

TODD OWENS
News Editor

TED HOBART
Sports Editor

JED SCALA
Photography Editor

KIRSTEN HASENFUSS
Layout Editor

TRAVIS PIERSON
Arts Editor

CHUCK SAMUELSON
Op-Ed Editor

MARC MCDERMOTT
Sports Editor

RICH WARD
Photography Editor

MARY ILIFF
Layout Editor

KATIE ALBRIGHT
Business Manager

News Assistants: Stephanie Jones, Ann Mantil, Scott O'Callaghan, Bill Savadove, Rob Weisberg
Sports Assistant: Mariam Naficy
Photography Assistants: Jay Steinman, Karl Thomas
Layout Assistant: Lisa Kaestner
Layout Staff: Karen Duggan, Elisa Dugundji, Faye Park, Bill Philpott, Alex Shah

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

The GOP offers opportunity to women

by Robert M. Howie

The term gender gap has been used frequently since 1980 to describe the growing difference between men's and women's political views. Women were more likely than men to vote Democratic in 1980 and 1984 and most statistics show Governor Dukakis outpolling the Vice-President among women. The prevailing theory is that the Democratic Party is more sympathetic to "women's concerns" than the GOP. Unfortunately although the Democratic Party supports surface women's concerns, the Republican Party is the place women should look for a new fresh approach to women's issues. Several symbolic issues loom in politics as key concerns. The first is the Equal Rights Amendment. Republicans have often been chastised for their opposition to this failed amendment. Unfortunately, extremist opponents like Phyllis Schlafly have distorted opposition to the amendment and intimidated that women should be allowed to "stay home" and not be forced to work. Other Republicans are opposed to the amendment on much more reasonable grounds. First, it is unnecessary. I realize many women view this response as a cop-out but the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the 14th Amendment clearly provide equal protection to women. Second, the Supreme Court has given a broad interpretation to the existing legislation and amendments. A new amendment could be mangled and used excessively by the Supreme Court. The whole issue of the ERA should be moot one. The existing laws can, when properly used, provide a solid equal footing for men and women.

Another benchmark issue which seems to hurt the Republicans is known as "comparable worth." The idea behind this concept is that people should be paid the same amount of money for similar or related work. One problem with comparable worth is that the economic market should be dictating salaries, not the government. For example, a teacher in New York City is paid more than a teacher in the suburbs because of economic conditions. However, we should insist on equal pay for equal work. Obviously if a woman and man work at the same job for the same number of years, their pay should be equal. Unfortunately, some people try to make Republicans seem sexist for not endorsing this concept of comparable worth. It is my hope that women will see the idea of equal pay for equal work as the reasonable solution and see comparable work as an unrealistic and unproductive answer.

These two issues have branded the Republican Party as an anti-women party. However, women benefit as most people do from Republican economic policies. Low taxes and economic expansion benefit working women far more than the high inflation and high tax days of the last Democratic administration. Working men's true interests lie with the Republicans because of the upward mobility supplied by GOP policies. When American business does better the Republican party does better, and men and women benefit from this improvement. While Democrats spend time pushing for symbolic or unrealistic legislation, Republicans have already enacted meaningful legislation which has worked.

Female Republicans and conservatives are prominent in America and the world. Sandra Day O'Connor, Jeanne Kirkpatrick, Nancy Kassebaum, and Margaret Thatcher are concerned about women's issues and have conservative or Republican philosophies. More Republican women sit in the House of Representatives than Democrats. Women's standing in the GOP has continued to rise. This year Manuella Reagan was the co-chairperson of the platform committee. A recent statement by a prominent Democratic Congressman sheds light on the Democratic view of women. Peter Kostmeyer (D-Pa) stated, "We're not going to Americans. The gender gap has formed, in part, because of a perception of Republicans as insensitive to women's issues. The GOP certainly must do more to encourage women to return in large numbers to the party, but women should take note of the Republican Party and its deep concern and support of real women's issues.

Robert Howie is the president of the James A. Garfield Republican Club.

Letters

Don't build new dorm; keep school small

To the Editor:

In last week's issue the Record called on the college to build a new dorm in order to relieve the problem of overcrowding. Without addressing some of the more practical objections to this, such as where on campus there is room for another building and where does the school have the funding for construction, I would like to address the problem at its source.

The problem on campus right now is that there are more students than there is available living space. Instead of increasing the amount of living space, why not decrease the demand on existing space by attempting to bring the student body back down to a more workable number? When I started Williams four years ago, there were fewer incidents of overcrowding. Yet since then, Thompson has become a residential house, singles in the row houses are being converted into doubles, living rooms into bedrooms and more upperclassmen have moved off campus. The student body is growing too big for the school.

There is no reason why this should continue to happen. In fact, given that, according to the admissions office, the national college population is going to shrink in the coming years, it would make sense if Williams is committed to accepting a given percentage at the top of the national pool; the number of acceptances, the size of the freshman class and therefore the size of the student body should be getting smaller not larger. But this is not the case. If we continue at this rate, we could, in fact, be sacrificing the quality of the student body in order to increase or even maintain size.

There is the question of economics to be considered. Can the school afford to stay small? But by the same token, would the increased revenue of more students really make up for the cost of building and maintaining a new dorm?

There is another theory: That the school should build a new dorm and then leave one dorm empty every year in order to renovate it. This rotation system would improve the quality of life in all the houses in the long run, but not, in theory, increase the size of the student body. An excellent idea -- and if this is what The Record intended in its editorial, then I applaud them. But as the saying goes, "Be careful what you wish for, for you may surely get it. How long will the school be willing to support the expense of not just an empty building but a commitment to increased annual renovations? At some point, isn't it likely that for reasons of money, all the dorms will again reach capacity?

Most of us chose to attend Williams because it provided an excellent liberal arts education in a small, rural setting. We would not readily sacrifice our excellence in education, not our liberal arts curriculum. Nor would we stand by and allow the school to relocate to midtown Manhattan. Williams is a close-knit, small community. This aspect of the school is something to be cherished as dearly as are high-quality academics. Are we that willing to sacrifice our small size?

Ann P. Carson '89

Will Avril change Haiti?

by Rajesh Swaminathan

In Sophocles' classic tragedy, Oedipus Rex, the city of Thebes is made to suffer for the sins of its ruler; the crimes of Oedipus bring down a deadly plague upon the innocent hapless citizens. In a metaphorical sense, this is what is happening in Haiti today.

The plague that pervades over the island nation, however, is not metaphorical; it is starkly real. Haiti remains, materially, the poorest nation in the Western Hemisphere; it is a society where illiteracy and unemployment, disease and hunger, ignorance and superstition have entrenched themselves deeply into the socio-economic fabric. Most importantly, its people have lived the past thirty years under a dark shadow of fear and repression, a climate in which political oppression of national politics; while "Baby-Doc" was less concerned with the maintenance of power through political repression, his conclusion did little to alleviate the misery of his countrymen.

Baby Doc was overthrown in February 1986 in a military coup that was headed by Lt. Gen. Henri Namphy; it was a development which could have heralded the birth of a new age for Haiti. Even as Duvalier fled to exile in France, Namphy promised to institute democratic reforms and lay the political foundations necessary for socio-economic recovery. But his military regime showed no signs of relinquishing its iron hold on the Haitian sociopolitical order. After the collapse of US-backed elections in November 1987, Namphy showed his true colors. He installed a civilian academy, Leslie Manigat, as President; then, four months later, he overthrew Manigat and seized power as a dictator. In the following few months, Haiti receded under violence and political terror, as government forces and secret police clashed periodically with civilian protesters. The orgy of blood culminated in an attack on civilians at the St. Jean Bosco Church in Port-au-Prince in mid-September of 1988, where 11 persons were killed and at least 80 wounded.

Even as the dictator's promise of peace and democracy drowned in the blood of innocents, Namphy himself was overthrown on September 17 in a military coup headed by Brigadier General Prosper Avril, who has long been important in Haitian politics. It is curious that he has come to power mouthing the same truisms and platitudes that fell from Namphy's lips two and a half years ago; the Associated Press reports that he "dreams of a Haiti where liberty will flourish," and where the economic stagnation in which the country is floundering will disappear. Even as he takes the reins of power, however, a vital question must be asked: will Avril actually institute the reforms he claims to value as Haiti's key to recovery? And is the change of government a meaningful one or is it merely cosmetic?

Avril faces a formidable number of obstacles as he attempts to stabilize the country's volatile political situation into one conducive to enlightened reform; the most important of these may be his true intentions and his murky past. He has had strong links with the deposed Duvalier clan; he played a key role in undermining Haitian democracy when he helped depose Leslie Manigat's civilian administration. Many holdovers from the autocratic Duvalier and Namphy regimes have been named to key positions of political responsibility in his Cabinet; perhaps the most important appointment concerns Col. Jean-Claude Paul, commander of the Desalines barracks, which has been guilty of human rights abuses and the propagation of political terror in the past months; Paul was also indicted by a US court on drug-smuggling charges.

It is also interesting to note that since September 17, Avril has cautiously maintained a noncommittal stance with respect to the growing levels of sporadic violence in and around the Port-au-Prince area; mobs have actively sought, found, and lynched several suspected or known Maoist sympathizers, while many political analysts in the State Department perceive the backlash as a healthy reaction, a necessary purge of all Duvalierist elements in Haiti, the skeptic cannot but notice that those who have been purged are of little political importance; they are, quite literally, small fry; prominent Duvalierists like present Foreign Minister Serge Elie Charles and present Information Minister Anthony St. Pierre hold Cabinet positions. In fact the elimination of a few Maoist sympathizers will placate radical opinion at home, while leaving intact centers of Duvalierist power untouched; it is possible that Avril may consolidate executive power into his own hands, largely undetected by a populace that would be generally more receptive to a man who would seemingly condone (if not actively encourage) the purges.

Additionally, political analysts in Washington foresee a clash between a clique of young reformist radicals in the armed forces and the enigmatic Avril.

The reformists have repeatedly pressed Avril with a number of demands aimed at eliminating all elements not conducive to democracy; Avril has met a few of their demands, but in a fashion which does not compromise either his claim to executive power or his ties to Duvalierist and Namphy cronies. He relied a number of officers linked to Namphy's coterie, the most notable of these being General Williams Regala, Namphy's powerful second-in-command. Again, this can be seen as consummately shrewd political decision which effectively contributes to distancing Avril from the Namphy regime; Regala, at any rate, would have had to go sooner or later. His intimate association with Namphy would have eventually disgraced him beyond repair. By removing him from political life, Avril increases his stature with the masses while tacitly warning his comrades from both deposed regimes that they are dependent upon his good offices. The move has also credited him with the reformist Army elements. Thus, a cycle can construe many of Avril's actions in the past few days as extremely shrewd politicking that could go far to gradually buttress his dictatorial aspirations, should they already exist.

Clearly, Haiti's road to recovery is a terrible one, beset with monumental problems; political stability and a just, democratic socio-political system are but two facets of the enormity of the country's woes. The economy is in shambles, virtually non-existent in any sense other than a level of fundamental subsistence. Furthermore, there is a great disparity in income distribution and a quasi-feudal social order persists.

Indeed, political instability is not Haiti's only problem; it is, arguably, its most important one. The turn of events over the next few weeks and months will irrevocably affect the socio-economic spheres of Haiti's life for years to come. Only with political stability, with a just and free society where the aspects of political oppression and violence are unknown, can a nation hope to address its other problems. One needs peace to accomplish all else; tragically, peace is a much-prized commodity that Haiti has seen little of in recent times.

If Avril is to lead Haiti on its road to recovery, above all, he must give peace a chance; he must allow a battered nation to redress the wrongs it has suffered over the last thirty years by means of a democratic milieu where the people reign sovereign. The burden lies upon his shoulders: this is the choice which will either bring solace to a wounded nation or plunge it into a fratricidal bloodbath that can only lead to the aggravation of all other problems.

Clearly, Avril is a man of ability; he has been credited with a remarkable level of intelligence and sophistication. Moreover, it would take an unusually seasoned political strategist to play the delicate balancing act he has performed over the past few days. It is that intelligence and experience that he could turn against Haiti were to be concretized any dictatorial ambitions. The events of the past few days have, indeed, done justice to his intelligence and depth of perception as a politician and as a political analyst; he has shrewdly bought time with all concerned factions while concealing that which he truly intends for Haiti. Though many of his actions seem to be tinged with that delightful wait of enlightened liberalism, the seeds he has sown could give rise to a decidedly poisonous flower. One has only to read between the lines, to take a long hard look at his statements and actions, to see that the impoverished, strife-torn nation of Haiti could very well vanish into the morass from which it shows signs of emerging; the lightless abyss of dictatorship, repression and terror.

We're an easy pick-up

Spring Street stores

Water Street stores

Colonial Shopping Center

Town Hall

The Williams Inn

Cole Avenue stores

The Williams Record

Attack calls into question campus safety

by Ann Mantil

On September 1, at approximately 10:30 p.m., a female employee of the Computer Science department was attacked from behind in the parking lot behind Thompson Biology and Chemistry Laboratories.

She was able to fend off her attacker by elbowing him and knocking him in the groin. He fell to the ground, and she drove away. The incident was reported to the Williamstown Police Department the next morning.

Director of Security Ransom Jenks estimated that only two or three such incidents have occurred at the college over the last five years.

"I think Williams is a very safe place compared to other institutions," Jenks said. "I'm sure the people who have been involved in the assaults and thefts would disagree with me, however."

Jenks added that Security Patrol areas such as dark parking lots two to three times a night.

Nevertheless, the College is going ahead with a three-phase plan to improve the outdoor lighting on campus.

In addition, one of the administration's new initiatives is the installation of extra floodlights in the Thompson parking lot the week after the assault.

Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards said that the college is currently in the second phase of its lighting plan. Phase one involved the installation of the pole lights near Mission Park. Pole lights are now being put in other areas of campus where there is a need, Edwards estimated that this project would be completed by mid-October.

Phase 3 of lighting plan

"Then, once the pole lights are in, we'll see which other areas need lighting," she said. Phase three will involve installing mounted lights on campus buildings, which she hopes to have completed by the next school year.

Jenks said that although attacks do happen, there are few additional measures besides increased lighting that the college can take to insure student security.

"We have in place measures that allow a man or a woman to call for an escort whenever they want. But the escort service is not used as much as one would think. I just have the feeling that most people don't perceive this to be a dangerous place." He estimated the number of calls requesting an escort at one or two per night.

One student group has been investigating another security option. The Feminist Alliance sponsored a woman's self-defense course last winter. Study, and a similar course is being offered for physical education credit this semester. Brian McNitt '90, one of the group's leaders, said she hoped a security awareness campaign would be among the Feminist Alliance's activities this year.

"I think the most important thing is for [people] to become aware of how unsafe it is to walk alone at night and to not lock their doors," McNitt said.

Simple measures to avoid theft

Jenks said that thefts occur every once in a while on campus, and that there are simple measures student can take to avoid such situations. "There are some from unlocked dorms or occasionally from automobiles. Students could lock their rooms religiously. When parking an automobile, they can remove objects from it that invite theft."

But making rooms safer will be the responsibility of the student, since the administration is not considering any new plans for locking student dormitories, Edwards said. A proposal for installing locks on dormitories and selected academic buildings was discussed by the Committee on Undergraduate Life and by the College Council last year, but eventually discarded. "I think the sense from students was that they really didn't want a system like that...I think the students felt it would detract from the atmosphere on campus," Edwards said. "The feeling was that if we put in the system, people would find a way to circumvent it, like propping doors open. Instead we're improving locks on doors in individual student rooms."

She agreed with McNitt about the value of security education. "I think we need to make students realize that there's a lot of individual responsibility involved...A lot of individual security relies on individual behavior."

College Council Vice President John Kelly '89 takes a brain food break at last Thursday's council meeting. The council discussed possible issues for the agenda. (Ward)

New fellowship provides for student travel

by Stephanie Jones

"It was a different world than the world I know here," said Sara St. Antoine '88 of her trip to England. She said she remembers being through the countryside in the rain one day last summer, finally stopping to spend the night in a barn and watching an old couple take care of sheep.

According to people who knew Nathaniel Lawrence, he would have been pleased to know that it was a fellowship in his memory that allowed St.

Antoine to experience that different world.

St. Antoine was the first recipient of the Nathaniel Lawrence Memorial Traveling Fellowship. The fellowship has an endowment which supports one award each year, said Hodge Markgraf, vice president for alumni relations and development. It is given to the student who submits the best proposal for a project which involves traveling, said Nan Jenks-Jay, assistant director of the Center for Environmental Studies.

Massachusetts Professor of Philosophy Nathaniel Lawrence, chairman of the philosophy department, died in the spring of 1986. He had taught at Williams since 1960. According to Markgraf, when several of Lawrence's former students came back for the memorial service, they decided to try and raise money for a memorial as a symbol of how much they had cared about him.

Continued on page 7

Renovations proceed ahead of schedule

by Dan Skewer

The renovation of Hopkins Hall is proceeding ahead of schedule and should be completed by the middle of December, according to Assistant Director for Construction Services Antonio Janairo.

The early completion of the $9.3 million project may allow some of the new classrooms in Hopkins to be used for second semester classes. Also, some of the college's administrative offices may be able to move in this winter.

By next fall, the four-story building will contain the offices of the dean, the registrar, the comptroller, the treasurer, and the president of the college. It will also house eight classrooms, campus security and telephone equipment. The original Hopkins Hall was built in 1890 at a cost of $37,000. The architecture is a variety of Romanesque revival known as Richardsonian, according to Professor of Art Emeritus Whitney Stoddard.

"It was the in-style of the 1870's, 80's, and early 90's," Stoddard said, of the Richardsonian design. "The problem is that [Hopkins] is not quite as subtle as it was designed by Richardson himself."

Hopkins was designed by Francis Allen of Boston, a student of Richardson. Allen designed many other buildings on campus as well, including the Thompson Laboratories in 1893, Thompson Chapel in 1904 and what is now Fitch Hall in 1905.

Not a popular building "Basically, it was not a popular building around town," Stoddard said of Hopkins. "It's been sort of dumped on because it doesn't fit in with neighboring buildings, but it would and did fit in with the original Congregational Church. The problem is that it doesn't anymore because the church had a new outside put on it. It used to be a straight German Romanesque revival."

The current renovations to Hopkins became necessary several years ago, when a building inspector said it could no longer be used to hold classes due to violations of fire codes. Rather than demolish the historical building, the college decided to hollow out and reconstruct the original edifice, while adding new structure to the north side of the building.

"Structurally, the building was reasonably sound," said Janairo, "but one thing he couldn't was the color of the building. It has, after all, aged 90 years."

When Hopkins is finally open once again, it will look very different inside. The whole building will be lighter and airier, and many of the walls will be trimmed in oak. Outside, other than the addition, the building will look much the same, a disappointment to many who feel it is unattractive.

There are some significant differences between the external appearances of the old building and the addition. The addition is slightly wider than the original, and its color is slightly lighter. "The architect realized he could replicate many things, Janairo said, 'but one thing he couldn't was the color of the building. It has, after all, aged 90 years.'"

"You have to be honest on Hopkins," Stoddard said. "I like the variety. I think it's much more fun."

Interview with Kitty Dukakis:

Education system needs to improve

by Daniel Kuzin

RECORD: Do you believe that colleges today are adequately educating and preparing students for the real world? Can our educational system be improved?

KITTY DUKAKIS: Our educational system has to improve. When we look at it across the board starting in grammar school, our grammar schools and high schools, we ought to be preparing the best educated and best prepared students in the world. We are behind other countries because teaching is no longer the honored profession that it should be. We don't pay enough to our teachers--our professors generally. There is an issue of inequality when it comes to schools in America, and Michael [Dukakis] has said that he would be an advocate for education, that no student accepted to college and qualified to do college work would ever be denied that opportunity because of financial need. There have been across the board cuts under the Reagan administration during the last eight years. Michael has talked about bringing back the National Teachers Corps to give teachers the opportunity to take sabbaticals to reinvigorate their minds and spirits.

RECORD: When was this program established?

DUKAKIS: Years ago--it was taken away when Reagan became President. Michael feels very strongly about the issue. There are seven-thousand physicians who are not being filled today because there are not seven-thousand more physicians qualified to teach. In Japan, for every vacancy there are four-hundred applicants. There are teaching positions going begging in this country and it says something, it speaks to the whole issue: Whether we're going to spend our money on Star Wars or star schools.

RECORD: Do you think that this is something that hasn't been happening?

DUKAKIS: It hasn't been happening, and part of Michael's talk about the American Dream is education. If we're going to have equal opportunity for everybody then we have to provide educational opportunity to everybody, and that's just not happening.

RECORD: What do you think your role would be if you become first lady? What are your goals, and how do you see them as being different from those of Nancy Reagan?

DUKAKIS: They are different, because every woman who becomes first lady, just like every president, has been different. One begins with Eleanor Roosevelt who has been a model for someone like myself. She was an extraordinary woman who rose above three, or four children each in welfare hotels. Because of a small $25,000 stipend by David Perkins, the Manhattan borough president, they were in transitional housing and now are in permanent housing. Part of that money was used for a self-help support group, and these women are now working productively.

Michael has done that for 50,000 women in Massachusetts who are now working productively. He provided child care, health benefits and transportation during their training period.

Finally, I want to be involved, as I have been in Massachusetts, fighting chemical abuse, and the misuse of alcohol and drugs. Because of my own dependency I feel more strongly than other people. Michael has had an extraordinarily positive record in his drug education program starting in kindergarten. It's not just a program where we throw filmstrips and "Just Say No." You've got to say "no," but you've got to say "yes," to funding for interdiction, for treatment and for education. My husband will do that. Three times as much cocaine is coming into The United States as came before George Bush took over as head of The Drug Task Force. It has been a failure under George Bush.

Continued on page 9

Betrayal stays true to source

by Jon Ward

"In my plays when something is said underneath it another thing is said," Harold Pinter said.

Much was said last Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights when the Cap & Belle production of Pinter's Betrayal took over AMT's stage. But to the credit of the cast and the production crew, and to the delight of the audience, little of what was said was meant, and that which was meant remained unsaid.

Admittedly, Pinter played no small part in last weekend's success. Betrayal audience depends on the actors to be faithful to Betrayal by allowing it to speak for itself. For its complexity to emerge, it must be presented in a fairly straightforward manner.

The Cap & Belle actors' portrayals were appropriately measured and careful. The characters had a distant, even sterile quality that contrasted neatly with the expected passion of their love triangle. Laura Richman, in particular, was wonderful in this respect. Her performance of Emma was rich in its barrenness--her compelling character left no trace.

The Williams actors were also quite skillful with Pinter's precise dialogue. His characters speak in stylized small talk that frames the pervasive silence of the play. The opening scene, in which Emma and Jerry discuss their former affair, was well acted, principally because Richman and Hooper allowed their guarded talk to undermine itself, and in doing so, emphasize the silence behind it. Baratta was extremely sharp as Robert, the betrayed husband, demonstrating a familiarity and comfort with Pinter's brand of speech that allows its everyday poeticism to shine through.

In addition, the Williams production took full advantage of Pinter's understated brand of humor, which is entertaining but also disconcerting to the audience. The scene in which Robert confronts Emma with the letter was as deeply troubling as it was humorous, much to the credit of Baratta and Richman. In addition, Fausto Epifanio was terrific as the charismatic Italian waiter, handling Pinter's only unconnected role with ease.

The simplicity and directness of the set and lighting provided an appropriate space for the play to develop. Undisturbed and simple, the stage had no unnecessary details, so that those effects on stage, like the table covering, were intimately involved in the play. The lights were dramatic, but starkly so, and in full contrast with the structure and nature of the play. Between the scenes, the actors were plainly visible moving furniture in dimmed light. This touch accentuated the unnatural nature of the play, and like the dialogue, forced us to focus on the work's absences and gaps.

Theatre

is a wonderful play--hilarious and bleak, mundane and profound, it is above all irreducibly entertaining. But the Williams actors and production crew turned in a very creative and obviously studied effort, bringing to the work a subtlety and attention it deserves.

Pinter's Betrayal is a brief look at the development of a love affair between Jerry (Will Hooper), a writing talent, and Emma (Laura Richman), the wife of his best friend and business partner Robert (Michael Baratta). Although the topic of the work is traditional enough, Pinter's unique narrative structure, fascinatingly mundane dialogue, and grim humor puts a new twist on the old story.

Traditionally, plays give the audience a set of evolving relations ultimately tied together with a neat resolution, usually a feast or a burial. But Betrayal opens with its own demise, the collapse of a love affair, and in a series of self-standing vignettes, examines in reverse the development of the affair, concluding with its beginning. The structure frees the audience from any unnatural emphasis on resolution, yet banishes us to the uncomfortable space between spoken words and (mis)understood intentions. Restricted to hindsight, the

Arts in View

Tonight: the first Thompson Concert will be held in Brooks-Rogers at 8 P.M. Kevin McMillan and John Greer will present a program of vocal music featuring Schumann's Dichterliebe. Admission is $5, or free with Williams ID. A staged reading of Robert Lowell's "Beiliss Ceres" will be held at Downstage, Adams Memorial Theatre at 7 P.M. On Friday, a reception will be held at W.C.M.A. from 4:30 to 6:00 for the opening exhibition Archives: Father, Son, and the American Machine and Archives: Ernest Shaw. At 8 P.M. on Friday, "The Atlantic Simulacra," a chamber ensemble of 13 musicians will present works by Beethoven, Schumann and Walton at the Clark. General admission is $7, Friends $6, students $3.

Local Movie Listings (subject to change after Thursday)

Bennington Cinema I, II, III	7:10 & 9:10
Ret 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
A Nightmare on Elm St.-Part IV	7:00 & 9:10
Moon Over Parador	7:05 & 9:10
Betrayed	7:00 & 9:15

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

A World Apart	7:00 & 9:00
Midnight Run	beginning Friday
North Adams Cinema
Ret 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Moon Over Parador	6:50 & 9:15
A Nightmare on Elm Street Part IV	7:00 & 9:20
Married to the Mob	7:00 & 9:20
Dead Ringers	6:50 & 9:15

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

A Fash Called Wanda, Eight Men Out, Moon Over Parador, Betrayed, Midnight Run, Dead Ringers
Mon-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sun 7:00 & 9:30
Who Framed Roger Rabbit, Cocktail, Big, A Nightmare on Elm St.-Part IV, Married to the Mob
Mon-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sun 7:15 & 9:30

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

A World Apart	7:00 & 9:00
Midnight Run	beginning Friday
North Adams Cinema
Ret 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Moon Over Parador	6:50 & 9:15
A Nightmare on Elm Street Part IV	7:00 & 9:20
Married to the Mob	7:00 & 9:20
Dead Ringers	6:50 & 9:15

TGL boasts a high volume of satisfied customers. Loyal photographers travel great distances for our complete color and Black-and-White film processing services. Why? Because we get the flesh tones right. And the scales and the fur.

Photoworks Building
4 Water Street
Williamstown, MA 01267
419-486-3113

"Make sure the flesh tones are right."

Oppression and a Family: A World Apart

by Susanna White

A World Apart, certainly one of the most intelligent films to fall into town in recent memory, takes the monumental subject of fighting apartheid South Africa and conveys it on a very intimate and personal level. Based on the true story of activist Ruth First (named Diana Roth in the film), the film traces a few months in her and her family's life after the June 1963 passing of the 90-day act.

A World Apart is, on one hand, limited by its central figure, Molly (Dolli May) through whom we see all of the film's political happenings. Shaun Slovo, whose crisp writing conveys the tension of the times may have chosen Molly to emphasize the lack of understanding on the part of the majority of South Africa's residents concerning apartheid but the viewer is often left with characters, such as Molly's father, whose role remains ambiguous and underdeveloped. On the other hand, the smallness of this film makes it more successful than films like Cry Freedom, since the sense of human outrage and despair can be more convincingly conveyed through individuals.

Also, the familial aspects of A World Apart make it much more than a straightforward political drama. It concerns the painful coming of age when an adolescent yearns to understand the world around her and to be treated as an adult. As Molly's perspective widens from quiet glimpses from behind doors to attendees at a resistance hero's funeral, so does ours. Molly's mother is an activist first and possesses a selflessness which puts her at odds with Molly who wants the commitment of a full-time mother. The subtle development of their relationship is quite beautiful and what sets A World Apart above a number of other similar political dramas.

Arts

Barbara Hershey's performance has an air of grim authority which works well in her role as a woman so devoted to what she believes that she would sacrifice herself.

Jodhi May, in her debut role, carries an utterly natural charm about her and captures the pain of being separated from her imprisoned mother and ostracized by her peers. Both May and Hershey shared the best actress category with Linda Mural who plays their maid and family friend and gives a beautiful performance of a Black woman separated from her family.

A World Apart was filmed secretly in Zimbabwe, and its straightforward, realistically shot style works nicely with the fairly simple storyline. It ends with a scene of hope that the fight against oppression will never cease. Despite the sacrifice of life, including that of Ruth First who was assassinated in 1982, the fight goes on today. At one point in the film an interrogator tells Diana Roth that her life has been a failure. If one message remains with the viewer of a movie like this, it is that one person, particularly one like Diana Roth, never dies in vain.

A World Apart plays at Images through Thursday.

Braga is the only main character who really contributes any sort of charm, and the brightness the screen with a dynamic charisma. But Dreyfus is at his worst here, spending too much time mugging and acting cute.

There are a number of cameos including Jonathan Winters, Charo, and Sammy Davis Jr. And while some of them are amusing, they are not enough to recommend the movie.

Moon in the Gutter

by Travis Pleran

Moon over Parador, released last weekend, reunites the director and star of Down and Out in Beverly Hills. Paul Mazursky and Richard Dreyfuss. The latter film was an enjoyable farce, but the pairing doesn't work so well this time around. Mazursky's films have always had a tendency to be a little off-beat, and family friend and gives a beautiful performance of a Black woman separated from her family.

A World Apart was filmed secretly in Zimbabwe, and its straightforward, realistically shot style works nicely with the fairly simple storyline. It ends with a scene of hope that the fight against oppression will never cease. Despite (Raul Julia) is a Harvard educated psychopath who seems to have made some sort of buggy-eyed pact with the devil. The dictator also had a mistress named Madonna (Sonia Braga) who quickly reappears as herself with Dreyfus, and to Roberto's dismay, the two of them start making progressive reforms.

Braga is the only main character who really contributes any sort of charm, and the brightness the screen with a dynamic charisma. But Dreyfus is at his worst here, spending too much time mugging and acting cute.

There are a number of cameos including Jonathan Winters, Charo, and Sammy Davis Jr. And while some of them are amusing, they are not enough to recommend the movie.

Moon in the Gutter

by Travis Pleran

Moon over Parador, released last weekend, reunites the director and star of Down and Out in Beverly Hills. Paul Mazursky and Richard Dreyfuss. The latter film was an enjoyable farce, but the pairing doesn't work so well this time around. Mazursky's films have always had a tendency to be a little off-beat, and family friend and gives a beautiful performance of a Black woman separated from her family.

A World Apart was filmed secretly in Zimbabwe, and its straightforward, realistically shot style works nicely with the fairly simple storyline. It ends with a scene of hope that the fight against oppression will never cease. Despite porny spirituality and a nostalgic pathos that remains strangely beyond the film's boundaries. The second side features songs by Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds, Crime and the City Solution, L. Pettigand and Laurie Anderson. The songs by the first two bands (who are shown performing in a club in the movie) are three of the most beautiful harsh songs written in a very long time. The other pieces are only great. This album runs the gamut from the angeli to the blackest doom-rock, but like angels walking the streets of Berlin, each accented its opposite. Now from the sublime to the ridiculous...

Rasputin's Music Box

by Chuck Samuelson

Another high profile Opal release, and from a frequent Enco collaborator is Harold Budd's The White Arcades. The packaging is really beautiful, but like its wrapper, Budd's music has sometimes brushed with becoming pretty wallpaper suitable for background noise. Indeed, some of the selections seem derivative of either his own earlier works or those of others (he's one song that sounds just like the old Japanese tune, "Voices Raised in Welcome, Hands held in Prayer.") But Budd is still miles ahead than the deadening blandness of the New Age-Jazzy stylings. This album was recorded in three different places, with three different engineers--one with Enco, another with Simon Guthrie of Costeau Twins, and one with Keith Mitchell. The distinctions are quite noticeable. Perhaps this does not speak well for Budd, whose imprint on his music may not be as great as it should be, but The White Arcades are worth visiting and should make for a pleasant, if not inspirational stroll.

In the same genre, but definitely more stirring, Musica for Elina III, featuring works produced and performed by Brian and Roger Enco, John Paul Jones, Harold Budd, Daniel Lanois, Lydia Kavina and others. Each of these selections is a standout and they range from gorgeous ephemeral fare to more human condition that made Shogun When Wei such a success.

This artistic sense of human oneness is also evident in the first verse of "Living in Sin": "I don't need no license/To sign on no line/ And I don't need no preacher/ To tell me you're mine/ I don't need no diamonds/ I don't need no new bride/ I just need you, baby/ To look me in the eye/ I know they have a hard time/ And your Daddy don't approve/ But I don't need your Daddy/ Telling us what we should do." It's fair to say that not everyone can grasp the implications of such insightful commentary. To those prone to following the logic of contemporary wisdom just remember: the critics hated Mozart too!

Ephumor

Where The Purple Cows Roam Revisited on page 3

SPRIT SHOP
280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"

Featured this week:

Molsen's Golden bottles $7.99/12-pack + deposit
Gieschmann's cans $7.99/case + deposit
Wiedemann bottles $7.99/case + deposit
Ice Cold Kegs in stock * Low Prices

Monday - Saturday 9am to 11pm

The Balloonery at the Off Campus Shoppe

LIFT SOMEONE'S SPIRIT-SAY I LOVE YOU MAKE A HEART SOAR

BALLOONS IN A BOX -- IT'S A PARTY IN A BOX
WHEN BOX IS OPENED UP POPS THE MYLAR BALLOON(S)!

MESSAGE CARD AND CONFETTI INCLUDED

MAILED ANYWHERE IN THE USA...1 BALLOON $12.95 tax incl...3 BALLOONS $18.95 tax incl.

CALL TOLL FREE ANYWHERE IN MASS. 1-800-442-4644
CALL LOCAL 664-4644 (NORTH ADAMS)

MASTERCARD-VISA-AMERICAN EXPRESS-DISCOVER OR PERSONAL CHECKS GLADLY ACCEPTED-----

Rising costs

Continued from page 1

able in part for creating a big demand for high-quality education. "[The United States] has been living on borrowed money for eight years...we've been borrowing from foreigners and one day they're going to get tired of loaning us enough money to keep the party going," Winston said. Costs will be controlled in order to prepare for possible hardships ahead.

Other reasons for rising costs have been rising for other reasons. For example, the effects of the 1970s economic depression in higher education are still felt and colleges have been "catching-up" in this time of prosperity.

In addition, technological change has contributed to higher costs. "It would be absurd to turn your back on [new media] for instruction, but it's expensive," Winston said. "Look at the language lab. We're about to put in three (satellite) dishes, one with a built-in computer control to track Soviet satellites...Now what if we say we can't do that? We'd look like jerks. People would come through campus after they've just been to Carleton [College]...and they'd say 'What are you doing with your language lab?' And then we would say, 'Well, we've got these old phonograph records.'"

Winston emphasized that no radical spending changes will occur, as some have suggested, and he stated that the College is not headed for the "apocalyptic" changes that some faculty members have feared. For example, construction and renovation will continue, but perhaps at a slower pace. As provost, Winston is looking into ways to control costs so that the College will continue to do fine in the future.

Babeu seeks to advance political career

by Greg Hart

The unlikely scenario of a North Adams State sophomore winning a seat on the Berkshire County Commission could come true if Paul R. Babeu, a 19-year-old North Adams native, wins one of the two open seats on the Commission in the upcoming November 8 election.

The County Commission governs public lands such as county jails, courts, roads, lakes and similar property in the public domain. Four nominees, two from each party, will compete for a pair of open seats on the three-member Commission. John Pignatelli and Ken Warren will represent the Democratic Party in the race, while Babeu's fellow Republican on the ballot is John Chivers, who won the Republican primary September 15. Babeu finished second despite running a write-in, or sticker, campaign, narrowly defeating Glenn Heller.

Originally registered as an independent, Babeu did not officially join the Republican Party and decide to run until after the closing date for appearing on the party ticket. He still could have appeared on the independent ballot but he voted in the Republican Presidential primary, denying him that option. Thus, he was forced into running a sticker campaign.

According to Babeu, this was no easy task. "Sticker campaigns are very rarely successful," he said. "For a sticker campaign to succeed, it must be very highly organized. I had to receive at least 500 votes, and also defeat one of my two opponents...That isn't easy to do, especially in a primary election, because very few people turn out."

This is not Babeu's first run for political office. As a senior in high school, Babeu ran for a spot on the North Adams City Council, finishing first in a 16-way race for nine available seats. He still holds his position on the council.

"Because of my age I am more aggressive than the other candidates," Babeu said. "I believe that the race for the second spot in the air between himself and Ken Warren. Mentioning his honesty and untainted political image, Babeu pointed out the advantage of his unique situation, stating, 'I'm a young person with a new face, and to many people that is a good sign.'" since I am from a new era," Babeu said. He cited his initiative as a reason for his entrance into politics. He added, "It is an ideal opportunity to be involved in a decision-making role. I believe in myself, and I wanted to give something back to the people and towns of our country, and also to our country." But, said Babeu, "The main thing is, I enjoy it."

After juggling his studies at North Adams state with his responsibilities as a city councilman last year, Babeu opted to take the first semester off this year to concentrate entirely on his campaign. He added that he will return to college next semester and plans to finish his college education with the goal of majoring in history and political science.

Babeu said he thinks his chances in the election are good. Pittsfield and the south county area will be key regions in his campaign. Predicting that Pignatelli will win the race easily, Babeu said he believes that the race for the second spot in the air between himself and Ken Warren. Mentioning his honesty and untainted political image, Babeu pointed out the advantage of his unique situation, stating, "I'm a young person with a new face, and to many people that is a good sign."

Consultant

Continued from page 1

and permanent residents in fields taught at Williams, 2.3 percent were Black, 2.7 percent were Hispanic, 42 percent were American Indian.

"I'm wondering if the students adamant about certain affirmative action programs are themselves going into the field of education," Wood said. "If none are going to graduate school—if they're instead going on to become investment bankers or lawyers, they're not helping us create a pool. It gets discouraging."

Frost said the lack of interest in the field of education among minority students to be a by-product of tremendous pressure from parents to take lucrative jobs to recoup the cost of a private-school education.

Lawrence

Continued from page 4

"Knowing Nathaniel and knowing his zest for so many things outside the classroom, I think the college and the family is very pleased," Markgraf said. "All of us have felt the impact of Professor Lawrence's teaching and personally beyond our undergraduate years. The breadth of his knowledge, the range of his interests, the intensity of his commitment to dialogue and personal inquiry, his vigor, vitality and curiosity still inspire us," read a letter these students sent to Lawrence's former students.

Mary Lawrence, Lawrence's widow, said that one of his interests had been experiential travel—going and looking at something to find out about it. "We did a lot of traveling and exploring," Mary Lawrence said. "[The fellowship] is supposed to encourage other people." The Lawrences traveled to the paleolithic caves in France, pueblo ruins and Navaho country, as well as many other places, she said.

According to Jenks-Jay, one image that symbolizes Lawrence to her is the Lawrence's VW van with the beautiful rocks they collected in France on the seat and a dictionary on the dashboard. "He was a remarkable man...Nathaniel had a genuine interest in everything. He was a person I would consider a true scholar," she said.

Jenks-Jay emphasized Lawrence's love for traveling and hiking. "They'd walked everywhere and knew what an asset that had been in life," she said. According to Jenks-Jay, while they walked, the Lawrences talked and encountered things, broadening their horizons.

"I think the people who chose [the form of the fellowship] chose it because it was a way of continuing his interest in education outside the classroom," Daniel O'Connor, chairman of the philosophy department and a friend of Lawrence, said.

The fellowship is currently headquartered in CES because they already supply summer grants and they strongly support the philosophy behind the fellowship, Jenks-Jay said. According to Jenks-Jay, Lawrence helped to found CES, and he believed that these sort of centers are important in supplementing traditional learning.

"He wasn't satisfied with 'learn it from a book' or 'whatever your professor says is right,'" she said. "He'd force you to think more—challenge yourself, challenge your mind, challenge your body." According to Jenks-Jay, just talking to him was intellectually stimulating.

Nature Journalists. St. Antoine's project was called "On the Trail of Nature Journalists: An exploration of Great Britain". She spent three and one-half weeks in Great Britain traveling to places while reading what had been written about them and keeping a journal of her own observations.

She said the project had given her a chance to combine her major in English and concentration in environmental studies. Her original plan had been to see how the environment had changed, but she said she changed the focus to how different kinds of writers affected people's attitudes about nature.

According to St. Antoine, who biked from village to village, getting from place to place was part of really experiencing the environment. She said one of the most exciting things about the trip was the way in which the nature writers had inspired people to preserve the land.

St. Antoine is now working at the Environmental Law Institute in Washington, D.C.

College plans $125 million fund-raiser

by Rob Webster

Next fall, Williams College will embark upon the largest fund-raising campaign in the school's history. According to Director of Development Michael Oman, the college hopes that the Bicentennial Campaign will raise approximately $125 million over a four-year period.

While Williams has never undertaken a campaign of this size, Oman said that this sort of fund-raising effort is fairly common in the collegiate community. Mt. Holyoke, Smith, Amherst, Pomona and Colgate have all recently completed or are still working on drives with goals in the neighborhood of $100 million.

"We're really just involved in planning right now," Oman said. "We don't know what the goal will be, and we're not sure exactly what the money will go to."

Oman added, however, that the college is aware of general needs that have to be addressed. Some of the money will go toward strengthening the Williams general fund.

"The campaign will provide money so that the mission of the college can be continued," he added. "The primary beneficiaries of this mission are the faculty and students, and so strong emphasis will be placed upon their needs." Oman said that small additions to the faculty are being seriously considered, although it has not yet been decided for which departments. "We want to insure that the present low student-faculty ratio is maintained."

He said that part of the money raised will go to replacing and adding to scientific research equipment at the college, although he emphasized that all areas of the faculty will receive research funds.

Housing concerns to be addressed. Housing concerns of the faculty and students will also be addressed. "Present dorms will certainly undergo renovations, and there will possibly be new additions made to address deficiencies in present housing space," Oman said. "But we have no intention of increasing the size of the student body. That was never considered."

"We're talking about extensive refurbishing, not just cosmetic work. Some dorms here were built in the early 20th century, and they need to be able to serve students into the 21st. No matter how many times you fix an automobile, you're eventually going to have to buy a new car," Oman said. The campaign will make possible renovations which are far more significant than the present spree of dorm repairs, he said.

A lack of classroom space, as well as the need to modernize some classrooms, will also be addressed, he said. Lastly, money from the drive will go into the unrestricted endowment, he said. "This will give the school room to grow, as the need arises."

"All schools have the need to recapitalize," Oman said, adding that the school's last campaign ended in 1980. Called the Fund for the Seventies, it raised $32 million. "We've been looking at the issues [to be addressed by the campaign] for the last two years. A nine-year interval between fund raisers is actually on the long side," he said.

"There is no connection with the upcoming bicentennial and the campaign," he added. "We'd still have a campaign, but the 200th anniversary makes a good focal point."

the Cottage
CLOTHING

CLOTHING • JEWELRY
POSTERS • CARDS
BEDSPREADS • RUGS
BASKETS

South Street
Pittsfield

OPEN 7 DAYS
SINCE 1989

Water Street
Williamstown

MOUNTAIN BIKE SALE

the Mountain Goat

130 Water St.
Williamstown, Mass.
01267-458-6445

Complete repairs on all styles of bicycles

David Diamond '90, a member of the BGLU, said the homosexual community should be granted minority status. "We need more presence on campus. We need the school to become active about getting openly gay faculty and students. If in the faculty hiring/recruiting process, the non-discrimination policy (as it applies to gays) could be mentioned, it would encourage openness."

"I'm not claiming," Diamond continued, "that the BGLU ought to receive the same kind of affirmative action as minority groups based on race and class."

Earlier in the day, Alleyne met with minority faculty and staff, minority student groups, women faculty and staff, chairs of academic departments, college council officers, Dean of Faculty Roberto Iñli, President Francis Oakley and McIntire.

On October 17 and 18, Clarence Williams, Assistant to the President at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will be meeting with administration members. Santiago Rodriguez, Affirmative Action Officer at Stanford, will be coming on an as yet unannounced date.

Bette's to Go

No matter where you're going, or how you're getting there, you can always take along Bette's. The best coffee in town, breakfast all day, lunch cooked just for you, homemade soups, and incredible desserts are all available as take-out. Remember Bette's and don't leave home without us.

Bette's Life & Times
27 Spring Street
458-5930
Open 6:00 am - 3:00 pm daily
7:00 am - 3:00 pm Sunday

GOOD FOLKS.

GOOD FOOD.

ATTENTION STUDENTS!

WELCOME TO TOWN!

OUR TRAVEL OFFICE IS CONVENIENTLY LOCATED AT THE END OF SPRING STREET ACROSS FROM THE GULF STATION.

WE ARE OPEN: MONDAY - FRIDAY 9AM TO 5PM
THURSDAY UNTIL 8PM
SATURDAY 9AM TO 12PM

WE HAVE BEEN IN BUSINESS FOR OVER 20 YEARS AND ARE FULLY COMPUTERIZED. WE OFFER LOW AIRFARES ANYWHERE DOMESTICALLY OR AROUND THE WORLD, ON SCHEDULED AIRFARES OR LOW COST CHARTERS.

WE ALSO SELL AMTRAK, MAKE HOTEL RESERVATIONS, AND BASICALLY HELP YOU WITH ALL YOUR TRAVEL NEEDS.

THERE IS NO CHARGE FOR OUR SERVICES!!! WE EVEN GIVE YOU FREE PASS-PORT PICTURES IF YOU TRAVEL WITH US!

FINALLY WE'LL GET YOU HOME FOR THE HOLIDAYS, HASSLE-FREE! YOU CAN EVEN PAY WITH YOUR PARENTS CREDIT CARD!

STOP BY AND SAY HELLO! OUR FRIENDLY TEAM IS EAGER TO SERVE YOU!

TRAVEL STORE, INC.

105 SPRING STREET • WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267 • (413) 458-5780 • OUTSIDE MASS. 800-225-5052

Professional PACKAGING & SHIPPING SERVICES

FAST, CONVENIENT & FRIENDLY

Deliver to the Spirit Shop
Shipped from Pittsfield
call 458-3704
Pick-up service available

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
BETSY BURBANK

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4808

Williams Corp.

Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Racket Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

LIVINGSTON Galleries

Fine Custom Framing

Little Red School House
3 West Road
Bennington Vermont
802 447 0035

Livingston Building
8 John Street
Hoosick Falls, New York
518 686 7571

Mirror Mirror

Be the Fairest of them all

6 John Street Hoosick Falls, N.Y. 686-3124

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

The Boston Globe

Faculty & Student Home/Box Delivery

Rate: Monday-Saturday $1.00
Full Week $2.00

To subscribe call Brian at x6186

TRAVEL SALES:

Sell spring break package tours to Caribbean. Free travel and money. Great sales experience and flexible hours. Call 1-800-426-7710

Lady Killer

FRAGRANCES AND SKINCARE PRODUCTS FOR MEN AND WOMEN

OFFERED AT UNBELIEVABLE PRICES

Fragrance Handbags Treatment Services

Senior Dave Clawson cuts outside while returning a punt in the Ephs' 16-15 decision over Hamilton on Saturday. (Scale)

Men's soccer shuts down Middlebury

by Mariam Naficy

The Williams men's soccer team arrived in Middlebury last Saturday, confronted with a major challenge and a large crowd of spirited Middlebury fans. By the time the game ended, the Ephs had met their challenge, winning 3-0, and had quieted the Panther fans to a crowd of indifferent sunbathers.

The game came at a crucial time in the season, when the Ephs are trying to prove to themselves, and to others, that they are still the #1 team in New England. Middlebury was ranked #2 in New England last year and the game was considered the Ephs' biggest challenge of the season.

Saturday's game heated up quickly, when Doug Brooks '90 worked the ball into Middlebury territory from the right, assisting co-captain Mike Masters '89 to a goal only 3:13 into the first half. Relaxing after the goal, however, the Ephs allowed Middlebury to take the offensive during the rest of the first half. The Ephs were kept on the defensive and fended off several close calls during this period.

"Win one for the..."

The Ephs' lapse was soon reversed by Coach Mike Russo's half-time talk, which encouraged the team to play more intensely and capitalize on its lead. Led by Steve Bailey '91, Andy Stern '90, and John Kennel '91, the team strengthened its offensive noticeably; even still, the play shifted constantly between Middlebury and Williams territory.

The big break came with 19:19 left in the half, when Rob Lake '91 drove the ball past the Panther goalie, and a desperate Panther defense player tried to stop the ball illegally. The penalty shot by Masters that ensued gave the Ephs their second goal. "After the penalty kick," says Coach Russo, "I knew that if we played simply and well that we would win."

Finally, with 4:45 left in the half, John Walker '90 fired a ball past the sprawling Middlebury goalie into the side of the net. Goal number three had been scored, and the Eph victory insured.

With one of their hardest games behind them, the Ephs can afford to be happy. Coach Russo beamed, "To beat this tough team at home 3-0 is a convincing win." Furthermore, the Ephs believe they adjusted their normal style to meet Middlebury's. Kennel stated, "I think we beat them at their game—we didn't play the quick style of attack that we usually do."

The Ephs have a chance to experiment more, as they face North Adams at home this Wednesday.

Male ruggers fall to UMASS in final seconds

by Mark Staples

The Williams R.F.C. this Saturday stuck to its policy of insuring game time to all players who show up at Cole Field. Though many new players gained valuable experience against a tough UMASS club, the day saw three of four Williams sides losing hard-fought rugby battles.

The day began with promise for the first fifteen. The solid UMASS forwards clashed viciously with their smaller Williams counterparts yet allowed the White Dogs to advance within junior Chap Petersen's kicking range before committing a penalty which the full-back neatly converted to a 3-0 lead. Williams' confidence surged, and the A-side forwards stepped up the pressure.

Tied at half

Their efforts were rewarded when prop Will LaFave '90 charged down a UMass clearance kick, which senior flanker Alby Gallun scooped up and carried over the try line. Missed conversion aside, Williams held a seemingly solid lead until the powerful Mass outside center broke through the Williams backs and touched down in the corner. One penalty kick later, the Williams men found themselves back at ground zero when the half ended.

Relief came from Petersen's boot again in the second half as a penalty kick put Williams up 10-7. Near the end of the game UMass almost succumbed to tremendous forward pressure which pinned them against their own try line. But the White Dogs let up the pressure and UMass turned the tables by driving deep into Williams' territory. The final

Defense keys football's 16-15 win

by Ted Hobart

During the preseason, the football team's performance in practice and scrimmages was measured against one benchmark—the Hamilton Continentals. The Ephs, it was said, would have to be on top of their game, not make any errors, and not squander any opportunities in order to overcome the vaunted Continentals. And yet, on a beautiful Saturday afternoon at Weston Field, Williams topped Hamilton 16-15 in what few would argue was an overpowering performance.

"You probably have a greater deal of respect for a team you haven't beaten in a while," said coach Dick Farley of the heavy emphasis placed on the Hamilton contest. The Ephs had not beaten the Continentals in four tries since 1979, although Williams holds a 17-5 edge in the series.

As expected, the Continentals were big and strong up front, but their overall offensive strength was basically unknown. Quarterback Kieran Claire proved to be the biggest threat of the skill players, as the Eph defense had trouble containing the fleet-footed quarterback and he broke several runs around the end. Claire finished the day with 96 yards rushing on 22 attempts.

Ephs break tie

After trading series in the opening phases of the game, the Ephs took the board first on senior Jeff Ettemad's 39 yard punt with 1:45 remaining in the first quarter. Things were really looking up for the Ephs, as on the next Hamilton possession, sophomore defensive end Ted Rogers forced Claire to throw an ill-advised pass which senior cornerback Eric Moe picked off at the Hamilton 45.

Under one minute into the second stanza, Kennedy launched a 39 yard aerial which Kevin Brown '90 snared in the end zone for a 9-0 Williams lead. The extra point attempt went for naught as the snap from center was too high to handle and holder Todd Strieter '90 was forced to scramble toward the end zone before being surrounded by Hamilton defenders.

The failed extra point, and an aborted field goal attempt later in the game, serve as reminders of how important the special teams are (and how lucky the Ephs were for four years with long snapper Lewis Collins '88). "That wasn't totally unexpected. We hoped it wouldn't happen," Farley said about the problems with the kicking game.

Continental strike back

Hamilton was too strong to be held for long however, returning the ensuing kickoff to their 40 yard line. The Continentals drove to the Williams 39 before a fine punt cornered the Ephs at their own 8 yard line. The Hamilton defense held tough and forced Williams to punt in four downs. It took the Continentals only three plays to get home from the Eph 41, as Claire hit John Morrison on a 17 yard touchdown.

The squads traded "active drives for most of the second quarter, except when the Ephs drove to the Hamilton 35 only to be stopped on third and blow came from a UMass prop who scored a try seconds before the end whistle. The successful conversion kick only intensified the bitterness of such a close defeat.

Continued on page 8

The A-side's experience and support mitigated the mighty size difference between the two teams, but the B-side had much more trouble managing to take their men to the ground. The ferocious tackling of Steve Fenwick '90 in the centers was one of the few bright spots in an otherwise disappointing second game. Another was the solid fullback play of Bruce Young '90 who also provided the Killer B's with their only points through his greatly improved goal kicking.

UMASS played smarter

Apart from occasional good play from Williams, UMass played smarter rugby: the backs moved the ball fluidly to their wings and the forwards concentrated on catching vital lineout ball in order to give their line 20 meters of running room. The sloppy Williams line-outs rarely gave their backs a chance to run as their opponents could come up on them and spoil passes. UMass scored two tries for a final of 14-6.

Though the A's and B's had frustrating season opens, the screaming C-men displayed the depth at Williams command. Scrum half Dan Focke '90 had an outstanding game. Focke fed his backs good passes when he could and kicked for the touchline whenever UMass threatened too much; and with Colin Holley '91 at the fullback, few UMass attacks seriously threatened Williams. The forwards kept possession for the C-side admirably. Giant

Continued on page 9

Tom Bottem '89 skies over his UMASS opponent to grab a lineout as senior prop Jeff Holley looks on. (Scale)

WWRFC battles to draw

by Laura Whitman

This past weekend found the WWRFC hosting a motley crew of scrappy ruggers from Albany. Unlike our own Used Buggies, these women were more festive on the field than off.

The A-side game was one of total domination by the Williams women. Queen of the breakthrough Rebecca Mattson repeatedly defied the Albany's line-outs, with Sue Pitcher '90 also plundering her share of the enemy's throw-ins. Many a winning hook by Pam Lotke '90, and the ever-present support of Annabell Steinburg '89 allowed the WWRFC to continue to control the flow of play.

Albany was denied entry twice into the try zone. Scrumhalf Kerry Kilander '89 first seized a breakaway runner screaming down the sidelines, then mean Lauren Boeschoten '89 emancipated the WWRFC from continuous exhausting scrum-downs.

During the second half, even with the hard-driving runs of wing Gina Coleman '90 and a quick-thinking scrumby by Alexandra Iselin '89, the A-side found itself being pushed back by Albany's powerful scrum. A cramp pass from Ann Arnason '89 to Heather Adams '90, and an even more spectacular run of that same play by Kathie Lapey '90 brought about a WWRFC re-domination of the game. The remainder of the half was played in the white scrum frustration on Albany's five yard line as line-out after line-out occurred without scoring. Kerry Kilander '89 was cheated out of a try during confusion in the ensuing pile-up. Messy but powerful rucks and mauls kept the ball from getting out often enough, leaving the A-side game disappointingly scoreless.

The Killer-B's opener of the season was marked by strong Williams scrum domination. Most notable was the heads-up play of hooker Caitlin Mann '92, and the stealing hands of Wendy Lipp '90. However, the most valuable player of the day award goes to Jacky Graves '90, who was consistent and exhibited excellent all-around play.

The second half was a substitute B and C-side mix, with many new Williams ruggers making their debut on the pitch. Able Amy Thrasher '91 joined forces repeatedly with Gillian Flory '92 or Mary Iliff '89 to bring down particularly large and muscular Albany ladies. Fiery scrumhalf Molly Foebi '91 also had some good tackles, and aided her side through constant communication. Albany scored three times and converted once for a final score of 14-0, but the C-side must be commended for their particularly unified scrum which worked more as a single muscle than a pack of eight.

Women Harriers dominate Invitational

The women's cross country team won its own Invitational meet for the first time in an impressive style this Saturday, as all five scoring members of the team placed in the top nine, completely dominating a field of over 130 runners from 16 schools.

Smith's Megan White, national champion at 10,000 meters on the track, was the individual winner, but her team failed to win the meet as they did in previous years; the Williams women proved far too strong.

Sophomore Anne Platt, fully recovered from injury and illness, sped to a strong finish to place third overall just ahead of Heidi Beebe '91 in fourth. Molly Martin '92 followed in fifth, with fellow freshmen Andrea Cady and Cherie MacAuley right behind at seventh and ninth respectively. Rounding out the varsity seven were Mika Brzezinski '89 at 17th and Gwen Nagy '92 in 21st.

Excellent times accompanied their outstanding performances, as the first three Williams women cracked 20 minutes for the tough 5000 meter (3.1 mile) course. The depth and the youth of the team bode well for the rest of the season and the next few years. With runners like these the Ephs women have a very good chance of revenging their early loss to Bates at the NESCAC meet in October.

—by Catherine Cooks

Junior Mike Flaherty fires a shot in Saturday's 1-0 victory over Smith at Cole Field. Flaherty hammered home a penalty stroke to score the only goal of the game. The Ephs women are now 2-0 having also shut out Vassar by an identical 1-0 score in earlier action. Williams hosts Mt. Holyoke today at 3:30 on Cole field. (Goodell)

Men's cross country takes fourth on home course

by Steve Brody

The men's cross country team made a strong showing Saturday, placing fourth in the varsity competition and winning the freshman race in the Williams Invitational at Mt. Hope Farm.

The freshmen led off the day's competition under sunny skies and perfect conditions. From the start, it was evident that the Williams contingent would dominate the race. Just past the mile mark three Ephs, Bill McKinley, Brian Coan, and Ben Bond, moved out ahead of the rest of the field with a Union runner. The four ran together up the long hill in mile two, then prepared for a tough finish on the 3.1 mile freshman course.

Coan and McKinley found themselves in a battle for first with the Union froth. The two opened up a fifteen yard lead with 200 to go, but their competitor made up ground and passed Coan in the final stretch to take second behind McKinley. Bond ran strong through the last mile to hold the fourth spot, while Brendan Keane moved up to the fifth position, cementing the Ephs dominant victory.

Varsity downs Jeffs

The varsity race presented a challenge for Williams as the Ephs were running without their talented freshman and Dylan Cooper '91, who has contracted for less race time this season. The Ephs, led by Dale Johnson '90 and Mark Belts '91, who took ninth and tenth overall, proved up to the task. The race featured eleven teams, and the final tally showed Bates (62 points) in first followed by Hamilton (89), Colgate (98) and Williams (101). Particularly satisfying was defeating Amherst, last year's Little Three Champion, by 23 points.

In running to his ninth place finish of 27:28, Johnson took over a minute off his 1987 time in the same meet. He moved to the front during the first mile and never relinquished his spot among the leaders. Belts, returning after a year off, used long strides to take advantage of the long downhill stretches of the course.

Captain Gil McCabe '89 came home 21st while still nursing a sore ankle that limited his training during the week. Nathaniel McVey-Finney '90 and Steve Brody '90 completed the Ephs' top five with 30th and 31st finishes respectively.

Williams has to be pleased with its strong early results this season, highlighted by the performance of a talented group of freshman runners. They will try to defeat Amherst again this weekend, as the Lord Jeffs host their own Invitational on Saturday.

B.U. prohibits overnight guests of opposite sex

(CPS)—Boston University rejected student protests and issued strict new rules Sept. 15 prohibiting students from having overnight guests of the opposite sex in their dorm rooms.

"All of life after 11 p.m. has been banned at BU," senior Jamie Sanbonmatsu told a crowd of 2,000 students that had converged to protest the visitation rules the day before they were approved.

BU's strict new rules may be the closest a college has returned to the "in loco parentis" relationship schools maintained with their students up until the 1960s. Under the doctrine—literally meaning administrators acted "in place of the parents"—campuses set curfews for students, suspended students for behaving in ways they didn't like and forbade students of the opposite sex to visit with each other behind closed doors.

Though the rules collapsed under student protests for greater autonomy, new drinking laws and increasing numbers of student lawsuits blaming colleges for sexual assaults and other crimes have moved many campuses to tighten their control over potentially litigious student behavior during the past few years.

St. Joseph's College in Maine, the State University of New York at Binghamton and North Carolina State University, among others, also have restricted or banned overnight visits to dorms by members of the opposite sex in recent years.

Virtually every campus in the United States, moreover, has stiffened its student drinking rules since 1986, when the federal government threatened to cut off funding to any state that still allowed 18-year-olds to drink alcohol.

BU officials said they were just trying to help students study.

The new rules, said BU spokesman Kevin Carleton, address "concerns stated by students, staff and parents that residences too often have failed to provide the kind of environment where an individual can quietly study and have his or her right to privacy respected."

Sanbonmatsu, on the other hand, charged, "The administration is stunting our growth and development by denying us the right to make decisions."

Under the new guidelines, some of which go into effect in the late fall and others during the spring, guests must display identification cards and leave the dormitory by 11 p.m. on weekdays and 1 a.m. on weekends.

Overnight guests of the same sex are still allowed, but guests of the opposite sex will not be allowed to stay overnight. Students older than age 21 can bring a six-pack of beer or a liter of other kinds of alcoholic beverages into the dorms, but no more than that.

Carleton said student protests of the rules did not face BU officials. "I don't think any demonstration would have an effect," he said. "What can have an effect is a reasonable discussion."

Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) participated in the Fall Foliage Festival parade in North Adams last Sunday. (Scala)

College Dems endorse Drew's opponent

by Scott J. G'Callaghan

Williams College Democrats unanimously voted to endorse State Representative Sherwood Guernsey at their meeting last week. Guernsey spoke for an hour at the meeting.

"Not knowing the students and not knowing the response [I would get], I was pleased with the endorsement," Guernsey said.

At the meeting, Ken Leiter, president of the club, stressed that the endorsement implied no questioning of the ability—or personality—of Guernsey's opponent, Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew.

Drew was quoted in the September 30 issue of The Berkshire Eagle as saying, "I think this was a ploy for Mr. Guernsey to sneak into my home territory and try to embarrass me." The Eagle also quoted Drew as calling Guernsey's action "a boyish prank."

Guernsey formally announced his candidacy on September 20 after winning the nomination at the September 16 primary election. He has served the Second Berkshire District for three terms.

Helped with MASSMOC

This past legislative session, Guernsey helped secure a $35 million state bond sale to raise money for work on the Massachusetts Museum of Art, a proposed museum in North Adams. He said that he feels closer to Williams College now after working with administrators and specialists from the Williams College Museum of Art. The bill almost did not pass the Legislature because it was linked to another proposition, but was resurrected when Governor Michael Dukakis reintroduced the bill with the aid of the Berkshire legislative delegation.

In a press release at the time of his announcement, Guernsey said, "My candidacy is based on serving my constituents and on a strong legislative record of which I am very proud. My goal is to continue caring, listening and responding to all of my constituents, not on a part-time, but on a full-time basis."

At the meeting, Guernsey said that his priorities for the next term will be reforms in the auto insurance and health care fields and greater job development. He said that he was concerned especially with the elderly, who frequently must choose between food and medicine. "I don't care what you hear from the Reagan-Bush claptrap. It happens here in Massachusetts," he said.

Guernsey also said that he would like to see Williams students working more with community business initiatives. "Students could play a role in some new business in the environmental field or chemical field."

1988-89 College Council Budget Requests

Students find no anonymity in tutorials

by Soojin Kim

A student could not hide on the log featured in the aphorism about Mark Hopkins. According to Professor of Religion Norman Peterson, this might be why the new tutorial program which started this September has had a low turnout, despite enthusiasm from the professors and students participating in the program.

"The longer the average student is at Williams, the more that student gets corrupted. He discovers how the system works and how to get around it. He figures out how to get away with not thinking," Peterson said.

"The tutorial is a class discussion that necessarily includes every one because of its size," said Petra Levin '89, a student in the biology tutorial.

Williams is offering 27 tutorials, patterned after those at Oxford University, this year. Every department is offering at least one, said Professor of Economics Henry Bruton, director of the program.

According to the proposal for the program, each tutorial consists of no more than ten students, organized into five pairs. Each pair meets once a week for an hour with their professor. Students alternate giving oral presentations every week. The professor and the other student critique, interrogate and, most importantly, help the other student refine his argument.

Only 200 for 270 slots

Only about 200 students pre-registered for the 270 slots available this year, Bruton said. Of the 12 tutorials offered this semester, some attracted no students and very few attracted more than ten, he said.

Katrina Hubbard '89, who is taking the tutorial on developmental economics, ascribed the low turnout to a "wait and see attitude" on the part of students.

"I do a lot more work for the tutorial session than for regular classes. Plus, the program is really new. We're still experimenting, and it's a learning process for everybody," she said.

"Only one or two members of the faculty have been taught through tutorials, much less taught them," Bruton said. "We're all inexperienced. For example, most of the faculty are accustomed to doing a lot of talking, but we have to know how to listen carefully. Listening and knowing when to intervene are things the faculty needs to learn."

Peterson said that he has changed his mind since last year when he expressed reservations about the small number of class meetings. He said that after only

Continued on page 6

Cliffe Knechtle confronts campus with Christianity

by Rajesh Swaminathan
The second coming of Cliffe Knechtle stirred up often acrimonious debate on the nature of Christianity last week. The evangelist addressed a variety of questions from the Williams student body on issues ranging from evolution to homosexuality.

Knechtle said he acquired his style by preaching to blue collar workers in bars. "These were men who liked to relax on Friday nights by watching baseball. When their teams were doing badly, they'd get up and curse God. I felt God needed to be defecated where people cursed him," he said.

"[Last year] his aggressiveness was a problem with a lot of people. This year, we asked him to realize that people are sensitive around here," said Rob Kunzman '90, a member of the Williams Christian Fellowship, the sponsoring organization. Though Knechtle spoke to the campus about the same issues as he did last year, this year he toned down his aggressive style.

"Cliffe has a strong personality. This is a forum, not a philosophy, but for Christianity. And Cliffe feels strongly about Christianity. We are all likely to argue strongly about ideas we feel strongly about," said Bryce Babcock, physics lecturer and WCF faculty advisor.

An intense personality

Knechtle agreed that his intense personality might turn off certain individuals. "But I will always respect those who openly speak out their beliefs and their right to speak out," he said.

Some students still felt that Knechtle's style was overly aggressive. "He has the loudspeaker and everyone is at his mercy," Richard Mackool '90 said.

Knechtle, who is an ordained Baptist minister, said that he presents strictly non-denominational Christian views and merely that which he perceives Christian scripture to be saying. "I wish to communicate the evidence for the reliability of Christ so that people can think the issue out for themselves. I am responsible to make it as easy as possible to allow people to think about God."

Evangelist Cliffe Knechtle shared his views on Christianity and morality with students in Chapin Circle last week. (Beliveau)

Rasputin reviews
Cocteau Twins'
Blue Bell Knoll

PAGE 5

Men's soccer
captains set two school records

PAGE 9

Women runners place
first in Amherst

PAGE 10

The Williams Record

"He was one of the great Olympic athletes. Look...his gold medals... track shoes... specimen jar..."

On The Record . . .

"We're pushing towards excellence, we're pushing toward a greater, more coherent education, which for me means we are the gadfly."

— Assistant Professor of Religion William Darrow on the Gaudino committee's goals.

"I will always respect those who openly speak out their beliefs."

— Evangelist Cliffe Knechtle

"The administration is stunting our growth and development by denying us the right to make decisions."

— Boston University senior Jamie Sanbonmatsu on the school's decision to prohibit students from having guests of the opposite sex stay overnight

"The longer the average student is at Williams, the more that student gets corrupted... He figures out how to get away with not thinking."

— Professor of Religion Norman Petersen on the role of the new tutorial program

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words, and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication, either typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Chuck Samuelson at (413) 597-2289.

DEBBIE SNYDER, Editor in Chief

TODD OWENS
News Editor

TED HOBART
Sports Editor

JED SCALA
Photography Editor

KIRSTEN HASENFUSS
Layout Editor

TRAVIS PIERSON
Arts Editor

CHUCK SAMUELSON
Op-Ed Editor

MARC MCDERMOTT
Sports Editor

RICH WARD
Photography Editor

MARY ILIFF
Layout Editor

KATIE ALBRIGHT
Business Manager

News Assistants: Stephanie Jones, Ann Mantil, Bill Savadove, Dan Skwire, Rob Weisberg
Sports Assistant: Marian Naffey
Photography Assistants: Jay Steinman, Karl Thomas
Layout Staff: Eliza Dugundji, Bill Philpott, Alex Shah

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Control of Senate looks good for Dems.

by Kenneth D. Letter '90
During the blitzkrieg of a presidential campaign, few politically significant events are paid much due. Though the deluge of information related to the big race makes this cognitive dissonance understandable, it is unwise to ignore all of the other political happenings currently taking place.

Every two years one-third of the Senate's members are up for re-election. In an election year, this is particularly important, as history has sometimes founded and CEO of Automatic Data Processing. Known as a tremendously successful businessman, he spent heavily of his own money on his election campaign and won with 51% of the vote. His current opponent, Republican Pete Dawkins, has a resume that not even a public relations firm could make up (although Dawkins' staff seems to have added unexpected polish to it anyway, according to the New York Times) — a Vietnam general, a successful businessman, a Rhodes scholar and, to boot, a New Jersey outsider. Though a few months ago, the race was seen as closer, Dawkins' on-air momentum has diminished. However, it will still be a close contest for the remaining five weeks.

Ohio's Senate race is fairly emotional for many liberal-leaning Democrats. Howard Metzenbaum, who won his last race with 57% of the vote and has served in the Senate since 1976 is facing the political contest of his life, and what is perhaps a Democratic incumbent's toughest race this year, from Republican George Voinovich, the mayor of Cleveland, with one of the most liberal voting records in the Senate and a "watchdog" for legislation that, in his view, benefits special interests. Metzenbaum has been targeted for defeat close enough behind to have merited this "tie-breaker." The division in the Democratic ranks will give Mack the advantage on election day — but the race is far from over.

Wisconsin is the only state this year which has the potential of electing a woman to the Senate (currently, there are only two women in the Senate — Barbara Mikulski (D-Maryland) and Nancy Landon Kassebaum (R-Kansas)). The Republican candidate, State Senator Susan Engelke, will be facing Democratic neophyte Herbert Kohl, a wealthy businessman making his first bid for political office.

Republicans: Some of the most exciting races this year involve politically-savvy Democratic challengers against Republican incumbents. The most interesting races are taking place in Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Minnesota, Nevada and Nebraska. In alphabetical order, here is a brief rundown on each of them.

The Connecticut Senate race is a fun one, mainly because it involves Republican Lowell Weicker, Jr. Weicker, a member of the Senate since 1970, is considered to be the most liberal Republican in the Senate and thus, is not warmly supported by mainstream Republicans or that bastion of Republican money, the Republican National Committee. His opponent, Attorney General Joe Lieberman, is being supported financially by (of all people) William F. Buckley of National Review fame. Buckley has made it one of his top priorities to get Weicker defeated (going as far as starting a political action committee (PAC) to raise money for Lieberman's campaign). Amazingly, Buckley would rather see a Democrat elected to the Senate than return the nominally Republican Weicker to office.

by many conservative Republicans and is being challenged by an extremely popular mayor from Ohio's biggest city. Again, Metzenbaum has maintained a lead over his opponent, but this race is a political "toss up."

Florida and Wisconsin are both races in which the Democratic incumbents have left the race — Lawton Chiles and William Proxmire respectively. This has resulted in what were extremely competitive primaries for each state's candidates. In Florida, the winner of the Republican primary was Congressman Connie Mack, III. Assisted by President Reagan's staunch support and presence at a Florida fundraiser, Mack easily defeated his primary opponent.

The Democratic race is, as of today, still up for grabs. By the end of the evening, Florida voters will have selected the Democratic candidate in a runoff election between Bill Gunther and Buddy McKay. Gunther received a plurality of votes in the primary, but McKay was

continued on page 3

Letters

To the Editor:

The CPS article about Dukakis' new student loan program in last week's Record was another example of the unfair and biased reporting of the life of the loan. That means that a person would owe the government more in year two than they did in year one. To redress the problems of negative amortization, Lawrence Summers, a Dukakis economic adviser, has proposed increasing the repayment rate on the loans to one-quarter of one percent per $1,000 of income (instead of the one-eighth of one percent per $1,000 as proposed in the original plan). Besides reducing negative amortization, however, this also doubles the cost of the loan.

Low income earners would be hurt under the program because they would spend their whole lives merely repaying principal and high wage earners (someone with, say, a starting salary of $35,000) would wind up paying between $95,000 and $200,000 to repay so $8,000 loan.

Arrogance and details: why big government hurts voters

by Chuck Samuelson

Regardless of who is elected President on November 8, the next leader of our country, the next "most powerful person in the world," in all likelihood will be the most boring President since "silent Cal" Coolidge.

The next President will be eminently qualified to govern. Both men running for President have dedicated their lives has produced two such uninspiring candidates. TV's answer: It is the easy one. It is also the wrong one. The truth of the matter is that the candidates are boring because government has become so big and so complicated that the people of to public service and are knowledgeable about the political process. Do you really think, however, that either man is capable of inspiring or leading a people? The press has accused Mike Dukakis of being "passionless." He responds that his wife thinks he's passionate, but he seems to miss the point. The type of passion the President needs is the type of passion that makes a great leader. Vince Lombardi wasn't passionate in the traditional sense. If you told him he was, he probably would have slugged you.

What do you think of WCFM's programming?

Interviews and photos by Amy Beliveau and Miriam Marcus

"I like it. I like the classical music on Sundays. I especially like the top 40 music." — Raj Venkatesan '91

"WCFM is okay. They are not any worse now than during my other 3 years at Williams. You've got to give them credit for that."

"I never listen to it." — Kerry Kilander '89

"Why wasn't it on this morning when I got in the shower without a hangover?" — Jim Fields '91

"I think it's pretty good, but less talk, more metal." — Charlie Kaplan '89

"I love CFM. I really look forward to coming home and listening to CFM." — Sean Culman '89

what's going on, the people of this country are being forced to select the candidate they trust most. Ronald Reagan was elected in 1980 because the electorate no longer trusted Jimmy Carter and because they believed Reagan when he said that he would not make the same mistakes Carter made. Who can we trust more, George Bush or Michael Dukakis? One of the reasons that negative campaigning has been so effective is that it casts doubts on the other candidate's integrity and trustworthiness. Dukakis' cold, non-ideological, technocratic image is supposed to inspire the trust of people to allow him to spend the next four years running a large and mysterious government. Likewise George Bush's experience in the Executive branch is supposed to inspire a similar trust.

Senate

continued from page 2
thing any state has to a Kennedy in Massachusetts (or so it seems anywhere in New England, as evidenced by Patrick Kennedy's (Edward Kennedy's 21 year old son) primary victory in Rhode Island). Nevertheless, Humphrey faces sharp opposition in Durenberger, a legislative leader in the Senate. Though still about ten points behind in the polls, Humphrey has a remote chance of beating Durenberger.

Nebraska and Nevada usually do not figure prominently in national elections, but this year these are the only two races where the Democratic challengers are expected by all political experts to upset Republican incumbents. Governor Richard Bryan is running against Republican Senator Chie Hecht in Nevada. Hecht, considered by many to be the least "senatorial" of any member of the Senate, is seen as out of touch with Nevada and as somewhat of an embarrassing figure in the State. Bryan, a popular Democrat in a state not known for being a stronghold of Democratic activists, has continually led Hecht in the polls and barring unforeseen circumstances, will win the election in November.

Nebraska's race is not particularly exciting (what do you expect in Nebraska?), but here too, the incumbent Republican, Senator David Karnes, is seen as being extremely vulnerable in his race against former governor Robert Kerrey. Polls have shown Kerrey to be in front; however, Karnes is gaining in the polls.

That is, in short (to some people, probably too long) the story behind the story in this election year. It is important to remember that there are hundreds of political races going on all over the country. 435 congressional races alone (the article about all of them will have to wait until the next election). Control of the Senate is extremely important to whomsoever becomes the next president — most political pundits expect the Democrats to retain at least a slim majority in the Senate following the election; if, of course, expect that Mike Dukakis' victory in November will turn our slight majority (53 to 47) into a substantial Democratic monopoly over the Senate in the next Administration.

Finally, in brief, the Vermont Senate race has four candidates squaring off to gain Senator Robert Stafford's seat (he is retiring). Republican Congressman James Jeffords is vying for the seat against former U.S. attorney William Grey. Jeffords, a popular Republican in this solidly Democratic state, is ahead in the polls, but no one has written off Grey yet.

That is, in short (to some people, probably too long) the story behind the story in this election year. It is important to remember that there are hundreds of political races going on all over the country. 435 congressional races alone (the article about all of them will have to wait until the next election). Control of the Senate is extremely important to whomsoever becomes the next president — most political pundits expect the Democrats to retain at least a slim majority in the Senate following the election; if, of course, expect that Mike Dukakis' victory in November will turn our slight majority (53 to 47) into a substantial Democratic monopoly over the Senate in the next Administration.

Kenneth Letter is the President of the Williams College Democrats.

Find out more about the Williams-Mystic program!

Please join us for a slide show Tuesday, 11 October, Noon Gibson Room—Dodd House or see assistant dean Sheila Spear

Fall or Spring Semester

AMERICAN MARITIME STUDIES

The Williams-Mystic Program offers you a challenging opportunity to focus one semester of your studies on our relationship with the sea. While living in cooperative houses at Mystic Seaport Museum, you take four Williams College courses in history, literature, oceanography or marine ecology, and marine policy. You can also develop new maritime skills, such as boat building, sailing, or celestial navigation, and spend two weeks offshore on a marine vessel. The incomparable facilities of the Museum, Mystic's varied marine habitat, and the companionship of fellow students interested in the sea provide an exceptional setting for maritime studies.

Accredited by WILLIAMS COLLEGE
Taught at MYSTIC SEAPORT MUSEUM

- Ecology
- Economics
- Biology
- History
- Literature
- American Studies
- Public Policy
- Oceanography
- Research

WILLIAMS-MYSTIC PROGRAM • MYSTIC SEAPORT MUSEUM, INC. • MYSTIC, CONNECTICUT 06355 • (203) 572-0711 FAX 359

THE FUTURE IS IN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS

A representative will be on campus MONDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1988 to discuss GRADUATE STUDY

THUNDERBIRD

AMERICAN GRADUATE SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL MANAGEMENT GLENDALE, ARIZONA 85306

Interviews may be scheduled at OFFICE OF CAREER COUNSELING

GIANT CASSETTE SALE

*Blues *Jazz *Rock $3.99

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS, 131 Water St. 458-5229

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED

Earn big commissions and free trips by selling NasauParadise Island, Cancun, Mexico and ski trips to Vermont & Colorado. For more information call toll free 1-800-231-0113 or in CT 203-967-3330.

Give blood. Now.

Give blood. Now.

The Balloonery at the Off Campus Shoppe

LIFT SOMEONE'S SPIRIT-SAY I LOVE YOU MAKE A HEART BOAR

BALLOONS IN A BOX -- IT'S A PARTY IN A BOX WHEN BOX IS OPENED UP POPS THE MYLAR BALLOON(S)!

MESSAGE CARD AND CONFETTI INCLUDED

MAILED ANYWHERE IN THE USA... 1 BALLOON $12.95 tax incl... 3 BALLOONS $18.95 tax incl.

CALL TOLL FREE ANYWHERE IN MASS. 1-800-442-4644 CALL LOCAL 664-4644 (NORTH ADAMS)

MASTERCARD-VISA-AMERICAN EXPRESS-DISCOVER OR PERSONAL CHECKS GLADLY ACCEPTED-----

photoworks

It has anything to do with photography we do it here. Supplies & Cameras

Affordable Framing Distinctive Portraiture Weddings, Groups Seniors, Teams

4 Water Street Williamstown 458-3113

Report denies teacher shortage

(CPS)—There may not be a teacher shortage after all, a report released last week claimed.

Few other education observers—school district officials, campus deans at education or students who are teaching majors—said they believed the report, however.

But, based on a survey of 75 school districts and more than 1,000 education majors looking for jobs, the Washington, D.C.-based National Center for Education Information found a waiting list for many of the teaching jobs available this year.

"There is no teacher shortage," concluded NCEI president C. Emily Feistner. Various surveys have forecast dire shortages of teachers in elementary, junior high and high schools, and an even worse shortage of college teachers.

Few other than NCEI believe the situation is changing. NCEI's forecasts were "more robust" than the data suggested, said Jewell Gould, the American Federation of Teachers' research director.

"NCEI ignored reports from the Labor Department that 35-to-40 percent of the teaching force will be eligible for retirement by the end of the century," Gould charged. "And half of those who start teaching now will drop out of the profession in five years."

"She ignored the children who can't get into specialized education programs or who may lose the programs they have because the district can't find special educators or therapists," Gould said.

Math and science teachers also are badly needed, said Gould.

NCEI is a "reverse Chicken Little" in the eyes of Marilyn Rogers of the National Education Association. "They are alone in saying 'no shortage,'"

"To meet the need for teachers, about 25 percent of all the students in college are needed in teacher education, currently we have only eight percent."

Rogers cited a NEA survey of 191 school districts that found teachers shortages in several disciplines. Of the surveyed districts, 45 percent had a shortage of teacher applicants.

School districts faced with shortage use "warm body techniques" to fill vacancies, Rogers said. They award emergency teaching certificates, assign teachers to courses outside their certification area, use teacher aides and increase class sizes.

Another method is to eliminate course offerings. "If there is no chemistry teacher, the district doesn't offer the course. There's no vacancy that way, but the kids are shortchanged," Rogers said.

Rogers joined Gould in questioning NCEI's methods. "She used people who responded to (NCEI's) job bank ads, people who don't have a teaching job. How representative of the teaching profession are they?"

At the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education, which reported that education programs in the 14 western states will not produce enough teachers to meet the needs of the region through the 1990s, Charles Lenth had kinder words for the NCEI study.

"Her findings may be accurate today, but what about the future?" Lenth asked.

Today is a problem in some places.

At the University of Nebraska-Omaha, a students to instructor ratio of 35:1 in the business school last week prompted Chancellor Del Weber to ask the state legislature for help in hiring 15 new faculty members.

"We're going to be in jeopardy with our accreditation unless we bring that (ratio) down," said Weber.

Business school faculty members taught an average of 709 credit hours in 1987-88 to keep up with expanding enrollment, one-third more hours than those taught by their colleagues in the College of Education.

Students in the overcrowded school have trouble registering for business courses because close quickly.

Texas A&M and the California State University system have found faculty shortages in recent years.

Assistant Professor of Religion William Darrow leads the discussion at last week's meeting of the Gaudino committee. (Beliveau)

Gaudino committee to review frosh year

by Justin Smith

The Gaudino Committee, a student and faculty group dedicated to the improvement of the College through constructive criticism, decided at a meeting last week to take a hard look at all aspects of the typical Williams freshman's year.

Proposals to be considered this fall include possible house-entry partnerships, exclusion of freshmen from varsity sports, and the abolition of freshman Winter Study classes, freshman co-ops and class-segregated housing.

In addition to the proposals concerning freshmen, a possible project involved Food Service's annual lobster dinner, which is scheduled this year for October 13. James Power '90 noted that the date is just three days before "World Hunger Day."

In a letter to the committee, he wrote, "Such extravagance in the face of widespread global concern displays and promotes not merely a lack of awareness, but a palpable insensitivity to the greater community and to the basic problems confronting humankind."

Before addressing the problems concerning the dinner I feel the need to reiterate the intentions and the questions which the artist is attempting to communicate. Light and the indeterminate and unbiased manner in which it falls forms the heart of the piece in the Aaron Gallery. Schiff wants to see light as a metaphor for impressions/inspiration and the way they are received (light seems more a trope for divine inspiration in this context). The questions which he feels the viewer should ask himself or herself are, "How are our impressions transformed?"

"How are we influenced by this light/energy?" "Where does this energy/inspiration go once inside of us?" and "What does the canister at the bottom of this 'funnel of inspirational transformation' (my term) represent?"

For the artist the funnel stands "as yet a metaphor for an internal process," yet

Assistant Professor of Religion William Darrow began the meeting by describing the historical goals of the committee and said, "We're pushing towards excellence, we're pushing toward a greater, more coherent education, which for me means we are the gadfly."

The self-selected group of students and faculty members then discussed which issues to include on its fall agenda.

In addition to the proposals concerning freshmen, a possible project involved Food Service's annual lobster dinner, which is scheduled this year for October 13. James Power '90 noted that the date is just three days before "World Hunger Day."

In a letter to the committee, he wrote, "Such extravagance in the face of widespread global concern displays and promotes not merely a lack of awareness, but a palpable insensitivity to the greater community and to the basic problems confronting humankind."

Before addressing the problems concerning the dinner I feel the need to reiterate the intentions and the questions which the artist is attempting to communicate. Light and the indeterminate and unbiased manner in which it falls forms the heart of the piece in the Aaron Gallery. Schiff wants to see light as a metaphor for impressions/inspiration and the way they are received (light seems more a trope for divine inspiration in this context). The questions which he feels the viewer should ask himself or herself are, "How are our impressions transformed?"

"How are we influenced by this light/energy?" "Where does this energy/inspiration go once inside of us?" and "What does the canister at the bottom of this 'funnel of inspirational transformation' (my term) represent?"

For the artist the funnel stands "as yet a metaphor for an internal process," yet sudden but understandable. "We're kind of upset, but we understand... We were just on the side, practicing with the team."

"You either come here as a varsity as a freshman and improve a little or you don't ski varsity. It's very unusual for someone to come and work their way up to varsity/junior or senior year. It just doesn't happen," Aengst said.

"We need something for the people who have raced, want to race and are not on the team," he said. "We want to set up a club to go and race in USA races."

Compete in Division I

The top six skiers of each Alpine and Nordic team make up the varsity team and compete in Division I. Fisher said that the varsity members are top skiers with extensive racing backgrounds and win in major competitions. Some of the skiers may compete, individually, at the Nationals, he said.

"The people we would be cutting," Fisher said, "are those with no previous racing experience."

Fisher said that many other opportunities for skiers exist at Williams, notably activities sponsored by the Outing Club. These are open to skiers at all levels.

To dispel rumors that junior varsity skiing has been discontinued at Williams, Fisher said, "We've never had an official junior varsity ski team at Williams. We've just never, traditionally, cut the team, either."

He added, "If the first six are varsity, I guess the next six could be called JV... What we did was cut away the 'third' team, beyond junior varsity."

Not in the way

"I didn't think guys like us were in the way much. I sincerely appreciated the opportunities to practice. My skiing improved very much," said John Cort '91, a skier whose position on the team is still uncertain.

"Personally I think that [the cuts policy] goes against the Williams ideal—working a lot and being able to participate, to compete," Cort said.

Peter Aengst '91, who was cut from the team, said the new cuts policy was beginning to rebound modestly until they leveled off again in 1987.

Although the College Board sternly warns people to weigh the test scores in "the context in which the particular test scores were earned," politicians always trumpet them as proof of something.

When scores turned upward in 1982, President Reagan claimed they vindicated his education policies.

Education Policy Analyst Jeanne Ailes of the Heritage Foundation, an influential conservative think tank, says the Reagan administration can still take credit for improving SAT scores.

"A lot of the dialogue by the Reagan administration sparked efforts to improve education," she said. "The states responded to that dialogue, but improvements took time. We'll see some real innovative successes."

Still others don't see much room for interpretation in the scores.

John Katsaman, president of Princeton Review, a New York firm that coaches standardized test takers, has fervently criticized the SAT for what he says is a bias against women and minorities. The SAT, he says, doesn't test actual knowledge, just students' ability to take standardized tests.

"It's a lousy test that doesn't measure aptitude. It's a bullshit test written by a bunch of guys from New Jersey."

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Average scores peaked in 1963, and various observers have blamed everything from terrors to atmospheric nuclear testing for the decline since.

To the interim, verbal scores reached a high of 466 in 1968 and math scores a high of 493 in 1969. Yet from the verbal low of 424 and the math low of 466, both recorded in 1981—average scores dropped to 424 in 1987.

College Board President Donald Stewart chose to stress the positive: "It is certainly reassuring to see that the decline in scores on the SAT has leveled off in recent years, because this probably means that some positive things are happening in the nation's schools."

Schiff confuses the personal and mechanical

by Steve Best

Last Friday marked the opening of an installation at WCMA entitled "Deus Ex Machina" by "environmental" artist Jeffrey Schiff. There are two works in the installation. One piece, which is located in the Aaron Gallery, consists of a large metallic form resembling a funnel. The other piece, located in the rotunda, or Falcon gallery, consists of a mechanism which, while attached to one of the columns, is meant to rotate over a flat stone slab. Once in motion the mechanism also directs the movement of a tall metallic pointer directed at the dome of the gallery. All of these mechanisms are intriguing, mind you, yet ones juxtaposed against the artist's aims (which can be deduced from the summaries located on the walls of each gallery) it becomes questionable whether these objectives are actually obtained.

Before addressing the problems concerning the dinner I feel the need to reiterate the intentions and the questions which the artist is attempting to communicate. Light and the indeterminate and unbiased manner in which it falls forms the heart of the piece in the Aaron Gallery. Schiff wants to see light as a metaphor for impressions/inspiration and the way they are received (light seems more a trope for divine inspiration in this context). The questions which he feels the viewer should ask himself or herself are, "How are our impressions transformed?"

"How are we influenced by this light/energy?" "Where does this energy/inspiration go once inside of us?" and "What does the canister at the bottom of this 'funnel of inspirational transformation' (my term) represent?"

For the artist the funnel stands "as yet a metaphor for an internal process," yet characteristics are totally absent from Mr. Schiff's installation. All of his emotions seem to be foregrounded in the mechanical, and this to me is problematic since it excludes all emotions which are grounded in the natural and, in essence, the personal.

Jeffrey Schiff says that at the heart of this work is the notion that "man's physical [read 'mechanical'] exploits are always attempts to attain an understanding of a higher realm." Well, that may be true for his realm but not for mine.

As part of the ARTWORKS series, an exhibition of works by Hudson Valley artist Ernest Shaw will be on exhibit at WCMA through November 13.

For the last decade, Shaw has been known far his totem-like metal sculptures, but he has recently turned to smaller-scale works of wood and graphite. Three series by him—Heralds, Moenonic, and Caravan—are highlighted at the exhibit.

Shaw describes the Caravan series as a visual memorial prayer or kaddish for his father. Carved with a chainsaw from blocks of laminated plywood, the painted, gouged, and repainted, these works resemble boats and polio cradles.

The Moenonic series is a cradle form. The Moenonic series is an outgrowth of the Caravan series with its elemental forms, but it also introduces the human figure into Shaw's sculpture, which he has previously explored only in painting and drawing. The Herald series refers to imagined family coats-of-arms or shields and began as the embodiment of moods and characteristics that the artist saw in his father.

Trained as a doctor, Shaw left a full-time psychiatry practice in 1974 to concentrate on his art. After 13 years spent forging monumental sculptures, he turned from lucrative steel commissions to working with wood on an intimate scale.

Shaw will give a lecture on his work on Wednesday, October 5, in Laurence 231. A more thorough analysis of his work will be in the next Record.

There is no doubt that this is a large work of public sculpture, and with this in mind I think it needs to address my act of experiencing it in a large space; and having created a work of such grand proportions Schiff should beg me to read it this way.

Granted, a lot of the physical tension felt in the Aaron gallery is alleviated by entering the rotunda (and I am quite certain this is how the installation is to be viewed). Yet when looking at the two pieces together or in succession, one is immediately aware of the fact that both of these pieces are highly mechanistic. I was struck by the fact that all the values which the works are meant to represent (values which Schiff attempts to "pave off" as butcheries) are applied to very cold, industrial and terribly Westernized forms. These works aren't as universal as Mr. Schiff wants us to think they are.

When thinking of the mechanics of the exhibition the contrast between representations which are industrial, individualistic, and disruptive and those which are agrarian, communal, and harmonious (if you will excuse my thinking in polarities) is quite apparent if only due to the fact that the latter

characteristics are totally absent from Mr. Schiff's installation. All of his emotions seem to be foregrounded in the mechanical, and this to me is problematic since it excludes all emotions which are grounded in the natural and, in essence, the personal.

Jeffrey Schiff says that at the heart of this work is the notion that "man's physical [read 'mechanical'] exploits are always attempts to attain an understanding of a higher realm." Well, that may be true for his realm but not for mine.

As part of the ARTWORKS series, an exhibition of works by Hudson Valley artist Ernest Shaw will be on exhibit at WCMA through November 13.

For the last decade, Shaw has been known far his totem-like metal sculptures, but he has recently turned to smaller-scale works of wood and graphite. Three series by him—Heralds, Moenonic, and Caravan—are highlighted at the exhibit.

Shaw describes the Caravan series as a visual memorial prayer or kaddish for his father. Carved with a chainsaw from blocks of laminated plywood, the painted, gouged, and repainted, these works resemble boats and polio cradles.

The Moenonic series is a cradle form. The Moenonic series is an outgrowth of the Caravan series with its elemental forms, but it also introduces the human figure into Shaw's sculpture, which he has previously explored only in painting and drawing. The Herald series refers to imagined family coats-of-arms or shields and began as the embodiment of moods and characteristics that the artist saw in his father.

Trained as a doctor, Shaw left a full-time psychiatry practice in 1974 to concentrate on his art. After 13 years spent forging monumental sculptures, he turned from lucrative steel commissions to working with wood on an intimate scale.

Shaw will give a lecture on his work on Wednesday, October 5, in Laurence 231. A more thorough analysis of his work will be in the next Record.

There is no doubt that this is a large work of public sculpture, and with this in mind I think it needs to address my act of experiencing it in a large space; and having created a work of such grand proportions Schiff should beg me to read it this way.

Granted, a lot of the physical tension felt in the Aaron gallery is alleviated by entering the rotunda (and I am quite certain this is how the installation is to be viewed). Yet when looking at the two pieces together or in succession, one is immediately aware of the fact that both of these pieces are highly mechanistic. I was struck by the fact that all the values which the works are meant to represent (values which Schiff attempts to "pave off" as butcheries) are applied to very cold, industrial and terribly Westernized forms. These works aren't as universal as Mr. Schiff wants us to think they are.

When thinking of the mechanics of the exhibition the contrast between representations which are industrial, individualistic, and disruptive and those which are agrarian, communal, and harmonious (if you will excuse my thinking in polarities) is quite apparent if only due to the fact that the latter

characteristics are totally absent from Mr. Schiff's installation. All of his emotions seem to be foregrounded in the mechanical, and this to me is problematic since it excludes all emotions which are grounded in the natural and, in essence, the personal.

Jeffrey Schiff says that at the heart of this work is the notion that "man's physical [read 'mechanical'] exploits are always attempts to attain an understanding of a higher realm." Well, that may be true for his realm but not for mine.

As part of the ARTWORKS series, an exhibition of works by Hudson Valley artist Ernest Shaw will be on exhibit at WCMA through November 13.

For the last decade, Shaw has been known far his totem-like metal sculptures, but he has recently turned to smaller-scale works of wood and graphite. Three series by him—Heralds, Moenonic, and Caravan—are highlighted at the exhibit.

Shaw describes the Caravan series as a visual memorial prayer or kaddish for his father. Carved with a chainsaw from blocks of laminated plywood, the painted, gouged, and repainted, these works resemble boats and polio cradles.

The Moenonic series is a cradle form. The Moenonic series is an outgrowth of the Caravan series with its elemental forms, but it also introduces the human figure into Shaw's sculpture, which he has previously explored only in painting and drawing. The Herald series refers to imagined family coats-of-arms or shields and began as the embodiment of moods and characteristics that the artist saw in his father.

Trained as a doctor, Shaw left a full-time psychiatry practice in 1974 to concentrate on his art. After 13 years spent forging monumental sculptures, he turned from lucrative steel commissions to working with wood on an intimate scale.

Shaw will give a lecture on his work on Wednesday, October 5, in Laurence 231. A more thorough analysis of his work will be in the next Record.

There is no doubt that this is a large work of public sculpture, and with this in mind I think it needs to address my act of experiencing it in a large space; and having created a work of such grand proportions Schiff should beg me to read it this way.

Granted, a lot of the physical tension felt in the Aaron gallery is alleviated by entering the rotunda (and I am quite certain this is how the installation is to be viewed). Yet when looking at the two pieces together or in succession, one is immediately aware of the fact that both of these pieces are highly mechanistic. I was struck by the fact that all the values which the works are meant to represent (values which Schiff attempts to "pave off" as butcheries) are applied to very cold, industrial and terribly Westernized forms. These works aren't as universal as Mr. Schiff wants us to think they are.

When thinking of the mechanics of the exhibition the contrast between representations which are industrial, individualistic, and disruptive and those which are agrarian, communal, and harmonious (if you will excuse my thinking in polarities) is quite apparent if only due to the fact that the latter

characteristics are totally absent from Mr. Schiff's installation. All of his emotions seem to be foregrounded in the mechanical, and this to me is problematic since it excludes all emotions which are grounded in the natural and, in essence, the personal.

Jeffrey Schiff says that at the heart of this work is the notion that "man's physical [read 'mechanical'] exploits are always attempts to attain an understanding of a higher realm." Well, that may be true for his realm but not for mine.

As part of the ARTWORKS series, an exhibition of works by Hudson Valley artist Ernest Shaw will be on exhibit at WCMA through November 13.

For the last decade, Shaw has been known far his totem-like metal sculptures, but he has recently turned to smaller-scale works of wood and graphite. Three series by him—Heralds, Moenonic, and Caravan—are highlighted at the exhibit.

Shaw describes the Caravan series as a visual memorial prayer or kaddish for his father. Carved with a chainsaw from blocks of laminated plywood, the painted, gouged, and repainted, these works resemble boats and polio cradles.

The Moenonic series is a cradle form. The Moenonic series is an outgrowth of the Caravan series with its elemental forms, but it also introduces the human figure into Shaw's sculpture, which he has previously explored only in painting and drawing. The Herald series refers to imagined family coats-of-arms or shields and began as the embodiment of moods and characteristics that the artist saw in his father.

Trained as a doctor, Shaw left a full-time psychiatry practice in 1974 to concentrate on his art. After 13 years spent forging monumental sculptures, he turned from lucrative steel commissions to working with wood on an intimate scale.

Shaw will give a lecture on his work on Wednesday, October 5, in Laurence 231. A more thorough analysis of his work will be in the next Record.

There is no doubt that this is a large work of public

Alex Rachmiel '91, Jason Gull '91 and Sean Kelce '92 were part of a reading of Clifford Odets' Awake and Sing last Thursday at AMT ownStage. Last week marked the fifth anniversary of DownStage. (Jackson)

MORGAN STANLEY

invites seniors to a presentation on

Opportunities in Investment Banking

Thursday, October 6, 1988
Office of Career Counseling
7:00 P.M.

Join several Williams alumni for a discussion about:

- The Investment Banking Industry
- Opportunities in Morgan Stanley's Financial Analyst Program

Contact OCC
 for additional information

Local Movie Listings (subject to change after Thursday)

Bennington Cinema 1, II, III Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802), 442-8179
A Nightmare on Elm St.-Part IV	7:10 & 9:10
Moan Over Parador	7:05 & 9:10
Married to the Mob	7:05 & 9:10
Images Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
A Taming Woman	7:00 & 9:15
Powaqatsi	7:00 & 9:00
A Handful of Dust	7:00 & 9:00
North Adams Cinema Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Hot to Trot	7:00
Patty Hearst	9:20
Betrayed	6:50 & 9:15
Kansas	7:00 & 9:20
Dead Ringers	6:50 & 9:15
Pittsfield Cinema Center Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
A Fash Called Wanda, Eight Men Out, Moon Over Parador, Betrayed, Midnight Run, Dead Ringers	Mon-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sun 7:00 & 9:30
Who Framed Roger Rabbit, Cocktail, Big, A Nightmare on Elm St.-Part IV, Married to the Mob	Mon-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sun 7:15 & 9:30

Gaudino

Continued from page 4

The committee will examine the possibility of organizing a boycott of the dinner and may suggest that in the future funding for the annual dinner be ordered to the Berkshire Food Project in order to help the disadvantaged in the area. The committee also plans to conduct a student review of the annual course package and to review the Freshman

Residential Seminar Program, a program which was established at the suggestion of the committee. In addition, the group will address the problem of the socialization that fosters segregation, alienation, and compartmentalization at the College. The group will discuss these possible proposals before issuing any concrete suggestions to the appropriate committees and the College community as a whole.

M. Rugby

continued from page 10

The frosting on the cake came early in the second half though. The Killer B's had fought their way inside the Mid 22 and prepared to score down. Weiss positioned himself deep behind the pack. Scrum-half Marc McDermott '89 fed the ball to the quick heel of classmate hooker John Dillon before passing back to Weiss, who took aim and drop kicked the ball cleanly between the posts. The B's ended up shutting Middlebury out 11-0.

C-men tie
 Rising star of the screaming C-men Dan Foote '90, led his side against a formidable opposition. Though Foote scored two tries, both from blocked kicks, the C's only managed a 10-10 draw.

Perhaps the most exciting game of the day was the D-side. In the final game Williams displayed the awesome depth at its command. Urged on by senior fullback John Baker's calls for intensity, the young rugger's pressure on defense and attacked when they won the ball. Hooker Ivan Fermon '92 zipped through Mid linouts to harass the scrum half and when the ball got away, he raced feverishly after the stand-off.

Both Fermon and classmate, Iron Mike on the wing scored tries, but the match highlight was Baker's gliding into the Williams line and carrying the ball over for his first power try. Ferocious tackling by Pete Partridge '91 and the unnatural (if you know his brother) speed of freshman center Jim Shore rugger's past and present that the future of the club is secure. They don't call it a great sport for nothing.

Tutorials

continued from page 1

two weeks of classes, he is convinced students are getting as much, if not more, from the tutorial.

Tutorials counteract intimacy loss
 "Large class size is a problem (at Williams)," Peterson said. He said he believed that the tutorials would help counteract the loss of intimacy in educational scale that has taken place over the past two decades.

Peterson also said that the tutorial program—which is at present unique in the United States to Williams—could replace the Winter Study Program as a trademark of the college.

"The Winter Study Program has been highly controversial since its inauguration in the early '70s to accommodate the broad interests of Williams students. The vast majority of students take it as a lark, and the faculty end up baby-sitting the students. Now, WSP is merely used as a gimmick to sell Williams in college catalogs."

"The tutorial program, on the other hand, is a significant venture. Participation would be beneficial for every student, and the sooner the better. Freshmen should be included," Peterson said.

According to Bruton, the faculty plans to observe the effectiveness of tutorials over a period of three or four years. At the end of five years, they will review the program and decide whether to expand or eliminate it.

ADVERTISE
 call
 (413) 597-2289

Council Travel
 DON'T WAIT! BOOK NOW FOR THE HOLIDAYS!
 FROM NEW YORK
 LONDON 199
 PARIS 219
 ROME 269
 round trip
 CARACAS 320
 ST. THOMAS 280
 HONG KONG 739
 Taxes not included.
 ALSO: Work-Study Abroad, Language Courses, Int'l Student ID, Youth Hostel Passes.
 EURAIL Passes issued on the spot!
 Call for the FREE CIEE Student Travel Catalog!
 413-256-1261
 AMHERST
 79 So. Pleasant St.
 Amherst, MA 01002

Senior winger Lauren Bochenstein turns the corner en route to scoring the winning try in the WWRFC's victory over Dartmouth. (Scala)

WWRFC shuts out Dartmouth

by Laura Whitman

The top three New England collegiate Women's rugby clubs (Dartmouth, Harvard and Williams, respectively) have each lost a number of well-seasoned and highly talented seniors from last year's clubs, thus leaving their relative strengths in doubt. This weekend, the WWRFC showed their desire to up their number three ranking and improve their chances of representing the region at the recently created New England Rugby Football Union Championships later this fall.

Some players on the A-side admitted to feeling nervousness before starting against Dartmouth, currently ranked number one in the area, but this apprehension was quickly dispelled as the WWRFC commanded the first half and kept play within Dartmouth's 22 meter line. Dartmouth won a series of lineouts, but constant pressure caused them to kick out of bounds each time. On the five meter line, wing Lauren Bochenstein '89 caught a dramatic last-second pass from Ann Aranson '89 and touched it down. The try was unconverted, leaving the score at Williams 4, Dartmouth 0.

Sloppy second
 Play was decidedly sloppier in the second half, where the unaccustomed heat of the day contributed to the players' general fatigue. The WWRFC was called for several needless penalties and missed some key tackles. Consequently, Williams found itself playing defensive rugby in the closing minutes. Scrum-half Kerry Klinder '89 got under the ball when Dartmouth forced their way into the white try-zone to block a possible score. A few minutes later, Annabel Schienberg '89 solidly brought down a breakthrough runner, ending the match at a victorious Williams 4, Dartmouth 0.

In keeping with the club sport commitment to giving all members time on the field, the following game was divided into three twenty-five minute periods, giving Williams B, C, and D sides competition against the Dartmouth B's.

Although the scrums played consistently well, the lines consistently outshone themselves. Fullback Claire Manwell '89 was a constant presence, kicking well both offensively and defensively. The other lines also outdid themselves in supporting one another.

Katie Lapey '90's try (assisted by Jackie Graves '90) emanated from a series of picture perfect passes which eluded the Dartmouth side. The try was unconverted, leaving the score at Williams 4, Dartmouth 0.

The C-side period was well-matched, with most of the play taking place at mid-field. Gillian Flory '92 had several excellent runs and spoiled a Green breakthrough. Rebeckah Timin '90 and the omnipresent Molly Fohl '91 also made some nice tackles. The smartest rugby on the pitch that period came from sophomore Amy Thrasher who demonstrated her eagerness by not letting go of a green jersey and was consequently dragged more than five yards by a large Dartmouth rugger. Despite Thrasher's desire, the C-side's period remained scoreless.

The D-side line surprised the spectators with their speed. Yung Moon '91 was all over the field, gaining yardage and sacrificing herself in rucks and mauls. Also noteworthy was the play of fullback Colleen Boland '92, who kicked well on the penalties and made good hard tackles. Dartmouth scored an unconverted try, however, to win the D-side contest 4-0.

The WWRFC will meet Dartmouth again next weekend at the annual Beantown tourney in Boston, where they hope to once again "Shut the mouth".

SPORTS SHORTS

Water Polo

by Paul Dehnel

Once again a group now known as the Dynasty took a trip over the mountains to meet the evil defectors in a showdown of Water Polo. Bowdoin was the setting for this game, which was part of an important New England tournament.

Although the squad Williams sent up was low in reinforcements, nothing was going to stop Dartmouth, for the first time in years, looked like they knew what they were doing, but were no match for the gun of Mike Lane '90. Lane came, saw, and conquered the Dartmouth defense, scoring twelve times, more than enough to win the game.

The team then moved on to play an inferior Bowdoin team, winning that contest 13-7. With two easy victories, the Ephs returned to the pool for the only game that really mattered. Amherst, looking for revenge of their previous loss, somehow managed to go into the fourth quarter leading 11-7.

The Ephs' goalie, Gavin Webb '92, a wall of meat, played out of his mind and shut down the evil ones, while Williams' offense found holes all over the pool and scored five times to win the game 12-11. Scoring in this game were Dave Cantor '89, who scored five times, Will Dudley '89 and Than Healy '91, both with three goals, and Chris Giglio '89 with one goal.

After shutting down Amherst, these polo studs posted easy wins over the University of Rhode Island and Boston University, to win their first New England tournament in two and one-half years.

Tennis

After last weekend's disappointing 5-4 loss to a Smith team that was ranked seventh nationally in Division III, the women's tennis team took out its frustrations on Mount Holyoke and Wesleyan this week. The 8-1 and 9-0 victories, respectively, raised the squad's record back above the .500 mark, 3-2, and were a great way to restore confidence.

Against Mount Holyoke, junior Amy Davidson moved back into her accustomed spot at number one and played as if she had never left, rolling to a 6-3, 6-0 win. Hillary Cairns '92 at number two also dominated in straight sets, 6-2, 6-1.

Senior captain Missy Crouchley was in charge at number three singles, breezing to a straight set victory without dropping a single game. Katherine Stearns '91 likewise had an easy time of it at number five, winning 6-1, 6-2.

The number four and six singles matches were the only ones that were even close, and the only ones all day that went to three sets. Sophomore Beth Laxson dropped the first set 2-6 before coming on strong to take the next two and the match 6-2, 6-4.

Lisa Brylton '91 was not so fortunate at number six singles, as she was shut out in the first set 6-0 before bouncing back to take the second 6-3. Mount Holyoke's Tracy Crawford came back strong in the third, though, and posted her team's only win of the day with a 6-3 third set win.

The doubles provided no more competition than the singles, as all three teams won in straight sets and none dropped more than four games in their match. The reason coach Gail Ramsey played her regular doubles teams instead of JV players is that score differential can affect the ranking for post-season tournaments.

Wesleyan proved to be even less trying than Mount Holyoke, as the Ephs captured one half of the Little Three Title without breaking a sweat, 9-0. This week the squad plays its last home matches of the year, tomorrow against Middlebury and Saturday versus Trinity.

Golf

On a perfect Friday afternoon at Taconic Golf Club, the men's golf team continued its improving trend as it defeated the Harvard Crimson by a twelve stroke margin, 413 to 425.

Senior co-captain Tim Frechette, making a strong bid for All-American honors, shot the low round of the day with a 74, just three strokes over par. Frechette's score might have been even lower, as the Weston, Massachusetts native cruised into the sixteenth hole at one under par. However, Frechette derailed on the last three holes, finishing with two bogeys and a double.

Frechette's win against Harvard is a strong follow-up to his performance in last weekend's Duke Nelson Invitational at Middlebury, where he also grabbed medalist honors. One week ago, the squad ventured to Skidmore for the Fall Classic, where the Ephs took fourth in the nine team tournament. The Ephs' total of 329 put them 18 strokes behind the winning Skidmore team's 311.

Frechette was again low man for the Ephs, firing a 78. His score was good enough only for a fourth place, though, five back of medalist David Hathaway of Skidmore. Sean Segun '91 was next for Williams with an 80, good for 11th out of the 45 golfers.

The team is starting to show signs of rebounding from its poor start. Frechette is beginning to show his expected strength, and the other players are finishing stronger behind him. In order to win consistently, though, the squad needs consistent finishes from a fourth and fifth player.

continued from page 10
 Ephs' defense shut down the Jumbos at their own 21 to give the offense another chance. Following the punt, however, a costly fumble on second down sent the defensive corps back onto the field.

Last Stand
 Last week against Hamilton, the defense came up with a big stand in the fourth quarter to salvage the win, and this week they had to toughen up to save the tie. Following Williams' fumble, the Jumbos powered into Eph territory behind Fankos and Guand. On third and four at the 11, Fankos bulldozed into the right side of the line, but was unable to make the first down mark.

When Jumbo coach Duane Ford elected not to try the field goal (into the wind from the hash mark), it set up a familiar fourth down stand. Guand tried a quarterback sneak up the middle, but was hit on the line by Pritchard and wrapped up by Rich Williams short of the mark. The defense had risen to the occasion again. Williams was unable even to gain a first down on its next possession, but Bill Crowley launched a clutch punt which rolled to Tufts' 23 for a 63 yard net. The defense stopped Tufts again, but by the time Williams got the ball, there was time only for an unsuccessful "Hail Mary" bomb.

The final score may not be surprising given the fact that the Ephs and Jumbos entered the game as the eighth and ninth ranked teams in New England, respectively, but neither team can be expected about the tie. The Jumbos must be second-guessing themselves for failing to gain a first down or at least get a field goal near the Williams goal line.

Many Williams players believe that they should have been able to score more on the Jumbo defense, which they dominated on the line.

After this week's ground attack, the Ephs must switch gears and prepare for the aerial onslaught in Hartford of the Trinity Bantams, who last year overcame the Ephs 28-0. "We've got a lot to pay back down there. They embarrassed us last year," said Montgomery.

GIVE BLOOD

OCTOBER 11-12

MOUNTAIN BIKE MADNESS

This Columbus Day weekend discover the best prices EVER on fat-tire bicycles and receive a FREE MOUNTAIN GOAT WATER BOTTLE just for test riding a bicycle.

Unbeatable Prices! Accessories with purchase!

Specialized	SAVE	NOW	Diamond Back	SAVE NOW
HardRock	$75	$285	Topanga	$92 $265
RockHopper	$75	$365	Ascent BX	$102 ⁹⁸ $395
RockHopper Comp	$100	$480	Ascent EX Deore	$115 $515
Stumpjumper	$150	$579	Apex	$120 $565

Jamis	SAVE	NOW	Fat City	Fat Chance
Durango	$77	$220	2 in stock
Durango	$100	$335	Was $1,150
Diablo	$100	$439	SAVE $200

the Mountain Goat
 "The Complete Outdoor Shop"
 130 Water St., Williamstown (413) 458-8445 Open 7 Days
 Manchester Center, Vt. (802) 362-5159

The Boston Globe

Faculty & Student Home/Box Delivery

Rate: Monday-Saturday $1.00

Full Week $2.00

To subscribe call Brian at x6186

Are you considering professional school?

HARVARD UNIVERSITY

JOHN F. KENNEDY
 SCHOOL OF GOVERNMENT

Is Looking for Future Leaders in Public Affairs.

Come Learn About Harvard's Two-Year Master's Program in Public Policy, Leading to either the Master in Public Policy or City and Regional Planning Degree.

JOINT DEGREE OPTIONS AND CROSS-REGISTRATION OPPORTUNITIES WITH OTHER SCHOOLS

MEET WITH A KENNEDY SCHOOL REPRESENTATIVE

DATE: OCTOBER 11

TIME: 4:00-5:30 GROUP SESSION

PLACE: PLEASE CONTACT YOUR CAREER PLACEMENT OFFICE FOR THIS INFORMATION

All Students, All Majors, All Years Welcome!

Professional PACKAGING & SHIPPING SERVICES

FAST, CONVENIENT & FRIENDLY
 Deliver to the Spirit Shop
 Shipped from Pittsfield
 call 458-3704
 Pick-up service available

PaineWebber Incorporated

Investment Banking Division

Invites Williams College Seniors to attend a presentation

on
The Two-Year Financial Analyst Program
Tuesday, October 4, 1988
Office of Career Counseling
Stetson Hall
7:00 p.m.

Sports

The Williams Record October 4, 1988 Page 9

Men's soccer downs North Adams, Clark

by Mariam Naficy

1-0, 4-0: these are the scores with which the men's soccer team won their two games last week. Beating North Adams State last Wednesday and Clark last Saturday, the Ephs are once again on their way to a strong season.

The team now has a 4-0 record, has beaten their supposedly toughest rival, Middlebury, and Co-captain/goalie Rob Black '89 has already had four shutouts.

Underlying the impressive scores last week, however, were two tough games. The Ephs' game against North Adams State went scoreless until overtime, when co-captain Mike Masters '88 put in a direct shot which the goalie dove for but missed. Masters observed modestly, "They played us really hard...we were a little fortunate."

Realizing, as Masters put it, that they "didn't have the greatest game" against North Adams, the Ephs came to Cole Field last Saturday psyched to win. The game started and stayed in Clark territory for most of the first half, the Ephs, led by Masters and Peter Lyn '91, making several aggressive attempts at the Clark goal. About 13 minutes into the game, Rob Swann '90 was passed the ball; he sent it to Masters, who headed it in over the hapless Clark goalie for a spectacular first goal.

After an interruption by one of several Williamstown dogs that were roaming the area, play continued and centered around the Clark goal. Clark was just beginning to stage a comeback, however, when Rob Lake '91 made an attempt (with 9:02 left in the half) that bounced off the goalie toward Masters, who shot it in too fast for the goalie to block. The score stood 2-0 at halftime.

The second half was a very physical one, and a worse half for the Ephs. Ambli Stern '90 commented, "They knew they were losing and they started taking a lot of cheap shots." Nevertheless, a third goal was scored when Lyn took advantage of the ball, that was bouncing around the penalty area, and shot it in unassisted. Finally, Stern had his moment in the game, when he took control of the ball at midfield and passed it to Emil Mugnaini '89, who would have hurt the Ephs' standings. Stern said, "We knew it would be a tough team to beat. Every team that comes to play us thinks that if they beat us it'll make their season." The next team the Ephs have to face off is Springfield; the game takes place at Cole Field tomorrow.

Alan Fiedler '92 works past his North Adams defender. The Ephs squeaked by the Mohawks 1-0 in overtime. (Scala)

The 4-0 victory over Clark was much needed; Clark has beaten Amherst and Wesleyan this year and to lose to Clark

I.M. Soccer Report

The 1988 Fall Intramural Soccer League (better known as Keg Soccer) is entering its third week of play. The league has ten teams and some 170 participants. Some of the highlights of this young season include:

- 1) An unidentified player overshoots the goal and takes out a window of Cole Field House amid cheers.
- 2) Jonathan Lindley '92 scores Black Russians' first goal of the season to lead his team to victory.
- 3) Nick Wallassani '89 knocks in two goals to up his league-leading total to five.
- 4) Thanks to Alan Krause '89, the league has welcomed nine new international players, spending the year as part of the Williams Center for Development Economics.

Season Standings
The White Shadow	4-0-1
Blue Collar Workers	4-0-1
Silver Streak	3-0-1
Running Red Devils	2-2
The Hapless Blue	1-1-3
Yellow Journalism	1-1-3
Yellow Snow	1-2-1
Black Russians	1-3
The Blue Cows	0-3-2
The Studebakers	0-4

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS

This week's recipients are Mike Masters and Rob Black, senior co-captains of the men's soccer team who this week both established Williams career records. Masters, a two-time All-American, notched his 30th career goal to pass record holder Nikolai Nachamkin '88. Black, who last year set a single-season shutout record of 12, posted his 21st career shutout this week, breaking the record held by Ted Murphy '83. Mike and Rob.

this Bud's for you!

BUD ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Male Harriers second at Amherst Invitational

by Steve Brody

The men's cross-country team travelled to Amherst on Saturday for the six team Amherst Invitational. After an intense week of training, the Eph contingent was tired and depleted, but nevertheless came through with an impressive second place finish. Wesleyan won the meet with 42 points, and were followed by Williams (59), Westfield State (73), and Amherst (75) in the next three spots. Several members of Williams team passed up the meet, favoring rest for injuries at this early stage of the season. Amherst also had some of its top runners hampered by injuries, so their showing is not indicative of the team's true strength. Thus, the Little Three Championship, to be decided on October 29 at Amherst, looks to be very competitive.

Cooper fourth

Saturday's race was highlighted for the Ephs by the fourth place finish of Dylan Cooper '91. Cooper made a strong charge to the front pack at the mile mark of the 8,000 meter (4.9 mile) course. Running stride for stride with the leaders over the next three miles, Cooper found himself battling Amherst's Tom Evans, the fifth place finisher at last year's New England Championships. At the four mile mark, Evans surged to separate himself from the rest of the field, and pushed himself to a victory in 26:51. Cooper hung on to the fourth spot over the last mile to complete the race in 27:03.

"I felt good today," Cooper said, "and I'm satisfied with the time for such a hot day."

Behind him, Dale Johnson ran another good race to capture the seventh spot in 27:34, just ahead of teammate Gil McCabe, still recovering from ankle injuries, who was eighth in 27:36. Steve Brody '90, passed two Amherst runners over the last two kilometers of the race to place 18th with a time of 28:41. Running fifth for the Ephs was senior Brian Fields, who captured the 22nd spot in 29:22. Fields has been improving dramatically with every workout this season, and is looking to secure his place in the upper echelon of the squad. The Ephs will host Trinity, North Adams, and RPI this Saturday, before heading into the NESCAC championships on October 15 at Hamilton.

WIN $$$ - ENTER THE QUIZ

1. Which major league baseball team has the most wins in the last five years?
2. Which team has lost the World Series the most times in the 1980's?
3. Who is the winningest pitcher in the majors over the last five years?
4. Who won the last Hart Trophy (given to the MVP of the NHL) before Wayne Gretzky?

Send your answers to Ted Hobart or Marc McDermott or SU 2917 by Saturday or call the Record office Sunday to enter. A drawing will be held among the entrants with the most correct answers. Last week's winner, Mike Hyde '91 wins a $15 gift certificate to Golf's Sports. Congratulations, Jackie.

MILAN (55-2410)
Soft "Glove" leather upper, fully nylon lined. Single density, polyurethane sole. Removable insole.
SIZES: 4-12, 13

Starting at $22.95 !!

mitre
SOCCER SHOES

Goff's Sports, inc.

(413) 458-3605
15 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Brief Encounter

BY BETTY JORGENSEN/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Malaska

ACROSS	DOWN
1 Town SW of Padua	1 Snare
5 Scrub	2 Tryhard
10 Moroccan capital	3 Chinese truth
18 Hungarian statism	4 They're often smoked
20 Square columns	8 Impossible fancy
21 Creator of Truthful James	6 Bowling alleys
22 ——— Levant, French island	7 Rye disease
23 Divided country	9 Abbe on an envelope
24 WHAT HE WAS DOING	10 T. book
25 Three: Prefix	11 Equatorial Guinea's Mhni, formerly
26 San ———, W.R. Hearst's cousin	12 Over with a rounded roof
28 Supranos	13 Sickly substances
30 Items thrown by Eris	14 Famed mummy
32 Carry on
34 "We In-ger!"
35 Crop-topping
36 Ritual
37 Kind of market
38 Lament
39 An act of suppression
40 WHAT HE SAW
41 Shamus
42 Stag's mate
43 Railroad statism
44 Home on a turn
45 "Sung" cowboy "of moves"
46 Bride part
47 H. Clay, to A. Jackson
48 Italian city on the Po
49 Dispatch boat
50 Decist
51 Mer's man
52 U.S. waters since 1920
53 Haze-smoke mixture
54 Pastors' homes
55 Carry on
56 ——— brew
57 Wagnerian earth goddess
58 Basso lutto
59 Filly's father
60 Dashing Thomas
61 Emulated
62 Blueberry
63 Of an epoch
64 Street's "Mable"
65 He directed movie
66 "The Odd Couple"
67 One of the Rev's rivals
68 Easter blossoms
69 Pick up the leaves again
70 "Hate" author
71 Over with a rounded roof
72 Bawdy
73 Kind of racket
74 Buhan
75 Half an
76 Calif. county
77 Numa
78 Famed mummy
79 WHAT HE ASKED
80 Faces the squeaks
81 Nine: Comh. form
82 Dark suit
83 Opium source
84 Me, to Miss Piggy
85 "Off in the Night": T. Moore
86 Flirt with potions
87 With 76 Down, Dini's high
88 Part of h.c.i.
89 Entire
90 Small
91 night club
92 Emblem on a Greek flag
93 Street show
94 "None has contents"
95 Liquidated Russian: 1953
96 Prepare
97 Apt. managers
98 Kind of virus
99 Eucrid
100 What she replied
101 Anxiety
102 Unsubstantial
103 Bloch
104 Symphony
105 Scraggly rooms
106 Great: Comh. form
107 European tree
108 I like some idish
109 Estrut path
110 Cleanse the throat
111 Bonaparte's marshal
112 WHAT HE SIGNED
113 Lustrous fiber
114 A.L. home-run leader: 1944
115 Landed estate
116 Unisil force
117 Ancient chariot
118 "Sing ——— songs in me!"
119 Oscar, r.e.r.
120 Gerco
121 Hereditary factors
122 One of a Latin I triu
123 Member of a Korean secret society
124 "The Way We ———" Streisand movie
125 Bearings
126 Caesar's early post
127 Vaudeville acts
128 711 area
129 Tupe: 795 x16
130 Put in place (second spelling)
131 Avila
132 Hadden
133 "Seward's Tully"
134 Continue a subscription
135 Aboan
136 Buzzards' cousins
137 Side arm
138 March's earned title
139 Time amounts
140 June bug
141 Region of N. Europe
142 Ten's back scholar, r.e.
143 In limations
144 Trum-spect
145 Mystical poem
146 Putastum
147 Supper
148 Worked on a ship
149 Chasm
150 Ancient people of Great Britain
151 Tissue ———
152 ——— (Carla)
153 Mistake
154 Unfortunate
155 Japanese female divers
156 Masters' exits
157 Concerning
158 Blue like beavers
159 Fancies
160 Lugging
161 One of the Higgs
162 One of twins at Lurewell

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Women's soccer splits

by Kerr Houston

In two home matches last week, the Williams women's soccer team resembled a freshman lab student: they worked diligently and consistently, but nevertheless wound up with some frustratingly inconsistent results. Accordingly, the Ephs women split two games in which they clearly dominated, falling 1-0 to Middlebury and then downing Wesleyan by the same score.

Middlebury brought a 1-2-1 record and a tradition of close games with Williams to Cole Field on Tuesday. Williams opened strong, controlling the midfield and threatening on several occasions, but it was the Panthers who drew first blood.

Twenty minutes into the first stanza, Middlebury's Anne Batelle lofted a 30-yard chip toward the Williams net. Eph keeper Becca Borden '92 apparently lost the ball in the early afternoon sun, and deflected it into her own goal, handing the Panthers a 1-0 lead. The teams traded ineffective rushes for the remainder of the first half, as neither squad seemed able to develop any true offense. As one frustrated spectator mumbled, "they can't quite seem to get organized."

A different team

The Ephs women seemed a different team in the second half, however, as they hustled to loose balls and peppered the Middlebury net with shot after shot. Freshman stopper Jen Planky cranked a pair of long blasts, and her classmate Liz Nasser made several dangerous drives into the Middlebury zone.

At the other end of the field, sophomore Carin Cole played a masterful game, throwing herself at loose balls, thwarting breakaways, and baffling the Middlebury forwards with moves rarely exhibited by defenders. Borden also played well, at one point making a spectacular diving save on a Middlebury corner kick.

Minutes after Borden's save, Williams was back on the attack, as captain midfielder Lori Schaen '89 just missed junior forward Kelly Collins on a breakaway. With eight minutes remaining in the contest, Schaen hit the far post on a thirty-yard penalty kick,

Senior Lori Schaen moves the ball down field during Williams victory over Little Three opponent Wesleyan. (Scale) and, moments later, a left-footed blast by Nasser that traveled wide represented Williams' last substantial offensive threat. The final score, 1-0, was a bit deceiving, as the Ephs women played a solid game and outshot their opponents 19-6. A disappointed coach Lisa Melendy noted, "we're having a lot of trouble finishing."

New lineup foils Cards

The Ephs women unveiled a revamped 4-4-2 lineup for their Saturday match against Wesleyan, and, once again, were clearly the dominant team. With Schaen leading the way, Williams played unselfish soccer, stringing together series of unselfish passes.

The Ephs women also outmuscled the Cardinals; although they were called on several occasions for tripping or charging, their aggressive play paid off, as they won nearly every header and loose ball. However, halftime found the two teams where they had begun: knotted at 0-0.

Williams did not ease the pressure in the second half, and finally produced a goal when, ten minutes into the period, Nasser pounded a twenty yarder toward the Wesleyan net. The drive was blocked by a sprawling Cardinal goalie, but Nasser controlled the rebound and clipped the ball into the unguarded net for Williams' first goal in nearly 210 minutes of play. That tally turned out to be all that Williams needed as the defense, working without regular Net Owen '90 played another solid game. The front line also played well, engineering switches with ease and making superb passes and crosses. Nevertheless, Williams' inability to convert opportunities into goals was once more a source of frustration for Melendy. She seemed pleased with the new lineup, however, remarking that "it allowed us to generate a lot more movement and to get better shots."

The Ephs women, who now stand at 4-2 overall and 2-1 in conference play, travel to RPI on Wednesday to face the Engineers for the first time ever, and return home to play Trinity on Saturday.

Football draws, 14-14

by Ted Hobart

"Our goal of 8-0 had to be modified a little bit to undefeated," said senior tri-captain Dan Pritchard, putting Saturday's 14-14 tie with the Tufts Jumbos in season perspective. Pritchard's appraisal may be looking on the bright side of perhaps the most agonizing decision that could have resulted from the contest.

On the one hand, the Ephs were out-rushed 309 to 223 yards, while holding only a ten yard advantage through the air (41 to 31). The rushing statistics should not come as too much of a surprise, as the Jumbos' wishbone offense is widely known as a strong running attack, but the Ephs' unattractive passing statistics (3 for 10, 3 interceptions) and reliance on one back, Jon Horton '91 (38 carries for 162 yds. and two touchdowns) belie the new-look offense that Williams fans expected to see.

On the other side of the coin, most observers would agree that the offensive and defensive lines of Williams had a great edge in the play over their Tufts counterparts. The story of the game, then, lies in the unseen statistics -- the big plays, key fumbles or interceptions, and costly penalties.

The teams traded opening drives as the offenses showed what was to be the pattern for the game. Tufts quarterback Matt Quanci ran the wishbone option effectively, handing off to fullback Tim Fanikos or optioning with ballback Paul Dresens. Williams' first drive also showed game-long patterns, some not very encouraging. Horton carried four of the eight plays for a total of 28 yards. Tri-captain Scott Kennedy '89 scrambled from his quarterback spot, but the Jumbo defense pursued well all afternoon and Kennedy was forced to run or pressured into hurried passes.

FUMBLE...Williams ball!

After sophomore Bill Crowley's punt left Tufts on its own 14 to start its second possession, Quanci started the "bone in motion. Tufts gained one first down on two option plays, and on second down handed off to Tim Fanikos up the middle. Fanikos was hit hard by the Eph front line and the football aquilted loose, recovered by Rich Williams '90 at the Tufts' 32.

Again, Horton got the call for Williams, carrying the ball four times as Williams got the ball to the Tufts' five yard line. Tufts shut down the Ephs on the first two plays from scrimmage, but on third down Horton got the ball through the left side of the line for the TD. Senior Jeff Ettemad's extra point kick gave Williams the 7-0 lead with three minutes left in the first quarter.

Tufts' wishbone was not to be kept down for long, though. The Jumbos started at their own 27 and marched downfield in fine fashion, gaining five first downs and converting on two third downs. Paul Dresens completed the six-minute drive with a plunge from the Williams two, which after the PAT knotted the score at 7.

Costly mistakes

The rest of the quarter was pure torture for Williams. After Tufts scored, the Ephs took the kickoff and drove out to their thirty before stalling. Crowley's punt was fumbled by Dresens and the Ephs recovered, only to have the whole play nullified by a Williams penalty for illegal procedure. On the re-kick, Tufts downed the ball at the Williams 40, and only a missed field goal saved the Ephs from paying for their mistake.

The next series was just as upsetting. The Ephs drove from their own 24 all the way to the Tufts 38 before Kennedy's pass intended for Scott Shean '91 was picked off by Tufts' free safety Tom LaMothe, and the half ended quickly.

"I don't think we ever really established the momentum of the game, but I don't think they did either," said Pritchard of the see-saw pattern of the game.

Play it again

The second half seemed like a replay of the first. Again, a turnover keyed the offense for Williams. On its first possession of the half, Tufts had the ball at its own 35 on third down. The snap from center popped up in the air and across the line of scrimmage into the Ephs' defensive line, where tri-captain Dave Montgomery '89 scooped up the rock. Starting from the enemy 38, the Ephs sucked to the ground. Horton carried six times and Kennedy once en route to the go-ahead touchdown and the 14-7 margin.

Once again, Tufts started a drive with three minutes remaining in the quarter, and once again they drove nearly eighty yards. The drive contained the only big gain of the game, as Quanci's option right was reversed into the short side of the field for a 40 yard gain. This time, the first play of the fourth quarter marked the end of the line, as Tufts again tied the contest, 14-14.

Two more turnovers killed Williams' chances for going ahead on its next two possessions, as Kennedy's long pass intended for intended for Chris Towle through the left side of the line for the TD. Senior Jeff Ettemad's extra point

Continued on page 7

Men's rugby mauls Middlebury

by Mark Stepis

Williams rugby tradition dictates that after a tough match you come back tougher. On Saturday in Middlebury the WRFC put last week's close UMass loss behind them and gave the Panthers eighty minutes of defense practice in a 36-3 rout.

The most exciting facet of the improved A-side game undoubtedly was the back play. Consistently delivered good ball in running situations by the pack and scrum-half James Mannix '89, the backs experimented until they found their opponents' weaknesses. It was simple orthodox passing and looping overloads which cracked the Panther line.

Senior center Bryan Baird commented approvingly on the back play: "This newly assembled line is already starting to play as if they've been together for months. We're developing our field relationships and thinking with one mind." Though both wings-senior Line Captain Bob Goldstein and junior Phil Jack- scored a try, fullback Chap Petersen '90 caused Middlebury unending confusion by suddenly appearing in the Williams line to create overloads. Petersen led the day in scoring with three tries and three conversion kicks.

Petersen also extolled the frothy running and passing but credited the forwards with winning enough possession to make the scoring extravaganza possible. Scrum Captain Sherwood Smith '89 and lineout specialist Matt Conlan '91, who earned his first A-side cap in the game, together caught nearly every ball thrown in. And senior hooker Charles Benedict, backed by an awesome forward push, managed to spoil a good number of Middlebury scrummages.

Big Green rolling in

Two dropped goals by fly-half Mark Stepis '89 and a try by Conlan ran up the score to 36-3. Although the rugger dominated, they cannot afford to rest on their laurels as they face number two nationally ranked Dartmouth at Cole field next Saturday at noon.

A rugby game is never a one-man show, though certain players may shine by taking advantage of the entire side's hard work. In the B-game, Bill Weiss '91 shone magnificently. Weiss scored two tries, the second an unexpected opportunity as the Panther fullback fumbled the ball in his own try zone. Teammate Jack Ollis '89 was also on the scene in a flash, but the sophomore flanker won the race to glory.

Continued on page 6

Women runners win Amherst Invitational

by Catherine Cocks

The women's cross country team once again defeated Smith, one of the area's top ranked squads, despite the absence of two of its runners, sophomores Anne Platt and Heidi Beebe. This time they did it at the Amherst Invitational, winning the overall title and beating not only Smith and Amherst, but Little Three rival Wesleyan as well.

Smith's Megan White won the individual title easily, running the mildly hilly 5000m course in 18:20. Another Smith runner followed in second at 19:48, putting the Smithies in excellent shape to win the meet. It was not to be, however, as the Ephs women packed all five of their scoring runners in the top ten with their remaining two varsity runners closely following to displace some of Smith's scorers and take the meet 30 to 34. Wesleyan was a distant third with 93 points.

Photo finish

Freshmen Andrea Cady and Molly Martin led the Ephs, finishing third and fourth in a photo finish where each shared the time 19:51. Ann Danmhauser '90, on the comeback from anemia, ran a strong race to take sixth overall, not far behind the first Wesleyan runner. Next came Amherst's top woman, and then the final two Eph scorers, Gwen Nagy '92 and Cathy Cocks '89, at ninth and tenth respectively. Completing the varsity were Cherie McAuley '92 at thirteenth and Mika Brezinski '89 at fourteenth.

The team's depth in combination with its outstanding individual runners will carry the Ephs women at larger meets such as the NESAC on October 15 at Hamilton. Also coming up are the Little Three Championships at Amherst and the Ephs women have already defeated both their archrivals handily. Next Saturday the Ephs host their final home meet of the season versus North Adams State, Trinity and the alumnae. The race will be started from the science quad at 11:30.

Field hockey downs Wesleyan

by Marc McDermott

Everything looked good for the field hockey team. Seventeen minutes were left in game and Williams had already outshot Wesleyan by more than 20-2. The Eph midfield was dominating its Redbird counterparts, the freshman infested defense was stonewalling the Card forwards and the attack was relentlessly pummeling the Wesleyan goalie from all directions. Yes, everything looked good if one ignored the fact that the undefeated and previously unscathed upon Eph women were trailing 1-0.

Williams was bound to find itself in such a situation sooner or later. In their first three victories they had outshot opponents by an average of 30-4 but had been producing only two goals per game. "We've been getting off a lot of shots -- a lot of good shots," said junior defenseman Beth McNulty "But it just seemed like their goalie would make a great save or our rebound tips go just wide, -- everybody has trouble putting the ball in the net."

Perhaps it was the shock of being behind, or the intensity of playing a little three opponent, but for whatever reason, the Ephs women started to score. Judy Fleishman '90 knotted the game at 1 and junior Mo Flaherty touched wire only two minutes later to put the Ephs ahead. Senior Captain Kirsten Neuse finished off the scoring with her third point of the week and Williams triumphed 3-1.

The Ephs women are now 4-0 and are among the top teams in New England, but their schedule will take a nasty turn this week, as they take on highly regarded Middlebury and Trinity, the only team to beat Williams last year. "We have no easy games left on the schedule," said senior captain and remainder extraordinaire Wyn Hobli, "Now we'll be tested and find out how good we really are."

Kathy McConnel '90 scores for a kill against Dartmouth on Saturday. The squad held off the tough Big Green in a four-game match, 5-15, 15-4, 15-12, 15-10. The victory extended the team's winning streak to seven and raised its record to 10-1, following a big win over Harvard one week ago and easy wins over Connecticut College and Mount Holyoke on Thursday. (backshot)

Three women drew large crowds and vehement reactions when they placed themselves in a display case in Baxter Hall yesterday from around noon to 1:30 P.M.
On the glass partition in front of them, in lipstick and eye pencil was scrawled: "Disfigurement by the patriarchal imagination...who we women are...How we can become 'women'...FIGURES OF SPEECH...We are dismembered, reshaped, reforged and repackaged served up on a glossy page to suit the male palette...But is it wrong to find aesthetic beauty in the human figure?"
A box of notes accompanied them, each printed with a passage by Susan Murphy Ballard criticizing George Marciano advertisements. People's overheard reactions were varied:
One male asked, "Which one do you like?"
Another passed by, saying, "Oh, this is too radical for me."
"Is that guys or girls?" one man asked another.
"Dude she hasn't abated since birth and that's ill."
From two women: "It's really scary," and "Oh, this is important."
(A1bright)

CCRR proposes minority requirements

by Rob Weisberg
The debate over required courses in minority education at Williams moved into full swing yesterday, as the Commission on Campus Race Relations sent a tentative proposal to the Committee on Educational Policy.
According to CCRR member Farhan Haq '89, the commission recommended that, beginning with the class of 1993, all students must take, as one of their nine distributional requirements, a course concentrating on the study of a non-Caucasian race or culture. A large number of courses that the CCRR considers applicable already exist in the Williams curriculum, he added.

An issue summary distributed to College Council members at Thursday's meeting described CCRR's course criteria: "courses that primarily reflect the perspectives of 1) the cultures of Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Caribbean, 2) the minorities in North America that trace their origin to these continents, and 3) natives of North America and Oceania." This definition was arrived at last spring and the alterations made by CCRR were very minor, Haq said.

"Professor [of English and CCRR member Peter] Berek and I worked out a definition that would avoid the problems of courses such as Canadian history being listed as pertinent to minorities," Haq said.

The college, in a list of minority-relevant courses, considered Canadian history such a course, because the French Canadians are considered a minority in their country, he added. "After devising

Continued on page 4

College replaces town resident's broken window

by Stephanie Jones

Dagmar Bubricki, a Williamstown resident who has been active in trying to prohibit off-campus housing, discovered the morning of Sunday, Oct. 2, that someone had broken a window on her house on Hoxsey Street the night before. She made calls to Williams College officials, and Buildings and Grounds personnel replaced the window the next day.

"I would imagine that some student got very drunk and punched in the window," Bubricki said. After discovering the broken window, Bubricki called Director of Security Ransom Jenks, the Williamstown Police and Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards. She said she also tried to get in touch with College President Francis Oakley.

Bubricki said she suggested that the college fix the window. Edwards said she thought it over and called back to say that the college would fix the damage but would not take responsibility for causing it. A security officer came to clean up the broken glass, and Buildings and Grounds personnel replaced the window the next day.

"Students are harassing that poor woman," Chief of Police Joseph Zollo, Jr. said. Zollo attributed the harassment to Bubricki's vocal opposition to off-campus housing.

Not necessarily a student, Jenks said that the college's action does not mean that a student was necessarily responsible for the vandalism. He said the matter is in the hand of the police.

"I think it's assumed that the college fixed the window from the goodness of our heart," Jenks said.

Assistant Dean William Wagner agreed. "We're not saying a student did it or did not do it," he said. Bubricki said that she was certain that a student broke the window. Student parties were going on all down Hoxsey Street that night, she said. Bubricki added that students had been responsible for many problems on Hoxsey Street, such as theft, noise at all hours, drunkenness and careless or drunken driving.

Continued on page 4

The college arranged for a smashed window at the Hoxsey Street home of Dagmar Bubricki to be repaired hours after Bubricki notified college administrators of the damage. (Ward)

At Williams and elsewhere, students urged to vote

Collegians pushed to vote

by J. M. Rubin
(CPS)—Five hundred and fifty student leaders gathered in Washington, D.C., during the Sept. 30 weekend to try to do something no one has ever done before: get college students to vote.
They're not alone. The chancellor of the City University of New York, the student president at the University of Idaho, Public Interest Research Groups, the National Student Education Fund, the U.S. Student Association, the Grassroots Organizing Weekends Project, both major political parties and scores of campus groups nationwide are trying.
On Oct. 3, moreover, the student leaders were scheduled to start a monthlong bus tour of eastern and midwestern campuses to try to register students to vote.
CUNY Chancellor Joseph S. Murphy appealed to students' wallets: "There is a direct relationship between the amount of student-aid dollars available and the number of votes in the ballot box. You can be sure that elected officials understand both the cause and the effect."

But ever since 1972, when 18-year-olds first got the right to vote and observers predicted a huge monolithic liberal student vote that would transform American politics, collegians have generally failed to cast ballots at all.

In 1984, less than half of the country's 26 million 18-year-olds even registered to vote. Fewer than 41 percent bothered to vote.

Students participate less
"(Students) tend to participate less than people in their middle years," reports Dr. Matthew R. Kerbel, a political scientist at Villanova University. "Students are less settled and their minds are on other things." He added, "And they feel their votes don't make a critical difference."

"Students are busy with other things," concurred John Carmichael, a University of Alabama-Birmingham associate professor of political science and public affairs.

"If they are away from home, the logistics of registering may create difficulty. If they are not married, not homeowners, they don't feel a vested interest (in voting)," Carmichael added.

"It's more of a challenge (to try to lure students to voting booths) because the elections aren't exciting," conceded University of Oregon activist Karen Gaffney.

Students do, in fact, turn out in greater numbers than nonstudents of the same age, said Kevin Harris of USSA.

Harris added they do so in spite of often not knowing how to register or where, of registrars who tell them "you can't register unless you pay taxes in New York" or county clerks who will not deputize registrars to serve the students.

Some have responded
"Education issues, the disadvantages of being a student, the need for higher education funding," persuaded Gina Olson, an Illinois State University sophomore from Palos Heights, Illinois, to register.

A registration drive at the University of Illinois' main campus netted 1250 new student voters in one day in September.

University of Oregon sophomore continued on page 4

Williams drive hits snag

by Greg Hart

Students trying to register as out-of-state voters in Massachusetts found opposition from an unexpected source: town clerk Betty Kovacs.

Kovacs and the Williamstown Board of Registrars came to Baxter lounge last Tuesday for a MASSPIRG-sponsored voter registration drive.

"Betty Kovacs was basically trying to deny students the right to vote, from what I can gather," said Derek Cressman '90, MASSPIRG's student coordinator.

Kovacs denied student accusations that she tried to dissuade students from registering.

To register to vote in Williamstown, one must sign under oath that he or she is a resident of Williamstown and over 18 years of age, Cressman said. No identification is technically required, but the registrar may ask for a piece of identification if there is some doubt about U.S. citizenship or age.

Some minority students said they felt harassed by Kovacs, and many left without registering, Cressman said. In addition, some students who are United States citizens but were born outside of the U.S. had problems when trying to register. Some students in this case were not allowed to register, even with valid identification, he added.

"I was very surprised when they [the registrars] asked me if I was a citizen," Yuk-Tai Man '90, who was not born in the U.S., said. "They insisted on a passport or nationalization papers. They wouldn't accept anything else," he said.

Kovacs also apparently tried to discourage students from switching their registration to Williamstown.

"The registrar was uncooperative...some people that came to the table turned away because of her. She made a pretty concerted effort to minimize the number of students registering in Williamstown," Cressman said.

Josh Becker '91, who wanted to change his place of registration to Williamstown, said, "She told me I shouldn't change, that I would only be here a few years and I'd just have to change it again later. She said that after the election nothing interesting would be happening here, so there was no need to change."

Becker, who is involved in MASSPIRG, said he still decided to change his registration, because he is interested in local issues.

Cliff Majerak '91, a MASSPIRG member involved in the drive, agreed that Kovacs was not helpful to students wishing to change their registration. "She very strongly tried to dissuade them from registering."

This was not the case, according to Kovacs.

Students 'not harassed'
According to Kovacs, minority students were not harassed in any way. She said, "I was told that many black students didn't know about the registration table."

Kovacs also denied that students had continued on page 4

Images, Williamstown's lone movie theater is in danger of closing this June. (Beliveau)

Images screen may go dark for good

by Sara Dubow
The show may be over for the only movie theater in Williamstown.
The lease on Images theater will expire in June, and the future of the Spring Street movie house is uncertain. George Mansour, owner of Images, said that there is a lot of disagreement over the conditions of any future lease.
According to Winthrop Wassenaar, part-owner of the building which houses Images, Mansour indicated late last week that he would not be seeking a new lease. Mansour said that Wassenaar has not yet offered a formal lease.
Mansour has owned Images for the past twelve years and is unsure what will happen when his lease with the Spring Street Associates—comprised of Was-senar, Harold Coulter and Charles Jankey—runs out. Mansour said he doesn't think signing a short-term lease would be profitable.

"If a long-term lease is offered, I would like to sell the business to someone who will continue it as a theater and be a hands-on owner," Images manager Donald Fisher has expressed an interest in buying the theater.

"Our plans are to keep the theater if we can. The only way I could see it close is if someone bought the building and decided they wanted us out. I can't envision that...the college and the community have an interest in having the theater stay," Fisher said.

Subsidizing the theater
"It's not that we don't want a theater, but it has reached the point where we're subsidizing the theater. That was fine because [Images] is good for the community—but we can't financially continue to do that much longer," Wassenaar said. He expressed reservations about whether the theater can afford to negotiate a lease with a substantial rent increase.

"In the long run I don't think that the theater will be there...it can't afford to pay the kind of rent that a retail business can," Wassenaar said.

To the question of whether any theater would be financially viable on Spring Street, Mansour said yes. "But there is a lot of competition from North Adams and Pittsfield." He also pointed out that the school shows a lot of movies continued on page 4

School drops to #3 in U.S.
News poll.

PAGE 3

Thumbs down for Eight Men
Out.

PAGE 5

Volleyball win tourney.

PAGE 10

The Williams Record

Ill-spent bean?

The plans of some Williams students to invite Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan to campus raises disturbing questions about those students' intentions.

Although Farrakhan has won support for promoting self-reliance and economic justice for blacks, he laces his speeches with references to women and to Jews that are regarded by many as extreme and highly offensive.

Speaking at the University of Pennsylvania last March, Farrakhan addressed the women in the audience, saying, "Tempting men with your tight jeans and your breasts swinging in the breeze. How the hell can a man think sanely looking at a woman undressed?"

Such extreme statements divert attention from any part of Farrakhan's message that students might consider legitimate. Would the purpose in bringing him here be to provoke solely for the sake of provoking or to provoke for the sake of educating? Students interested in bringing him here were vague about their reasons.

If people want to bring a speaker here to educate the Williams community about the need for economic justice for blacks, it seems that they will defeat their own purpose by bringing such an extreme and offensive speaker as Farrakhan. An extreme viewpoint runs the risk of alienating an audience to the point that the audience dismisses legitimate parts of the message along with the inflammatory rhetoric.

Students are entitled to invite whomever they would like to speak if they can acquire organizations' financial backing. However, organizations that think of contributing some of the $10,000 required to sponsor Farrakhan should consider their motives for inviting him: do they want to be associated with him and do they really think he could contribute to constructive discussion in the community?

When one comes to Williams, who may be the elite, it could be taken as a taste of the wealth and the prosperity promised us upon graduation. When one comes to Williams, who may be the elite, it could be taken as a taste of the wealth and the prosperity promised us upon graduation. When one comes to Williams, who may be the elite, it could be taken as a taste of the wealth and the prosperity promised us upon graduation.

On The Record...

"I think it's assumed that the college fixed the window from the goodness of our heart."

-- Director of Security Ransom Jenks on the school's decision to fix Williamstown resident Dagmar Bubriski's broken window, a window she says was broken by college students

"Students are harassing that poor woman"

-- Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zoito on Mrs. Bubriski's broken window.

"I have four children who would never act like that anywhere.... I can't believe Williams students were brought up in civilized homes."

-- Dagmar Bubriski

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words, and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication, either typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Chuck Samuelson at (413) 597-2289.

DEBBIE SNYDER, Editor in Chief

TODD OWENS
News Editor

TED HOBART
Sports Editor

JED SCALA
Photography Editor

KIRSTEN HASENFUSS
Layout Editor

TRAVIS PIERSON
Arts Editor

CHUCK SAMUELSON
Op-Ed Editor

MARC MCDERMOTT
Sports Editor

RICH WARD
Photography Editor

MARY ILIFF
Layout Editor

KATIE ALBRIKHT
Business Manager

News Assistants: Stephanie Jones, Ann Mantil, Bill Savadove, Dan Skwire, Rob Welsberg
Sports Assistant: Mariah Naficy
Photography Assistants: Jay Steinman, Karl Thomas
Layout Staff: Elise Dugundji, Bill Philpott, Alex Shash

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Letters

Help hungry not lobsters

To the Editor:

It is often enlightening to be reminded of what Williams College is, or is supposed to be, by referring to the official statement of "Missions and Objectives" in the annual bulletin: "The extracurricular we regard as an integral part of this educational fabric; we are prompted 'for continued recurrence to the basic problems confronting humankind.... Our rural location... has not condemned us to isolation or provincialism... our history is intertwined with that of the Berkshire.'"

In light of these aspirations, it is unfortunate that many extracurricular practices and traditions not only fail to encourage the open-mindedness and the encountering of human concerns fostered in the classroom, but may actually undermine the curriculum by reinforcing constricted modes of thought. Perhaps the worst of these institutions is the annual lobster gala, for this event epitomizes the "Country Club" atmosphere at Williams. The lobster dinner is a symbolic welcoming to the club, a statement that we at Williams are the elite, indeed, it could be taken as a taste of the wealth and the prosperity promised us upon graduation.

When one comes to Williams, who may be the elite, it could be taken as a taste of the wealth and the prosperity promised us upon graduation. When one comes to Williams, who may be the elite, it could be taken as a taste of the wealth and the prosperity promised us upon graduation. When one comes to Williams, who may be the elite, it could be taken as a taste of the wealth and the prosperity promised us upon graduation.

The most shocking aspect of this year's lobster dinner is that it will be held on October 13, just three days before "World Hunger Day," a time when we should recognize suffering and hunger in Bangladesh, Jamaica and even in the Berkshires. Such a feast in the face of widespread global need and concern promotes not merely a lack of awareness, but a palpable insensitivity to "the basic problems confronting humankind."

We propose that the community reflect on the lobster dinner, the insularity that it represents, and the subtle elitism and hypocrisy that remain a constant danger for us at Williams College. James Power '90 for the Gaudino Committee

Pondering pepperoni and life as a frosh

by Greg Jaffe '91

Sitting on the porch of my parents' house in Virginia this August, the temperature about 95 degrees with the humidity hovering somewhere around 175 percent, I swore to myself that I hated the heat and that I would rather the temperature be -12 with a wind chill that made it feel like my extremities no longer existed. That of course made me think of Williams and Winter Study, sitting on a chair list awaiting to my friend, who was dumb enough to venture out of the dorm with me, that I would rather be in 110 degrees with 176 percent humidity.

My thoughts with respect to Williams, however, soon moved beyond the weather. I began to think about what I had done last year at Williams and what I hoped to do in this upcoming year. I guess I decided to come to Williams because I thought that a small school would allow me to get involved in activities that would be too crowded or time consuming at a larger school. At least that's what I and two-thirds of my class said on our application essays. As far as I can tell I really meant it. Otherwise I wouldn't have put up with my less enlightened and more senile friends and relatives' bewildered looks and ridiculous statements. "Oh right, Williams and Mary, I always thought that was in Virginia." "Actually," I would respond, "it's one tremendous college that spans the entire eastern seaboard from Virginia to Massachusetts." To this day I am sure that I have been sent to Williams and Mary. It's the only way I can explain the lack of birthday and Christmas cards. I really wanted to be one of those interested renaissance men that the college admits to the hangers Mike Hodel, a freshman from Morgantown, West Virginia, who I met during the spring break when I was in Williams. I ended up spending a lot of time guessing what color the pepperoni would be on my Colonial pizza, discovering that my album collection wasn't that great; that even the best of Elvis Costello could get boring after a while and that, on cloudy windy days, it was tough to get WCFM from Morgan Hall. I questioned whether eating the food and standing too close to the fume in Baxter would effect my children or my children's children, and whether other schools had laws in the main dining hall in the middle of winter or whether I had just gotten lucky. I pondered whether or not Baxter could double as a steam boat in case of a flood during the spring thaw and wondered with my friends over dinner why the Record was more boring than a bi-weekly church news letter. I discussed the lack of intellectual activity at Williams to the point where it impinged my own intellectual growth and activity. I thought to myself privately that if the existing black professors at Williams were just to gain weight, it might seem like there were more of them, satisfying both the college and CARE, thus allowing for the return of the dean's office.

I ended up spending a lot of time guessing what color the pepperoni would be on my Colonial pizza.

I, like most Williams freshmen, threw up from drinking too much for the first time in my life. I guess I had led a fairly repressed life in high school, so it was nice to know that all of my biological safeguards were in working order. I learned proper keg etiquette and how to get a beer from a crowded keg when I felt I really needed one. I think I led a fairly typical Williams existence for the Williams-Amherst game I got drunk, for homecoming I got drunk, for Winter Carnival I had a girlfriend so I just got buzzed and for Spring Weekend I lost the girlfriend so I got drunk and sick. continued on page 3

Williams drops to third in latest U.S. News poll

by Dan Skwire

Williams sports fans who used to taunt Amherst audiences with "Williams" number one ranking in U.S. News and World Report will have to look elsewhere for insults. The magazine's 1988 survey, which was released last week, ranked Williams third behind Swarthmore and Amherst.

In previous years, the U.S. News rankings were based on a survey of college and university presidents. This year, however, the rankings were compiled endowed, but 14 or 15 other colleges are more so."

A lot of intangibles
Winston and other administrators questioned the importance of the statistics compiled by U.S. News. "I think it's very hard to distinguish among the top colleges, even using the supposedly sophisticated tests they used," said Dean of the College Joan Edwards. "There are just a lot of intangibles."

'Is Williams the best? That's a silly question and it was a silly answer when we were number one.'

from statistics falling into four categories: student selectivity, faculty quality, student retention and resources. Williams was among the top five schools in the nation in every category except resources.

"Swarthmore and Amherst have larger endowments per student than we do," Provost Gordon Winston said of the college's resources ranking. "It's a bit like being a Rockefeller and finding out that Donald Trump is richer than you are. We are incredibly well-You're getting a good education at any one of these schools."

"Anyone who has taken statistics knows that the differences [between the top several schools] are a joke," Winston said, "and they were a joke when we were number one. Williams is among the best colleges in the country. Is Williams the best? That's a silly question and it was a silly answer when we were number one."

"This whole poll is foolish," said Associate Director of Admissions Thomas

Nader to speak in November

by Rob Welsberg

Consumer activist Ralph Nader will probably speak at Williams in November. The Lecture Committee, which will sponsor him, had set October 26 as the date but had to change it, because Chapin Hall was already booked for that night.

"He's one of the most significant American activists of modern times," said Ken Leiter '90, a member of the committee.

Leiter said he had seen Nader address the recent PIRO conference in Washington. "Nader is a very exciting speaker, and will definitely keep the interest of an audience. He'll certainly fill Chapin Hall," he said.

Nader charges $5,000 and expenses for a speaking engagement.

Committee opposes lobster dinner

by Justin Smith

Members of the Gaudino Committee cast a unanimous vote in favor of publishing their opposition to the annual lobster/dinner, which Dining Services will offer students on October 13.

The most shocking aspect of this year's lobster dinner is that it will be held on October 13, just three days before "World Hunger Day," a time when we should recognize suffering and hunger in Bangladesh, Jamaica and even in the Berkshires. Such a feast in the face of widespread global need and concern promotes not merely a lack of awareness, but a palpable insensitivity to "the basic problems confronting humankind."

We propose that the community reflect on the lobster dinner, the insularity that it represents, and the subtle elitism and hypocrisy that remain a constant danger for us at Williams College. James Power '90 for the Gaudino Committee

The committee submitted the letter after considering several possible courses of action. Originally, the group discussed the possibility of organizing a student boycott against the special dinner and a concurrent fund-raiser for a local charity, the Berkshire Food Project. This plan was dropped in favor of using the letter. According to Assistant Professor of Philosophy Philip Clayton, the committee decided to publish the letter because, "The group decided it was more important to make people pause to think about the lobster dinner."

Director of Dining Services James Hodgkins said, "This [letter] is a decided to have. If the Gaudino Committee wants to boycott the dinner, they should."

According to a Dining Service cook, the college will charge guests eight dollars to attend the lobster dinner. The guest fee for a regular Dining Service Dinner is six dollars.

The committee continued discussion on the problems associated with the organization of freshman year. Members discussed the merits and disadvantages of freshman entries, the Junior Advising system, and class segregation housing. The committee has not yet settled on any specific remedies for improving the organization of the Freshman year.

Fresh in Trouble
University of Colorado

A racially offensive ad placed by fraternity members in a campus newspaper outraged the University of Colorado's minority community, but the fraternity's offer to join in threatened protests against racism shocked them even more. At issue was an ad printed in the Sept. 19 Campus Press "Fine Line" section, an open opinion page, which said "Mexican Boy for Lease. Contact Miguel at Sigma Nu."

Representatives of various minority groups planned and notified officials of their plans to protest the Sigma Nu house, but their anger dissipated when Sigma Nu member Evan Korn told United Mexican-American Students (UMAS) official Andy Medina "If you're here picketing, we'll picket with you."

"We have full intention to fight against racism," Korn said. Korn admitted some fraternity brothers had placed an ad that "was meant as a personal joke," but claimed it was changed by an inexperienced staff member after it was brought to the newspaper. The ad referred to Sigma Nu house as "Hate Club," because the house was not responsible for its members' actions. Hodel himself said he thought the ad was meant as an affectionate send-off, and wasn't offended by it. Still, "It should never have been printed," he said.

Penn State

Penn State's Intrafraternity Council last week refused to discipline a fraternity's member whose behavior had been called sexist. IFC Chairman Kevin Bostick announced the IFC would take no action against Alpha Gamma Rho, whose members participated in a campus event dressed as "Hate-Men Women Hate Club," because the house was not responsible for its members' actions. Hodel himself said he thought the ad was meant as an affectionate send-off, and wasn't offended by it. Still, "It should never have been printed," he said.

University of Mississippi

The University of Mississippi has banned on-campus greek parties in the wake of rape charges filed against 18-year-old freshman and Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity member Stover Smith after an off-campus frat party Sept. 22. Oxford, Miss. Police Chief Billy White said the victim left the party with someone after midnight, was driven to a field, beaten and raped. Smith, who has since left school, is free on a $50,000 bond.

Judy Trot, assistant dean of students, said so-called "swaps," which bring together an entire fraternity and sorority, would no longer be sanctioned by the university. Although the party in question was held off campus, it still reflected negatively on the greek system, said Intrafraternity Council President Stuart Brunson. Sigma Alpha Epsilon was already on probation, he added, for violating rush and on-campus party rules.

Compiled from the College Press Service

Associate Professor of Mathematics Olga Beaver and the Committee on Undergraduate Life discuss creating a student activities coordinator next year. (Ward)

CUL considers creation of activities coordinator

by Greg Hart

The Committee on Undergraduate Life is proposing the formation of an activities coordinator position on campus next year.

"The activities coordinator would not be an authority figure but a resource for information," said Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright, co-chair of last year's CUL subcommittee on the Activities Coordinator position. The activities coordinator, who would be a member of this year's graduating class, would gather and distribute information on all upcoming events.

By preparing a monthly calendar of all campus events for distribution throughout the college community, the coordinator would serve as a central clearinghouse for information on future activities. Acting as a campus-community liaison, the position would help connect students interested in volunteer activities and local events with community organizations.

Furthermore, the position would help coordinate inter-department communication and all-campus planning, eliminating conflicts of interest among events drawing from a similar audience. Finally, the coordinator would also cater to students' social needs, possessing information on future house activities and aiding the planning and publicizing of residence hall activities.

The activities coordinator would report to the Dean's Office, but would not have power over any campus activities. Rather, the Coordinator would resemble an all-encompassing "monthly advisor," with knowledge of all events, activities, and resources throughout the college and community.

The post would consist of a one year term or a non-renewable two year contract. The CUL predicts that while at first the activities coordinator may not receive much notice, with the passage of time the position would be regarded as a valuable resource.

The first coordinator would receive some training through conferences, workshops, and possibly an internship at a school with a similar program. After the initial Coordinator, however, the CUL believes that each Activities Coordinator would train their successor. The Coordinator's salary would be roughly $14,000 per year.

The position would be reviewed sometime within the first few years of its formation to determine the usefulness of the post. Continued on page 6

Student breaks church window

by Stephanie Jones

A Williams student admitted to breaking a window at the First Congregational Church on the night of Saturday, October 1. Williamstown police picked him up for questioning the next morning, but he was not arrested after a church official said it would cost too much to replace the window.

The Reverend Robin Buckwalter discovered the damage Sunday morning and called the police. When they arrived, they found the student coming out of his dormitory with a cut on his hand, the complaint report said.

According to the report, the student said he was on his way to report the incident to the Security office. He said he punched in the window after a fight with his girlfriend.

Three small, inexpensive windows were broken, Buckwalter said, adding that the damage only amounts to a couple of dollars. The student has promised to make restitution and the church is not pressing charges. "I think this is a minor incident that does not really warrant that sort of thing," Buckwalter said.

What do you think of Williams' drop to number three in the U.S. News and World Report survey?

"I think Amherst bribed them."
--Alicia Ahn '92

"It hurts to have Amherst ahead of us."
--Andy Munzer '90

"The magazine is doing it to be sensational. I don't think we should be worried."
--Mandy Dawson '89

"Isn't 3 a lucky number?"--Alex Seaton '91

"I don't think it matters because the quality of education is still as high as it was last year."
--Steph Letko '91

"I think Williams was #3 and Amherst was #2 because Williams won the football game last year."
--Rob Abel '91

GIVE BLOOD

OCTOBER
11-12

Alumni rank second in nation

by Scojin Kim

Williams may have lost its first place ranking among national liberal arts colleges, but its claim to distinction may come in another form this year if the Alumni Relations Office can raise its goal of $4 million from the college's alumni.

Williams currently ranks second in the nation in alumni donations. Only the alumni of Centre College in Kentucky gave more money to their alma mater last year.

Williams alumni have traditionally been active in their support of the college. The first alumni society at an American college or university was founded here in 1821. And while the national average among public and private colleges for the percentage of alumni who give is 25 percent, 66.4 percent of Williams alumni contributed last year, according to Assistant Director of Alumni Relations and Director of Annual Giving Peter Buttenheim.

Buttenheim said that Williams depends heavily on consistent alumni contributions. Unrestricted alumni gifts, as opposed to the restricted nature of capital gifts or endowments, underwrite ten percent of the college's annual operational budget of $40 million.

The alumni fund enables the college to pay competitive salaries to professors and to continue its policy of need-blind admissions, according to Seth Rogovoy '82, a class agent.

The annual fund drives are run by the alumni themselves, under the organization of the Alumni Relations Office. Every 5 years, starting with graduation year, the officers of the graduating class select a chief agent and ten associate agents. According to Buttenheim, there are roughly 70 chief agents located across the United States who run individual campaigns for their respective classes.

"The alumni are extremely loyal to the college, and the loyalty begins the minute the freshmen hit the freshman quad," Buttenheim said.

Buttenheim, a Williams graduate, said that the dedication of the volunteers—the team of class agents and associate agents—enables the fund drive to accomplish in 4 months what schools can't accomplish in a whole year. Between 1959 and 1988, Williams alumni have contributed $38 million, and the total raised last year was $3.7 million.

"The alumni are extremely loyal to the college, and the loyalty begins the minute the freshmen hit the freshman quad," Buttenheim said.

Remarkable physical setting John Storey '65 attributed some of that loyalty to the college's setting. "Williams has a remarkable physical environment, and the isolation fosters close relationships."

He also said that gratitude motivates many alumni to contribute money. "Many alumni feel that the quality of the education they received at Williams is far more valuable than whatever it cost them at the time. Contributing to the alumni fund is a way of giving some of it back."

Another reason for the generosity of Williams alumni could be a desire to help open up opportunities for current students at the college, according to Buttenheim. "Williams students are doing cutting edge work in economic development and in science and technology. If a student goes out to work with the Peace Corps or even makes decisions about finance and investments, the student is bettering the world, and the alumni have given indirect aid."

Farrakhan may speak

by Bill Sandvick

Some students are discussing the possibility of bringing Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan to the campus to speak. The black leader has attracted controversy because he has been quoted as describing Judaism as "a gutter religion."

"We're still deliberating whether to bring him here," J. Hollis Campbell '89 said. Campbell said that nothing has been decided, and that discussions have not even been initiated within the Black Student Union, the organization that he said the students would approach for funding. He added that he is not sure when or if discussions will occur. There has been no contact with representatives of Farrakhan.

Register

continued from page 1

Cassie Curtis said she decided to register because she cared deeply about an initiative on the state ballot and because she wants to prevent Bush from becoming President.

"This is an important election for students," said Angelis Vlahou, a grad student at Illinois' Sangamon State University who registered for the first time because he was upset by state education budget cuts.

Moreover, a special program made it "easy to register. You enter the door in the cafeteria, and they were there. You didn't have to spend the day to find the (voter registration) office," Vlahou said.

Goal of 40 percent

Student leaders at Idaho's public campuses organized a statewide registration drive, while faculty members at Broome Community College in Binghamton, N.Y., handed out voter registration forms to their students with the

Bubriski

continued from page 1

"I don't see why I or others around here should get all the bad part...[students] have no respect for the community," she said. Bubriski said she has lived in her house for 35 years and never had any problems until 10 years ago when off-campus and co-operative housing became available.

"We didn't have the concentration of students living in an unsupervised, undisciplined manner...The college knows very well that that is the problem," she said. According to Bubriski, the community is fed up. Faculty and administration do not know what it is like to live with students, she said.

"I have four children who would never act like that anywhere...I can't believe [Williams students] were brought up in civilized homes."

goal of registering 40 percent of the student body.

USAA's 30-campus has tour "will reach about one million people," Harris said.

The Illinois Student Association has looked up posters reading, "Lawmakers think students don't vote. Surprise them. Register to vote" on campuses around that state.

But history is hard to buck, and "there is a general malaise in the population," asserts Alabama's Carmichael. "People may be satisfied with the way things are."

Kovacs

continued from page 1

trouble registering. "The actual number of people we registered (at the table) was 34, and many other students came down to Spring Street and registered there. Most of the people who came to the table did register to vote in Williamstown," said Kovacs.

Regarding student identification, Kovacs said, "If they have no proof that they are a U.S. citizen, we can't just register them."

Images

continued from page 1

that create a drain on the potential audience. "We used to be able to show movies like Casablanca, Harold and Maude, and Annie Hall to make some quick money, but with VCR's the college showing these movies, it's harder."

Foreign and art films Images specializes in first run foreign

"We just suggested that [students who wanted to change their registration] think about it. We suggested that students registered in other states use absentee ballots," said Kovacs.

Complaint to be filed

MASSPIRG plans to file a complaint about Kovacs' actions with the Elections Division of the Secretary of State's office. According to Majors, "The Secretary of State's office advised us to file a complaint."

Once a complaint is filed in writing, the Elections Division will assign an investigator who will contact the registrant and also find out what actually occurred, according to the Elections Division.

MASSPIRG is inviting all students who wish to register to vote in Williamstown and have not yet done so to meet at 7:30 p.m. tonight in Baxter Lounge, from where they will then march to the Town Clerk's Office to register. Tonight at 10 p.m. is the latest one may register to vote in time for the November 8 Presidential election.

and art films, and Mansour said that he senses "an erosion of the market for foreign and esoteric movies today. I don't know why. All repertory movie houses are experiencing this, not just us." Mansour said he would not be willing to change the kind of films that Images shows.

"An ideal solution would be to have the college act as a benevolent landlord, but they aren't interested," he said that

Images has always had a connection with the school. "I receive several requests from professors to show certain films and I've always complied. I'm not trying to paint the college as a villain...maybe everyone is just facing an economic crunch."

Wasserman said it clear that the owners are not actively trying to sell...we're not on the market, but many people have inquired.

The Prendergasts and Arts and Crafts Movement opens at WCMA

by Eliza Dugundji

"The Prendergasts and the Arts and Crafts Movement" which opened at WCMA last weekend, focuses on nearly one hundred decorative objects designed by Maurice and Charles Prendergast. The exhibit illustrates the very different responses of the two brothers to the Arts and Crafts movement which dominated American work at the turn of the century.

Concurrent with the opening of the exhibition, the college sponsored a symposium, "The Art of American Decoration and Design, 1890-1920." The exhibition explores the scope of the decorative works by the Prendergasts. For the first time, Maurice Prendergast's applied graphic works are shown together with his more familiar watercolors.

One may trace the influence of the Boston Book and Poster Movement in Prendergast's works from the last decade of the nineteenth century. This movement, comprising lithography, poster and book designs, borrowed techniques from English industrial, Japanese design, and Art Nouveau motifs.

One of Maurice Prendergast's initial attempts at poster design, On the Point, completed in 1895, uses simple forms similar to those of Art Nouveau, while using contrasting blues and yellow, creating a vibrant largely absent from the mostly monochromatic posters of the period.

The swirling lines and pillar form of the work demonstrate its Japanese sources. The poster/book frontispiece, Shadows of a Crime, designed in 1895, is a model of Maurice's line technique. Starkly composed in black and white, the Audrey Beardsley-derived female form and swirling stream/wind pathway combine to form a compelling and original poster design.

In his work for the book My Lady Nicotina in 1905, Maurice Prendergast experimented with illustration. He compiled over 138 page decorations in all. Many of the images personally smoking as a genteel woman, an idea wholly attributed to Prendergast.

In contrast to Maurice Prendergast's venture into commercial design, his brother Charles responded to the Arts and Crafts movement with wood-carving.

In the exhibit, over thirty of his best-known frame works are displayed. His frames, though eclectic in their sources and styles, reflect his idea that each frame must be sympathetic to its respective painting. The most startling example of this belief is his Red, white, blue of 1908. Commissioned by a Boston millionaire, Thomas Lawson, the frame is carved in wood and painted in gold.

Art

As the canvas for which it was made was to depict Lawson's favorite bulldog, Prendergast carved miniature dog portraits into his frame. He also ascribed portraits of Lawson's four daughters into the border (The dog-daughter connection has yet to be explored) with additional roses and punchworks adorning the nine foot long frame.

Toward the end of his life, Charles Prendergast was inspired to create frames for his own works. His Circus (1940) is a patterned overhead view of circus performers and animals, but the intentional two-dimensionality, "naïf" quality of the figures raises above the mere childlike, and the gold-leaf touches on the figures lend it a more classical monumentality. He also maintained the idea of the engaged frame, in which the diamond borders on the frame mirror the size and shape of the pattern on the harlequin's costume. The final speaker in Saturday's symposium drew parallels between the Prendergast's decorative works and those by artists such as Duchamp and Man Ray.

One difficulty with this parallel is the subject matter of the Prendergasts, most notably Charles', iconography. He mixes religious, genre and pagan scenes unmercifully, and the value of some of his works beyond a decorative level is suspect, as compared to works by Duchamp and Malaise.

Also, although the Prendergasts' importance in turn-of-the-century art is undeniable, one quite quickly becomes aware of the change in aesthetics which has occurred since the late nineteenth century. Some of Charles' frames, and especially his boxes and small statuettes, do not stand up terribly well for the modern viewer, a few coming perilously close to being kitschy. In all though, "The Prendergasts and the Arts and Crafts Movement" is a fine tribute to the experimental work of the Prendergast brothers from 1890 into the twentieth century. It demonstrates the sense of reform, sincerity, and blending of handicrafts and fine art.

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED

Earn big commissions and free trips by selling Nassau Paradise Island, Cancun, Mexico and ski trips to Vermont & Colorado. For more information call toll free 1-800-231-0113 or in CT 203-967-3330.

CCRR

continued from page 1

ing the definition, we drew up a list, and it's quite substantial," he said.

No great changes CCRR studied graduation figures from previous classes, Haq said, and the results showed that the new requirement would not cause great changes in which classes students took. "Seventy to eighty percent of students from the last several graduating classes would have fulfilled the requirement," he said. "A significant population didn't take the course they needed, but not such a large group that major changes would be necessary. A course in this area is not hard to find."

Other CCRR figures showed that these courses were rarely over registered, Haq said, so students should have little trouble getting enrolled in the class they need. However, he said,

"If there is a problem, this might expand the number of minority-pertinent courses."

He said he believes that CEP will be receptive to the proposal, since it asks for no drastic changes in the curriculum at Williams, and adds no burden of faculty or students.

Haq, who is also a member of the Coalition Against Racist Education, said he thinks that there will not be any problems with CARE, which originally demanded a divisional requirement in minority-related courses after their takeover of James House in April. He added that the takeover had no effect on CCRR's present proposal. "Until CARE took over James, CCRR had never met with them. The debate over the language of our proposal took place in March," he said.

The CEP will make their recommendation to the faculty, who will make any final decisions.

OUR FINANCIAL ANALYST PROGRAM: More than a learning experience

RECEPTION
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12

at 5:00 p.m.

Career Counseling
Library

We invite all Williams Seniors to get to know the people and Finance opportunities available at Salomon Brothers.

Salomon Brothers Inc

Market Makers and Investment Bankers
One New York Plaza, New York, NY 10004

Shaw's sculpture exorcises his devil within

by Jon Ward

As part of the continuing series at the Williams College Museum of Art, ARTWORKS: Egon Shaw opened last week. Following the tradition set by its predecessors, Shaw's selection of works is a puzzling sculptural exercise that begs explanation.

Shaw's background is important to understanding his oeuvre. Before he turned to art as a career, he spent several years as a psychiatrist, and, as he explained in his October 5 lecture here, titled "Beauty and the Beast," his personal and professional past inspired his decision to abandon his medical profession and become a sculptor.

Shaw's troubled childhood, he explained, left him "a desperate person, a troubled person." Constantly alone, he says he created a "beast" inside himself to conquer his fears, and could only escape his consequent inner torment by building. In the park near his home, the college as a benevolent landlord, but they aren't interested," he said that

Art

As he got older and better at repressing his inner turmoil, he abandoned the activity, which he says he never considered anyway. However, he said, his tension grew, and during medical school he turned back toward artistic creation in an attempt to resolve his tormented self.

Eventually Shaw became a psychiatrist and founded a small private practice, enabling him to support himself and spend adequate time with his art. He first turned to cold steel, hammering it into expressive renderings of his rage. He would wield these mangled forms, and then mount them on stands. Within two years he had his first New York show, and with his newfound success abandoned psychiatry altogether, turning back to the rawness of steel to absorb and diminish his torment.

For the next ten years, Shaw created a blinding number of monumental works of welded steel and stone, many of which openly reflect the inner tension of the artist—a huge stone hanging precariously over a steel spike, for example.

A very physical man, Shaw would construct his sculpture in laborious ways, once dragging a 300 pound stone a half mile to include in a work. He claims that his art became the physical and emotional outlet for his tension, realizing and then expelling the beast within. "Art" for Shaw was a process similar to what Picasso understood as the mechanism of "primitive" art; that is, art as a means to frame and separate deep-rooted fear.

With time, Shaw's art work became subtler and smaller, as if he really had succeeded in quelling his turmoil. As his work became less basic, he began to look for more intimate materials for his art, materials like wood that allow a more extensive breadth of expression. The twenty works on display at the College Museum are three series from the last two years, titled "Memorial," "Heralds," and "Caravan." As suggested, they are all completely or primarily composed of wood.

The "Memorial" series appears to be abstracted figural forms, and Shaw explains that they serve as "mental mechanisms to memorize the past." These smooth, darkish works are joined in the 1935 gallery by some members of the "Caravan" series—rough, multicolored sculptures resembling boats and vessels with protruding, sometimes supporting, curving limbs or spikes. He admits being interested in the vessel form because he finds it female in a universal sense, pregnant with the world. The third group of work is the "Heralds" series, painted wall sculptures that resemble shields (as well as somewhat threatening vaginal forms).

Unlike Shaw's earlier sculpture, these works have a less immediate impact. They are not as raw or tense, and do not seem to convey much of anything. Admittedly, Shaw explains that his first and foremost goal as a sculptor is rooted in form. And some of these sculptures do have a compelling visual quality. But the more one looks, the more Shaw's earlier works are largely absent, and no additional visual qualities replace it.

But if there is one quality quickly evident in the new work, it is their overall sexual iconography. Memorial's upright phallic forms often have dangerous-looking spikes poking out. And accordingly, the Heralds series are shaped like shields with a long narrow slit in them.

The battle between the sexes seemingly being fought here reaches a climax in the Caravan series, which has both spikes and boat-like shapes together. The painted and highly scarred Caravans seem to link or gam with violence. Oddly, it is the Heralds series that contains references to his father in their titles. The Freudian (and perhaps misogynist) gestures of these works seem to run very deep here and would most likely require Shaw himself to pick it apart.

Shaw's works are, according to the artist, personal expression. And as he explains it, so much of the "meaning" of his later work is dependent upon connections only he can make. For example, he titles one of his works Heralds XXVIII. I remember my father's possible in 1938. The work itself becomes so enmeshed with the personal nature of the title and its incoherence that it not only defies interpretation, it gives us nothing. The majority of the works are visually absorbing, but disappointing when held against the immediacy of his earlier, bolder work.

The exhibition runs through November 13, 1988.

Eight Men Out winds up a no hitter

by D.W. Mazze

Williams Alum John Sayles has directed his biggest movie yet, Eight Men Out, the story of the Black Sox scandal of 1919. I hate to belittle the accomplishments of Williams College graduates but this movie stinks. Maybe it's not the Eph's fault. One could blame the cinematographer for bland and boring images, and generally low level and "TV-esque" lighting, one could blame the actors for the most two-dimensional stereotypical baseball player characterizations ever seen; one could blame the person responsible for the unemotional and dull soundtrack. I would blame the poor writing of the film and the poor direction. Sayles wrote and directed Eight Men Out.

The story opens with some baseball-loving kids running to see the Chicago White Sox play. They love their team, especially since the Sox are a sho-in for the World Series. The White Sox win, and keep winning, and make it to the series where they are the 3 to 1 favorite. Many Chicago businessmen see a fortune to be made and one by one we see the players giving in to them. The pivotal player is Eddie Seawock, the pitcher, whose mind is made up when he says White Sox owner Comiskey for his thirty game win bonus, and Cominsky tells him he only won twenty-nine.

Movies

"But you benched me for two weeks," Eddie says, "I missed five games and would have won at least two."

"We had to rest your arm Eddie. Twenty-nine is not thirty," Cominsky smiles.

Eddie gives in to the crooked businessmen, seemingly not just for the money but to get back at Cominsky. Money and peer pressure eventually claim most of the players. Shoeless Joe Jackson (D.B. Sweeney) goes in because he was not strong enough or smart enough to stand alone. A few do not give in, notably third baseman Buckey Weaver (John Cusack). Buckey is aware of what's going on, but he can't turn his fellow players in (when two kids fight over whether the White Sox are lying down, Buckey thanks the kid that fought for his team, saying, "A man gotta stand up for his friends.") But the baseball commission decides to permanently suspend players that knew about the conspiracy and kept quiet, as well as those that took bribes. One does feel a little sad for Buckey, but beyond this, the film lacks emotion (even the famous "Joe, say it ain't so Joe" line is heavy-handed and laughable).

Sayles tries to depict too many ball players instead of concentrating deeply on a couple; the film is too broad, the characters are too shallow, and, in the end, no one cares what happens to them. (Actually, I wanted the ballplayers to get their punishment sooner so that I could leave the theatre). The poor writing and film clichés make the characters unrealistic and silly.

In one scene, Rothstein, a man backing the bribes, tells his friend, an ex-boxing champion, that Rothstein made ten times the money the champ made just by betting on him. The champ says, "But I was the featherweight champ of the world."

Rothstein says, "Yes, was, you were." The line was so cheesy that people started laughing in the theatre; I even thought I saw the actor who said it smirk. One wonders if Sayles ever took creative writing at Williams; the writing in this film is adolescent.

It is unfortunate that a film with such a great idea and character possibilities could turn out like Eight Men Out. As a viewer, I would want to see exactly why a player would accept a bribe and why another would not. I would want to know if the players thought about how their actions would affect their fans. If these guys were once unbeatable heroes, I want to see them slowly rot into hated fallen idols. The film hardly scratches at these issues.

I used to think John Sayles made mediocre films because of small budgets, but even with a big budget, he can come out with a heck of a mediocre film. See it because he's an Eph and don't be too sad; remember, this school also produced Ella Kazan (dir. On the Waterfront, East of Eden...).

21 for an EVERYDAY Film Developing Special

• FREE 2nd set of prints. (at time of developing)

• 4"x6" superprints or 3 1/2"x5"

• 24-hour service (ask for details)

Photo Arts Building 4 Water Street Williamstown, Mass. 413-453-1113

Rasputin's Music Box

by Rasputin

Jane's Addiction, Nothing's Shocking (Warner)

A few years ago, the members of Jane's Addiction were no more than students at University High School in West Los Angeles. But when they played live on KXLU, Loyal Marymount University's radio station, they quickly became the biggest thing in the LA underground. Their mix of rock guitar, metal, and psychedelia made them headlines wherever they went on the West Coast.

The only problem was that they hadn't released anything. The only recording anyone had was their live tape from their radio concert, and people were desperate for product from them. It arrived about a year later when the triple-X label released a live album of their "hits" like "Jane Says" and "Pigs in Zen." Major labels clamored to get a hold of Jane's Addiction, and Warner Brothers eventually won out.

And so comes the arrival of their major label debut, Nothing's Shocking, which has, in fact shocked a number of people. First of all, the cover art, featuring two seated nude women joined at the shoulders and hips with fire blazing from their heads. Seven major retailers have already banned the album for its cover.

"It's a really strange comment on America," lead singer Perry Farrell said in Rolling Stone. "That it's almost 1990 and people are still afraid or ashamed to show a woman's breasts. How dare a record store try to presume what is art."

But even more shocking is perhaps what lies underneath the cover. Jane's Addiction have added touches of calmer experimentation on this album that has caused a number of old loyalists to dismiss it as lazy handstands. But these new touches are what give the album its strength.

The songs here demonstrate the excellent song writing skills that made their first effort such a success, and entered them into new and innovative sounds. Songs like "Mountain" (not the Prince song) propel the listener to an exotic plane not usually obtained from the genre that Jane's Addiction most closely fall into.

The second volume features Game Theory, Timbuk 3, Silos, the Balancing Act and Miracle Legion among others. The third volume contains all folk artists, and it isn't exactly my style, but some others might like it. Future volumes are likely to have themes as well. You might want to ask Toosieville Trolley about ordering these for you, or you can subscribe to the series directly from the genre that Jane's Addiction most closely fall into.

AMERICAN EXPRESS REPRESENTATIVE

THE TRAVEL STORE

We make great vacations!

Lowest prices available with great rates for Thanksgiving, Christmas, Spring Break and Summer Vacation

Super Packages Available to all Destinations We Handle All Charters

REMEMBER: There is NEVER a Fee For Our Services!!!

Hours: Mon.-Fri. 9-5, Thurs. 9-8, Sat. 9-12
105 Spring St. 458-5786 Williamstown

Students' sculpture takes a natural approach

by Jason Boro

Six students in Karen McCoy's Sculpture I class are participating in an environmental sculpture project which opened in Hopkins Forest last Friday. Alexandra Iselin, Yuk-Tai Man, Bill O'Brien, Chris Pater, Mark Reid and Russel Werkman have created site-specific sculptures which are intimately linked with their immediate surroundings, quietly intruding on the purity of the spots they occupy. The art used the materials and contexts that a creek, meadow, patch of forest, or a bramble offer as a starting point.

They are sensitive to the contexts environmentally, as a criterion for the assignment was that the sites be restored to their original states. The students will leave few traces behind as a result of their gestures: whatever branches and rocks that have been assimilated in the projects will be dispersed, ditches will be filled in, and string or other materials brought into the forest will be removed. They are sensitive aesthetically—the works echo, amplify, or contrast some defining element of their locations. When the architecture of the space is nature itself, the sculptor enters into the relational games of human beings and nature, in nature, or against nature.

Three of the sculptures in particular address the relationship between nature and humans that occupy it. Bill O'Brien's piece (at the Big Birch Site, #22 on Hopkins Forest Nature Trail) consists of several white plywood hands stuck into the ground at various depths. They are placed beneath large birch trees whose trunk parts fork out and curve.

The force of the piece comes from the image of little saplings growing among the parent birches. At various stages of growth, the saplings are hands that reach up for sunlight. The hands occur in a main cluster of about 17 with about five more on the periphery of the site. The outlying hands make the viewer unable to see the piece in one glance, implying that other hands might lie just out of sight, or further into the forest. The gesture is incomplete, and the piece continues potentially. Whereas Bill O'Brien's piece functions through metaphor, Mark Reid's piece at the Red Pine Grid site (further up the road, on the left before the loop intersection) presents a narrative. Six tall thin trees stand in a remarkably regular hexagonal grid. The artist has the pedestal surface on which it sits creates a tension between these two foci that one senses more strongly than the physical tension carried through the strings and threads.

Alex Reed works on his sculpture in Hopkins Forest.

(Marcus)

This piece presents a subtle narrative, something that is added to the nature which is its stage. Yet it still retains its natural elements: there are rocks bound to sticks or hanging by string, and discarded circles of wood. These chance archaeological elements seem more contrived than a natural feature of their context, which is the coincidental resonance between webbing that takes place in the piece itself and the crisscrossing branches that lie fallen in clumps around the site.

Another level of imagery takes place in Alexandra Iselin's piece at the creek below the meadow on Northwest Hill Road, just past the turn-off to Hopkins forest. Four rectangular solids made of unfinished wood about one foot by 10 feet placed about one foot from one another, extending from a rocky table in the creek. Water flows around and beneath this table of rocks, twigs and moos. The final element is several mossy, gray concrete slabs inherent to the site that line the creek and overlap each other in the creek itself. The water moving beneath the solids puts them in a relation of a generator or mill to the stream.

Several questions arise from these objects. Are the rectangular solids growing out of the watery bank? Are they significantly different from the other verticals that occur in the trees framing the piece? Is their difference an allegorical one, larger than their material difference? The lack of clear answers form the heart of the work.

The sculpture in Hopkins Forest is well worth seeing. One piece (the topographical sculpting of the meadow on Northwest Hill Road) is still in progress, meanwhile, the others will change in the weather and eventually be removed, true to their ephemerality. Art in and of their sites, the pieces encourage consideration of what it is for an event to be rooted in a time and a thing to be rooted in its space.

Art

Local Movie Listings (subject to change after Thursday)
Bennington Cinemas I, II, III Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
Dead Ringers		7:05 & 9:10
The Great Outdoors		7:05 & 9:05
Married to the Mob		7:05 & 9:10
Images Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
A Handful of Dust	tonight	7:00 & 9:00
Tueber	beginning Wednesday	7:00 & 9:00
Something Wild
Married to the Mob	beginning Friday	7:00 & 9:00
Kitchen Toto	beginning Sunday	7:00 & 9:00
North Adams Cinema Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Eight Men Out		7:00 & 9:20
Allen Nation		7:00 & 9:20
Dead Ringers		6:50 & 9:15
Pittsfield Cinema Center Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
A Fish Called Wanda, Eight Men Out, Gorillas in the Mist, Punch Line, Midnight Run (late show only), Dead Ringers
Mon-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sun 7:00 & 9:30
Who Framed Roger Rabbit, Cocktail, Big (no late show), Allen Nation, Memories of Me, Married to the Mob
Mon-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sun 7:15 & 9:30
Berkshire Mall Cinema Rte 8, Lenox, 499-2558
Memories of Me	12:55	3:50	7:15 9:55
Die Hard	12:45	3:40	6:30 9:30
Who Framed Roger Rabbit	1:00	3:30	6:50 9:15
Licence to Drive	1:15	4:00	7:25 9:50
Cocktail	1:30	4:15	7:00 9:25
The Great Outdoors	1:05	3:35	6:55 9:20
Coming to America	1:10	3:55	7:20 9:45
A Fish Called Wanda	1:20	4:05	7:10 9:35
A Nightmare on Elm St.-Part 4	1:25	4:10	2:30 10:00
Gorillas in the Mist	1:25	3:45	6:40 9:40

JOIN THE BLOODLINE OCTOBER 11-12

FOR SALE: 1984 MERCURY LYNX
4-SPEED; 2-DOOR HATCHBACK;
AM/FM STEREO; 61,700 MILES; GREAT CONDITION; PERFECT FOR COLLEGE STUDENT; EVENINGS
CALL (802) 442-6646.

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
15 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. 01267
TEL. 458-4808

EST. 1901
Williams, Conn.
Adidas Shoes
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Retail Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts

SPIRIT SHOP

280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"
Featured this week:
Molson's Golden bottles $7.99/12-pack + deposit
Rolling Rock cans $12.99/case + deposit
Old German Beer $7.99/case + deposit
$1.99/sixpack + deposit
Ice Cold Kegs in stock * Low Prices
Monday - Saturday 9am to 11 pm

Council Travel

DON'T WAIT!
BOOK NOW FOR
THE HOLIDAYS!
FROM NEW YORK
LONDON 189
PARIS 219
ROME 269
rounding
CARACAS 320
ST. THOMAS 260
HONGKONG 739
Taxes not included
ALSO: Week-Stay Study Abroad, Language Courses, Int'l Student ID, Youth
Herald Passes.
EUROPE Passes issued on the spot!
Call for the FREE CEE Student
Travel Catalog
413-256-1261
AMHERST
79 So. Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002

The Boston Globe

Faculty & Student Home/Box Delivery

Rate: Monday-Saturday $1.00

Full Week $2.00

To subscribe call Brian at x6186

3.5" & 5.5" DISKETTES FOR THE IBM AND MACKINTOSH SYSTEMS AVAILABLE NOW.

SINGLES OR A PACKAGE OF TEN

CALCULATORS PHOTO COPIERS TYPEWRITERS

THE LOWEST PRICES ON SPRING STREET

McClelland's

STATIONERY AND OFFICE PRODUCTS

413-458-8157

36 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267

Study Abroad ITHACA COLLEGE

LONDON CENTER

SEMIESTER OR YEAR PROGRAM
ITHACA COLLEGE CREDIT

in BRITAIN FACULTY

COURSES — British and European studies are offered in literature, history, art history, drama, music,
sociology, education, psychology,
communications, and politics.
Special programs offered in Britain include: International business, social services, political system, communications, and international studies.Visits to the theatre, museums, galleries, schools, social and political institutions are an integral part of the curriculum.
A representative will be visiting campus on October 18, 1988. Check with the Study Abroad Office for time and place.

RICHARD D. SIMPSON G. VINCENT COUSSOLE

the College
Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
BETSY BURBANK

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA 01267 (413) 458-4808

GATES REAL ESTATE "Berkshire Properties"

Vacation — Lake Related

Farm & Residential

(413) 862-4565

(413) 269-6585

Brokers:
Nancy Gates
Jack Gates
Associate:
Ken CroninTHE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS

Students of All Majors and Fields Are Invited to hear about our M.B.A., Ph.D., and combined degree programs. We will hold several group information sessions on your campus to answer questions about the curriculum, admission, financial aid, and career opportunities in business.Contact Career Counseling for sign ups Tuesday, October 25, 1988Special study options include the International Business Exchange Program, and joint-degree programs as follows: M.B.A./A.M. in Far Eastern studies, Latin American studies, Middle Eastern studies, South Asian studies, international relations, library science, physical science, and social service administration; M.B.A./J.D. with the Law School; and M.B.A./M.D. with the Pritzker School of Medicine.

LIVINGSTON

Galleries

Fine Custom Framing

1000 North Main Street
John StreetHill 4 East New York
1000 North Main Street

Mirror

Be the Fairest of them all

6 John Street, Hoosick Falls, N.Y. 686 3124

FRAGRANCES
AND SKINCARE
PRODUCTS
FOR MEN AND WOMENOFFERED AT UNBELIEVABLE PRICES1000 North Main Street
John Street

SPORTS SHORTS

Men's Rugby

All winning streaks, even if but one game long, must come to an end. Last Saturday, the Big Green Machine that is Dartmouth Rugby rekindled the White Dog upset of last spring and defeated Williams in three of four matches.

The A-side generally played mediocre rugby in the face of Dartmouth's physical style of maintaining possession while advancing upfield in small and controlled bursts, a style which almost insured that support will be on hand. Considering the amount of the game Dartmouth had the ball, it is interesting that they scored only two tries.

In a rare Williams attack set up by a Bryan Baird '89 kick, the Dogs scored from a five meter scrum. Senior 8-man Chris Palmedo picked up the ball from the back of the scrum and dashed around the weak side beating one man for speed, selling the second a dummy pass, and crashing through the third before touching down in the corner. Palmedo, arguably one of the best runners in the Williams club, momentarily turned the A's thoughts to attack in the second half as well when he ran a kick back 30 meters, oblivious to would-be tacklers who would have crunched an ordinary runner to the ground.

But on the whole, Williams never mounted a coherent or sustained threat. Undisciplined play and hot tempers on Williams' part resulted in a number of penalties, two of which Dartmouth converted into points. A superb conversion of the Palmedo try and one penalty kick by fullback Chap Petersen '90 brought the final tally to 18-9.

The B's and C's fared little better. Though the killer B pack tackled, mauled, and rucked fiercely, they ended up with the short end of the stick too many times due to Dartmouth's superior training and technique. A try in the corner by Sophomore wing Josh

Becker consoled the B's momentarily as they fell to the Green 14-4. 'Team Future' (the Eph D-side) offered brightness on an otherwise gloomy day. Supplied a good share of ball from the pack, the backs were able to spin the ball out to the wings. Sophomore Iron Mike found it easy going to beat his man and sprint 50 meters for a try which came as the roars for fly-half Lloyd Alexander's '92 40 meter jaunt from a John Baker '89 pass were just fading. Solid conversion kicking from Prop William Windsurfer '91 solidified the victory. Next week the Fighting White trek north to Norwich, hoping to keep alive their chances of qualifying for the Division I tournament.

Mark Stepien

Men's Cross Country

The men's cross-country team took on RPI, Trinity, and North Adams on their home course Saturday, running through a steady drizzle and cold conditions to capture the victory. The Ephs finished the meet with 26 points, capturing six of the top ten spots to edge RPI's second place total of 31. Trinity was third (80 points) and North Adams fourth (115).

Williams expected RPI's lead runner to go out hard, and when they saw these expectations verified in the first mile, they stuck to their pre-race plan and held back, content to work the middle sections of the 8.000 meter course to catch up. At the mile mark, four RPI runners led the race, followed by Williams runners in the next seven positions. During the second mile, Marc Belz '91, made a move to join the front pack, while Bill McKinley '92 and Dylan Cooper '91 followed closely. Behind them, Williams still held the next four positions as the runners passed the two-mile mark.

It was during the second loop around the Taconic Golf Course that the Ephs made their move. McKinley and Cooper worked up varsity hill to join the lead pack, while RPI's fourth man dropped back, leaving a front runner. Belz pulled out in front of the pack on the course's downhill sections, but was reeled back in after making his moves. Then, passing the four-mile mark and heading back out onto South Street for the finishing stretch, Belz made a powerful surge to distance himself permanently from the pack. His strongest mile brought him to the finish line in 26:25.

Behind Belz, the rest of the lead pack was gearing up for a last sprint to the finish. McKinley made his move with 400 meters to go, gaining a step on his opponents which grew to a two second advantage at the finish, as he captured the second spot in 26:40. Cooper, who had lost ground during the last mile, gained on his three RPI opponents, but found he had started his kick too late and had to settle for sixth place in 26:55, six seconds back of RPI's third man.

Following Cooper to the line to complete the scoring for the Ephs were

Nate McVey Finney '90, eighth in 27:37, and Steve Brody '90, ninth in 27:41. Brian Coan '92 finished three seconds back in tenth place. McVey-Finney, Brody, and Coan all outkicked Trinity's top runner, Brice Corbett, in the last 400 meters of the race, passed the row houses on Main Street.

It was a strong performance for the Eph squad as they head in to this week-end's NESCAC meet at Hamilton. There Williams will take on four of the teams it accompanies in the New England top ten rankings, as they measure themselves against Colby, Tufts, Bates, and Wesleyan, as well as the rest of the NESCAC schools.

-Steve Brody

Women's Cross Country

Despite miserable weather conditions, the women's cross-country team swept the home meet against NASC, Trinity, and RPI last Saturday with excellent times. Completely leading from the start and dominating the competition, the Ephwomen captured seven out of the eight top finishing places.

In the past four meets, the women's team has had four different number one finishers, indicating that once again it has the excellent depth that it relied on last year. Freshmore talent looks promising this year: Molly Martin '92 took first place overall and first place on the Williams' team last Saturday, joining Andrea Cady '92, Anne Platt '91, and Heidi Beebe '91, who have all been number one finishers on the Eph team.

Cady, Platt, and Gweno Nagy '92 took second, fourth, and fifth places respectively last Saturday. Cherie Macauley '92, Beebe, and Stacy Smith '90 rounded out the top eight overall places taking sixth, seventh, and eighth places, respectively.

Last week, the women harriers were ranked 12th nationally among Division III teams; among NESCAC rivals only Colby was ranked higher, at 9th. This leads team members to be optimistic about the NESCAC, their next meet, to be held at Hamilton.

-Cathy Cocks

Give Blood. Bloodmobile October 11 and 12

A Master's from The Annenberg School of Communications, combined with your bachelor's degree, can take you into a management career in the mass media or telecommunications.

Here's what some recent graduates of Annenberg's Master's in Communications Management are doing:

Suzanne B., B.A., French, U.C. Berkeley
Director, European Sales and Marketing,
International Home Video, MGM/UA

Steve B., B.A., Fine Arts, Ohio University
Senior Vice President, Creative Affairs,
Columbia Pictures-TV

Paul D., B.A., English, U. Michigan
Manager, Marketing and Public Policy, Pacific Bell

Sara K., B.A., Political Science, Duke
Director, Creative Services,
Assoc. of TV Programming Executives

Jeff B., B.A., Psychology, Williams
Research Supervisor, Television Research, ABC

Pam R., B.A., Asian Studies, Mount Holyoke
Director, Public Relations,
St. Paul Medical Center

Karl K., B.A., Economics, USC
Senior Telecommunications Consultant,
Price Waterhouse

Wendell F., B.A., Radio/TV/Film, Northwestern
Manager, Audience and Syndication Research,
Walt Disney Co.

HERE ARE TWO WAYS The Annenberg School,
University of Southern California, Los Angeles, prepares graduates for their careers.

1. Course work in...
 - management of media firms
 - communications technologies
 - law and public policy
 - international communications
 - diffusion of innovations
 - communication in organizations
2. On the job learning...
 - internships in
Los Angeles and
Washington, D.C.

Please send me more information.

Name _____

Address _____

City/State/Zip _____

Currently Attending _____

MAIL TO: The Annenberg School of Communications
3502 South Hoover Street, University of Southern California, Los Angeles, California 90089-0281

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond"
Williams '88

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and shoe boot repair.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267

the Cottage

CLOTHING • JEWELRY
POSTERS • CARDS
BEDSPREADS • RUGS
BASKETS

South Street
Pittsfield

OPEN 7 DAYS

Water Street
Williamstown

SINCE 1988

Waiting for the soccer game to start last weekend, Dan Calichman '90 plays keepaway with fans. While Calichman focuses on the ball, an adoring fan focuses on him. (Scala)

Security is sparing no parking offenders this year, as this ticket on a bulldozer outside of Hopkins Hall demonstrates. (Scala)

CHEMICALBANK

The Middle Market Group

invites you to a presentation and reception

Thursday, October 13th, 7-9 pm

at the Library of the Office of Career Counseling
Stetson Hall

Learn about our Credit Training Program and Career Opportunities in banking.

From the locker room

by Ted Hobart

The NHL must love having criticism heaped upon itself, for it invites it in so many ways. For years the NHL has made itself the laughing stock of the sports community with its poor excuse for officiating. Finally, however, the league has taken great strides to clean up play, with incentive clauses for referees and harsh rules for flagrant penalties.

It seemed as if hockey was moving in the right direction, gaining wider appeal and opening new markets. But just when things were going right, league officials stepped in to stop everything. The latest blunder involves the signing of a new television contract. The league has dumped recent benefactor ESPN in favor of regional cable outlets.

The decision to sign with regional cable operators means a windfall of about $600,000 per NHL franchise, but the total audience of the regional outlets is about 80 percent less than that of ESPN. Some fans may say, "So what?", so long as I get to watch my favorite team during the season.

But the fact is that it is a necessary evil to show the sport in markets where it is not popular if its popularity is ever to increase. The new deal will be lucrative to franchises in the short run, franchises that already enjoy high attendance and handsome deals with local cable operators.

In the long run, though, the move can only hurt the league. Fans who had begun to watch the games on ESPN's nationally televised matchups will be lost because they cannot tap into the regional outlets. Fans will also be less likely to keep up with teams other than their favorites because there will be no national games to watch.

It is even more of a shame that such a move happened before this particular season, since it promises more than a few surprises. Witness: Wayne Gretzky, the most dominant player in sports the last eight years, traded from Edmonton to Los Angeles thus creating a new power balance in the league; Guy Lafleur, the 38 year old Hall-of-Famer whose number hangs in the Montreal Forum, joins the New York Rangers for a Gordie Howe-like comeback.

Although true die-hards may still be able to get all the hockey they want, the league should not be proud of itself for its most recent move. The drone of such small announcements as Gene Hart, Jiggs McDonald, and Johnny Bucyk are not going to draw new legions of fans to the sport. In fact, such commentators make those who remember the way it once was pale with grief. They remember how on Saturday night all of the sports world tuned in to listen to the sounds of the legendary Foster Hewitt, "Live from coast to coast it's Hockey Night in Canada."

Volleyball

continued from page 10

seven straight points on the board. This sort of Herculean effort was not necessary in the second game as the Ephwomens breezed through the game and match 15-8.

This pattern was followed again against Trinity, who the Ephwomens romped over earlier in the season. The Ephwomens once again prevailed 15-13, 15-3. In the final regular match of the tournament against little Albertus Magnus, Williams regulars and subs made short order of the game, 15-4, 15-6, finishing regular tournament play with an unblemished 4-0 record.

In the championship match, the Ephwomens came together to play their best volleyball of the day. Led by co-captain Shelley Whelpton '90, Williams skunked the hostess Connecticut college team 15-0, before a disbelieving crowd. With the opponent reeling, the Ephwomens took the second game almost as easily as the first 15-6, and thus returned triumphantly home as tournament champs. Once again, Williams net play was crucial as Whelpton, McConnaughey, Pappalardo, Marianne Landa '90, Laurie Hartsoe '91, and Holly Hedeman '92 took their cuts all day long.

Tonight, the Ephwomens play host to Union College and North Adams State College in preparation for the traditional Little Three Tournament on Saturday. With Nancy Hedeman expected to be fully recovered from her ankle injury, the next few weeks of Ephwomens volleyball look to be full of excitement and the sweet smell of victory.

I.M. Soccer Report

In this week's biggest showdown on Poker Flats, senior Matt Daley's White Shadow met the Silver Streak led by captain Kevin Hinton '89. The game was evenly matched throughout, with the Shadow getting a few more chances. Susie Becker '89 earned her six-digit salary on Friday with two goals in the Shadow's 3-1 victory. Becker leads all female scorers with four goals.

Season Standings
The White Shadow	5-0-2
Blue Collar Workers	4-0-2
Silver Streak	5-1-1
The Hapless Blue	3-1-3
Yellow Journalism	2-2-3
Black Russians	2-3-1
Red Running Dogs	2-4-1
The Blue Cows	1-4-2
Yellow Snow	1-4-1
Purple Haze	0-6-1

Women's tennis downs foes in fine fashion

After crushing Middlebury 7-2 on Wednesday, the women's tennis team could itself with an 8-1 victory over Trinity on Saturday.

Williams won six of the Saturday matches in straight sets. Amy Davidson '90 (no. 1) and Katherine Stearns '91 (no. 4) both dropped only a single game to their opponents. Sophomore Beth Laxson (no. 5) came back to win her match in the third set after losing a hard-fought second set to Trinity. Similarly, after losing her first set, Hillary Cairns '92 (no. 2) rebounded with a smooth 6-4, 6-2 to down her competition. Senior captain Missy Crouchley won in straight sets at number 3.

In doubles play, Williams made a clean sweep as the teams Crouchley/Davidson (no. 1), Cairns/Laxson (no. 2), and Stearns/Laxson (no. 3) all won in two sets.

Earlier in the week, Williams dropped only one single's and one double's match against Middlebury. Once again, Davidson trounced her opponent, giving away only two games in the two set match. Cairns, Crouchley, Stearns, and Laxson also performed impressively, each winning in straight sets.

Doubles proved a bit more challenging for the Ephs as Cairns and Laxson fell to Middlebury in a third set tie-breaker. Davidson and Crouchley, however, downed Middlebury's number one team in three sets, while Stearns and Lisa Brayton '91 won a painless 6-1, 6-0 victory at number three.

Crouchley says of last week's matches, "We're finally showing what we can do. We're finally coming together as a team with a new coach. Next weekend is the Amherst match, and I think the team is looking forward to it and hoping to clinch Little Three."

-- Mary Kipp and Julie Jacobson

Football fails in comeback bid against Trinity Bantams

continued from page 10

completed four of eight passes on the drive, including the final 18 yard strike to tight end Rick Bates '91 just minutes into the final quarter, which kept the Williams comeback going and narrowed the margin to 17-13 in favor of Trinity.

Only a missed extra point marred what had been a perfect drive. Senior Eric Mac's second of three interceptions (Mac and Rich Williams are tied for the team lead with four apiece) just over five minutes later set up the offense at the Trinity 37. A second-down completion to Chris Towle '90 left Williams at the enemy's 31 yard line. On third down and four to go, Procanik scurried all the way home for his second touchdown and the 20-17 lead, completing the Williams comeback.

However, just as Williams had found good fortune with a punt block earlier, this time they were the victim of the same. On fourth and four from the Williams 22, Crowley's punt was blocked and recovered by the Bantams at the nine.

Not surprisingly, Griffin looked for and found his favorite target in the end zone, completing a ten yard pass to McNamara for the winning score. An unsuccessful reverse on fourth down and ten with just over a minute left marked the last real chance the Ephs had.

Assessing the team's 1-1-1 record, Farley said things should be better but could easily be worse. "It's probably the middle ground--I'm not satisfied with it. We could have done it yesterday, maybe [last week] at Tufts... But it was a true team loss."

This weekend should be a bit easier, as Bates visits Weston Field for the first time as part of the new all-NESCAC schedule.

Budweiser
KING OF BEERS.

GENUINE

the buds for you!

BUD ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Field hockey slams Bantams

by Marc McDermott

"It was our biggest win in years," said defensive dynamo Beth McNulty '90 of Williams field hockey's 2-1 overtime victory over the Trinity Bantams. The Bantams were winners of last year's NIAC journey and the only team to defeat last year's 9-2-1 Ephwomens.

Williams' win stood in stark contrast to last year's 4-1 regular season defeat at Trinity's hands in which the Bantams kept the pressure on the Ephs all game long en route to their 30th straight victory. This year the tempo of the game was controlled by Williams, as the Ephs outshot and outplayed their foes.

A rain soaked first half at Cole field saw Williams pummeling the Bantam goalie with shot after shot until junior forward Judy Fleishman roped one in to stake Williams to a 1-0 halftime lead. The Ephs margin was erased quickly, however, when the Bantams touched twice off a scramble in front of the Williams goal early in the second half, marking only the second time in six games this year that Eph netminder Wynne Holth has been beat.

"It wasn't a pretty goal at all," said McNulty of the Bantam breakthrough. "We had been dominating, shooting and shooting and then they just came down and suddenly scored."

Fleishman again

After both sides drew blanks for the rest of regulation play, a ten minute overtime period began. Williams came out strong, forcing the ball down into the Bantam zone and received near instant gratification when Fleishman netted another, this time off a Kirsten Neuse '89 assist. The Ephwomens then killed the remaining eight minutes on the clock to raise their record to 6-0 and increase their chances for postseason play.

The Ephwomens face another challenge next week -- astroturf. The Ephwomens will practice indoors this week to simulate the faster paced game they will see when the travel to Schenectady New York to take on the Union Dutchwomens. Meanwhile, they face archival Amherst away this Saturday.

WIN $$$-ENTER THE QUIZ

1. Columbia's football team ended its 44-game losing streak last week by beating which team?
2. What substance did Jay Howell, the L.A. Dodger's no. 1 relief pitcher ejected from the National League pennant playoff, have on his glove?
3. What prominent boxer's wife filed for divorce last week on grounds that he is emotionally disturbed?
4. What New York Giants Hall of Fame pitcher was known as "The Barber" and why?

Send your answers to Ted Hobart or Marc McDermott or SU 2917 by Saturday or call the Record office Sunday to enter. A drawing will be held among the entrants with the most correct answers. Last week's winner, Alfred Ellis Maesteur '89 wins a $15 gift certificate to Goff's sports. Congratulations, Al, you've finally done something right at the Record.

RECREATIONAL SKI PACKAGE

K2 ETX ski	$275
NORIDICA N500/N500L boot	$160
TYROLIA 470 binding	$115
SCOTT Classic pole	$32
MOUNTING	$15
TOTAL	$597

SPECIAL PACKAGE PRICE $319

Goff's Sports, inc.

(413) 458-3605
15 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Dropouts

BY JUDSON G. TRENT/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- | | | | |
|-------------------------------------|---------------------------------|------------------------------|--|
| ACROSS | 36 Author St. Johns | 63 It can be scanned | 92 Weighty works |
| 1 Rigel, e.g. | 37 Above all | 64 Po metropolitan | 93 Smudges |
| 5 Trade | 41 Michel Ney's weapon | 65 Lorelei | 94 Rounded moldings |
| 9 French Likis one | 42 Sultury | 67 Islamic Messiah | 96 Record-breaking miler |
| 12 Herald's cloak | 44 Kind of soup | 69 Rel. of a bracket | 98 What gandy dancers do |
| 18 Gulpure or culberteen | 47 First U.N. Secretary General | 70 Hampered | 100 Shapes |
| 19 Kennedy relative | 48 Sword | 73 Prepare to deplane | 102 Walked aimlessly |
| 20 Telpier | 49 Wings, to Ovid | 75 Load | 106 Stage |
| 21 Larious | 50 "Because thou hast —" | 77 Mme. in Madrid | 107 How the death-fires danced for the Ancient Mariner |
| 22 Fabian's opinion of Caesar: Shak | 51 Horne from Brooklyn | 78 Estuaries | 109 James Webb's "— of Honor" |
| 25 "By their — ye shall know them" | 52 Photog's product | 81 Mother of Jabel and Jubal | 110 Baby raccoon |
| 26 Peter's — (old tax) | 53 "— said... Chaucer" | 82 Folding bed | 111 Wagon tongues in New England |
| 28 Saturate | 54 Aphorisms | 84 Decree | 112 Fad |
| 29 Chevrolet | 57 Auditors' concerns | 87 Yield | 113 Spare |
| 30 "When I was —" | 58 Early ascetics | 88 Yawn | 115 Vane dir. |
| 31 Tempers | 59 Painting style | 90 Squash variety | 116 Fleuret's kin |
| 33 Flings | | | |

THE FAR SIDE by GARY LARSON

Scene from the film "Glosses IV": This time, they're not just looking for ocellus leaves.

How the human egg is often deceived.

Football fumbles to 24-20 loss at Trinity

by Ted Hobart

"We have to come alive offensively," said head coach Dick Farley, going right to the bottom line in analyzing Saturday's 24-20 loss to the Trinity Bantams in Hartford. Farley's comments, though, covered more than just Saturday's loss and pointed to more general trends in the teams 1-1-1 record.

Saturday's contest was one of highs and lows for the Ephs. Tri-captain Scott Kennedy '89 came back to form somewhat, completing eight passes for 52 yards against just two interceptions, one on a last gasp effort with 12 seconds left in the game. On the down side, the Ephs had trouble hanging on to the ball, as they fumbled the ball seven times, losing four of them.

Both of those figures are tempered by the fact that playing conditions were less than ideal, as a cold rain made ballhandling troublesome. The Bantams had a sure grip though, fumbling just once in 52 rushing attempts. The mounted air attack of the Bantams had an up and down day, though, connecting for 192 yards on 18 completions while surrendering seven interceptions.

Trinity quarterback Kevin Griffin and split end Terry McNamara were able to connect when it counted, however, including the gamewinning touchdown with 2:30 left in the game.

Farley, in his second season as head coach, put the loss quite simply, "We gave the ball away on offense, and we gave up too many big plays on defense." All was not negative, though, as Farley was quick to point out—"We did come back from what seemed to be an insurmountable situation."

The insurmountable situation started mounting early against the Ephs as they started off their first play from scrimmage with a fumble. Trinity, however, missed a 31 yard field goal attempt to keep the game 0-0.

The Ephs' offense never got out of the blocks in the first half, gaining just one first down in each of the first two quarters. Trinity mounted the only substantial drive of the first quarter, taking over on its own 45 before pounding 55 yards for the 7-0 lead.

The next Trinity drive was stopped only by an interception in the end zone by junior Rich Williams, his first of two on the day. But another fumble, this on the opening play of the Ephs' next drive gave Trinity the ball on the 23, and from there Griffin waited only one play before hitting McNamara for the 14-0 lead.

After trading short drives, sophomore Bill Crowley launched a punt which was taken at the Trinity 44 and returned all the way to the Williams 19. Only senior Dave Willey's deflection of Griffin's third down pass forced Trinity to settle for a field goal and the 17-0 lead.

In both the previous games, it has been the defense which came up with a big play to spark the team. This time it was a blocked punt that got the Ephs on the board. After a Crowley punt left Trinity at its own nine, the defense snuffed the Bantams on three plays.

Fleet-footed Dave Bakken '90 then blocked the Trinity punt down at the Bantam one yard line where classmate Dan Yerxa pounced on it. From there freshman Jerry Procanik plunged over the line for the first Williams score of the day, after which senior Jeff Elomaki's extra point made it 17-7. Procanik finished the afternoon with 117 yards on 25 carries and accounted for two Williams touchdowns after replacing Jon Horton '91.

The Eph defense took control in the second half, holding the Bantams to just four first downs on their first nine series of the half. Trinity turned the ball over six of those nine series, including four times in a row.

Unfortunately, the offense was unable to capitalize on all but one of its opportunities. Taking over after a Trinity punt on their own 27, the Ephs started a steady drive upfield, carried mostly by Kennedy's aerial attack. The senior continued on page 9

Ephman Bryan Jennings '89 slides to get a shot off versus Trinity on Saturday. The Trinity keeper was unable to control the ball, which bounced to Laurin Laderoute '92 who scored the final goal in the 5-0 Williams victory. (Scala)

Men's soccer shuts out Trinity, Springfield

by Marian Nafay

All the thunder, lightning, rain, and cold last Wednesday couldn't faze the men's soccer team; they beat Division II Springfield 6-0, then rallied to win Saturday's game against Trinity 5-0. "The last three games I can honestly say we played the best soccer I've seen since I've been here," said Coach Mike Russo. The squad record now stands at 6-0.

Russo has reason to be pleased—both games amounted to total domination by Williams. The defense only allowed three shots on goal by Springfield, and the majority of the game was played in Springfield territory. Rob Lake '91 put the first goal of the game in only 4:06 into the first half with an assist from Doug Brooks '90.

Lake's goal was closely followed by goals by Peter Lyn '91, assisted by co-captain Mike Masters '89, and Masters himself, assisted by junior Rob Swann. By the time the game was called off (with 16 minutes left) due to thunder and lightning, Lake had scored two more times and Emil Mugnaini '89 had put one in with an assist from Brooks.

Calichman nets a pair

Saturday's game against Trinity saw freshman talent and team effort bloom.

The game started picking up when Masters and Brooks worked the ball down the right wing in Trinity territory. Sweeper Dan Calichman '90 received the ball and fired it home for the first goal of the game at 16:14 of the first half. Lyn, who team members and Coach Russo agree "had a fantastic game", beat the Trinity defense down the left wing to assist Calichman to his second goal at 19:45. The score stood 2-0 at the half.

Lake came through again for the Ephs in the second half when, assisted by Masters, he chest-trapped the ball then hit a volley into the net. Adding to Trinity's misery, Lyn ran the ball through the Trinity defense 13 minutes later to assist Jim Ryan '92 to the first freshman goal of the season.

Finally, Laurin Laderoute '92, who had just finished playing in the JV game a few minutes earlier, was sent into the Varsity game. He rebounded to score the last goal of the game, when there was a scramble in the box and Bryan Jennings '89 sent him the ball. Said an impressed Ryan, "The team is playing so well now that it's beautiful to watch."

The team faces RPI at home this Wednesday and Bowdoin away this Saturday, which promises to be a tough game. Coach Russo expressed his concerns: "I hope we're not peaking too early... Bowdoin is a good team and we've always had problems with them."

However, Russo did go on to cite several players as having performed extremely well this week. The Ephs may not have too much to worry about. "If we keep this up," as an optimistic Calichman said, "who knows what's going to happen."

WWRFC collared in OT of Beantown final

by Laura Whitman

This weekend the WWRFC's and B's traveled to Boston for the Twelfth Annual Beantown Women's Rugby Tournament. It is a testament to the growing popularity of the sport in New England that separate divisions for both club and college teams could be fielded. The weather, however, was a definite hardship, as all players endured freezing temperatures, hard rains and ankle deep mud.

Williams was the only club in the tourney with enough talented players to confidently register two sides in the tourney. The Killer B's were placed in a unique position on Saturday when two of their three matches forfeited—Providence lacking a full team and UVM complaining of injuries and the freezing cold rain. Thus the B's were immediately faced with a tough match against the first seed, Dartmouth.

The B's rallied to the challenge and played well. Petite rugger Caitlin Mann '92 and Amy Thrasher '91 brought down Dartmouth players twice their size. Jessica Melcher '91 also fought hard for the ball and gained significant yardage for Williams. Although the game was a 18-0 defeat, the B's were not disheartened. Rebecca Timin '90 commented, "Having the B's entered as their own team was an amazing learning experience. We had the opportunity to play teams ranked above us, and that really forces you to think about what you are doing."

The A's first game Saturday was one of total domination against Brown, who played well defensively and kept the WWRFC hovering on the five meter line. Sophomore upstart Katy Carr scored all the points in the game, place-kicking in the first half and scoring a try in the second, giving Williams the 7-0 win.

The second match of the day was considerably more challenging. Harvard, seeded number two, was favored to win and also exhibited a level of play that was not quite as sportsmanlike as Williams is used to. It was a dirty game in other ways, as the players became so muddled that scrum captain Rebecca Matteson noted, "I confused a white player for a black and almost tackled her."

The match continued into two overtime periods before the exemplary effort of Andrea Neumaier '91 in scoring the winning try gave the 'RFC a 4-0 win.

In the championship finals, Williams faced Boston College, a surprise matchup for those expecting a Dartmouth-Harvard final. BC was big and fast, but the Ephs confused them by utilizing the new union rules and occasionally overloading the line during a scrumdown. Once again, the teams were well matched and the game went into sudden-death overtime.

BC touched the ball down in an uncontrolled manner, which was ruled a try because the referee was playing the advantage off a high tackle against Williams, ending the game 4-0. Meanwhile the B's lost 20-0 in the consolation finals.

Junior back Net Owen tries to clear the ball during Saturday's 2-2 tie with Trinity. (Scala)

Women's soccer rallies to 5-2-1 record in early season

by Kerr Houston

The Williams women's soccer team, gearing up for what coach Lisa Melendy termed "the toughest part of our schedule," ended the first half of their 1988 campaign in fine fashion, downing RPI 3-0 and tying Trinity 2-2.

The Ephwomen, ranked seventh in New England in the most recent women's soccer poll, took a solid 4-2-0 record to RPI last Wednesday for their seventh game in a 14-game schedule. Melendy noted that Williams had never faced the Engineers, and did not know what to expect. The Ephwomen were more than equal to the challenge, however, turning in a fine effort and downing the Engineers 3-0. Senior midfielder Amy Duncombe and sophomore sweeper Carin Cole each scored solo goals, sandwiching a tally by Liz Nasser '92, which came on an assist from captain midfielder Lori Schaeen '89. Coach Melendy was pleased with the team's overall effort, and singled out Cole's performance, saying that she "played a very good game and really helped out the attack with the goal." Sophomore keeper Becca Borden played a steady game between the pipes, leading the Ephwomen to their fourth shutout victory of the year.

The versus Trinity Melendy's squad returned to Massachusetts for their next contest, a Saturday matchup against Trinity. Under ominous grey skies and 35 degree winds, the Ephwomen fought to a 2-2 deadlock. Although Melendy was disappointed with the result, she did stress the positive sides of her team's performance. "We had hoped to beat Trinity... but that's soccer," the coach said. "People are coming together, and that was the best offensive movement we've showed so far, we really played well."

The Ephwomen were led by goals from Nasser, who, with goals in each of her last three games, is showing terrific scoring potential as a freshman, and sophomore forward Audra Mazdzler. Forward Lola Grandison '91 turned in a superior effort, as she "did a really fine job of distributing the ball and creating opportunities for us," according to Melendy. Becca Borden once again tended the nets for Williams, making eight saves and helping the defense rally around the absence of junior back Net Owen, who has missed several games due to illness.

The Ephwomen leave the friendly confines of the Purple Valley for five consecutive road games, including matchups against traditionally strong rivals Tufts, Connecticut, and Holyoke. However, Melendy did make it clear that she was proud of her squad's opening eight games. When asked how she would sum up the first half of the season, Melendy said that "I guess I would give them a B+ or an A-." The Ephwomen will try to raise these marks in their next game, a Tuesday matchup at Union.

Volleyball takes tourney with five victories

by Bob Nishols

Even without the services of injured captain Nancy Hedeman '89, the Ephwomen improved their record tally to 15-2. The Ephwomen, who are flying high after going 5-1 this past week, are showing amazing depth in making up for the absence of the hard-hitting Hedeman. Deirdre Pappalardo '91 and Ruth Burday '90 have filled in the vacant spot admirably going into this weekend's Little Three showdown.

After falling in four hard-fought games with Springfield, ranked fourth in Division II, the Ephwomen rolled into a four-team tourney at Connecticut College, eager for some victories. In anticipation of five grueling matches, the Ephwomen spent the week conditioning and fine-tuning their net game, an aspect of the team weakened by the absence of captain Hedeman.

In the first match against host Connecticut College, the Ephwomen started off extremely sluggish, showing an inability to rack up the kills. Thus, the Ephwomen were pushed to the limit in the first game 16-14. However, in the second game a week's worth of work paid off, as the Ephwomen settled down, taking the game and match, 15-8.

In the second match against a mediocre Roger Williams team, the Ephwomen's lack on intensity once again let the game get out of hand, being pushed to the limit, 17-15. The serving of Cathy McConnell '90 put the impostors' upset bid to rest by putting Continued on page 9

Born to run

Freshman John Coequit keeps the pace in Saturday's cross-country meet. Coequit finished seventh among the Ephs and nineteenth overall in the meet, which the Ephs captured. For story, see sports shorts on page 7. (Steinman)

The Williams Record

VOL. 102, No. 6

USPA 684-680

October 18, 1988

Neopagan hopes to find Berkshire coven

by Ellen Drought and Sara Dubow

Salem is only 150 miles from Williams but, luckily for self-proclaimed neopagan Dennis Ortiz '92, the witch burnings there ended 300 years ago.

"We have a saying," Ortiz said, "The burning times are over. If you keep it a secret, people assume certain things. Of course they assume the worst."

According to Ortiz, his religious beliefs are a reversion to paganism as it existed on the European continent.

"In its most basic form, it's nature worship," he said.

Ortiz attended a Catholic high school in New York City before coming to Williams. "Although I was raised a Catholic, the occult is nothing new to me. My mother is from Puerto Rico, from a line of Spanish gypsies, and my father has studied Jewish mysticism, the cabala," he said.

Exposure to "the craft" in came in New York's East Village in the form of books and other practitioners. Ortiz said he was initiated outside of a coven while in high school.

The Goddess and the God

"The religion is very psychological, working on the assumption there's a form of the divine—a force. In our vision we split the force into the Goddess and the God," Ortiz explained.

Followers pick and choose between certain aspects of the Goddess and the God in terms of what to emphasize in the religions. "I lean toward the moon—the triple Goddess (waxing/waning/full)—and the sun in terms of the cycle of season," Ortiz said.

Neopaganism attracts feminists and ecologists, according to Ortiz—the former because the religion rejects the patriarchal tradition that God is male. Ecologists are interested in the religion because of the notion of the earth as Mother Earth. "The earth is the most tangible manifestation of the power we have, and it is our home; it's something magical in the abstract sense," Ortiz said.

He said the environment of Williamstown was especially appealing to him for these reasons. "New York is kind of confining in terms of nature. I can see real trees here."

He explained that neopaganism is often confused with satanism because of the existence of the horned god (Pan) in neopaganism. "Its association with satanism arises from a mistranslation of the Bible; in reality, horns mean wisdom," he said.

The chance to educate others about such misconceptions was another reason Ortiz chose Williams.

He pointed to the stereotypes brought out in films like "The Witches of Eastwick" and "Halloween." His theory that most people unfamiliar with the craft will make wrong assumptions about it held true at Williams when students believed an entry joke that he put a hex on Morgan Mid East.

Expose the religion

"There is a diversity here in terms of people from all over the country, and I'm in a position to expose the religion," Ortiz emphasized, however, that neopaganism is not a religion of conversion. "I'm a wiccan [another term for neopagan], but I'm also a student of all religions. I don't think any one religion is right for everyone."

Ortiz said the integration of his religion into Williams life has involved a few difficulties. He meditates every day, which he finds harder to make time for here. But he said that his entry (Morgan Mid West) and roommates do not mind his beliefs. "They weren't really shocked when they found out what I was. They just didn't know that [wiccan] really existed." He wrote that he was a "student of mystical religions" on his application to Williams but didn't elaborate any further.

As expressions of his religion, Ortiz wears a ring and necklace with neopagan symbols, and has an altar and candles in his room. He once accidentally set off the fire alarm in Morgan by burning incense, but that is the extent of any problems coming from the practice of his beliefs.

Karma and three-fold law

Ortiz said he leads his life according to the ancient wiccan law: "An' it harm none, do what you will." He explained, "Modern witchcraft has stolen a bit from Eastern religions. We have our own system of karma, the three-fold law. Whatever you do, it comes back to you three times over. So if you put love out, you can expect it back."

"I'm working entirely outside the Judeo-Christian framework. I'm not anti-Christian, just not Christian. There's no Ten Commandments to tell you what to do, so you must make decisions out of your conscience—what is love is up to you. You have to decide for yourself."

Ortiz said he sees nothing strange about his decision to attend Williams. "My entry-mate said, 'Why did you come to this school—you're so urban and arty?' That's exactly why I came. In my next life I may be Hindu; this is just one path I have for this lifetime, but there are many paths."

Morgan Mid West's own neopagan Dennis Ortiz '92 shows off the tools of his trade. (Steinman)

Library to undergo renovations College plans to add shelf space

by Ellen Drought

As part of the college's general renovation plans, Sawyer Library will undergo major changes next year in response to its acute need for shelf space. Renovations will include the conversion of part of the lower level into two stories, the addition of new stacks, and elimination of the student lounge.

"Our collection grows by 15,000 volumes a year. It's in the nature of libraries that they'll grow," said College Librarian Phyllis Cutler.

To solve the space problem other spaces in the library will have to be encroached upon, said Cutler. "We will not reduce the amount of seating—we'd like to increase it, but the reserve book room will be decreased in size and the student lounge will be utilized for storage. We have to use all of the available space in the lower level."

Parts of the lower level will be made into two stories, by creating two-tiered stacks and balconies.

The need for space is especially urgent because Sawyer is a depository library, Cutler said. The government deposits 40 percent of its publications with the library under the condition that it provides certain conveniences, like accessibility to the general public.

"We fail the space test," Cutler said, referring to a recent inspection. "We'll have to revamp the government documents area for better viewing."

Renovations are being planned for the upper and main levels as well. "On the upper floors we're trying to work out a new configuration and make room for new stacks. There are opportunities for acoustical treatment; there's a strong possibility of reducing sound in the upper levels."

On the main level, adaptations will have to be made to accommodate the trend of information being stored on the CD-ROM system—on compact discs rather than microfilm. The electrical system will have to be revamped, the automated catalog expanded, and the floor rewired for computer applications. "They [the new systems of information storage] are on the market, but we can't avail ourselves of them because we don't have the facilities," Cutler said.

The library's original architect, Ben Weiss of Chicago, is drawing up the master plans for these changes, which are still in the works. Some of the easy changes on the main floor, such as improving the reference desk, will take place between Christmas and spring.

"The real construction couldn't take place until the summer at the earliest, and I'm not sure if it could even be completed in one summer," Cutler said. The cost of the renovations is not known at this time.

Cutler said she expects that these changes will make a major addition to the library unnecessary until the end of the century.

Language center aims for the sky

by Soojin Kim

Williams College will follow a host of other schools, including Vassar, Middlebury, Harvard and Columbia, by updating its foreign language center through the installation of satellite dishes to receive television broadcasts from several countries.

According to Bruce Kleffer, associate professor of German and director of the center for foreign languages, literatures and cultures, two or three dishes will be installed the summer of 1989 and programming from foreign broadcasters should be available for both general and classroom purpose viewing

Students can watch debates between foreign presidential candidates live.

during the next academic year. "I'm pretty confident we'll be able to get programming in all the modern languages taught at Williams," Kleffer said.

Although the project itself is not unique to Williams, the way in which

continued on page 6

Student threatens new dean at Agard party

by Stephanie Jones

Student-faculty relations took on a new dimension last weekend when Assistant Dean Andrew Hernandez showed up at some parties.

Williams College senior Bill Melchionni threatened Assistant Dean Andrew Hernandez at an Agard party on October 8. Melchionni said that none present knew who Hernandez was or what he was doing at the party.

"I got the impression that he was just there to see how things run on campus," Melchionni said later.

Hernandez, who is new to Williams this year, said he has been at four student parties but does not just show up.

"I'm going as the invited guest of the Williams community," he said.

Hernandez was invited to parties at Perry and Wood earlier in the year. He said he decided to go over to Tyler on October 8 to see how their policy of checking IDs to keep out non-Williams guests was working out. When he arrived at Tyler, he met up with Security, who were closing the party because of overcrowding caused by students crawling in windows.

Hernandez said he decided to go around with Security to familiarize himself with their concerns. They were over to Agard which had become very overcrowded due to the closing of Tyler.

Violation of fire safety laws

According to Melchionni, who lives in Agard, they had not meant to have an all-campus party, and there were four times as many people as are allowed by the fire safety laws.

Hernandez said that they also discovered that Agard had two taps although they had only declared one keg on their party plan.

"I'm just familiarizing myself with Williams College," Hernandez said. He emphasized that he was not coming to the parties as an undercover agent. "I don't really see my role as alcohol police."

Hernandez said that he had nothing to do with closing the two parties on October 8. They were both closed due to overcrowding, which is standard procedure, he said.

"I don't get a sense that we're doing anything different than we have in the past," Hernandez said. Students will be notified if any change in the party policy is made, but he does not foresee a change, Hernandez said.

"If administration, faculty, staff, and students raised a concern [with the party policy] we would go through the same channels we did in 1987," he said. As a part of Alcohol Awareness Week, Hernandez is sending a copy of the policy in an all-campus mailing tomorrow.

Funding for the new Log may get the axe

by Rajesh Swaminathan

The most recent try at rejuvenating the Log appears to be floundering. The College Council has put on hold the Log's request for $12,000 for the academic year 1988-1989, pending further discussion on the success and the future of the revitalization of the former student hangout.

In the meanwhile, the continuing rejuvenation of the Log has been partially sidetracked, according to Log Manager Dave Lamarre.

"We do have some money left over from last year," Lamarre said. "But we've suspended the booking of any entertainment [that requires payment] for this semester," he said.

Council President Trace Blankenship '89 said that the Log's budget request has not been a top priority with the Council because of the great amount of work that they have had to deal with in the last few weeks.

In terms of fulfilling the goals of the new Log, we are at a stalemate. We don't have enough money....

But the volume of work is not entirely responsible for the postponing of a decision on the Log, Blankenship said.

"It does seem as though there are certain events [at the Log] that are attractive to certain folks. But we at the Council are concerned with the efficient and effective use of money; the new Log's program hasn't failed but the results do not reflect a $6,000 investment. They just can't compete with free beer [at campus parties]. We have to see whether the ideas brought up by the Log Committee are working and whether they are attracting enough folks to be worth $12,000 a year," he said.

Rejuvenate student interest

Last spring, the Log Committee was formed to rejuvenate student interest in the Log. Student Coordinator Jane Penner '90 said. Student patronage of the Log declined sharply soon after a law that effectively raised the statewide drinking age from 18 to 21 years was put into effect; before 1985, most students could purchase alcohol legally at the Log, according to Lamarre.

Last spring the College Council gave $6,000 to the Log to purchase a new sound system and other amenities to attract students to the "New Log," Lamarre said.

"The funding from the Council definitely helped with a lot of activities down here. There was a large improvement in last spring compared to what had been happening since 1985. The Log was much more successful."

Penner said that the Log Committee hadn't actually determined a timetable to mark the Log's progress. But she said, "I wouldn't agree that the Log has been off to a slow start; we only got the new Log organized last spring. We didn't want to look at second semester last year as the critical period, because we hadn't fully gotten into gear. This year is what we hoped would serve as a litmus test."

Funding is vital

Penner said that the funding was vital to the aspirations of the Log Committee. "In terms of fulfilling the goals of

continued on page 3

Efforts to get the Log rolling again seem to be floundering because of lack of student interest. (Jackson)

Book Review: Anne Tyler's
Breathing Lessons

PAGE 6

Williams figures in Times'
crossword (See 67 down).

PAGE 9

Women's cross country wins
NESCAC's for the first time.

PAGE 10

The Williams Record

Dead wood

The College Council's hesitation to allocate $12,000 to the Log reflects what many people have suspected for the past three years—the Log cannot function as a campus hangout with the drinking age at 21. Thousands of dollars have been spent at several efforts to revitalize the Log. Yet evening attendance remains poor except for 21-nights. It's not the continual loss of money alone that is troublesome; the college spends much more on other facilities, but those facilities serve a noticeable demand. The money poured into the Log, however, serves to maintain an ignored and apparently undesired campus center. Creating more 21-nights, essentially turning the Log into another pub, would work on weeknights. But as College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 noted, bars on weekends "just can't compete with free beer."

Periodic features such as campus singing groups and Combination Pizza draw crowds, but aside from 21-nights, no regular events attract even a modest turnout.

It's time to admit that the old college try—and several successive tries—have failed to attract enough people to the Log to merit spending more money to keep it open at night in its present capacity.

License to vote

Someone eligible for his or her first driver's license will tolerate any amount of bureaucratic intrusiveness in order to drive. However, students often cite as a reason for not voting the logistical problems involved in either obtaining an absentee ballot or registering in their school's district. In fact the electoral bureaucracy in most states is not even as complicated as the red tape in the motor vehicle bureau. California excepted, voting is more important to the functioning of our country than is driving. College age students have had the right to vote since the XXVI Amendment was passed in 1972. This year represents the first opportunity most students have to vote for a President. In the sixteen years students have had to exercise their suffrage, around half have failed to do so.

What has caused students to forsake their Constitutional privilege? For one thing, demographics are against them. It is a simple fact that young people don't vote as much as older people do. Some feel that their vote doesn't make a difference. But short of participating in a violent overthrow of the government, voting, and the electoral process in general, provide the only opportunity for someone to contribute his or her opinion to the governing of the country.

In any election there is a choice between two (or more) people. Any group of candidates differ, to at least some extent, in ideas, values and proposed solutions to problems. Voting is an act that allows people to express which person they feel most nearly represents their own ideas and values.

We like to think Williams produces clear-thinking and able individuals who understand many of the problems facing society. It is their responsibility to say what direction they want this country to go in.

On The Record...

"The new Log's program hasn't failed, but the results do not reflect a $6,000 investment. They just can't compete with free beer."

—College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 explaining the council's reluctance to apportion an additional $12,000 to the Log.

"We were dressed up as figures of speech. We were a dramatic, illuminating picture of what people do in their heads."

—Cathy Seiser '88 explaining the display "Figures of Speech."

SPEAK OUT!

Dulled by Dukakis?
Bored by Bush?
Pained by Pine Cobble?
Irked at Images?

Let the Williams community know your views on campus, town and national issues. The Record's Opinion department welcomes letters and opinion pieces from all interested readers.

Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication.

Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication, and they should be either word processed. Any questions should be directed to Chuck Samuelson at 597-2289.

DEBBIE SNYDER Editor in Chief
TODD OWENS News Editor CHUCK SAMUELSON Opinion Editor TRAVIS PIERSON Arts Editor
TED HOBART & MARC McDERMOTT Sports Editors RICH WARD & JED SCALA Photo Editors
KIRSTEN HASENFUSS & MARY ELIFF Layout Editors KATIE ALBRIGHT Business Manager

News Assistants
STEPHANIE JONES, ANN MANTIL, BILL SAVADOVE, DAN SKWIR, ROB WEISSBERG
Sports Assistant
MARIAM NAFICY JAY STEINMAN, KARL THOMAS
Layout Assistants
ELISA DUOUNDI, BILL PHILPOTT, ASHESH SHAH

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Letters

SDA misses the point. The Duke is right

To the Editor:

The first publication of the Student Defense Alliance (or, more properly, the Garfield Republicans—look at the officers) has just been distributed, and I would like to comment on it, hopefully giving the "other" side's view. First of all, I'll discuss bombers. The B-1 bomber is slow, vulnerable and has experienced high cost overruns. I'd rather trust a thirty-year-old B-52 than a B-1. At least there's a better chance of it working. In addition, even if the Blackjack were a superb bomber, it wouldn't matter much. The USSR is so short of bombers that they're using Badgers in secondary roles. Badgers are proper planes, they're so old. About the only way Badgers could hit a target is by crashing into it.

The second area I'll address is conventional ground forces in Europe. The SDA's tank numbers are wrong. The real numbers are 52,200 to 22,000 in favor of the Soviets. (International Institute for Security Studies, Military Balance 1987-1988). This sounds worse than it is because 81% of the Soviet tanks were made in 1969 or earlier. Several hundred of the tanks in their reserve divisions are WWII leftovers (1-34/85's). Also, lots of tanks won't fix the wretched low-level leadership in the Soviet Army. The private and non-coms of the Red Army are two-year draftees who mostly don't want to be there. Their non-coms, a vital part of the chain of command elsewhere, are grossly undertrained and often cannot even read a map. NATO forces are probably the equal, if not superior, to the Warsaw pact forces they face.

The third factual error that needs correcting are the statements about the Bradley Fighting Vehicle. This vehicle is a joke—or, more likely, a deathtrap. Any anti-vehicle shell that hits the Bradley will probably kill all the passengers, even if it doesn't destroy the vehicle. It's a joke-jerk defense spending on badly new weapons systems. It's estimated that half the tanks the U.S. has in Europe are not battle ready because of a lack of spare parts. Bush, as his record shows, does not seem to be interested in this. Dukakis would fix it. Jon Howard '91

Honeysuckle issue sprouts again on Pine Cobble

by Justin Smith

State environmental protection officials said last week that the College failed to notify appropriate state conservation agencies before proceeding with a plan to transplant patches of a rare species of plant, the hairy honeysuckle, in order to make way for the Pine Cobble faculty housing development.

According to Professor of Biology Henry Art, the transplanted honeysuckle may not live.

"It would be virtually impossible to transplant the ones wrapped around the trees and have them survive," Art said. "As far as transplanting the other ones, it is unknown whether they will survive. In general it is better to transplant in the Spring."

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has classified the hairy honeysuckle as an endangered species. Patches of the plant have been found on Pine Cobble on the College's proposed 121-acre faculty housing development site.

Antonio Janairo, director of the College's development project, supervised removal of the plants in the path of the proposed road to the development. The plants were moved by David Fitzgerald, the college horticulturist.

Already transplanted "The (hairy honeysuckle patches) that were immediately imperiled by the proposed road have already been transplanted," Janairo said. "We're only aware of two locations where the vine grows up a sapling. We're not planning to do construction in that area." Janairo added that it will take 20 to 30 years before all 70 lots are developed. In the future, clearing might occur in the two locations where the vine plants have been found. "At present we do not plan to do any building on the lots. Five to ten years from now though, who knows?" he said.

Jay Copeland, environmental reviewer for the Massachusetts Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program, said that the college's new plan to even out the topography on lots at the site with 70,000 cubic yards of soil, a by-product of planned construction activity, may result in the obliteration of some plants.

Copeland also said that President Oakley has not responded to an August 22 inquiry about how the College plans to protect the endangered plant from possible harm due to construction at the Pine Cobble site.

[The college] decided to act first and notify everyone of their decision later.

At a meeting last Tuesday, members of the Williamstown planning board failed to second a motion that would have required the College to submit to a re-investigation of the development plans due to the recent changes.

Prefer Pine Cobble undeveloped "Like many in the town, I would prefer Pine Cobble undeveloped. If it will be developed, I am pleased with the College plan," said Planning board member Donna Weld, who made the

continued on page 6

Few Williams students desire Mystic experience

by Salie Han

Jan Sechrist '89 returned from her semester at the Williams College Mystic Seaport Program and could not understand the lack of interest on the part of Williams students for the program. Sechrist was one of only two Williams students to participate in the program at Mystic, Connecticut, last year. This semester no students are attending.

"It's a program that's very strong academically, but it's a lot of fun," she said. "I came back from it having had a positive experience."

"I have a feeling people think, 'The sea—what do I want to learn about the sea? They don't know what type of interdisciplinary study this is all about,'" said Assistant Dean of the College Sheila Spear.

According to Spear, most students who study away usually consider study abroad programs. "People who are thinking about something different don't think enough about Mystic."

The Mystic program is supervised by its creator, Williams Professor of History Benjamin Labaree. "Williams has a couple of other things that juniors can do, [which] most of the other colleges don't," he said, referring to the junior advisor system, the Williams-Oxford Program, and other study abroad opportunities.

Rising and falling interest Labaree also said that shifting student interests and concerns may be responsible for declining enrollment. "I think also what happens over the years is a rising and falling interest in environmental studies."

The program offers Williams courses taught by Williams faculty, but is open to applicants from any accredited, four-year institution. Schools participating in the past have included Amherst, Dartmouth and Wellesley.

Each semester, 21 students from the various schools take four academic courses in different subjects related to the sea—including literature, maritime history, and oceanography. The students live together cooperatively in houses close to the Mystic Seaport Museum grounds. Funding for this program is provided for entirely by an endowment from the Mystic Seaport Museum and by student tuition.

My other comment would be on the Republicans' comments about Dukakis' "lack of experience." I have one question for them: how much experience did Governor Reagan have in 1967?

I would suggest voting for Dukakis in 1988, as it is a vote for some common sense about national security, instead of one-jerk defense spending on badly new weapons systems. It's estimated that half the tanks the U.S. has in Europe are not battle ready because of a lack of spare parts. Bush, as his record shows, does not seem to be interested in this. Dukakis would fix it. Jon Howard '91

Protesters: ads cause image problems

by Ann Mantil

The three women who created a display called "Figures of Speech" in a Baxter Hall display case last Monday said they were trying to communicate the problems of how women are portrayed in advertising.

The women, who sat inside the case wearing sunglasses and bikinis made of magazine advertisements, said that advertising's ideal of faceless women with perfect bodies forced men and women to compare women's bodies to the ideal and react with disgust to bodies that deviated from the ideal. The women hid their faces to communicate the anonymity of women in advertising. "We were dressed up as figures of speech. We were a dramatic, illuminating image of what people do in their heads," said Cathy Seiser '88.

Seiser said she conceived the idea of the display by looking at magazine advertisements featuring women. "We're always laying magazines on ourselves. It's hard to help doing that because this world around us doesn't offer us other images to help us feel strong. By putting it on our bodies, it shows how different it is from us, the contrast between a real body and that," she said.

"People see exposed flesh. They're invariably women with perfect bodies...and they don't have faces. You see their backs, or their legs, or it's some cliche thing and they're wearing sunglasses," said Kristin Szarto '88, another of the women involved.

A lot of pain

"There's a lot of pain going on beneath that," Seiser said. "Women feel inadequate because they don't fit that image. People cease to be real. It's okay to do that to women, because we learn that from magazines."

Szarto, Seiser and the third demonstrator, Caroline Boyden '89, all said they were addressing a problem that exists at Williams, not just a general issue. "A lot of people here are bulimic and anorexic—there are body image problems," Seiser said.

"It's also control, having to have a grip on yourself. There's not only pressure to be a perfectionist in academics, but pressure to be a perfectionist about your body," Boyden said.

The reaction to the display was not entirely what they had expected. People remained in a semicircle of "dead space" around the case instead of coming closer to read what the women had written on their bodies.

Only two respondents They had left tubes of lipstick and eye pencils outside the case so that people could write on the glass, but only two did. One man wrote, "But it is wrong to find aesthetic beauty in the human figure."

We were dressed up as figures of speech. We were a dramatic, illuminating image of what people do in their heads.

"But it's finding beauty in just one human form," instead of all human forms," Seiser said. "It's hate because you can't match the beauty of the one form."

"How much energy and money do we put into remodeling ourselves? Altering yourself isn't bad—we altered ourselves by putting ourselves in there. But you need to see why. Is it because you'll shrivel up if your legs aren't smooth?"

Szarto responded to accusations that the display was "extreme" or "radical" with a story. "Two weeks ago a friend of mine's mother told her that a woman was raped on a Chicago train platform and no one did anything because they thought it was a couple of exhibitionists. That's why we're 'extreme'—look what you have to do to get people's attention!"

How did the demonstration in Baxter affect or influence you or your views on women's representation in the media?
Interviews and photos by Joel Issacson and Amy Kershaw

"I thought it was kind of crass, and there are many more important feminist issues. I thought a lot of people were turned off by it."—Mary Barron '92

"When I realized that it was real people in there, I had a lot of respect for them for doing it. They were bringing up a very important issue."—Louise Price '91

"It's a message that needs to be said, but the way they made it was too shocking for most people, so the message gets lost."—Jen Storey '89

"I'm aware of the problems with the representation of women in the media, but the way they approached the problem was so radically offensive that I saw it as counter-productive."—John Servin '89

"It was thought provoking. It really made me think about the issue of women in magazines and how it ignores their individuality and unfairly lumps them together."—Anissa Parekh '92

"That kind of radical measure generates more antagonism towards feminists than a more tactful measure would."—Jonathan Dailey '91

Log

continued on page 1

the new Log, we are at a stalemate. We don't have enough money and we can't sponsor anything new. We don't have the activities we want and we aren't fully satisfied," she said.

While the last graduating class was the last to remember the Log as a bar, Penner said it was too simplistic to assume that student patronage would pick up as soon as last year's seniors graduated.

"It is tempting to think that way, that it was the stigma that one could remember it the way it was. It's a much more complex problem; it is of inertia. People on this campus have certain habits and the Log hasn't been a habit since the drinking age went up. People stopped thinking of it as a place to go and relax. I don't think students won't go there because they won't get served. It's because they think that other people won't be there. We are trying to resist that inertia."

She added, "We do need the money. We are not going at full speed...and it's frustrating. The Log is the greatest underutilized resource on campus."

Blankenship and Council Treasurer Maryellen Sullivan '89 will meet this week with Penner, Lamarre and James Hodgkins of Dining Services, Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards will also be present. After the details of the proposal have been examined, the budget proposal will be formally submitted to the Council for approval.

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond" Williams '88

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, with proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and shoe and boot repair.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267 patagonia

Synchilla jacket, Men's

Women's

the Mountain Goat

"The Complete Outdoor Shop" Open 7 Days
130 Water St., Williamstown (413) 458-8448
Manchester Center, Vt. (802) 362-5189

MORE THAN A HAIRCUT

We're not just another salon. We're a fashion video "headlines" Magazine and a constant flow of Essentials and Sun Exposure. And we're Systems! And Sebastian! The finest haircare anywhere, with products like ColorGel, Modeling Mud, Shown and ColorShampoo. We're much more than a haircut. We're a lifestyle.

THE CLIP SHOP

40 SPRING STREET WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-8448
122 NORTH STREET PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9575
120 NORTH STREET BERNHARTON, VT. (802) 442-9800
We're Sebastian Artistic Center

Campus ACLU chapters prosper in the wake of Bush's attacks

College Press Service—George Bush may be the best recruiter the American Civil Liberties Union ever had for campus chapters.

ACLU campus coordinators say the Republican presidential candidate's attacks on their group have increased their visibility, and that's resulted in increased membership in recent weeks.

Harvard Law School students "have shown an awful lot of interest in becoming card-carrying members of the ACLU," said Warren Asher of the Harvard Law School Civil Liberties Union. "People who always intended to join now do."

About 100 students, for example, attended an ACLU speaking event at the University of Maryland last week, a 100 percent increase over previous events. "If anything, his attacks helped," said Mindy Kaiden of American University's ACLU chapter.

"We've had a substantial increase in requests for information about membership," Lisa Heatie of the ACLU's New York office reports.

Bush persistently has attacked Democratic opponent Michael Dukakis for being a "hard-carrying member of the ACLU," a group Bush characterizes as too left-wing for most Americans.

Dukakis joined the ACLU as a student at Swarthmore College, in part because he was angered by Sen. Joseph McCarthy's mid-1950s hunt for liberals, was "our greatest membership recruiter," Dukakis told an interviewer last May.

Thirty years later, ironically enough, Bush's cries against Dukakis as a "hard-carrying member of the ACLU" have done the same thing on campuses.

There's a smell of McCarthyism about these kind of attacks, "ACLU Executive Director Ira Glasser said. The ACLU—which says it's a nonpartisan, non-ideological organization devoted to defending the Constitution and the Bill of Rights—is fighting back.

An advertising campaign, featuring actors Michael Tucker and Jill Eikenberry of "L.A. Law" and Burt Lancaster, will soon be waged to battle what the ACLU calls misrepresentations by the Bush campaign.

But on many campuses, such a campaign would be a waste of time. "We have about 40 or 50 new members this year," said Chris Langone of Cornell ACLU. "I don't know how many others joined because of Bush, but that's our largest group in years. Usually we have about 20 or 30."

"We just got through our activities fair, and we had the highest number of people expressing interest ever sign up. About 125 signed up. Usually it's half that," Harvard's Asher said.

At Harvard, some students feared their association with the ACLU would later hurt their chances for government careers, especially if Bush wins. All I can tell them is to do what their conscience tells them to do," Asher said.

The ACLU, which has defended radicals from the Communist Party to the Nazi Party and the Black Panthers to the Ku Klux Klan, aims to ensure constitutional rights are maintained, Langone said. At the national level, the ACLU has aided conservatives including Lt. Col. Oliver North, he added. Cornell's ACLU, in fact, is defending its loudest critics, the College Republicans, whose members were denied entrance to a Kitty Dukakis speech in September. "We're investigating this as political discrimination against Republicans," Langone explained. "Even though Bush attacks us, we're defending him."

Students to walk a mile for a Camel if cigarette sale bans approved

College Press Service—Students at the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire and Metropolitan State College, a commuter college in Denver, may have to walk a mile for a Camel, a Marlboro or a Kool if proposed bans on campus cigarette sales are approved.

Smokers at Yale, moreover, may find themselves puffing outside this fall if state-mandated restrictions banning smoking from some university buildings are extended to dormitories.

The tougher measure and banning of cigarette machines suggest that many colleges, like shopping malls, airports, office buildings and other public places, also seem to be tightening their anti-smoking rules this fall.

"It's simply a matter of health," said Elliot Garb, assistant chancellor for student affairs at Wisconsin-Eau Claire, which will most likely remove

"I'm not asking people not to smoke. I'm saying I don't want to be providing cigarettes."

cigarette vending machines from campus. "The university is just reinforcing what the surgeon general has already said about smoking."

In March, Stanford even went as far as banning smoking outdoors when reserved seating is provided for events. Nassau Community College in New York removed cigarette vending machines from campus two years ago.

At Yale, Metro State and Wisconsin-Eau Claire, however, resistance to butt bans remains strong.

"If I do not have sex, I do not have the right to ban the sales of condoms," said Metro State student legislator Patricia Carris during a campus debate. "We can not set a precedent that says: 'If I don't like something then I should ban it.'"

At Yale, Metro State and Wisconsin-Eau Claire, however, resistance to butt bans remains strong.

"If I do not have sex, I do not have the right to ban the sales of condoms," said Metro State student legislator Patricia Carris during a campus debate. "We can not set a precedent that says: 'If I don't like something then I should ban it.'"

"I'm 45 years old, and I find it appalling that things are being decided for me," echoed student trustee Lois Kaness.

Nevertheless, the Metro State student

"If I do not have sex, I do not have the right to ban the sales of condoms" government endorsed the ban. Wisconsin-Eau Claire officials, too, say the proposal to remove cigarette vending machines will most likely be approved.

Opposition to smoking restrictions remains haphazard at best at Yale, but it doesn't mean smokers like the idea. "It makes the college a more foreign place," said student smoker Keon Wilson. "If you have to watch what you're doing so carefully."

Windham Hill Recording Artist
MICHAEL HEDGES
IN CONCERT
... moves from exquisite lyrical melody to rhythms which virtually explode out of his guitar! ...
Saturday, October 22 8 pm
Berkshire Performing Arts Center
40 Kemble Street, Lenox, MA
$18.00 - $15.00 - $12.00
Advance Sales - Viso - MasterCard
413-637-4718

TGL boasts a high volume of satisfied customers.
Loyal photographers travel great distances for our complete color and Black-and-White film processing services.
Why? Because we get the flesh tones right. And the scales and the fur.
Photocolor Building
4 Water Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267-3113
"Make sure the flesh tones are right."

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
110 N. Main St., Williamstown, Mass. 01267
Add-on Shop
All Athletic Equipment
Custom Printed T-Shirts
Everything for Men & Women
Recreation Sales & Service
Class Rings
Gifts
Government Homes!
$1.00 (U Repair) Foreclosures,
Tax Delinquent Property.
Now Selling. This area! Call
(Refundable) 1-518-459-3546
Ext. 14491AB for listings.

The Corporate Finance Department of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.
Incorporated invites interested members of
The Class of 1989
to discuss investment banking and our Financial Analyst Program
Monday October 24, 1988
7:00 p.m.
Office of Career Counseling
Stetson Hall

You are invited to attend a Presentation on Investment and Merchant Banking
7:00 p.m., Wednesday, October 19
The Office of Career Counseling library
All undergraduates are invited to join
Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.
Corporate Finance Professionals including
Sam Fortenbaugh '86 Carolyn Roska '87
John Hund '87 Scott Smith '87
Reception to follow
Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc.

The brilliant and bizarre Bobs' throats thrill

by Bridget Baird

The Bobs and their unique brand of "Nu-wave A-cappella music" deliver not just a musical concert, but an experience equivalent to hanging gliding: thrill, excitement, and the feeling that the event is quickly passing you by, and that a lot of it is going over your head.

The Bobs' audience, when they performed at the Clark Art Institute last week, was comprised mostly of non-college students, who did not quite know how to react to this entourage of three men and one woman, all of whom seem to have been blessed with the middle name "Bob." But once the audience relaxed, they reacted like all of the veteran Bobs fans sitting in the first two rows, who were gestulating madly throughout the concert.

The Bobs then embarked on a group of songs dubbed "The Laundry Cycle." Richard Bob Greene, the most amazing bass in the Western hemisphere, started it off with "Pounded on a rock." This was followed by a Latin influenced song called "Pleasant in a Polo Shirt," which contains the line, "A non-aligned nation can't afford to buy laundry." No chance for dignity in our laundry! The third part of the cycle told the story of a man and a woman who meet in a laundromat, when the man asks the woman, "Why don't we share a load?" Their first set then ended with two songs from their second album, My, I'm Large: "Johnny's Room" and "Bulky Gunnar Bob Madsen, the lead singer of this piece seemed somewhat out of it, and as he crooned, "My friends all tell me I'm abnormal. I feel I had to agree with his friends, I wasn't going to doubt the individuality of someone who wears beauty parlor hair dryers to achieve inner peace."

Rhythm, two upbeat songs typical to their music-light harmonies and strange themes.

After a short intermission, they

After a more normal tune (later revealed to have been written by someone else), they began their next song "Cowboy Lips," about a guy who couldn't become a real cowboy able to "stomach shots of rye" because he didn't have cowboy lips.

They then launched into a one-of-a-kind cover of the Beatles' "You Can't Do That" and an original, "My Husband was a Weatherman," with Janie Bob Scott on lead vocals. It seems this weatherman would predict every move she made, forcing her to leave because she "didn't want to know how every move of her life would go."

The Bobs then embarked on a group of songs dubbed "The Laundry Cycle." Richard Bob Greene, the most amazing bass in the Western hemisphere, started it off with "Pounded on a rock." This was followed by a Latin influenced song called "Pleasant in a Polo Shirt," which contains the line, "A non-aligned nation can't afford to buy laundry." No chance for dignity in our laundry! The third part of the cycle told the story of a man and a woman who meet in a laundromat, when the man asks the woman, "Why don't we share a load?" Their first set then ended with two songs from their second album, My, I'm Large: "Johnny's Room" and "Bulky as a man who wants to be Tarzan and make "Banana Love." The next two songs, "Signs on the Line" featuring Janie Bob, and "Santa Ana Winds," featuring Matthew Bob Still, also from their most recent album, were as captivating off-center as the previous ones.

popped back on stage and threw two food songs (figuratively speaking) at the audience, which were taken from their latest album, Songs for Tanager.

Following this edible motif, they next sang a song entitled "Banana Love" featuring Gunnar Bob Tyler breathes life into "Lessons"

by Travis Pienzo

Breathing Lessons
by Anne Tyler
327 pages, $18.95, Knopf

"Sifting through these layers of being-on-the-verge-of-collapse while Ira stood behind her, Maggie had a sudden view of her life as circular. It forever repeated itself, and it was entirely lacking in hope." These sentiments, taken from Anne Tyler's new novel, could describe the lives of all of her literary families, who constantly fall into the same interrelational and emotional traps. The only difference is that her characters ultimately always have hope, and this is what makes them engaging and real.

She had worried she wouldn't recognize Fiona, having caught sight of her only once. But she knew her right off—the long fair hair, the pale face with nothing yet written upon it. She wore jeans and a bright, shrill-pink T-shirt. As it happened, Maggie had a prejudice against shrill-pink. She thought it was lower class. (Oh, how strange it was to remember now that she had once viewed Fiona as lower class.) She had imagined there was something cheap and glib about her; she had mistrusted the bland pallor of her face, and she had completed. Pure narrow-mindedness! Maggie could admit that now, having come to see Fiona's good points.)

Books

Tyler is a master of bringing ordinary people, especially citizens of and around Baltimore, into full relief, treating their foibles, assets, and personal tragedies with an honesty that always creates the proper mixture of fulfillment and nostalgia that make up most people's lives.

Her gift for characterization has always been her strong point, and while her last two books, The Accidental Tourist and now Breathing Lessons have dealt with a very limited plot, the characters in them are so rich that they manage to keep the story alive. Breathing Lessons takes her typical subject of a family, broken in some way, and its members' mostly futile attempts to reunite themselves.

The plot spans one day in the life of Maggie and Ira Moran, a middle-aged

Anne Tyler

Rasputin's Music Box

by Jon Bank

Billy Bragg, Worker's Playtime

In these, the dark days of Rattle and Hum, with the general air of self-importance and political righteousness that most rockers seem to be giving themselves (ie. Bruce, Bono, Sting, Gabriel—a gang of four perhaps?), it is refreshing to see someone as talented and as politically correct as Billy Bragg admit, "I hate the asshole I've become." This mix of self-deprecating humor and political cynicism nicely counterpoints the love songs that also make up Bragg's outstanding fourth U.S. release, Worker's Playtime.

For the uninitiated, Bragg has made a major name for himself in the alternative market and college radio for about six years or so, creating a unique one-man show of bitter electric folk music with a biting political message. An ardent supporter of British unions and organizer of the consortium of European socialist rock bands, Red Wedge, Bragg's politics have extended to these shores with his efforts to encourage voter registration this year. At disappointed. Simple open chord progressions and Bragg's thick East end accent provide an edge and soulfulness to the album that no amount of production can take away.

Bragg's phenomenal lyrical style remains very much intact on this album with such classic lines as "I just don't know what to be done! I wonder sometimes how did Dad meet Mum? And how did they conceive of me?" and "The laws of gravity are very, very strict/and you're just bending them for your own benefit." The album's current single, "Waiting for the Great Leap Forward," is a cynical commentary on leftist political movements and their engineers' ulterior motives. "One leap forward, two leaps back/ will pollinate me in the sack... Join the struggle while you may! The Revolution is a T-shirt away!" It seems that his time on the 60s-like pop song on "She's Got a New Spell," to a cappella on "Tender Comrade" to a gather-the-masses-together sing a song, "Waiting for the Great Leap Forward." Despite the amount of production, the album does not lose the characteristic Billy Bragg sound and longtime fans will not be comes off much harsher, and much better than almost any of his previous politicizing.

Bragg makes no pretenses towards changing the world or that his word is any more valuable because he is musician, the simple fact is that politics are an integral part of his art in a way that is not true for Bruce, Bono and pals. Bragg is brutally honest about his politics and himself and plays a damn good guitar to boot. Worker's Playtime will satisfy those on any side of the political spectrum. More importantly, the album as a whole is an outstanding work, and with the exception of the Sugarbushes' debut album, is probably the best major label L.P. of this year.

The Bobs: (L. to R.) Gunnar Bob Madsen, Richard Bob Greene, Matthew Bob Still, Janie Bob Scott

After another song sung by Richard Bob, they had a group huddle and decided to honor a request for "Welcome to my Fog." This was followed by two favorites, "Trash," made popular by a certain female a-cappella group at Williams, and "Psycho Killer." The third verse of this Talking Heads song was sung by Gunnar Bob as a lounge singer. For their encore, they performed the song, "Let the Little Girl Dance," which showed their ability to be polished without strange humor. Given the choice, I prefer bizarreness.

verse of this Talking Heads song was sung by Gunnar Bob as a lounge singer. For their encore, they performed the song, "Let the Little Girl Dance," which showed their ability to be polished without strange humor. Given the choice, I prefer bizarreness.

Alien Nation: Frighteningly Bad

by L.M. Lum

Here's the scene: an alien race named Slugs landed on earth in 1988, and were immediately put into quarantine. They were originally bred as a slave race on their home planet, and possess superintelligence and strength. The year is now 1991 and after 3 years in captivity, they have been released and allowed to mingle with earthlings. But they are not welcomed with open arms into normal culture, and many of the "newcomers" retreat to Los Angeles ghettos and semi-underground existence. This is the premise of Alien Nation—a high concept from hell. What develops from it is a bland and predictable action picture steeped in racist and sexist doctrines that tries to pass itself off as egalitarian in spirit.

When the movie opens with a shooting by two alien thugs in a grocery store, you start thinking, "Oh, yeah, this is gonna be cool. The aliens are all gonna be evil and mankind is gonna like get in a giant battle with them, fighting for control of the world, and half of L.A.'s gonna get killed in this whole big like epic thing."

Movies

But within the next ten minutes, these high hopes are crushed, and you realize that Alien Nation is a wimpy formula cop/paction picture. A divorced veteran (James Caan) is assigned a gorky rookie when his partner of twenty years or so is killed in the opening gun fight. Only this time the rookie is a Slug named Sam Francisco (Mandy Patinkin). The veteran detective (his name is not important, you've even heard a million times before) hates Slugs because one killed his partner, so he tells

Women are dismissed in this film. Only two are really featured at all, one being a dialogue-less alien wife and mother, and the other being a dancer, sex object girlfriend of an alien gangster. Alien Nation tries to parallel the fight for Black equality and that of the Slugs, but falls into numerous stereotypical potholes.

Alien Nation takes its cues from and tries to recapture the spirit of movies like Robocop and The Terminator, but fails. Caan and Patinkin, two normally fine actors, are really slumming it here. Maybe they needed the money. But heck, I would have clipped in a few dollars if this waste of celluloid could have been topped. As that little girl in the Kraft Macaroni ads would say, "It's the cheesiest!"

But within the next ten minutes, these high hopes are crushed, and you realize that Alien Nation is a wimpy formula cop/paction picture. A divorced veteran (James Caan) is assigned a gorky rookie when his partner of twenty years or so is killed in the opening gun fight. Only this time the rookie is a Slug named Sam Francisco (Mandy Patinkin). The veteran detective (his name is not important, you've even heard a million times before) hates Slugs because one killed his partner, so he tells

Reel Vintage Feature: Exterminating Angel

by Brad Gendell

Bunuel made "Exterminating Angel" ("Un Angel Exterminador") in 1962, at the height of his success in the realm of social satires. Though often overshadowed by his more famous "Discreet Lady," "Exterminating Angel" is a beautiful, surreal, and sophisticated and profound film. It deals with isolation and has been compared by Richard Schickel to Beckett's "Waiting for Godot" and by Michael Extance to Sartre's "No Exit."

The plot is quite familiar: an evening of merry-making ends for a group of wealthy bourgeois types when they become shipwrecked; as they fight for survival for the first time in their lives, they turn savage. The difference in "Exterminating Angel" is that the "shipwreck" occurs in a mansion's drawing room where the guests discover that for some unknown reason they cannot leave. Bunuel takes a traditional adventure genre and turns it into social satire by replacing the literal shipwreck or plane crash with a boring dinner party and the usual hunting and

Arts

The Bobs: (L. to R.) Gunnar Bob Madsen, Richard Bob Greene, Matthew Bob Still, Janie Bob Scott

After another song sung by Richard Bob, they had a group huddle and decided to honor a request for "Welcome to my Fog." This was followed by two favorites, "Trash," made popular by a certain female a-cappella group at Williams, and "Psycho Killer." The third verse of this Talking Heads song was sung by Gunnar Bob as a lounge singer. For their encore, they performed the song, "Let the Little Girl Dance," which showed their ability to be polished without strange humor. Given the choice, I prefer bizarreness.

verse of this Talking Heads song was sung by Gunnar Bob as a lounge singer. For their encore, they performed the song, "Let the Little Girl Dance," which showed their ability to be polished without strange humor. Given the choice, I prefer bizarreness.

Alien Nation: Frighteningly Bad

by L.M. Lum

Here's the scene: an alien race named Slugs landed on earth in 1988, and were immediately put into quarantine. They were originally bred as a slave race on their home planet, and possess superintelligence and strength. The year is now 1991 and after 3 years in captivity, they have been released and allowed to mingle with earthlings. But they are not welcomed with open arms into normal culture, and many of the "newcomers" retreat to Los Angeles ghettos and semi-underground existence. This is the premise of Alien Nation—a high concept from hell. What develops from it is a bland and predictable action picture steeped in racist and sexist doctrines that tries to pass itself off as egalitarian in spirit.

When the movie opens with a shooting by two alien thugs in a grocery store, you start thinking, "Oh, yeah, this is gonna be cool. The aliens are all gonna be evil and mankind is gonna like get in a giant battle with them, fighting for control of the world, and half of L.A.'s gonna get killed in this whole big like epic thing."

Movies

But within the next ten minutes, these high hopes are crushed, and you realize that Alien Nation is a wimpy formula cop/paction picture. A divorced veteran (James Caan) is assigned a gorky rookie when his partner of twenty years or so is killed in the opening gun fight. Only this time the rookie is a Slug named Sam Francisco (Mandy Patinkin). The veteran detective (his name is not important, you've even heard a million times before) hates Slugs because one killed his partner, so he tells

Women are dismissed in this film. Only two are really featured at all, one being a dialogue-less alien wife and mother, and the other being a dancer, sex object girlfriend of an alien gangster. Alien Nation tries to parallel the fight for Black equality and that of the Slugs, but falls into numerous stereotypical potholes.

Alien Nation takes its cues from and tries to recapture the spirit of movies like Robocop and The Terminator, but fails. Caan and Patinkin, two normally fine actors, are really slumming it here. Maybe they needed the money. But heck, I would have clipped in a few dollars if this waste of celluloid could have been topped. As that little girl in the Kraft Macaroni ads would say, "It's the cheesiest!"

But within the next ten minutes, these high hopes are crushed, and you realize that Alien Nation is a wimpy formula cop/paction picture. A divorced veteran (James Caan) is assigned a gorky rookie when his partner of twenty years or so is killed in the opening gun fight. Only this time the rookie is a Slug named Sam Francisco (Mandy Patinkin). The veteran detective (his name is not important, you've even heard a million times before) hates Slugs because one killed his partner, so he tells

Reel Vintage Feature: Exterminating Angel

by Brad Gendell

Bunuel made "Exterminating Angel" ("Un Angel Exterminador") in 1962, at the height of his success in the realm of social satires. Though often overshadowed by his more famous "Discreet Lady," "Exterminating Angel" is a beautiful, surreal, and sophisticated and profound film. It deals with isolation and has been compared by Richard Schickel to Beckett's "Waiting for Godot" and by Michael Extance to Sartre's "No Exit."

The plot is quite familiar: an evening of merry-making ends for a group of wealthy bourgeois types when they become shipwrecked; as they fight for survival for the first time in their lives, they turn savage. The difference in "Exterminating Angel" is that the "shipwreck" occurs in a mansion's drawing room where the guests discover that for some unknown reason they cannot leave. Bunuel takes a traditional adventure genre and turns it into social satire by replacing the literal shipwreck or plane crash with a boring dinner party and the usual hunting and

Dump fossil fuels, Moomaw testifies

Both Reed and Edwards agreed that the meeting went very well. Reed said, "It was a good first meeting for the Board for the year."

Combatting ozone depletion Moomaw had previously worked for Congress in the mid-1970's, also for the

This summer, Senator Timothy Worth of Colorado, who was in the process of framing legislation address-

The question of the future role of nuclear power, which is a renewable energy source, arose during the hearings. "One of the great arguments to resurrect nuclear power is because it addresses the greenhouse effect," Moomaw said.

Although such legislation and research work indicate a positive step toward addressing the ozone issue, Moomaw said, "We're just at the beginning of realizing how serious this problem is, and how it touches every aspect of society."

Downstage is used by Cap and Bells, a student-organized theatrical group. "It is a place where students can try out the real thing, not on paper," Catalano said.

Five classrooms, as well as the language laboratory, will be hooked up for guage lab

Three members of the Wesleyan Spirits were arrested and charged with trespassing after they were allegedly found with lighted candles in a graveyard as part of their initiation ceremony by Middletown police. According to one of the students charged, Jim Desmond, the ceremony was to have new members of the Wesleyan candle-slinging group follow criers to different locations around

Feminists stir up controversy

Do you have a girlfriend who apologizes for her thighs in bed? Once they start talking about it, they stop to think," Salser said.

If you answered "Yes" to at least one of these, we want you to write for the Record Arts film staff. Call 597-2289 for more information.

Punch Line	1:25	4:10	7:00	9:40
Die Hard	12:45	3:40	6:30	9:30
Who Framed Roger Rabbit	1:00	3:30	6:50	9:15
The Untouchables	1:15	4:00	7:25	9:50

The Record is looking for someone with a car and Tuesday afternoons free to deliver on campus and in Williamstown for $25 a week. If you are interested, call 597-2289 or 597-2872.

Time: 10:00 a.m. and 11:00 a.m.
Place: see Career Center

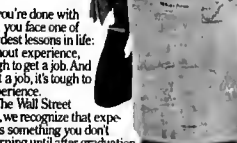

Harvard Business School is committed to the principle of equal educational opportunity.

Just as in last week's playoffs, Williams and BC proved so well that two periods of overtime play were needed to decide the contest. The WWRFC demonstrated excellent team play, but was denied victory by a Boston score in the

The two fumbles by the special teams point up a disturbing trend the squad has showed in the past two games. Last week against Trinity the Ephs fumbled the ball seven times and lost four of

city _____ state _____ zip _____
If you would like information on future programs give permanent address below _____

Maybe there is

After you're done with school, you face one of the hardest lessons in life: Without experience, it's tough to get a job. And without a job, it's tough to get experience.

The Wall Street Journal recognizes that experience is something you don't start earning until after graduation.

But while you're waiting, we can give you a head start by providing some of the same competitive advantages that experience brings.

For instance, our wide-ranging career coverage gives you a clearer understanding of the whole complex world of business.

Our tightly focused feature reports prepare you for your more specific ambitions—whether in management, accounting, finance, technology, marketing or small businesses.

And our in-depth analyses helps you formulate your ideas in a sharper and more persuasive way.

Call 800-257-1202. Ext. 1066 or mail the coupon—and start your subscription to The Wall Street Journal at student savings of up to $48 off the regular subscription price.

That's a pretty generous offer. Especially when you consider what it actually represents: A tuition for the real world.

To subscribe, call 800-257-1202. Ext. 1066 toll-free.

Or mail in: The Wall Street Journal, Attn: Student Discount
 1200 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10020
 I would like to order the Wall Street Journal for $66 a year (a 50% discount off the regular subscription price of $132 a year). Please send me a 30-day money-back guarantee.

Name _____
 Address _____
 City _____ State _____ Zip _____

College/University _____
 Address _____
 City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Student ID # _____
 Major _____
 Expected graduation date _____

The Wall Street Journal
"The daily drama of the American dream" (1990)

1% Pennsylvania: call 800-257-2330. Ext. 1066
 ©1990 The Wall Street Journal Company, Inc.

Council Travel

DON'T WAIT!
BOOK NOW FOR
THE HOLIDAYS!

From London One way

LONDON	189
PARIS	219
ROME	269
	round trip
CARACAS	320
ST. THOMAS	260
HONGKONG	739

Taxes not included.

ALSO: Work-Study Abroad, Language Courses, Int'l Student ID, Youth Hostel Passes.

EURAIL Passes (issued on the spot)!

Call for the FREE CIEE Student Travel Catalog!

413-256-1261

AMHERST
79 So. Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002

Hopfenperle bottles $14.99/case + deposit
Grolsch bottles $15.49/case + deposit
St. Pauli cans $15.99/case + deposit
$2.00 discount with this ad

GIFTS

the Cottage

CLOTHING

CLOTHING * JEWELRY
POSTERS * CARDS
BEDSPREADS * RUGS
BASKETS

South Street
Pittsfield

OPEN 7 DAYS

Water Street
Williamstown

THIS MBA PROGRAM COULD HAVE YOU IN RUINS.

If you're going to pursue an MBA that gives you "real world" experience, consider a program that really offers you the world.

Babson MBA students have a unique opportunity to work in other countries, with some of the world's leading business organizations. (Audi AG, the Australian Trade Commission, Lego A/S, and Union Bank of Switzerland to name just a few.)

This special internship program is part of an overall concentration in international business that's available at Babson. And it could prove to be invaluable experience for your career.

Because today, corporations everywhere are taking a global point-of-view. For more information about the Babson International MBA Program, just mail the coupon, or call us at (617) 239-4317.

INTERNATIONAL MBA PROGRAM

Graduate Admissions Office
Nichols Babson College
Wellesley, MA 02157

I am interested in the Babson International MBA Program. Please send me a catalog and an application form.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____

Zip _____ Phone _____

BABSON COLLEGE
EXECUTIVE THINKING

Volleyball clinches Little Three tournament

On Saturday afternoon, the women's volleyball team won two more matches, clinching its record to an imposing 19-2. The great record is in itself impressive, but more important is the fact that the two wins came in a tournament in Middletown, Connecticut against Wesleyan and Amherst, meaning that the squad captured the Little Three Title.

Not only did the Ephs women score points in the world of sports, but they made quite a showing in the world of fashion as well. Sporting distinctly professional new uniforms, the Williams squad made it clear they were there to play.

The first contest of the day matched the Ephs against an improved Amherst squad with a 13-8 record. There was still room for improvement, though, as Williams won the first game 15-7. The Jeffs did come on to squeak by in the second frame 15-12.

The power-packed Eph lineup was just too much for the Lady Jeffs, though, and Williams took the decisive game 15-11.

Walloping Wesleyan

The second match carried with it an awesome consequence. This was the match that would decide the Little Three Championship. This contest pitted Williams against Wesleyan, a squad which had earlier defeated Amherst and figured to be tough, but the smart money was riding on the women from the Purple Valley. The insidious serving of the Cardinals brought them into early lead, but the warrior spirit of the Williams front row would not be denied.

Led by Holly Hedeman '92 (6 kills, 4 aces) and Marianne Landa '90 (5 kills, 2 aces), the Williams front line devastated the weaker Wesleyan women. Also figuring in the assault were setter Shelley Whelton '90 and middle blocker Kathy McConnell '90. Winning by two points in the first game, Williams stole victory from the beaks of the Cardinals.

The second game was no contest. Williams was merciless with its serves, striking again and again for uncontested points. Aces were served by Laurie Hartsoe '91, Deirdre Papalardo '91, Marianne Landa '90, and the Hedeman sisters. The final score stood at 15-5.

Coach Roberts credited her team's serving and strong net play in the tournament, and also the big boost the team received by the return of senior co-captain Nancy Hedeman from a long layoff due to an ankle sprain. This week the squad hosts the Williams Invitational which includes defending champion Bates (ranked second in New England).

Women's soccer downs Union and Amherst

by Kerr Houston

The women's soccer team continued to play solid soccer last week, winning a pair of games as they prepared for what coach Lisa Melendy termed "the toughest part of our season." Union was the first victim, falling 3-1, while the Amherst Lady Jeffs put up a stiffer fight but still fell 1-0.

On Tuesday the Ephs women climbed into the bus and traveled to Schenectady, New York to face the Dutchwomen of Union, who despite a poor 1988 campaign, hoped to tarnish the Ephs women's season with an upset victory. Williams quickly dismantled any hopes of an upset that Union may have harbored, though, as captain midfielder Lori Schaen '89 beat a duo of Union defenders only two minutes into the contest, and deposited the ball in the back of the nets for a 1-0 Williams lead.

Union tied the match several minutes later, but near the end of the first period freshman phenom Liz Nasser carried the ball down the left side, leaving several opponents in her wake, and followed her own rebound to extend her scoring streak to four games. Nasser added an insurance goal, her team-leading sixth, in the second half, and Williams left Schenectady with a four-game unbeaten streak intact.

Next up for the Ephs was arch-rival Amherst. Coach Melendy noted that the Lord Jeffs "are struggling, but they're always up for us. Winning the Little Three could be the highlight of their season." Williams responded to the challenge with a superior performance that Melendy termed "our best showing to date."

The Ephs outshot the Jeffs 20-6, and Schaen tallied her fifth goal of the year with an assist from junior Laia Grandison, as Williams squeaked by with a 1-0 victory. The defense once again turned in a fine performance, as keeper Becca Borden '92 recorded her fourth shutout of the year, and sweeper Carin Cole '91 and stopper Jen Flansky '92 provided solid play.

The Ephs women continue their New England tour with two important road matches in the coming week. On Tuesday they visit Connecticut, ranked fourth in New England in the last poll, and then on Saturday they travel to Tufts, who is ranked one notch ahead of Williams at seventh. The Ephs do not return home until their season finale, an October 29 matchup against Vassar. Melendy noted the importance of these games, speculating that "if we can win two of our last four games, I think there will be a spot for us [in post-season play]."

Male Harriers place sixth at NESCAC

by Steve Brody

The men's cross-country team competed in the NESCAC Championships Saturday at Hamilton College in New York. The Continentals, taking advantage of their home course, ran to an impressive victory, finishing with 58 points to easily outdistance second place Colby (80). Williams finished the meet in sixth place with 118 points, six points back of Wesleyan in fifth. Tufts captured third (89) and Bates fourth (91), while seventh place Amherst was well behind the Ephs with 172.

The race was won by Amherst senior Tom Evans in 28:19 over the 5.3 mile course, just nine seconds off the course record. It was the only bright spot of the day for the Lord Jeffs, however, as their lack of depth hurt them in the large meet.

Beltz first for Ephs

The top finisher for Williams was Mare Beltz '91. Beltz made a surge to the front pack just before the mile mark, and settled in among the leaders for the next four miles. He found himself in eighth place with just over 400 meters to go, but then made his move toward the finish. Opening up his stride, Beltz cruised past Hamilton's Brian Vaughan, and then set his sights on Richard Cook of Colby. Beltz pulled even with Cook just before the two runners lunged across the finish line. It was Beltz who got his body across first, clipping Cook's shoulder as he went by him, to finish sixth in 28:30.

Following Beltz for the Ephs was senior captain Gil McCabe. McCabe held back during the first mile, then made a strong charge through the rest of the race to finish 20th with a time of 29:00. Eight seconds behind him in 26th was Nate McVey-Finney '90, running his best race of the season, and showing that he is ready for top performances in the upcoming Little 3 and New England regional meets.

Schoolwork takes toll

Dylan Cooper '91 was the fourth finisher for Williams, 31st in 29:21. It was a somewhat disappointing finish for Cooper, who was 19th at the NESCAC meet as a freshman. "I've had a lot of work this past week," Cooper said, "and I think the lack of sleep got to me today. The next couple weeks should be more relaxed, though, and I'm looking forward to better performances at the end of the season."

Finishing the scoring for Williams was freshman Bill McKinley, who was nine seconds behind Cooper and finished in 35th place despite falling twice on the wet course. "That's the last time I wear these shoes on a wet course," he said, referring to his Gel racing flats, which are better suited for road races.

Williams now looks toward the Little Three Championships, to be held October 29 at Amherst. There, the Ephs expect a close battle with Wesleyan for the title that they have won in seventeen of the past nineteen years. Before that, though, they face MIT and Tufts in a home meet Saturday.

Sports Spotlight

The tennis, field hockey, and volleyball teams all won Little Three Titles during last week, starting Williams off with a perfect record in Little Three competition. Congratulations!

Anne Platt '91 led the women's cross country team to its first-ever NESCAC meet victory. Platt finished seventh overall, earning a spot on the NESCAC Honor Roll.

Eric Moe '89 and Jerry Procanik '92 also earned league honors after the football team's tough loss last week against Trinity. Moe, who nabbed three interceptions in the game, earned NESCAC Defensive Player of the Week and ECAC Honor Roll honors, while Procanik, who rushed for 117 yards and two touchdowns, was named NESCAC Rookie of the Week and ECAC Co-Rookie of the Week.

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.

This week's recipient is freshman Hilary Cairns, who came back from down 2-5 to the third set against Amherst's senior captain to win the set and match in the tennis team's 5-4 victory over Amherst. Cairns later paired with Beth Laxson to win a three-set doubles victory in the match which secured the Little Three Crown for the team.

this Bud's for you!

BUD ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Cairns' comeback key to Little Three victory

by Julie Jacobson and Mary Kipp

The second half of the Little Three crown came together this weekend for the tennis team, as the squad followed an earlier season victory over Wesleyan with Saturday's 5-4 victory against the Lady Jeffs of Amherst. The win upheld the team's record to an impressive 7-2.

While number two player Hilary Cairns '92 downed her opponent 6-7, 7-5, 7-5 in a thrilling match, captain Missy Crouchley '89 breezed by her number three opponent in straight sets. Beth Laxson '91 evened out the singles tally at three apiece with her 7-5, 7-5 triumph at number five.

The Lady Jeffs took three singles victories in three close matches. Amy Davidson (number one), Katherine Stearns (four), and Lisa Brayton (six) felt to their Lady Jeff foes in competitive matches, with both Davidson and Stearns losing in the third set.

Earlier last week, the Ephs trounced Union without dropping a match, 9-0. This week, the squad will face some of its toughest competitors, as they play at Skidmore today and at Tufts on Saturday.

Deadlock decided by doubles

With a 3-3 deadlock carried over from the singles, the pressure was on the doubles to clinch the match. The number one team of Davidson and Crouchley came through with a key win, 7-5, 6-

WIN $$$- ENTER THE QUIZ

- 1) Who has the highest winning percentage among active NCAA Division I football coaches (100 wins minimum)?
- 2) Who holds the NFL career record for most fumbles?
- 3) When was the last time (before Saturday) that Williams played Bates in football?
- 4) The number-one ranked Miami Hurricanes lost their first football game on Saturday--to whom did they lose?

Last week's answers--1) Columbia beat Princeton; 2) Jay Howell had pine tar in his glove; 3) Robin Owens is divorcing Mike Tyson; 4) Sal Maglie, "The Barber," was famous for giving batters a close shave.

Send your answers to Marc McDermott or Ted Hobart or SU 2817, or call the Record Office on Sunday (2400) before 5 PM. Last week's winner, Yen-Ha Le, wins a $15 gift certificate to Goff's Sports. Congratulations, Yen-Ha!

SKI SALE
SAVE 20-50%
NOW THRU OCTOBER 22

Goff's Sports, Inc.

(413) 458-3805
15 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Faunae Business

BY NANCY NICHOLSON JOLINE/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maltese

- | | |
|--|--|
| ACROSS 1 Ornamental staid 6 Betel palm 11 Designates one 15 Palmer Benjamin 19 More running 30 Ancient Greek populace 31 Willow ending 33 First Chinese dynasty 33 A work by baronard collaborators? 26 Agenda component 27 Psy-dirt 38 City in S. France 39 Giffie's kin 40 Suffragist Lucy 41 King Mark's castle 44 Female swan 45 Steu's need DOWN 1 Sune 2 New wear 3 Numbi 4 Freedom 4 "and Meek," comic strip 5 Refrain syllable 6 Clunland 7 Shays or Tyler 8 Cassuaries' spouse 10 Slanting 11 Oberrun's 12 On a pinnacle 13 Vitis 14 Danish navigator 14 Afflu matron 15 Pleistored pachyderm? 16 Bins, legally 17 Hume of St. Catherine 18 E-mulated Peirachio 24 Former Hungarian prime minister 25 Bargain 32 Tea, in Tours 33 Rhine feeder 34 Some of Tyny's kin 38 Withered 39 Nixie Fates 41 Wilbur 42 Judge Hardy's off-spring 43 Urmost 44 Derriner 47 Toxophilites 48 Kind of trip 50 Marilyn's "Bus Stop" role 51 Opera's Sirenas 53 Bumbons 53 Ark's landlord 54 Actor once called The Runk 55 Kitchen item 56 Marsupial motel? 58 Deteriorate 58 Author Levin 63 Parts of dits 64 Judge Hardy's off-spring 65 Howard and Russell 67 Long-legged shou-churds 69 Wheel spokes 70 Flower stall 73 Pyromaniac 75 Code 76 Lagomorph from Linogullen? 78 Canguo and byson 80 Glass gardens 83 "Two" People, 1938 tune 83 "..." of Little Faith?; Matt. 8:26 84 Some hosis, for short 87 Graust 88 Poem by Byron 92 Portable lodge of a certain shape 95 Howard and Russell 97 Long-legged shou-churds 99 Joplin work 100 Calla's style of singing 103 A king of Crete 108 Disagreeable task 105 Nustra 106 T-wit rhog 107 N.L. faulting 108 Canine dental visit? 113 Stigma 113 Fortreat 114 Little faith?; Matt. 8:26 115 "lei on" franciscans 116 Spanish painter 117 Edith's notation 118 Follow-up of sixth 118 Edger item 60 Joad and Kettle 67 Williams athlete 70 A whale 71 Hold tightly 73 In-ate 73 Saws with the gram 74 Hampshire's house 76 Soach forcibly 77 Indonesian island 78 "Clown," Porter tune 81 A Dr. Kidare 82 English-style 83 Ac-company 84 Rids the body 85 Fond du wis 85 Medecre | 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 15 16 17 18 19 20 21 22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31 32 33 34 35 36 37 38 39 40 41 42 43 44 45 46 47 48 49 50 51 52 53 54 55 56 57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 71 72 73 74 75 76 77 78 79 80 81 82 83 84 85 86 87 88 89 90 91 92 93 94 95 96 97 98 99 100 101 102 103 104 105 106 107 108 109 110 111 112 113 114 115 116 117 118 119 120 121 122 123 124 125 126 127 128 129 130 131 132 133 134 135 136 137 138 139 140 141 142 143 144 145 146 147 148 149 150 151 152 153 154 155 156 157 158 159 160 161 162 163 164 165 166 167 168 169 170 171 172 173 174 175 176 177 178 179 180 181 182 183 184 185 186 187 188 189 190 191 192 193 194 195 196 197 198 199 200 201 202 203 204 205 206 207 208 209 210 211 212 213 214 215 216 217 218 219 220 221 222 223 224 225 226 227 228 229 230 231 232 233 234 235 236 237 238 239 240 241 242 243 244 245 246 247 248 249 250 251 252 253 254 255 256 257 258 259 260 261 262 263 264 265 266 267 268 269 270 271 272 273 274 275 276 277 278 279 280 281 282 283 284 285 286 287 288 289 290 291 292 293 294 295 296 297 298 299 300 301 302 303 304 305 306 307 308 309 310 311 312 313 314 315 316 317 318 319 320 321 322 323 324 325 326 327 328 329 330 331 332 333 334 335 336 337 338 339 340 341 342 343 344 345 346 347 348 349 350 351 352 353 354 355 356 357 358 359 360 361 362 363 364 365 366 367 368 369 370 371 372 373 374 375 376 377 378 379 380 381 382 383 384 385 386 387 388 389 390 391 392 393 394 395 396 397 398 399 400 401 402 403 404 405 406 407 408 409 410 411 412 413 414 415 416 417 418 419 420 421 422 423 424 425 426 427 428 429 430 431 432 433 434 435 436 437 438 439 440 441 442 443 444 445 446 447 448 449 450 451 452 453 454 455 456 457 458 459 460 461 462 463 464 465 466 467 468 469 470 471 472 473 474 475 476 477 478 479 480 481 482 483 484 485 486 487 488 489 490 491 492 493 494 495 496 497 498 499 500 501 502 503 504 505 506 507 508 509 510 511 512 513 514 515 516 517 518 519 520 521 522 523 524 525 526 527 528 529 530 531 532 533 534 535 536 537 538 539 540 541 542 543 544 545 546 547 548 549 550 551 552 553 554 555 556 557 558 559 560 561 562 563 564 565 566 567 568 569 570 571 572 573 574 575 576 577 578 579 580 581 582 583 584 585 586 587 588 589 590 591 592 593 594 595 596 597 598 599 600 601 602 603 604 605 606 607 608 609 610 611 612 613 614 615 616 617 618 619 620 621 622 623 624 625 626 627 628 629 630 631 632 633 634 635 636 637 638 639 640 641 642 643 644 645 646 647 648 649 650 651 652 653 654 655 656 657 658 659 660 661 662 663 664 665 666 667 668 669 670 671 672 673 674 675 676 677 678 679 680 681 682 683 684 685 686 687 688 689 690 691 692 693 694 695 696 697 698 699 700 701 702 703 704 705 706 707 708 709 710 711 712 713 714 715 716 717 718 719 720 721 722 723 724 725 726 727 728 729 730 731 732 733 734 735 736 737 738 739 740 741 742 743 744 745 746 747 748 749 750 751 752 753 754 755 756 757 758 759 760 761 762 763 764 765 766 767 768 769 770 771 772 773 774 775 776 777 778 779 780 781 782 783 784 785 786 787 788 789 790 791 792 793 794 795 796 797 798 799 800 801 802 803 804 805 806 807 808 809 810 811 812 813 814 815 816 817 818 819 820 821 822 823 824 825 826 827 828 829 830 831 832 833 834 835 836 837 838 839 840 841 842 843 844 845 846 847 848 849 850 851 852 853 854 855 856 857 858 859 860 861 862 863 864 865 866 867 868 869 870 871 872 873 874 875 876 877 878 879 880 881 882 883 884 885 886 887 888 889 890 891 892 893 894 895 896 897 898 899 900 901 902 903 904 905 906 907 908 909 910 911 912 913 914 915 916 917 918 919 920 921 922 923 924 925 926 927 928 929 930 931 932 933 934 935 936 937 938 939 940 941 942 943 944 945 946 947 948 949 950 951 952 953 954 955 956 957 958 959 960 961 962 963 964 965 966 967 968 969 970 971 972 973 974 975 976 977 978 979 980 981 982 983 984 985 986 987 988 989 990 991 992 993 994 995 996 997 998 999 1000 1001 1002 1003 1004 1005 1006 1007 1008 1009 1010 1011 1012 1013 1014 1015 1016 1017 1018 1019 1020 1021 1022 1023 1024 1025 1026 1027 1028 1029 1030 1031 1032 1033 1034 1035 1036 1037 1038 1039 1040 1041 1042 1043 1044 1045 1046 1047 1048 1049 1050 1051 1052 1053 1054 1055 1056 1057 1058 1059 1060 1061 1062 1063 1064 1065 1066 1067 1068 1069 1070 1071 1072 1073 1074 1075 1076 1077 1078 1079 1080 1081 1082 1083 1084 1085 1086 1087 1088 1089 1090 1091 1092 1093 1094 1095 1096 1097 1098 1099 1100 1101 1102 1103 1104 1105 1106 1107 1108 1109 1110 1111 1112 1113 1114 1115 1116 1117 1118 1119 1120 1121 1122 1123 1124 1125 1126 1127 1128 1129 1130 1131 1132 1133 1134 1135 1136 1137 1138 1139 1140 1141 1142 1143 1144 1145 1146 1147 1148 1149 1150 1151 1152 1153 1154 1155 1156 1157 1158 1159 1160 1161 1162 1163 1164 1165 1166 1167 1168 1169 1170 1171 1172 1173 1174 1175 1176 1177 1178 1179 1180 1181 1182 1183 1184 1185 1186 1187 1188 1189 1190 1191 1192 1193 1194 1195 1196 1197 1198 1199 1200 1201 1202 1203 1204 1205 1206 1207 1208 1209 1210 1211 1212 1213 1214 1215 1216 1217 1218 1219 1220 1221 1222 1223 1224 1225 1226 1227 1228 1229 1230 1231 1232 1233 1234 1235 1236 1237 1238 1239 1240 1241 1242 1243 1244 1245 1246 1247 1248 1249 1250 1251 1252 1253 1254 1255 1256 1257 1258 1259 1260 1261 1262 1263 1264 1265 1266 1267 1268 1269 1270 1271 1272 1273 1274 1275 1276 1277 1278 1279 1280 1281 1282 1283 1284 1285 1286 1287 1288 1289 1290 1291 1292 1293 1294 1295 1296 1297 1298 1299 1300 1301 1302 1303 1304 1305 1306 1307 1308 1309 1310 1311 1312 1313 1314 1315 1316 1317 1318 1319 1320 1321 1322 1323 1324 1325 1326 1327 1328 1329 1330 1331 1332 1333 1334 1335 1336 1337 1338 1339 1340 1341 1342 1343 1344 1345 1346 1347 1348 1349 1350 1351 1352 1353 1354 1355 1356 1357 1358 1359 1360 1361 1362 1363 1364 1365 1366 1367 1368 1369 1370 1371 1372 1373 1374 1375 1376 1377 1378 1379 1380 1381 1382 1383 1384 1385 1386 1387 1388 1389 1390 1391 1392 1393 1394 1395 1396 1397 1398 1399 1400 1401 1402 1403 1404 1405 1406 1407 1408 1409 1410 1411 1412 1413 1414 1415 1416 1417 1418 1419 1420 1421 1422 1423 1424 1425 1426 1427 1428 1429 1430 1431 1432 1433 1434 1435 1436 1437 1438 1439 1440 1441 1442 1443 1444 1445 1446 1447 1448 1449 1450 1451 1452 1453 1454 1455 1456 1457 1458 1459 1460 1461 1462 1463 1464 1465 1466 1467 1468 1469 1470 1471 1472 1473 1474 1475 1476 1477 1478 1479 1480 1481 1482 1483 1484 1485  |
|--|--|

Sports

Women's X-Country runs away with NESCAC meet

by Cathy Cocks

The women's cross country team romped to victory by 29 points in the New England Small College Athletic Conference meet at Hamilton on Saturday.

Bowdoin surprised the field by taking second, amassing 103 points to Williams' 74 (low score wins); though the Polar Bears have little depth, they did claim the individual title and sixth place to snare second overall.

Despite their high pre-meet national rankings and impressive results in previous meets, Colby and Bates could defeat neither Williams' combination of frontrunning and team depth nor Bowdoin's virtuosity. They finished third and fourth, respectively with 107 and 112 points. Defending champion Tufts managed only a fifth place finish this year, posting a 117. Neither Amherst nor Wesleyan placed among the top teams, so the Ephs look for fast times if not strong competition at this year's Little Three meet at Amherst.

Leading off the Ephs' first ever NESCAC win, under sunny skies and intermittent rain, was sophomore standout Anne Platt, who seized seventh place overall and a spot on the NESCAC honor roll just ahead of teammate Molly Martin '92 in eighth. Both cracked 19 minutes for the rolling grass and pavement course barely short of 5000 meters at 3.05 miles.

In quick succession came Williams' remaining scorers, with Andrea Cady '92, Ann Dannhauer '90, and Cathy Cocks '89 placing 18th, 19th, and 22nd respectively. Close behind were the team's sixth and seventh runners, Cherie MacAuley '92 (27th) and Heidi Beebe '91 (32nd), who held off the scoring members of other teams to ensure their team's victory.

As they have throughout the season, the Williams women ran quick times, as all seven covered the course in less than 20 minutes. But in spite of such solid performances and a strong win, some team members were dissatisfied with their races and look for improved performances in the future, boding very well for Williams' fortunes in the post-season.

Next week the Ephs travel to Smith, where they will take on several of the area's top-rated non-NESCAC teams, among them: Wesleyan and Wheaton, which have been strong in the past. Coach Larry Bell said he feels that the University of Southern Maine, which has also defeated Colby, Bowdoin and Bates, will probably be the team to beat in the New England regional meet. Even so, the Smith Invitational will give Williams a good look at some of the competition they will see again at the end of the season ECAC and NCAA Division III meets in early November.

Last week's Bud Athlete of the Week Judy Fleishman '90 drives past her Lady Jeff opponent in the field hockey team's 2-0 win at Amherst on Saturday, which clinched the Little Three Title. (Davis)

Field Hockey captures Little Three Title

by Mariam Nafky

Beating archrival Amherst last Saturday 2-0, the field hockey team ran away with the Little Three title after losing 2-0 to Union on Thursday. Their record now stands at 7-1. Said Mo Flaherty '90 of their loss to Union: "We just didn't adapt well to their turf—we didn't have the connections we usually have." Meanwhile, total shots on goal in Saturday's game point to Williams' greater offensive skill, and perhaps Amherst's weaker defensive skill: the Ephs had 20, while the Jeffs had 12.

Play in the first half on Saturday alternated between Amherst and Williams territory. It was the Ephs, however, who were able to break through their opponents' defense and score. Kristen Fredericksen '90 drove into the Amherst defense 13:10 into the half and netted the first goal of the game. The same back-and-forth play persisted until, with one minute left in the first half, Mo Flaherty '90 worked the ball down the right side of the field, then crossed it to sophomore Laurie Burnett, who tallied one for the Ephs.

The game's second half proved scoreless for both teams, but a strong Williams defense kept Amherst at bay and allowed them a meager three shots on goal during the entire half. Said Coach Chris Larson-Mason of the normally powerful Jeff team: "Amherst was definitely the best team we've seen so far. They just couldn't get results today."

Top scorers on the Eph team so far this season are Judy Fleishman '90, with four goals, followed by Kirsten Neuse '89, Mo Flaherty '90, and Laurie Burnett '91 with two goals each. With the Little Three title under their belt, the Ephs could have the potential to qualify for the ECAC or NIAC tournaments; they must face three tough remaining games, though, the first against Tufts next Saturday. In the meantime, the Ephs are satisfied: "It's always great to beat Amherst," says Flaherty.

Men's Rugby trounces Norwich 35 -12

by Mark Staples

The Williams Rugby Football Club reasserted its place in Division I by soundly defeating Norwich 35-12 after last week's disappointing loss to Dartmouth. The A-side game was, in many ways, a traditional Williams performance.

After a long drive into Vermont, half of the side struck up a conversation with the referee to give the other players a few extra minutes in which to find their way to the pitch. After the somewhat frantic start, the White Dog forwards plunged into the game to win the ball as often as possible. The pack was in its element at Norwich. Led by their Captain Sherwood Smith '89, they dominated every scrum, spotted line-outs, and supported the line throughout the game.

Even though Norwich fielded a bigger pack, Williams' superior mauling technique won the day. Junior prop Will LaFave contributed mightily to the forward exchanges by ripping the ball free from Norwich possession. LaFave commented approvingly on the mauls: "Every time we even got a piece of the ball, you knew the rest of our pack would blind in and drive them back. Pretty soon they would lose their footing or loosen their grip and we would wind up with clean possession."

Smith's derring do

With the solid platform firmly established, captain Smith initiated more daring play. Smith fielded a kickoff in the second half and, instead of setting a maul instantly, took off downfield at an angle. Cutting and weaving, Smith wrongfooted his opponents, and the heavy support on hand allowed him to start a rolling maul which kept Norwich backpedaling until the midfield line.

With the pack clearly in charge, the line had easy going. Though they did not play to their potential, the Williams backs did get the ball to the wings enough for Phil Jack '90 to touch down twice and Sai Vast '91 once. Along with tries by flanker Alby Gullun '89, senior 8-man Chris Palmedo, and Ed Anderson '90 in the centers, Williams enjoyed a 35-12 lead at the final whistle.

Sepe's historic try

If the A-side played well, the B's were brilliant. The participants in the 50-0 tryfest are too many to list, but at least one will make the record books. On a penalty play close to the Norwich tryline, scrum half Dan Foote called for a prop run. Seolter Pete '90 roared the "Horrible" Sepe took the handoff at full speed and cruised towards the Norwich pack. Braided mustache flowing behind him, Sepe ran as though he were wearing a horned helmet. With his body low and the ball firmly tucked, Sepe awaited the inevitable drive from his mates which carried him over for his first try.

Though the entire side played well, it was the trio of loose forwards whose froth effervesced for the entire game. Flanker Dave Lerner '90 embodied the ethos of the great Buster by turning ordinary situations into attacking ones. Lerner applied constant pressure on Norwich, especially by following up the high kicks of classmate Dan Foote.

Eventually, the Norwich fullback cracked and Lerner's presence on the scene meant no second chance to re-

Sophomore tailback Jon Horton looks for daylight through the line in Saturday's 34-10 drubbing of the Bates Bobcats. The win mists the squad's record 2-1-1. (Thomas)

Gridders roll over Bates in 34-10 rout

by Ted Hobart

The Bobcats of Bates could not have enjoyed their first ever visit to Williamstown on Saturday. The Maine men's long trip was spoiled when they took the field against a Williams squad which was running on all cylinders. The Ephs came away with a 34-10 victory in the historic first meeting between the two teams, which came about as a result of Williams switching to an All-NESCAC schedule this season.

Most people expected Bates not to be very strong, and indeed the Bobcats made the Ephs look good. However, Bates played Amherst very tough two weeks ago, losing 14-12 when a last second field goal attempt hooked wide. And the Bobcats picked up their first win last week, against the Middlebury Panthers in a 27-24 thriller, so the Ephs' coaching staff was not looking beyond the Bobcats.

Horton back to form

The trend of the game showed early, as the Ephs marched the ball 83 yards in 16 plays on their first drive, following the strong running of Jon Horton '91 and passing of tri-captain Scott Kennedy. Horton recovered from last week's shaky performance at Trinity, where he was lifted from the game, and regained confidence with 33 rushes for 163 yards. Kennedy continued his improving trend, confidently leading the offense while compiling more impressive statistics (11-23 for 221 yards through the air and forty yards rushing).

Even though Bates defense was not near as strong as some which the Ephs have faced so far, Kennedy's passing was much sharper than it had been in earlier contests. Both offensive and defensive lines, as expected, dominated their Bobcat counterparts, despite some key injuries.

The Ephs' first drive culminated in Horton's dive from the one yard line, which gave the Ephs the 7-0 lead (after senior Jeff Ettemad's PAT) just under ten minutes into the game. He followed that effort with a 29 yard touchdown punt five minutes later for the 14-0 lead.

Easy pickings

The domination continued. Kennedy found easy pickings in the Bates second ary, amassing 184 yards on nine completions in the first half alone. His favorite target was sophomore Scott Shean, whom he hit six times for 132 yards in the half, including one 53 yard bomb.

Kennedy gave Williams the 21-0 lead when he rolled around the left side four yards for a touchdown, and later hit junior Todd Strier on a ten yard scoring strike. A failed two-point conversion attempt was the only mark against the offense in the half.

Meanwhile, the defense was holding the Bobcat offense to just two first downs in the half. The only Bates scoring opportunity came when Williams' punt return unit furnished the ball at its own 26. Bates quarterback Ed Travers

Continued on page 7

Men's soccer climbs in rank with shutouts

by Mariam Nafky

Gearing up for a tough game against Hartford tomorrow, the men's soccer team has reason to be confident—the Ephs beat both RPI and Bowdoin last week, raising their record to 8-0. The Ephs are now ranked number one in New England and third nationally in Division III. In the process, goalie co-captain Rob Bianck '88 has raised his career shutout total to 25, and co-captain Mike Masters '88 has raised his career goal total to 35. Both are career Williams records.

The Ephs were "a little off" in their game against RPI last Wednesday, according to fullback Rob Swann '90. They still managed to hold off RPI and win the game, 3-0. After 30 minutes of scoreless play, Peter Lyn '91 fired the ball in from 25 yards away—the Engineer goalie dove for it but came up short, leaving the halftime score at 1-0. It took the Ephs a while to warm up again, as they did not score again until about 25 minutes into the second half, when Masters headed the ball into the corner of the goal. Masters netted a second on a penalty kick awarded after Amel Stern '90 was tripped in the box, leaving the final score 3-0.

Bears' strategy backfires

Last Saturday's game against Bowdoin was expected to be intense because Bowdoin is a skilled team and needed to win the game to qualify for the ECAC tourney. In front of a large Bowdoin crowd, the Ephs dominated the game from the beginning. The Polar Bears played very physically, a strategy which backfired—the first two goals of the game were penalty kicks scored by Masters.

Doug Brooks '90 sent the ball to Masters midway into the first half, but Masters was pushed from behind by a Bowdoin player, allowing him his first penalty shot. Masters' second opportunity came when the ball he headed toward the net was blocked by a Bowdoin player's hand about ten minutes into the second half.

Five minutes later, Brooks sealed the fate of the game when, after Masters crossed the ball to him from the right side of the field, he booted the ball into the left side of the goal from 17 yards away. The toughness of the Bowdoin team was noted by Brooks: "They didn't touch the ball much, but we couldn't seem to score."

Tomorrow the Ephs play Hartford, ranked sixth in Division I in New England, in a game which promises to be the toughest remaining one of the regular season. More importantly, however, the Ephs still must face Wesleyan and Amherst and the challenge of winning the Little Three title.

Here comes trouble

Senior Kerry Kilander chases down a Boston College liney in Saturday's rematch of last week's BeanTown Tournament championship game. Once again the WWRFC lost a cliffhanger in double overtime. See story on page 7. (Steinman)

The Men's soccer team saw its 26 game shutout streak slip away last week in a 4-1 defeat of Tufts. However, the team improved its record to 10-0 with a defeat of Division I power Harvard. Pictured above is John Kennef '90. (Scale)

Recent arson, thefts threaten security

Edwards urges students to lock up

by Rob Weisberg

Security has recently received several reports of intrusions into unlocked student rooms in the Berkshire and Greylock Quads, according to Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards. All of the incidents have involved the theft of compact disc players.

In one of the incidents, a female student returned to her room to find an unidentified intruder present.

"It was early morning, and the student had gotten up to take a shower," Edwards said. "She returned to find someone in her room." The unidentified intruder wrestled with the student, but pushed past her and ran away when the telephone began to ring.

Both Edwards and Director of Security Ransom Jenks said that these intrusions should not concern students other than convincing them to lock their rooms.

"This is not a major deviation from the normal amount of thefts at campus," Edwards said. "We always have up and downs, and mounds of theft occur often."

Crime not increasing

Although Jenks said that these incidents were the fourth or fifth time this year that thefts had been reported to the security office, he said that crime on campus is not increasing.

Edwards said that the all-campus mailing last Thursday announcing the thefts was not meant to alarm anybody.

"We're just trying to keep the campus informed, and get students to take precautions."

"The message is lock your doors," Jenks said. "We're trying to get students to take it seriously."

Edwards added, "We wish all students would lock their doors at night. They can avoid the chance of being hurt and of their property being hurt. It's just a common sense measure."

In addition to taking advantage of the upgraded lighting and calling security whenever necessary, Edwards said that students can prevent most problems.

"What happened at the Mission lot—that was real atypical. That's a different matter entirely."

Though students are being asked to concern themselves with locks, the electronic dorm lock proposal that was debated and ultimately rejected last spring will not be revived any time soon.

Jenks said, "Students by and large thought that the lock proposal was a crazy idea. I'm not sure it was so crazy..."

Police search for Mission arsonists

by Stephanie Jones

The Williamstown police said they believe they know who tried to destroy 85 cars in the Mission Park lot early last Wednesday morning, although they cannot predict how soon they will make an arrest.

"We can have our thoughts and beliefs but lack that one piece of evidence

"There had to be some thought put into it... Somebody had to be planning," Zolito said. If the police are correct as to who committed the crime, he said, the motive is retaliation against the college.

"We're going to keep right on moving in this thing until we've exhausted all possibilities," Kennedy said.

According to Zolito, the crime is a felony, and any perpetrators could receive up to 10 years in a state prison for each of the cars that they attempted to set on fire.

Three vehicles actually caught on fire. One, which was used as the fuse, was burnt to a shell. In all, the gas tanks of eight cars were punctured and the arsonists attempted to puncture others, Kennedy said. From the size of the hole, it looks as if two different instruments were used to puncture the gas tanks, Zolito said.

'We have our thoughts and beliefs but lack that one piece of evidence that will convince a judge.'

that will convince a judge," Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zolito, Jr. said.

Officer John Kennedy of the Williamstown Police Department said that the police are looking into several suspects. He said that from the nature of the crime the police believe it was done by a group of people, who must have had a knowledge of the layout of the parking lot. A student is not suspected, he said.

A 30-pound propane tank was put into a jeep next to one of the burning cars, Zolito said.

"I don't know if the intent was to inflict bodily injury on anyone, but when you have a propane tank there, the thought's got to exist... Whoever did it was real sick," he said.

The jeep containing the propane tank continued on page 3

Bellwoar resigns as CC secretary, Students raise $1500 for Jamaica

by Ellen Drought

College Council Secretary John Bellwoar '89 has resigned from the council to devote more time to academics, he announced at the council meeting last Thursday. His position will be filled by a current College Council member through a two-thirds vote at the next meeting.

"I decided I needed to concentrate more on my grades because that's what I'm here for," Bellwoar said after the council meeting. He estimated that College Council took about 10-15 hours of his time every week.

"A big reason I had to step down is because of my philosophy tutorial. College Council meetings would conflict with the tutorial work I had and hurt the amount of time I could give it," he said.

Council President Trace Blankenship '89 said, "College Council has to vote on the vacancy and approve it by a two-thirds vote; it doesn't require any student body vote." Although not stipulated in the council constitution, the new secretary will be a current member. "It's been the procedure in the past," Blankenship said.

Blankenship also pointed out that as the other officers are seniors, a sophomore or junior secretary would result in some continuity to next year. "It might be a consideration of the College Council in terms of raising new leaders, but it's certainly no stipulation," Blankenship said after the meeting. "It's highly unusual to have four seniors as officers." Freshmen aren't allowed to hold office on the council.

After Thursday's meeting, the results of the election will be sent to the student body in an all-campus mailing.

"[Bellwoar's resignation] is a sad thing, but it's no crisis; it won't put us in turmoil. We want to communicate this to the student body," Blankenship said at the meeting.

Students raise $1500 for Jamaica

by Sojin Kim

The Caribbean Action Committee's recent effort to provide disaster relief for Jamaica, the Cayman Islands and Haiti in the wake of Hurricane Gilbert is only half of the group's agenda for the Caribbean region.

The committee also aims to begin long-term education of the Williams community about Caribbean issues said Professor of Political Science Kurt Tauber, who is one of five professors on the committee. In addition to the professors, 15 students serve on the committee.

The committee has collected canned food, household items, clothing and money from students and faculty in excess of $1500 and hopes to raise about $3300 more, but the greater goal, according to Tauber, is to "get every member of the community to contribute as a token of awareness of the need."

"Being concerned is, in itself, a help," said Adrena Ifill '91, a member of the committee.

$500 million in damage

According to Tauber, one-fourth of Jamaica's population is homeless and there is a dearth of electricity and potable water. The estimated cost of the damage from Gilbert is $500 million.

To increase campus awareness of the political situation, the committee also plans to commemorate the fifth anniversary of the 1983 invasion of Grenada with a film, "The Future Coming To War" and a speaker, Terrence Marynow, on October 26 at Weston Language Center.

"It's important for Americans to begin to appreciate the agenda of the people in the Caribbean, and avoid the imperialistic view of the area as simply our 'backyard,'" Tauber said. "I've been dismayed by American ignorance of and indifference towards this enormously politically significant area in the Caribbean."

Students on campus are heavily engaged in their own work and generally don't spend much time reading major American, let alone foreign, newspapers," he continued. "At best they derive news from TV headlines. There's an information vacuum, and while I don't believe we'll make a permanent dent in the preoccupations of students, this appeal to humanitarianism can be considered a kind of educational device."

New courses

This information gap will be partially addressed by two courses on the Caribbean to be offered for the first time next semester. Visiting Professor of Political Science Desalma Williams, from Jamaica, will teach the new courses. Williams organized the Caribbean Action Committee in September.

Panel examines pressure to drink

by Lynn Haddon

Approximately 200 students turned out for a panel discussion entitled "(Why) Wasted at Williams?" last Thursday. The panel, in which eight students discussed the pressures to drink, was the focal point of a series of events through which Williams participated in National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week.

These activities, which were sponsored by College Council, included an all-campus mailing sent out last Tuesday reminding students of the school's party policy, a non-alcoholic party at Perry House on Friday night and the Fun Run for Health on Saturday morning.

"We need to ask ourselves if there is a real pressure to drink here, or is it imaginary?" said Trace Blankenship '89, president of the College Council. "Is drinking the only route of socialization we supply to freshmen to overcome discomfort? Is there some sort of empty spot we're trying to fill by drinking?"

The one-hour meeting was designed to be informal, according to Blankenship, and it opened with panel members briefly stating their own perceptions of alcohol use at Williams. Some of the approximately 200 students present then took the opportunity to ask questions of the panel and respond to what had been said.

In his opening comments, Blankenship said, "We're not here to propose any solutions, but to see where folks stand on this question of alcohol awareness. We're here to examine the different areas in which alcohol affects student life, whether it's athletics, casual socializing with friends, or partying."

Pressure to drink

One major issue that the panel raised was the pressure which many students experience to drink at Williams. "It's not a direct pressure," Steve Martin '91 said. "You're just fighting a feeling of being left out."

"You see small groups of people going out who are supposedly friends, and who compete with one another to see who can get the drunkest or the sickest," Lauren Boeschstein said. "What happens when these people graduate? We're sending alcoholics out into the world."

Blankenship brought up the difficulty of making personal decisions about one's own drinking habits. "It's true that everyone must make a choice for themselves," he said, "but there is a great pressure to choose one particular way."

Other topics emphasized at the discussion included the particularly great pressure to drink faced by freshmen, the role that drinking plays in socialization, and the ways in which students' drinking habits change during their time at Williams. After the meeting, several freshman entries met to discuss issues raised by the meeting.

Reservations

Some panel members appeared to have reservations about the value of the discussion, however. After the continued on page 4

NCBI aims to reduce racial tension

by Stephanie Jones

Several groups of students and faculty met in workshops last week to discuss racial tensions at Williams. The meetings were moderated by two representatives from the National Coalition Building Institute, a group which attempts to teach people to overcome stereotypes and so address racial problems.

The NCBI has worked in South Africa and Northern Ireland, as well as at other schools such as Tufts and Boston College. According to Cherle Brown, the head of the organization, their methods are to try to teach people to confront and change stereotypes.

Dean of the Faculty John Reikert, Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards and Assistant to the President for Affirmative Action Nancy McIntire attended a workshop given by the NCBI last June, and Reikert invited the group to campus.

"They're very skilled at bringing people together, enabling them to talk with each other about the things which separate them and what they have in common," Reikert said.

NCBI may return later this year to hold a similar workshop on campus for students, faculty and staff, he said. In the workshop, people take part in simulations involving prejudice and each per-

continued on page 6

MassMoCA design team selected.

PAGE 3

Alumni artists at Goodrich.

PAGE 5

Williams theater professor lights up Broadway

by Rob Weisberg

Williamstown has often been described as an out-of-the-way town with a good theater, but it can't compare in either respect to the remote Japanese village where Associate Professor of Theater Arden Fingerhut spent part of this summer.

Fingerhut was designing both the scenery and lighting for a joint project of four American repertory companies and the Japanese playwright/director Hasehahi Suzuki, whom Fingerhut described as a world-renowned revolutionary force in contemporary theater.

"I had done some work with Suzuki about six years ago," she said. "Also, they needed someone for both scenery and lighting, and that kind of experience is not common now. My style was something they were looking for," she added.

continued on page 4

Professor of Theater Arden Fingerhut worked in Japanese theater productions last summer. (Kershaw)

Football trounces Colby 21-0. First shutout in seven years.

PAGE 10

The Williams Record

Lighten up

Two near tragedies in dark parking lots this fall have shown that despite its three-tiered plan to improve campus lighting which is now in its second phase, the college has a long way to go in its efforts to improve campus security.

Last September 1, a female college employee was attacked in a parking lot behind the Thompson Chemistry and Biology laboratories. Immediately after the attack, Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards announced that the college would install new floodlights in the Thompson lot.

Last Wednesday, a group of arsonists struck the Mission Park lot, attempting to set fire to a number of the vehicles there. Responding to this incident, Dean Edwards again said that the college would be giving particularly high priority to installing improved security measures in that area, including new lighting fixtures and closed-circuit monitoring.

Vandals have also recently damaged cars behind Currier, another isolated lot.

While it is encouraging to see the administration making a concerted effort to increase security in parking lots, there is something disturbing about their pattern of action. Instead of anticipating such events, they seem merely to be sticking their collective fingers in the dike.

It has been clear for some time now that campus parking lots are poorly lit. Vehicles in the Mission lot are regularly subject to break-ins and vandalism, and looking for one's car, let alone vandals, is difficult in the Greylock lot.

The college now has an opportunity to prevent a tragedy from occurring. The installation of effective lighting should be accompanied by increased security patrols and closed-circuit monitoring for all lots, not just those with a history of difficulties.

In a sense, the college has been lucky so far. The woman attacked in September escaped without serious harm, and the fire set in the Mission lot only damaged a few cars. One would hope that the college realizes the need to act before its "luck" runs out.

Opinions

The Issue didn't Review facts

by Bill Grace

I have read the September issue of The Issue, in which, on page 17, there is an article entitled, "Dartmouth plagued by injudicious (Dartmouth) Review." Now I firmly believe that most journalists regard libelous equivocations, the manipulation of pseudo-events, sub-standard reporting, as injudicious. But I have come to the conclusion, after reading The Issue's article on the Dartmouth Review, that most editors working for The Issue would not consider the aforementioned practices injudicious at all. I substantiate this claim by confuting five puntillae postulated as facts by the article in question.

The first paragraph of the article states (1) "three staff members of the Dartmouth Review were disciplined for harassing black music professor Bill Cole." Actually, four members of the Review were disciplined. The student not mentioned by the article, Sean Nolan, was sentenced to a year of disciplinary probation for the high crime of having walked into the retail hall where the incident took place, having sat in a chair silently, then having left the room with the other three students. During the trial, it became evident that Cole was completely unaware of Nolan's presence. But somehow, in the eyes of Dartmouth College, this constituted disorderly conduct.

In the second paragraph, (2) "The controversy arose when Christopher Baldwin (89), John Sutter (88), and John Quirk (90) entered Cole's classroom without permission." No Review reporter made ingress into Cole's classroom at any time. The four Review reporters waited for Cole's "musical" class to end, and then delayed an additional five minutes until Cole had finished chatting with a student. Also, the students were not trespassing; the room that Cole uses for his class is a public recital hall, open to any student when a class is not in session.

(3) "[They] proceeded to harass Cole, demanding that he answer accusations about his teaching style and his ability." The four Review reporters visited Cole, one of the directors of an attorney, to deliver a document giving Cole the right to reply to a recent article that was critical of his teaching practices (profanity, racist comments, incoherent lectures devoted to sociology and not music). Cole had said the Review was $2.4 million in 1984 on the premise that the Review had afforded him no opportunity for a rebuttal to an article critical of his teaching. His case was brought to court, but the legal costs incurred during the case made the possibility of a similar suit prohibitive, so the Review's attorney opted for preemption.

Upon seeing the four reporters enter the room, Cole lashed out with a torrent of obscenities. Cole proceeded to commit battery against two of the Review reporters and to break the photographer's camera. No accusations or controversy regarding his teaching style or ability took place during the incident. (4) "When he [Cole] refused [to answer], the students moved towards Cole shouting and attempting to intimidate him." Conversely, it was Cole who committed battery against two students and broke another's camera. During the exchange, Cole was clearly the aggressor -- he asked one of the reporters (John Sutter) to fight him -- he pushed another reporter (Chris Baldwin) across the room by attempting to poke Baldwin in the eyes. The reporters were polite by witnesses accounts and at all times referred to Cole as "sir."

The article, in a by-play to the Cole incident, reports that (5) "Last year, the Review left published a list of members of the campus Gay and Lesbian organization and wrote letters to members families informing them of their child's sexual orientation." This statement is quite libelous. The last Review article written on the Gay Student Organization was in 1984. The only members mentioned are the officers of the organization. At no time has the Review written to undergraduate parents.

I add, here, that more than 75 percent of the article is a mere rewording of articles that have appeared in the Daily Dartmouth, and that at no time did a reporter for The Issue contact the Review for a response.

Bill Grace is the Executive Editor of the Dartmouth Review.

S. African Indians must denounce apartheid

by Rajesh Swaminathan '92

World opinion has never been a reliable actor on the world stage, supporting and betraying causes with wild abandon. It is rare that the flame of conscience has burned for a protracted period of time in support of any issue. Given this pitiful record, it is heartening to note that a beacon of indignation has burned continuously over the shackled land of South Africa for over a decade. However, it is a concern fueled by blind anger at the perpetuation of systemic injustice, and as such, tends to focus on the more visible issues of Apartheid. It has glossed over one of the most terrible aspects of the phenomenon: the degradation of the black man by the brown. That South Africa has an ethnic Indian population is common knowledge; that they are not white and are thus victims of Apartheid also needs little elaboration. The tragedy is that the South African Indian people are emerging as a bulwark of Verwoerd's racist vision of "Grand Apartheid."

'Over time the color complex has been reinforced and concretized by the system...'

The Indian is an immigrant, like the South African Englishman and the Afrikaner; he came to the Cape first as an indentured laborer and then as a businessman. At the height of British Imperial power in the early 1880's, profitable trading ventures had been organized between West India and Southern Africa. Wealthy Indian trading clans emerged in South Africa as middlemen between the British overlords and the illiterate black peasant who served his mines and fields. Today, several Indian cargo, retail and manufacturing firms function in an intermediary capacity between industrial or urban centers and the rural "homelands." It is that role, that intermediary capacity to serve as a middleman, that the Indian has repeatedly emphasized and sought to preserve.

The color complex is a phenomenon that has become deeply rooted in the Indian psyche in over five thousand years of civilization; fairer skin hues are generally preferred over the darker. In the context of the South African milieu, it does not mean that the Indian identifies himself with the white man; it has come to signify his superiority over the black man. Indeed, his role as a go-between has brought him enormous financial remuneration; economic issues, not social ones, have been his primary motivating concerns.

Over time, the color complex has been reinforced and concretized by the system; the Indian has come to see himself as somehow different from the other races of color. Just as the Afrikaner has come to believe heart, mind and soul in the racial superiority of the white man, the Indian has come to see himself above the black man, as somehow better. It is dubious whether he subscribes to the veracity and legitimacy of white supremacy, but he is willing to accept the status quo as a convenient myth, if nothing more.

The South African problem has been simmering dangerously over the past few years as black anger mounts. Yet, the Indian has maintained a polite silence; he is uninterested in political change for two reasons: first, that it might jeopardize his highly profitable role as a middleman, and second, that he is averse to black rule. When Soweto and other "townships" exploded in an orgy of violence in 1986, the Indian communities in Johannesburg and Cape Town distanced themselves from the anger and the suffering of the black man; in fact, Indian militias clashed repeatedly with black protestors; the Indians maintained that they were merely protecting their interests, but their belligerent and bigoted attitudes towards black aspirations were veiled but thinly.

The real tragedy, however, does not lie in isolated clashes between two gangs of hoodlums; it lies in the possibility that racism may have already been internalized by the South African Indian. The repressive social system of Apartheid has merely reinforced and concretized intrinsic cultural prejudices. This attitude complements the racism of white South Africa in an unholy, poisonous nexus dedicated to perpetuating the humiliation and degradation of the black man.

Recently, one or two developments have shown that the winds of change may be finally clearing the stagnation of the Indian's conscience. Indian professionals, especially those in the legal profession, have begun to work in conjunction with national anti-Apartheid groups and parties; in fact, Winnie Mandela's attorney is an ethnic Indian. However, heartening these changes may be, they are much too slight to be of any real consequence. Unless there is a profound attitudinal change on the part of the Indian, bigotry will flourish unchecked. Unless there is change, tension between the black and brown man can only grow; and the pale specter of racial injustice can only stand to gain from a house thus divided.

MassMoca commission selects design team

by Greg Itari

Last Tuesday, after 16 hours of deliberations, the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art (Mass Moca) Cultural Development Commission selected a design team of architectural firms from a field of 29 proposals. The team will conduct a feasibility study on the further conversion of the North Adams Sprague Electric complex into the world's largest museum of contemporary art.

While the cooperative effort of the four selected firms from New York City, Santa Monica, Philadelphia and Cambridge will result in a tentative architectural plan for the project, the final architect for the conversion of the complex will not be decided until one year from now, according to Andrea DeMayo of Mass Moca. "The commission has made it fairly clear that they are keeping their options open," DeMayo said, adding that the current firms are not necessarily the ones which will submit the final architectural plan.

The feasibility study will propose architectural plans for the project and submit prospective plans for traffic, construction, and the division of the 13-acre, 28-building site into areas for commercial as well as museum capacities.

Old or new?

There is some debate among commission members and North Adams residents over the form of the new museum, according to DeMayo. Many favor retaining the flavor and character of the mill by keeping the existing buildings basically intact, while others hope to see a more radical design which makes an architectural statement.

The feasibility study team will have something of a free hand in what they propose, but they are following certain guidelines. "The commission wants the architectural plans to be sensitive to the conditions of the mill, but they are not expecting every building to remain intact," DeMayo said. She added that the commission wishes to retain the existing atmosphere of the mill to some degree. The final architects will work closely with the commission to achieve a balance between renovation and preservation.

"The feasibility study team will be designing prototype galleries, but a commission subcommittee for art and architecture will work closely with the final design team," DeMayo said.

The study is expected to be completed in seven months, at which point it will be presented to the state Office of Administration and Finance. The office must approve the plan before the state legislature can release the $33 million which it has designated for the project.

Firemen nearly confronted with Mission impossible

continued from page 1

maintained fire damage, Fire Chief Edward McGowan said. "If it had blown up it would have killed firemen," he said. McGowan said that the arsonists were methodical. "It took like they hoped to go in over the fence, he said. According to McGowan, the heat was initially so intense that the firemen could not get close enough to use dry foam extinguishers. After soaking the interiors of the burning cars with water, the fire fighters moved in to extinguish the gasoline fires.

The district attorney's office and the state fire marshal have been called to investigate. The Department of Environmental Quality and Engineering was also called in because of the hazard caused by the gasoline that was spilled. People could not drive their cars in the lot until Friday because of the risk of an explosion. Security moved the cars into nearby lots Thursday.

Zoito said that if any student was in the area at the time of the arson and saw or heard anything, he or she should come talk to him.

The firemen had to go in over the fence, he said. According to McGowan, the heat was initially so intense that the firemen could not get close enough to use dry foam extinguishers. After soaking the interiors of the burning cars with water, the fire fighters moved in to extinguish the gasoline fires.

The district attorney's office and the state fire marshal have been called to investigate. The Department of Environmental Quality and Engineering was also called in because of the hazard caused by the gasoline that was spilled. People could not drive their cars in the lot until Friday because of the risk of an explosion. Security moved the cars into nearby lots Thursday.

Zoito said that if any student was in the area at the time of the arson and saw or heard anything, he or she should come talk to him.

The firemen had to go in over the fence, he said. According to McGowan, the heat was initially so intense that the firemen could not get close enough to use dry foam extinguishers. After soaking the interiors of the burning cars with water, the fire fighters moved in to extinguish the gasoline fires.

The district attorney's office and the state fire marshal have been called to investigate. The Department of Environmental Quality and Engineering was also called in because of the hazard caused by the gasoline that was spilled. People could not drive their cars in the lot until Friday because of the risk of an explosion. Security moved the cars into nearby lots Thursday.

Zoito said that if any student was in the area at the time of the arson and saw or heard anything, he or she should come talk to him.

The firemen had to go in over the fence, he said. According to McGowan, the heat was initially so intense that the firemen could not get close enough to use dry foam extinguishers. After soaking the interiors of the burning cars with water, the fire fighters moved in to extinguish the gasoline fires.

The district attorney's office and the state fire marshal have been called to investigate. The Department of Environmental Quality and Engineering was also called in because of the hazard caused by the gasoline that was spilled. People could not drive their cars in the lot until Friday because of the risk of an explosion. Security moved the cars into nearby lots Thursday.

Zoito said that if any student was in the area at the time of the arson and saw or heard anything, he or she should come talk to him.

SUNY campus reels in wake of racial brawl

(College Press Service)--It may have been the most frightening outbreak of campus racism of the year so far. Then, too, it could be a case of a student newspaper misreporting a simple fight. Or it could be an instance of a university refusing to address the kind of racial tensions present on many campuses and thus, as minority students contend, end up encouraging.

"It's a cover-up," said Stabben Murray, a black student who says that on September 18 he was chased from the State University of New York at Brockport's campus nightclub by about a dozen white students--most of them members of the wrestling team--wielding bats and clubs and yelling racial insults at him after he had brewed with two of the men.

It is, in any case, exactly the kind of incident students and administrators have been working to avoid. Exactly two years ago, in October, 1986, in a strikingly similar event, five white University of Massachusetts at Amherst students toppled off their disapproval about the outcome of a New York Mets-Boston Red Sox World Series game by beating up a black classmate.

After that event, racial tensions spread alarmingly to campuses nationwide. Fights, sit-ins, marches and even student strikes erupted at Fairleigh Dickinson and Mississippi State universities, at Dartmouth, Tompkins-Cortland, Rodgers State and Hampshire colleges as well as at the universities of California-Berkeley, Illinois and Michigan, to name but a few.

The unprecedented string of confrontations--probably exceeded in modern college history only by the violence and rioting that marred the first attempts to integrate the universities of Alabama and Mississippi in the late fifties and early sixties--provoked fears colleges would remain segregated forever. In response, many colleges have tried to teach white students to appreciate diversity and, as UMMA race relations Professor Meyer Weinberg put it, ease black students' sense of isolation and alienation.

The universities of Florida, Michigan and California-Santa Barbara as well as Duke and Penn State, among others, have sponsored carefully integrated parties and "sensitivity" sessions to prevent such efforts don't always help.

"Minorities are not streaming to UMMA even though the university has done a lot of things to make it more appealing," Weinberg notes.

And at the University of Mississippi, for example, an unknown arsonist in August burned down a house that was about to become the first Fraternity Row building ever used by black students.

In early October, black University of Texas at Austin major Kenneth Avery filed a complaint against UT-Austin police officers, who had detained him because they were looking for "a black man with a briefcase."

And a SUNY-Brockport student sensitivity seminar didn't prevent the events of September 18.

Murray recounts a scary story of getting into a scuffle with two wrestling team members after they bumped while dancing at the campus nightclub. Heading advice to go outside to "cool

continued on page 8

Van puts senior citizens, disabled on the road again

by Dan Skwire

Help is on the way for the elderly citizens of Williamstown who have trouble getting around on their own. According to Lynn Hood, executive director of the Williamstown Council on Aging, a van service will be available beginning this November to provide local transportation for the elderly.

The van, which is specially-equipped with a wheelchair lift, will also be used to transport three or four handicapped children to and from school each day. "They [the children] will be able to go to school in a more dignified fashion," said Anthony Cangelosi, co-chairman of the fund-raising committee for the project.

Hood said that a state grant of $21,000 covered most of the price of the van, and the town government has agreed to pay for additional costs, including maintenance and the salary of the driver. The Properties of America Foundation has also made contributions toward the project totaling $9,000 over the last two years. In the future, regular operating costs will be covered through voluntary donations from those who use the service.

According to Cangelosi, the Council on Aging hopes to raise additional money at a banquet to be given at the Williamstown Inn on December 11. He said that many local establishments have donated money to underwrite the fund-raiser.

"What you have here is businesses, private citizens, and government working together for the benefit of the elderly," he said. "In addition, we hope that students will become involved."

Cangelosi said that the program is particularly in need of people to help in selling tickets and publicizing the banquet. Anyone interested in volunteering may contact him at 456-8030 or the Williamstown Council on Aging at 458-8250.

College considers new surveillance system

by Rob Weinberg

The irony of last Wednesday's arson at the Mission Park parking lot was that Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards said in his planning stages. However, she said that the proposed phone line would go directly to security and would require no dialing.

The new lights will differ from the additions made on campus so far. "The additional lighting will probably be in the form of floodlights, suspended high above the lot, not the pole lamps being installed now," Edwards said.

Presently, security patrols monitor the lot irregularly, according to Edwards. "I would say they check at least every two hours. But the times they check the lot change each night."

She added that this variation is deliberate so that no regular pattern can be established. "And this was literally a lifesaver that night. The fire was called in so quickly that the propane couldn't go up."

In Other Ivory Towers

Greeks protest alcohol policy University of Pennsylvania

More than 70 fraternity members chained 21 empty beer kegs together to form a blockade across Locust Walk at the University of Pennsylvania to the first open protest of the University's alcohol policy. The students blocked pedestrian traffic from noon until 1:30, while chanting protest slogans, singing, "You've got to fight for your right to party," and calling for passers by to join them. After one student was injured attempting to climb over a wall in an attempt to circumvent the blockade, the protest was quickly broken up. One student involved with the protest said, "I think the reason behind it was to let the administration know that the fraternities are still very serious--it's not something that we're going to let get away. This is the other end of the tactical [discussions we've had with the administration]. This is our show of strength." Some students were annoyed at the blockade; however, senior Jill Geoff said, "There's apartheid, people are starving, the world is crumbling, and we're here protesting a keg ho? Do you think this is ridiculous? I think this is ridiculous."

Violence and Racism Smith

Smith's sense of security has been challenged by a number of break-ins, assaults and rapes over the last few months. So far this year, there has been one rape, one assault, and two reported entries through first story windows on campus. Last year there were seven reported cases of assault and battery and one reported rape, as well as 18 cases of breaking and entering, 248 reported "suspicious persons," 24 indecent exposures and four cases of trespassing. The head of Smith security claims that they have been trying to become more visible on campus as a result of the incidents. Two notes with racial slurs which have been slipped under two students' doors have also disturbed the community. Since the beginning of the year, the college has been searching for an affirmative action officer and developing a plan for institutional diversity. As a result of these changes, Associate Dean for Student Affairs Carol Weinberg believes that a wave of racist feeling "coming to the surface is not unexpected," but added that the College's objective "is to make this the kind of place where things like this don't need to happen."

In Other Ivory Towers was collected from other college papers.

Interviews by Miriam Marcus and Amy Balveau

A Clean Berkshires Inc truck sits idle after cleaning up the gas spill in the Mission Park parking lot. The spill was caused by an arsonist's attempt to torch 85 cars. (Ward)

How has Alcohol Awareness Week made you reevaluate your drinking at Williams?

"Yes, I'm thinking of using it in other ways. No, but seriously, I think it's very important issue. And I've put a lot of valuable thought to it."--Matt Tarses '90

"I think it's beneficial to raise these questions, but I would resent any institutional reform to limit my actions and choices."--Joah Kurzman '91

"This week has enlightened me. I now realize how foolishly and stupidly I've been and I plan to stop consuming this Friday night."--Matthew Wyckel '91

"I think that they may be over-reacting to the situation. Although a lot of people at Williams may drink excessively, it is simply because the atmosphere of college life. I do not think this will continue after college."--Molly Foehl '91

"Alcohol Awareness Week has made me give up alcohol altogether because it made me realize how foolish I was. I realize I was straying from the right path. I've found my way."--Kim Mugler '91

"Yes it has. Now instead of drinking beer, I drink shots of bourbon to improve my Marlboro man image."--Russell Werkman '89

Letters

To the Editor:

I am disappointed by your portrayal of my encounter with William Melchionni at Agard House. Far from feeling threatened, I spoke to Mr. Melchionni in the presence of uniformed Security officers. There was some initial confusion but Mr. Melchionni apologized and he and other residents were very helpful in clearing Agard House.

To my interview with Stephanie Jones, I made several suggestions for increased involvement of house officers and house residents in security at parties, successful strategies

we employed at the University of California at Santa Cruz. I had hoped that the article would include these suggestions. Overall, the article was accurate. However, sensational headlines seem more appropriate in a tabloid and not on the front page of the Williams Record.

Andrew C. Hernandez,

Assistant Dean of the College

Editor's reply: The Record stands by the accuracy of its reporting. We regret the overstatement in the headline.

DEBBIE SNYDER Editor in Chief
TODD OWENS News Editor	CHUCK SAMUELSON Opinions Editor
TED HOBART & MARC McDERMOTT Sports Editors	RICH WARD & JED SCALA Photo Editors
KIRSTEN HASENFUSS & MARY ILIFF Layout Editors	KATIE ALBRIGHT Business Manager
News Assistants
STEPHANIE JONES, ANN MANTIL, BILL SAVADOVE, DAN SKWIRE, ROB WEISBERG	Photo Assistants
MARIAM NAUFY, JAY STEINMAN, KARL THOMAS	Layout Assistants
ELISA DAVIDOFF, BILL PHILPOTT, ASHESH SHAH

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

The Williams Record

Lighten up

Two near tragedies in dark parking lots this fall have shown that despite its three-tiered plan to improve campus lighting which is now in its second phase, the college has a long way to go in its efforts to improve campus security.

Last September 1, a female college employee was attacked in a parking lot behind the Thompson Chemistry and Biology laboratories. Immediately after the attack, Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards announced that the college would install new floodlights in the Thompson lot.

Last Wednesday, a group of arsonists struck the Mission Park lot, attempting to set fire to a number of the vehicles there. Responding to this incident, Dean Edwards again said that the college would be giving particularly high priority to installing improved security measures in that area, including new lighting fixtures and closed-circuit monitoring.

Vandals have also recently damaged cars behind Carrier, another isolated lot. While it is encouraging to see the administration making a concerted effort to increase security in parking lots, there is something disturbing about their pattern of action. Instead of anticipating such events, they seem merely to be reacting to their collective fingers in the dike.

It has been clear for some time now that campus parking lots are poorly lit. Vehicles in the Mission lot are regularly subject to break-ins and vandalism, and looking for one's car, let alone vandals, is difficult in the Greylock lot.

The college now has an opportunity to prevent a tragedy from occurring. The installation of effective lighting should be accompanied by increased security patrols and closed-circuit monitoring for all lots, not just those with a history of difficulties.

In a sense, the college has been lucky so far. The woman attacked in September escaped without serious harm, and the fire set in the Mission lot only damaged a few cars. One would hope that the college realizes the need to act before its "luck" runs out.

On The Record...

"You see small groups of people going out ... to see who can get the drunkest or the sickest"

-- Lauren Boeschstein '89 at a panel discussion entitled "(Why) wasted at Williams?"

"The message is lock your doors."

-- Director of Security Ransom Jenks on recent incidents on campus.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words, and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication, either typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Chuck Samuelson at (413) 597-2289.

Letters

To the Editor:
I am disappointed by your portrayal of my encounter with William Melchionni at Agard House. Far from feeling threatened, I spoke to Mr. Melchionni in the presence of uniformed Security officers. There was some initial confusion but Mr. Melchionni apologized and he and other residents were very helpful in clearing Agard House.

In my interview with Stephanie Jones, I made several suggestions for increased involvement of house officers and house residents in security at parties, successful strategies

we employed at the University of California at Santa Cruz. I had hoped that the article would include these suggestions. Overall, the article was accurate. However, sensational headlines seem more appropriate in a tabloid than on the front page of the Williams Record.

Andrew C. Hernandez
Assistant Dean of the College

Editor's reply: The Record stands by the accuracy of its reporting. We regret the overstatement in the headline.

TODD OWENS News Editor DEBBIE SNYDER Editor in Chief
TED HOBART & MARC MODERMOTT Sports Editors RICH WARD & JED SCALA Photo Editors
KIRSTEN HASENFELD & MARY ELIFF Layout Editors KATIE ALBRIGHT Business Manager

News Assistants
STEPHANIE JONES, ANN MANTILL, BILL SAVADOVE, DAN SKWIRE, ROB WEISBERG
Sports Assistant
MARIAM NAFICY JAY STEINMAN, KARL THOMAS
Layout Assistants
ELISA DUGUNDI, BILL PHILPOTT, ASHESHI SIAH

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williams, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williams, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

TO EASE HIS DEPRESSION
WHAT SHOULD MIKE TYSON THROW THROUGH HIS WINDOW?

Opinions

The Issue didn't Review facts

by Bill Grace

I have read the September issue of The Issue, in which, on page 17, there is an article entitled, "Dartmouth plagued by injudicious [Dartmouth] Review." Now I firmly believe that most journalists regard libelous equivocations, the manipulation of pseudo-events, sub-standard reporting, and plagiarism, all used to effect causality, as injudicious. But I have come to the conclusion, after reading The Issue's article on the Dartmouth Review, that most editors working for The Issue would not consider the aforementioned practices injudicious at all.

I substantiate this claim by confuting five points proffered as facts by the article in question.

The first paragraph of the article states (1) "three staff members of the Dartmouth Review were disciplined for harassing black music professor Bill Cole." Actually, four members of the Review were disciplined. The student not mentioned by the article, Sean Nolan, was sentenced to a year of disciplinary probation for the high crime of having walked into the rectal hall where the incident took place, having sat in a chair silently, then having left the room with the other three students. During the trial, it became evident that Cole was completely unaware of Nolan's presence. But somehow, in the eyes of Dartmouth College, this constituted disorderly conduct.

In the second paragraph, (2) "The controversy arose when Christopher Bakdwin [sic] (89), John Sutter (88), and John Quilici (90) entered Cole's classroom without permission." No Review reporter made ingress into Cole's classroom at any time. The four Review reporters waited for Cole's "music" class to end, and then delayed an additional five minutes until Cole had finished chatting with a student. Also, the students were not trespassing; the room that Cole uses for his class is a public recital hall, open to any student when a class is not in session.

(3) "[They] proceeded to harass Cole, demanding that he answer accusations about his teaching style and his ability." The four Review reporters visited Cole, on the direction of an attorney, to deliver a document giving Cole the right to reply to an article that was critical of his teaching practices (profanity, racist comments, incoherent lectures devoted to scatology and not music). Cole had sued the Review for $2.4 million in 1984 on the premise that the Review had afforded him no opportunity for a rebuttal to an article critical of his teaching. His case was thrown out of court, but the legal costs incurred during the case made the possibility of a similar suit prohibitive, so the Review's attorney opted for preemption.

Upon seeing the four reporters enter the room, Cole lashed out with a torrent of obscenities. Cole proceeded to commit battery against two of the Review reporters and to break the photographer's camera. No accusations or discussion regarding his teaching style or ability took place during the incident. (4) "When he [Cole] refused [to answer], the students moved towards Cole shouting and attempting to intimidate him." Conversely, it was Cole who committed battery against two students and broke another's camera. During the exchange, Cole was clearly the aggressor -- he asked one of the reporters (John Sutter) to fight him -- he pushed another reporter (Chris Bakdwin) across the room by attempting to poke Baldwin in the eyes. The reporters were polite by witnesses accounts and at all times referred to Cole as "sir."

The article, in a by-play to the Cole incident, reports that (5) "Last year, the [Review] staff published a list of members of the campus Gay and Lesbian organization and wrote letters to members families informing them of their child's sexual orientation." This statement is outright libel. The last Review article written on the Gay Student Organization was in 1984. The only members mentioned are the officers of the organization. At no time has the Review written to undergraduate parents.

I add, here, that more than 75 percent of the article is a mere rewording of articles that have appeared in the Daily Dartmouth, and that at no time did a reporter for The Issue contact the Review for a response.

Bill Grace is the Executive Editor of the Dartmouth Review.

S. African Indians must denounce apartheid

by Rajesh Swaminathan '92

World opinion has never been a reliable actor on the world stage, supporting and betraying causes with wild abandon. It is rare that the flame of conscience has burned for a protracted period of time in support of any issue. Given this pitiful record, it is heartening to note that a beacon of indignation has burned continuously over the shadowed veld of South Africa for over a decade. However, it is a concern fueled by blind anger at the perpetuation of systemic injustice, and as such, tends to focus on the more visible issues of Apartheid. It has glossed over one of the most terrible aspects of the phenomenon: the degradation of the black man by the brown. That South Africa has an ethnic Indian population is common knowledge; that they are not white and are thus victims of Apartheid also needs little elaboration. The tragedy is that the South African Indian may be emerging as a bulwark of Verwoerd's racist vision of "Grand Apartheid."

'Over time the color complex has been reinforced and concretized by the system...'

The Indian is an immigrant, like the South African Englishman and the Afrikaner; he came to the Cape first as an indentured laborer and then as a businessman. At the height of British Imperial power in the early 1880's, profitable trading ventures had been organized between West India and Southern Africa. Wealthy Indian trading clans emerged in South Africa as middlemen between the British overlords and the illiterate black peasant who worked his mines and fields. Today, several Indian cargo, retail and manufacturing firms function in an intermediary capacity between industrial or urban centers and the rural "homelands." It is that role, that intermediary capacity to serve as a middleman, that the Indian has repeatedly emphasized and sought to preserve.

The color complex is a phenomenon that has become deeply rooted in the Indian psyche in over five thousand years of civilization; fairer skin hues are generally preferred over the darker. In the context of the South African milieu, it does not mean that the Indian identity is common knowledge; that they are not white and are thus victims of Apartheid also needs little elaboration. The tragedy is that the South African Indian may be emerging as a bulwark of Verwoerd's racist vision of "Grand Apartheid."

Over time, the color complex has been reinforced and concretized by the system; the Indian has come to see himself as somehow different from the other races of color. Just as the Afrikaner has come to believe heart, mind and soul in racial superiority of the white man, the Indian has come to see himself above the black man, as somehow better. It is dubious whether he subscribes to the veracity and legitimacy of white supremacy, but he is willing to accept the status quo as a convenient myth, if nothing more.

The South African problem has been simmering dangerously over the past few years as black anger mounts. Yet, the Indian has maintained a politic silence; he is uninterested in political change for two reasons: first, that it might jeopardize his highly profitable role as a middleman, and second, that he is averse to black rule. When Soweto and other "townships" exploded in an orgy of violence in 1986, the Indian communities in Johannesburg and Cape Town distanced themselves from the anger and the suffering of the black man; in fact, Indian militias clashed repeatedly with black protestors; the Indians maintained that they were merely protecting their interests, but their belligerent and bigoted attitudes towards black aspirations were veiled but thinly.

The real tragedy, however, does not lie in isolated clashes between two gangs of hoodlums; it lies in the possibility that racism may have already been internalized by the South African Indian. The repressive social system of Apartheid has merely reinforced and concretized intrinsic cultural prejudices. This attitude complements the racism of white South Africa in an unholy, poisonous nexus dedicated to perpetuating the humiliation and the degradation of the black man.

Recently, one or two developments have shown that the winds of change may be finally clearing the stagnation of the Indian's conscience. Indian professionals, especially those in the legal profession, have begun to work in conjunction with national anti-Apartheid groups and parties; in fact, Winnie Mandela's attorney is an ethnic Indian. However heartening these changes may be, they are much too slight to be of any real consequence. Unless there is a profound attitudinal change on the part of the Indian, bigotry will flourish unchecked. Unless there is change, tension between the black and brown man can only grow; and the pale specter of racial injustice can only stand to gain from a house thus divided.

MassMoca commission selects design team

by Greg Hart

Last Tuesday, after 16 hours of deliberations, the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art (Mass MoCA) Cultural Development Commission selected a design team of architectural firms from a field of 29 proposals. The team will conduct a feasibility study on the further conversion of the North Adams Sprague Electric complex into the world's largest museum of contemporary art.

While the cooperative effort of the four selected firms from New York City, Santa Monica, Philadelphia and Cambridge will result in a tentative architectural plan for the project, the final architect for the conversion of the complex will not be decided until one year from now, according to Andrea DeMayo of Mass MoCA.

"The commission has made it fairly clear that they are keeping their options open," DeMayo said, adding that the current firms are not necessarily the ones which will submit the final architectural plan.

The feasibility study will propose architectural plans for the project and submit prospective plans for traffic, construction, and the division of the 13-acre, 28-building site into areas for commercial as well as museum capacities.

Old or new?

There is some debate among commission members and North Adams residents over the form of the new museum, according to DeMayo. Many favor retaining the favor and character of the mill by keeping the existing buildings basically intact, while others hope to see a more radical design which makes an architectural statement. The feasibility study team will have something of a free hand in what they propose, but they are following certain guidelines. "The commission wants the architectural plans to be sensitive to the conditions of the mill, but they are not expecting every building to remain intact," DeMayo said.

She added that the commission wishes to retain the existing atmosphere of the mill to some degree. The final architects will work closely with the commission to achieve a balance between renovation and preservation.

"The feasibility study team will be designing prototype galleries, but a commission subcommittee for art and architecture will work closely with the final design team," DeMayo said.

The study is expected to be completed in seven months, at which point it will be presented to the state Executive Office of Administration and Finance. The office must approve the plan before the state legislature can release the $33 million which it has designated for the project.

Firemen nearly confronted with Mission impossible

continued from page 1

sustained fire damage, Fire Chief Edward McGowan said.

"If it had blown up it would have been shrapnel. It would have killed firemen," he said.

McGowan said that the arsonists were methodical. "It looks like they hoped to go in a row-one right after another, hoping that the others would catch right along," he said.

In addition, Kennedy said, they hoisted the Williams bus from a nearby lot, and drove it to block the entrance. They also removed the ignition so the bus could not be moved. The firemen had to go in over the fence, he said. According to McGowan, the heat was initially so intense that the firemen could not get close enough to use dry foam extinguishers. After soaking the interiors of the burning cars with water, the fire fighters moved in to extinguish the gasoline fires.

The district attorney's office and the state fire marshal have been called in to investigate. The Department of Environmental Quality and Engineering was also called in because of the hazard caused by the gasoline that was spilled. People could not drive their cars in the lot until Friday because of the risk of an explosion. Security moved the cars into nearby lots Thursday.

Zoloz said that if any student was in the area at the time of the arson and saw or heard anything, he or she should come talk to him.

A Clean Beshkires Inc truck sits idle after cleaning up the gas spill in the Mission Park parking lot. The spill was caused by an arsonists attempt to torch 85 cars. (Ward)

How has Alcohol Awareness Week made you reevaluate your drinking at Williams?

"Yes, I'm thinking of using it to other ways. No, but seriously, I think it's very important issue. And I've put a lot of valuable thought to it."--Matt Tarses '90

"I think it's beneficial to raise these questions, but I would resent any institutional reform to limit my actions and choices."--Josh Kurzbien '91

"This week has enlightened me. I now realize how foolish and silly drinking is. I can't begin how stupid I've been and I plan to stop consuming this Friday night."--Matthew Wyckel '91

"I think that they may be over-reacting to the situation. Although a lot of people at Williams may drink excessively, it is simply because the atmosphere of college life. I do not think this will continue after college."--Molly Foehl '91

"Alcohol Awareness Week has made me give up alcohol altogether because it made me realize how foolish I was. I realize I was wrong from the right path. I've found my way."--Kim Mugler '91

"Yes it has. Now instead of drinking beer, I drink shots of bourbon to improve my Marlboro man image."--Russell Workman '89

SUNY campus reels in wake of racial brawl

(College Press Service)--It may have been the most frightening outbreak of campus racism of the year so far. Then, too, it could be a case of a student newspaper misreporting a simple fight. Or it could be an instance of a university refusing to address the kind of racial tensions present on many campuses and thus, as minority students contend, end up encouraging them.

"It's a cover-up," said Stephen Murray, a black student who says that on September 18 he was chased from the State University of New York at Brockport's campus nightclub by about a dozen white students--most of them members of the wrestling team--wielding bats and clubs and yelling racial insults at him after he had brawled with two of the men.

It is, in any case, exactly the kind of incident students and administrators have been working to avoid.

Exactly two years ago, in October, 1986, in a strikingly similar event, five white University of Massachusetts at Amherst students topped off their disappointment about the outcome of a New York Mets-Boston Red Sox baseball game by beating up a black classmate.

After that event, racial tensions spread alarmingly to campuses nationwide. Fights, sit-ins, marches and even student strikes erupted at Fairleigh Dickinson and Mississippi State universities, at Dartmouth, Tompkins-Cortland, Rutgers State and Hampshire colleges as well as at the universities of California-Berkeley, Illinois and Michigan, to name but a few.

The unprecedented string of confrontations--probably exceeded in modern college history only by the violence and rioting that marred the first attempt to integrate the universities of Alabama and Mississippi in the late fifties and early sixties--provoked fears college would remain segregated forever.

In response, many colleges have tried to teach white students to appreciate diversity and, as UMass race relations Professor Meyer Weinberg put it, ease black students' sense of isolation and alienation.

The universities of Florida, Michigan and California-Santa Barbara as well as Duke and Penn State, among others, have sponsored carefully integrated parties and "sensitivity" sessions to prevent troubles like this.

But such efforts don't always help. "Minorities are not streaming to UMass even though the university has done a lot of things to make it more appealing," Weinberg notes.

And at the University of Mississippi, for example, an unknown arsonist in August burned down a house that was about to become the first Fraternity Row building ever used by black students.

In early October, black University of Texas major Kenneth Avery filed a complaint against UT-Austin police officers, who had detained him because they were looking for "a black man with a briefcase."

And a SUNY-Brockport student sensitivity seminar didn't prevent the events of September 18.

Murray recounts a scary story of getting into a scuffle with two wrestling team members after they bumped while dancing at the campus nightclub. Heading advice to go outside to "cool

continued on page 8

Van puts senior citizens, disabled on the road again

by Dan Skwire

Help is on the way for the elderly citizens of Williamstown who have trouble getting around on their own. According to Lynn Hood, executive director of the Williamstown Council on Aging, a group of young people apparently believe that the more they pay for college, the better the college must be.

The van, which is specially-equipped with a wheelchair lift, will also be used to transport three or four handicapped children to and from school each day. "They [the children] will be able to go to school in a more dignified fashion," said Anthony Cangelosi, co-chairman of the fund-raising committee for the project.

Hood said that a state grant of $21,000 covered most of the price of the van, and the town government has agreed to pay for additional costs, including maintenance and the salary of the driver. The Properties of America Foundation has also made contributions toward the project totaling $9,000 over the last two years. In the future, regular operating costs will be covered through voluntary donations from those who use the service. According to Cangelosi, the Council on Aging hopes to raise additional money at a banquet to be given at the Williams Inn on December 11. He said that many local establishments have donated money to underwrite the fund-raiser.

"What you have here is businesses, private citizens, and government working together for the benefit of the elderly," he said. "In addition, we hope that students will become involved."

Cangelosi said that the program is particularly in need of people to help in selling tickets and publicizing the banquet. Anyone interested in volunteering may contact him at 458-8030 or the Williamstown Council on Aging at 458-8250.

College considers new surveillance system

by Rob Weinberg

The irony of last Wednesday's arson at the Mission Park parking lot was that Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards had been considering a closed-circuit television system and additional lighting for the area for some time.

"[Additional lighting fixtures] probably would have been installed during phase three of the lighting plan. But now, with the incident at the lot, they've been moved up. They're a pretty high priority now," she said.

Also now under serious consideration are a closed-circuit television system to monitor the lot and a direct telephone line to the security office to decrease response time to incidents.

"We don't know what the timetable is for the closed-circuit system," Edwards said. "A consultant has come down, and we have received an estimate for the cost of the system. The fire was called down to the security office, which will monitor the lot. But we are going ahead with it rapidly." Edwards said she could not comment on the specifics of either the television system or phone line, since the project is still in its planning stages. However, she said that the proposed phone line would go directly to security and would require no dialing.

The new lights will differ from the additions made on campus so far. "The additional lighting will probably be in the form of floodlights, suspended high above the lot, not the pole lamps being installed now," Edwards said.

Presently, security patrols monitor the lot irregularly, according to Edwards. "I would say they check at least every two hours. But the times they check the lot change each night."

She added that this variation is deliberate so that no regular pattern can be established. "And this was literally a lifesaver that night. The fire was called down to the security office, which will monitor the lot. But we are going ahead

In Other Ivory Towers

Greeks protest alcohol policy
University of Pennsylvania

More than 70 fraternity members chained 21 empty beer kegs together to form a blockade across Locust Walk at the University of Pennsylvania in the first open protest of the University's alcohol policy. The students blocked pedestrian traffic from noon until 1:30, while chanting protest slogans, singing, "You've got to fight for your right to party," and calling for passers by to join them. After one student was injured attempting to climb over a wall in an attempt to circumvent the blockade, the protest was quickly broken up. One student involved with the protest said, "I think the reason behind it was to let the administration know that the fraternities are still very serious--it's not something that we're going to let get away. This is the other end of the racist [discussions we've had with the administration]. This is our show of strength." Some students were annoyed at the blockade; however, senior Jill Geoff said, "There's apartheid, people are starving, the world is crumbling, and we're here protesting a keg ban? Do you think this is ridiculous? I think this is ridiculous."

Violence and Racism
Smith

Smith's sense of security has been challenged by a number of break-ins, assaults and rapes over the last few months. So far this year, there has been one rape, one assault, and two reported entries through first story windows on campus. Last year there were seven reported cases of assault and battery and one reported rape, as well as 18 cases of breaking and entering. 248 reported "suspicious persons," 24 indecent exposures and four cases of trespassing. The head of Smith security claims that they have been trying to become more visible on campus as a result of the incidents. Two notes with racial slurs which have been slipping under students' doors have also disturbed the community. Since the beginning of the year, the college has been searching for an affirmative action officer and developing a plan for Institutional Diversity. As a result of these changes, Associate Dean for Student Affairs Carol Weinberg believes that a wave of racist feeling "coming to the surface is not unexpected," but added that the College's objective "is to make this the kind of place where things like this don't need to happen."

In Other Ivory Towers was collected from other college papers.

interviews by Miriam Marcus and Amy Beilveue

Eating clubs continue to ban women

(College Press Service)—Princeton University's two all-male "eating clubs" don't have to admit women after all, an appeals court has ruled.

The decision reversed a 1987 New Jersey state order that the clubs, which many observers see as the start of the "good old boy" network that encourages grads to hire each other—let women join them.

In fact, much of Princeton's social life revolves around the 13 clubs, where most juniors and senior eat. By excluding women, the clubs effectively isolate them from some of the career opportunities that arise from the "network," lawyers for Princeton graduate Sally Frank—who began fighting for admission as a junior nearly a decade ago—argue.

The three-judge panel ruled October 4 that lower courts had made procedural errors that kept the clubs from getting a fair hearing.

The Ivy Club and the Tiger Inn are the only two clubs that bar women. The other nine clubs on campus began admitting women in 1969, when Princeton itself went coed.

Other campuses
Yet other clubs on other campuses remain segregated.

Two "secret societies" at Yale, for example, have refused to admit women. New York's all-male University Club, founded as an urban refuge for grads for various Ivy League schools, voted last year to ignore local anti-discrimination laws and continue excluding women. Harvard, like Princeton, also has all-male eating clubs.

"Of course I'm disappointed that the court decided to reverse on a technicality and that, as a result, the clubs will be able to continue discriminating for several years," Frank said. "But I remain committed as ever to eliminating the clubs' policies barring women."

"The court has ordered what we have sought for quite a while: due process," said Barbara Strapp Nelson, a lawyer for the Ivy Club. "Now, Ivy will finally receive the fair hearing it is entitled to as to whether it is a private or public accommodation."

Pamela Poff, director of the New Jersey Division of Civil Rights, had rejected an earlier ruling by an administrative law judge who said the clubs did not have to admit women as long as they severed their ties to the university. Poff said the clubs were public accommodations subject to anti-discrimination laws, and could be required to admit women.

A month after Poff's ruling, the Tiger Inn's Board of Governors voted to cut any ties to the school rather than be forced to admit women. Officials said they eliminated ties with Princeton's intramural sports program, pulled out of the Intracub Council, and even asked that college-owned snowplows raise their blades when they passed the club's building.

Nine students participated as panelists in a discussion at Baxter last Thursday entitled "Why Wasted at Williams." (Kershaw)

College targets alcohol awareness

continued from page 1

meeting was over, Rebecca Borden '91 questioned whether the discussion had reached the correct audience.

"The people that showed up here tonight are the people that are already aware [of the problems of alcohol use on campus]," Borden said, "and the people that aren't here are the ones who should be."

Hec-Sun Hong '90 then cautioned about making stereotypes. "We need to remember that drinking doesn't define who we are. I think we often make a lot of generalizations about drinkers and non-drinkers."

Assistant Dean Andrew Hernandez emphasized the importance of alcohol education as a way of dealing with the issue, which was why students received dominate the social scene," he said. "But students shouldn't feel that's the only model they have."

"There's a national movement afoot

'It's not a direct pressure. You're just fighting a feeling of being left out.'

copies of the college's party policy last Tuesday. He said the purpose of the policy is to protect the college from liability without having the college police social life.

"You'll always have students who are going to party and these people may to examine alcohol use in general and on campuses in particular," Hernandez said. "It's important that the impetus for such awareness comes from the students, instead of the staff or administration."

Fingerhut recalls heavy work in pro theater

continued from page 1

Fingerhut called the work a very successful collaboration, but added that the three weeks spent in Japan, where the American actors were rehearsing for The Tale of Genji, were very strenuous. "It's a very remote place in the Japan Alps. You have to fly there from Tokyo and then it's an hour on a very thin and steep road. And there are poisonous snakes all over the place," she said.

Isolation beneficial
But, she added, the isolation and tough work schedule had its beneficial effect. "I was able to watch the rehearsal. There's never any time in America to do that. There was nothing else to do, so my concentration was excellent—I took volumes of notes."

In addition to her work in Japan, she said was working simultaneously on three other productions, and added that this kind of workload is not at all unusual.

"Before I came to Williams, I was working on 20-25 a year. At any one time, I usually had four or five going on," she said. "The average [lighting] work for a show would include dealing with ordering the equipment from shops, and then getting it all moved into the theater," she said.

Unlike the actors, who have weeks to prepare, the lighting must be ready in a far shorter time, she added. "We usually started three to four days before the audience came in. Of course," Fingerhut said, "those were 18-hour days. And that was week after week. And some of the work I was doing was in different parts of the country."

Driving Miss Daisy
This work included lighting for several Broadway shows. A currently running one, Driving Miss Daisy, won a Pulitzer.

"I thought about a career in the professional theater. But it's very grueling. I felt burned out. I had been working in theater for 15 solid years before coming to Williams. I was very rattled, and felt like I was treading water. I wanted to get control of my own life. When you work in the theater, you live at the mercy of the next telephone call. What I'm doing now is much safer," she said.

Fingerhut added that she prefers to work with projects that are not primarily commercial—the object of the production is to make money. Sometimes it's very good work, but the object is to sell tickets. Driving Miss Daisy is a non-commercial show. It's a commercial success, but it's still good," she said. "Still, sometimes it's easier to work commercially. In non-commercial theater, you work with these vague ideas about art. If I had a choice, I'd work with non-commercial projects. But very often, you barely keep alive."

FINISH LINE

A viewer's guide to the political races of 1988
November 1

New York University School of Law invites Williams College students to an Information Session

Todd Morton, Director of Recruitment Admissions Services at the New York University School of Law will be visiting the Williams campus to speak about the Law School and the admissions process.

Thursday, October 27
1:00-3:00 P.M.

Contact the Office of Career Counseling to obtain additional information and to sign up for an appointment.

EST. 1827

Williams College

Levi's

Adidas Shoes

All Athletic Equipment

Custom Printed T-Shirts

Everything for Men & Women

Recreation Sales & Service

Clean Rings

Gifts

280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"

THE ONE-STOP SHOP FOR YOUR
HOMECOMING WEEKEND SUPPLIES

As always, discount prices on:
Liquor-Imported and Domestic Wines-Ice-Cups
Great specials on mixers: $5.99/case+deposit
-Cold Kegs in Stock-

Mon. - Sat. 9 a.m.-11 p.m.
PROPER I.D. REQUIRED

Arts

Michael Hedges strums his way to the front of the new acoustic

by Travis Pierson

In a whirlwind exhibit of guitar technique and new age idealism, guitarist and songwriter Michael Hedges performed last Saturday at the Berkshire Performing Arts Center in Lenox. Hedges is at the forefront of the new era of acoustic guitarists, and is known for his extraordinary, virtuoso guitar work that can make one instrument sound like many performing at once. Hedges' move to expand his sound to include vocals has met with a mixed response by the public, but the recent audience's reception at his only New England performance on this tour gave no signs of being halfhearted.

Hedges, besides being famous for his many music styles, is also the man of many hairstyles, having used to sport crowns, then a buzz cut, and now, a shaggy head that makes him vaguely resemble Michael Musto, at least from the second to last row in the auditorium, where I was sitting.

Music

But whatever his hairstyle, Hedges' guitar work seemed to remain creative and flawless and unequivocally admired by the Performing Arts Center audience. The Performing Arts Center, a relatively new structure, is a good sized hall with wood paneling that feels both comfortable and contemporary (If you've ever wondered where all of the neo-hippy, rastafarian, new age, arsy and pseudo-arsy, and yuppie types in the Berkshires go to have fun, check out a Windham Hill artist at the Performing Arts Center. There are not many places where one can see a guy in dreadlocks next to a woman in pearls and a beading crystal. I overheard one woman telling her friend about a guy who "exudes inner peace," and saw Harmonic Convergence quality-hugs aplenty. But the variety of people only added to and reflected Hedges' multi-sourced music.)

Neo-acoustic Variety

Hedges is one of Windham Hill's top selling artists. But the label may gradually become more of a hindrance to Hedges as its critical reputation dwindles and Hedges becomes more and more unlike the schmaltzy instrumentalists that the Hill is known for. His last album, "Live from the Double Planet," was Windham Hill's first live album by a single artist, and its combination of vocal and instrumental selections demonstrated his ability to mix and merge popular styles successfully.

He has called his music "Heavy Mental," for the metal-inspired chords into his songs. But his influences are broader than this, ranging from Leo Kottke to the Beatles, Stravinsky to Eugene Chadbourne, and Todd Rundgren to Crosby, Stills, and Nash. His style is unique, not really falling into a folk, jazz, or new age label; and due to his musical education, which included the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, and Stanford, where he studied electronic music, he always considered himself a composer rather than a guitar player, and created his own way of doing things. In an interview with MusiC magazine, he talked about his love for Eugene Chadbourne and Zappa/Beethoven, and said, "I'm telling you some of this stuff because I don't want you to think that I'm this California native who goes on rafting trips and lives in the mountains and writes guitar arpeggios."

Covers old to new
He began this set with a cover of "So you want to be a rock n' roll star," making clear from the start that he would not fit into any new age mold. He followed that with the Stones' "Jumpin' Jack Flash," and followed it up with an original called "I'm coming home."

When he pulled out his 1920's Dyer harp guitar, a small gap went through the audience. The mammoth instrument features six strings on the bottom and five bass strings on the top and has a normal neck as well as another, large covering one for the bass strings. He uses it like his regular guitar, but he is essentially playing two instruments at once. On both guitars, he plucks and picks, furiously running over the fretboard and percussing them as if they were multiple instruments, while simultaneously picking back and forth as if in some sort of musical frenzy.

After a short intermission, he launched into a cover of "Pinball Wizard," followed by an original instrumental called "Ritual Dance." His songs often have a personal bent, as in his medley of "Rickie's Shuffle" and "Dancing in the Backseat," which he dedicated to his brother.

The audience gave Hedges several standing ovations, and he gave two encores, including his now famous cover of the Beatles' "Come Together," which allowed him to assemble all of the best elements of the evening—honest vocals, audience involvement, and incredible guitar work—without seeming as if he was showing off just for the sake of showing his skill.

One problem with Hedges is his lyrics, both those that he has chosen by other artists and his own, which seem too closely tied to a sixties-era idealism to convincingly act as the voice of the eighties. But his guitar work is of an age—it has learned from them all, and yet can be fixed to none.

Michael Hedges before he let his hair down

Pascali's Island: Make a visit

by Brian Bugbee

Pascali's Island is more than anything else, a film about the decay of cultural morals. Deception, inhumanity and disregard for human life are revealed through Pascali (Ben Kingsley), a dissatisfied Turkish spy living on a Greek island. He reports on suspicious happenings to his superiors in Constantinople, but he rightly fears that no one reads his reports. He is a middle-aged failure with a meaningless job and an unrequited love. The object of his

a matter of days, something which Kingsley has been unable to do over the course of several years.

Like Passage to India, this film touches on the problem of outsiders in an alien culture. Dance's character is supposedly conducting research for a book, but his true goal turns out to be turning a quick profit by deceiving the ruling pasha of the island through what-over scheming, plotting and double-crossing tricks are necessary. What on the surface seems like the dull story of an archeologist searching for artifacts becomes a subtle drama about trust and deception. Add to this a romantic subplot filled with dramatic tension, and Pascali's Island reveals itself to be an engaging and enveloping movie.

The acting is uniformly superb, especially Ben Kingsley's convincing portrayal of the pitiful intellectual whose talents are wasted on people who just don't care. The pacing of the movie is excellent—new twists are constantly introduced into the movie. Simultaneous with all of this human intrigue, the cinematography captures the beauty of the Greek island of Rhodes, combining for a visual and mental cinematic experience.

Pascali's Island is being shown at Images through Thursday.

Arts in View

Tonight at 8 PM, the Hilliard Ensemble will be performing works by medieval and contemporary composers in Brooks-Rogers. Admission is $5, or free with Williams ID. Also tonight at 8, in Laurence 231, sculptor Dennis Oppenheim will give a slide lecture on his monumental works. On Thursday, also in Laurence 231, photographer Marie Cosindas will give a lecture on her work at 8 PM. Starting Thursday as well, Williams Theatre will present Bertolt Brecht's "The Good Person of Szechwan," directed by Professor David Toppel. It will also be performed Oct. 28 and 29, and Nov. 3 and 4. Tickets are $3, or $2 with Williams ID. On Friday, The David Dorfman Dance Company of New York City will perform in Lasei Dance Studio on Friday, Oct. 28 at 8 PM. The Williams Octet will perform Dorfman's award-winning choreography in Chapin Hall at 8 PM... and at 8 PM Saturday, the Williams Jazz Ensemble will give a concert in Chapin Hall. Admission is $5, or free with Williams ID.

Sing "Siegfried" in your sleep?
Have Baryshnikov's home phone?
Find Hamlet a lot of fun to be around?
Know your Fluxus from your Dada?

If you answer "Yes" to at least one of these, then we want you for the Record Arts section. Call 597-2289 or leave a message at 597-6516 for more information.

Facials
Manicures
Body Waxing

Nail Tips
Linen Wraps
Haircutting

HEAD-TO-TOE

9:00-5:00
Tuesday-Saturday
(413)458-5020

173 Water Street
Williamstown, MA 01267

AMERICAN EXPRESS REPRESENTATIVE
THE TRAVEL STORE
We make great vacations!
Lowest prices available with great rates for Thanksgiving, Christmas, Spring Break and Summer Vacation.
Super Packages Available to all Destinations We Handle All Charters

REMEMBER: There is NEVER a Fee For Our Services!!!
Hours: Mon.-Fri. 9-5, Thurs., 9-8, Sat. 9-12
105 Spring St. 458-5786 Williamstown

NCBI looks at racial problems

continued from page 1

son works out their own way to deal with the prejudice. Afterwards, the group discusses the different ways of dealing with the situation. Reichert said that people who participated would then be able to train others.

Workshops a possibility
Brown and Arlene Allen came to campus Wednesday to make an assessment of the existing problems. Reichert said that the NCBI will contact him this week with a recommendation on whether or not to hold the workshops.

Brown said that they spent the day trying to get to know Williams. Their activities included a lunch with minority faculty and three meetings with students. "The kinds of questions we've been asking all day is 'what kind of a place is Williams?'" Brown said.

Students were invited to the meetings by letters from Edwards. The first and third meetings, Brown said, were with students who were invited as a part of a group outside the mainstream. The second meeting was with past and present Junior Advisors. "We just basically talked about how we as individuals felt here," said Jillian Charles '91, who attended the third meeting.

"We all have been conditioned an enormous amount," Brown said. The NCBI tries to teach people to recognize stereotypes and to be able to interpret racial slurs, she said.

Change attitudes
Allen said that fighting institutional prejudice may be more important, but by changing attitudes they could help get people involved in more important ways.

"The better shape you're in yourself, the easier it is to get in touch with other people," she said.

Brown said that the Williams students they talked to said everyone was polite and tolerant, but people were not suppose to be too radical. "We heard it was okay to be different, but that people should not stand out or make demands [at Williams]," Allen said. She mentioned the Jenness takeover and the recent protest in the display case in Baxter as two incidents which students said were perceived negatively by most of the student body.

T. Stubbie Bottem '89, who was at the second meeting, said "They just wanted us to let them know of any prejudice or cultural-type ignorance we'd seen on campus."

He said that they were curious about the Junior Advisor system and how freshmen are socialized. Bottem said that one of the main issues discussed was the separation of some minorities from students outside their own racial background.

Bottem said they also discussed the existence of overt gay and lesbian bashing on campus and how it was not perceived as an issue.

Shea Friedland '91 (left) and Will Morris '89 were two of the students who met with members of the National Coalition Building Institute last week. The institute runs prejudice-reduction workshops. (Staff photo)

photo works

if it has anything to do with photography we do it here.

Supplies & Cameras

Affordable Framing
Distinctive Portraits
Weddings, Groups
Seniors, Teams

4 Water Street
Williamstown
458-3113

pip Camera Ready
PRINTING Resumes

Offset Printed in just a few hours!

53 Main St.
North Adams, MA
663-3414

50¢
$17.70

Easy Work! Excellent Pay!
Assemble Products at home
Cell (312) 741-8400 for info
Ext. A-1868

RICHARD D. SIMPSON G. VINCENT COUSSOLE

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
BETSY BURBANK

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4808

COUNCIL ON INTERNATIONAL EDUCATIONAL EXCHANGE

Presentation on CIEE's WORK ABROAD programs in:

- *Great Britain
- *Ireland
- *France
- *Germany
- *New Zealand
- *Costa Rica
- *Jamaica

November 1st at 1:00 PM
Stetson Hall, Office of Career Counseling

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

You can count on the Williams Record

As a Marine Officer, you could be in charge of a Mach 2 + F/A-18A, a vertical take-off Harrier or one of our other jets or helicopters. And you could do it by the time you're 23. But it takes a special commitment on your part. We demand leaders at all levels. We teach you to be one. If you're a freshman, sophomore, or junior, ask about our Platoon Leaders Class program. If you're a senior, check out our Officer Candidate Class programs. Starting salaries are from $18,000 to $24,000. And you can count on going further... faster.

Go farther... faster.

We're looking for a few good ones.

Marines

See Captain Chapla
10 am - 2 pm
in the mailroom, Baxter Hall

Thursday, October 27, 1988.

or call 1 (800) 255-8762

Work late nights
for low pay.

Join the Williams Record
news staff.

Stop by the Record office.
Baxter B12
7:56 p.m. Sunday

Don't Make A Grave Error!

Remember friends,
family with Hallmark
Halloween cards!

McClelland's

36 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
413-597-8151

Council Travel

DON'T WAIT!
BOOK NOW FOR
THE HOLIDAYS!

From $69 per person

LONDON	199
PARIS	219
ROME	269
	round trip
CARACAS	320
ST. THOMAS	260
HONGKONG	739

Taxes not included.
Also: Work Study Abroad, Language Courses, Int'l Student ID, Youth Hostel Passes.
EUROIL Passes issued on the spot!
Call for the FREE CIEE Student Travel Catalog!
413-256-1261
AMHERST
79 So. Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002

GO TO MEDICAL SCHOOL

TUITION PAID

Find out how you can have your medical school tuition, required books and fees paid in full—plus earn more than $600 a month while you attend school. Clip and mail the coupon below, and we'll send you full details on the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program.

We'll tell you how you could qualify for a Physician's Scholarship from the Army, Navy or Air Force.

If selected, you'll not only beat the high cost of medical school, you'll also gain valuable medical experience serving on active duty 45 days each school year as a commissioned officer in the Reserves.

After graduation, you'll serve three years or more—depending on the Service you select and the level of scholarship assistance you receive—as a respected Armed Forces physician. You'll also get good pay, regular hours, great benefits and the chance to work with a variety of patients and the latest medical technology.

If you meet the age requirements noted below for the Service of your choice—and want to cut the expense of medical school—send for more information today.

YES! Send me full details on how the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program can help cut my medical school expenses! I meet the age requirements noted below. I understand I am under no obligation. Mail this coupon to: Armed Forces Scholarships, P.O. Box 2865, Huntington Station, NY 11746-2102.

Check up to three: ☐ Army (21-35 years of age) ☐ Navy (18-35 years of age) ☐ Air Force (18-35 years of age)

Please print all information clearly and completely.

Name: _____ Middle Initial: _____ Last: _____
Address: _____ Apt. # _____
City: _____ State: _____ Zip: _____
Phone: _____ Area Code: _____ Number: _____
Birth Date: _____
College: _____
Field of Study: _____
Graduation Date: _____

The information you voluntarily provide will be used for recruiting purposes only. The more complete it is, the better we can respond to your request. (Authority: 32 USC 562)

GO TO MEDICAL SCHOOL

TUITION PAID

Find out how you can have your medical school tuition, required books and fees paid in full—plus earn more than $600 a month while you attend school. Clip and mail the coupon below, and we'll send you full details on the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program.

We'll tell you how you could qualify for a Physician's Scholarship from the Army, Navy or Air Force.

If selected, you'll not only beat the high cost of medical school, you'll also gain valuable medical experience serving on active duty 45 days each school year as a commissioned officer in the Reserves.

After graduation, you'll serve three years or more—depending on the Service you select and the level of scholarship assistance you receive—as a respected Armed Forces physician. You'll also get good pay, regular hours, great benefits and the chance to work with a variety of patients and the latest medical technology.

If you meet the age requirements noted below for the Service of your choice—and want to cut the expense of medical school—send for more information today.

YES! Send me full details on how the Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship Program can help cut my medical school expenses! I meet the age requirements noted below. I understand I am under no obligation. Mail this coupon to: Armed Forces Scholarships, P.O. Box 2865, Huntington Station, NY 11746-2102.

Check up to three: ☐ Army (21-35 years of age) ☐ Navy (18-35 years of age) ☐ Air Force (18-35 years of age)

Please print all information clearly and completely.

Name: _____ Middle Initial: _____ Last: _____
Address: _____ Apt. # _____
City: _____ State: _____ Zip: _____
Phone: _____ Area Code: _____ Number: _____
Birth Date: _____
College: _____
Field of Study: _____
Graduation Date: _____

The information you voluntarily provide will be used for recruiting purposes only. The more complete it is, the better we can respond to your request. (Authority: 32 USC 562)

Local Movie Listings

(subject to change after Thursday)

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179

Gorillas in the Mist	7:00 & 9:20
Imagine	7:00 & 9:15
Memories of Me	7:00 & 9:15

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

Pascoli's Island	through Thursday 7:00 & 9:00
Pink Floyd: The Wall	7:00 & 10:15
A Fish Called Wanda	beginning Friday 8:30
The Milagro Beanfield War	7:00
Stand and Deliver	beginning Sunday 9:00

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873

Memories of Me	7:00 & 9:15
Alien Nation	7:00 & 9:15
Imagine	7:00 & 9:15
Halloween IV	7:00 & 9:15

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

A Fish Called Wanda, Imagine, Gorillas in the Mist, Pouch Line, The Accused, Dead Ringers

Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30

Who Framed Roger Rabbit (early show only), Big, Alien Nation, Sweetheart's Dance (late show only), Halloween IV, Married to the Mob: Sun-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30

Berkshire Mail Cinema
Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2558

Punch Line	1:25	4:10	7:00	9:40
Die Hard	12:45	3:40	6:30	9:30
Who Framed Roger Rabbit	1:00	3:30	6:50	9:15
The Accused	1:15	4:00	7:25	9:50
Halloween IV	1:30	4:15	7:30	10:00
Imagine	1:05	3:35	6:55	9:20
Clean and Sober	1:10	3:55	7:20	9:45
A Fish Called Wanda	1:20	4:05	7:10	9:35
Sweetheart's Dance	12:55	3:50	7:15	9:55
Gorillas in the Mist	12:50	3:45	6:40	9:25

Elvis Costello "Out of Our Idiot" $4.99
The Moon & the Melodies (Cocteau Twins) $4.99
Roxy Music (several early titles) each $4.99
Ornette Coleman "In All Languages" $5.99
Bruce Cockburn "Stealing Fire" $3.99
Talking Heads "True Stories" $3.99
Peter Tosh "Equal Rights" $3.99

Some LPs of these on sale, too

Toonerville Trolley Records
131 Water Street 10:00-6:00 458-5229

Kidder Peabody

Invites the Graduating Class of 1989 to an Information Session
at
The Office of Career Counseling
7:00 PM
Wednesday,
October 26

To discuss opportunities in Investment Banking

Harvard Business School Looking Ahead to the MBA

The Harvard University Graduate School of Business Administration seeks top graduates with a career interest in general management.

An Admissions Officer will be on campus
FRIDAY OCTOBER 28

to speak with students about work experience and the two-year MBA Program.

For more details and to sign up for an information session contact:

Office of Career Counseling
X2311

Harvard Business School is committed to the principle of equal educational opportunity.

Adopt a Smoker
Help a friend quit

Peace Corps.
The toughest job you'll ever love.

Creative decision-making.
It's the rule, not the exception, at Chubb.

The property/casualty insurance business demands an ability to make carefully calculated, creative decisions. It involves the highest sort of risk, and is the least predictable form of insurance.

Why? It has been said that people die more or less "on schedule." But who can predict when/if a bridge will collapse, an ocean liner will sink, a trusted employee will embezzle, or a home will be burglarized?

Creative thinkers make successful property/casualty insurance professionals. We should know. It's been our business for over 100 years.

Chubb's National Recruiting Coordinator Mike Oppe will be on hand Thursday, October 27th for an information meeting beginning at 8:00 p.m. in the Office of Career Counseling. He'll be joined by Williams Alumnae Darrin Glymph '85.

We cordially invite you to stop by and learn more about Chubb, and our innovative way of doing business. If you're a creative thinker, you will be interested to hear what we have to say.

Group of Insurance Companies
Warren, NJ 07060

An Equal Opportunity Employer M/F

SPORTS SHORTS

M. X-Country

After a night of heavy rainfall, the Williams men's cross-country team took on MIT and Tufts on the wet and slippery Taconic Golf Course Saturday. Tufts captured the meet with 32 points, while Williams was second (47) and MIT third (50).

MIT would have fared better if they had just a little more depth. Their front-runners were very impressive, particularly Sean Kelley, who won the race with a time of 25:57, the fastest time of the year for the course. Kelley outkicked Tufts Steve Drake, who was two seconds back in second place. The third spot in the race also went to MIT, but that was the extent of their success. The key to victory for Williams was Dale Johnson. Johnson was coming off a poor showing at the NESCAC Championships the previous week, and was intent upon avoiding a repeat performance.

"I just have to keep my mind in the race," he said. "I need to get into high gear early, and then remember that I can keep up the pace. My head wasn't in the NESCAC race, but I stayed focused today."

4:59 split

Johnson definitely succeeded in getting out fast, as he cruised through the first mile with the race leaders in 4:59. While Kelley and Drake, two of the top runners in New England, surged to the lead, Johnson stayed with the lead pack and teammate John McKinley '92. Working through the tough hills on the golf course, they held on to the fifth and sixth spots, and distanced themselves from the remainder of the field. Johnson pulled away during the last mile to take fifth in 26:57, while McKinley was five seconds back, withstanding a late charge by Tufts' Marc Michael. Gil McCabe '89 (ninth in 27:22), Brian Coan '92 (12th in 27:28), and Evan Driscoll (15th in 27:42) finished the scoring for the Ephs.

Williams now gears up for the Little Three Championships, to be held Saturday at Amherst. The Ephs top competition will come from Wesleyan, as the Cardinals are slight favorites to win the title they have captured once in the last nineteen years. Defending champion Amherst has an outside shot at winning the individual title in 18:30, but the host team only managed to put one other runner in the top ten, as their number two placed fifth. Williams, on the other hand, put all five of its scoring runners in the top ten, and in a field of 108 finishers all of the Ephs placed in the upper half.

Anne Platt '91 again spearheaded the Williams victory, running a quick 19:22 in spite of the slippery conditions to grab fourth overall. Forming a remarkable pack behind her came freshmen Molly Martin and Andrea Cady, Ann Dannbauer '90, and Cherie MacAuley '92, who placed 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th ahead of Smith's third and fourth runners (10th and 11th) respectively to seal the win. Cathy Cocks '89 and Stacey Smith '90 rounded out the varsity in 12th and 14th holding off the final scorer for Smith (16th) in reality if not on the scoreboard.

With another hard week ahead before starting post-season play the Ephsomen are looking forward to testing their strength against the UVM. Ahead of Smith's third and fourth runners (10th and 11th) respectively to seal the win. Cathy Cocks '89 and Stacey Smith '90 rounded out the varsity in 12th and 14th holding off the final scorer for Smith (16th) in reality if not on the scoreboard.

Perhaps trying to negate Williams' formidable advantage in depth, Smith disallowed the usual practice of having the 6th and 7th team members displace the scoring runners behind them but even that couldn't stop the Ephs.

Williams now gears up for the Little Three Championships, to be held Saturday at Amherst. The Ephs top competition will come from Wesleyan, as the Cardinals are slight favorites to win the title they have captured once in the last nineteen years. Defending cham-

Smith's Meg White dominated the field to win the individual title in 18:30, but the host team only managed to put one other runner in the top ten, as their number two placed fifth. Williams, on the other hand, put all five of its scoring runners in the top ten, and in a field of 108 finishers all of the Ephs placed in the upper half.

Anne Platt '91 again spearheaded the Williams victory, running a quick 19:22 in spite of the slippery conditions to grab fourth overall. Forming a remarkable pack behind her came freshmen Molly Martin and Andrea Cady, Ann Dannbauer '90, and Cherie MacAuley '92, who placed 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th ahead of Smith's third and fourth runners (10th and 11th) respectively to seal the win. Cathy Cocks '89 and Stacey Smith '90 rounded out the varsity in 12th and 14th holding off the final scorer for Smith (16th) in reality if not on the scoreboard.

Perhaps trying to negate Williams' formidable advantage in depth, Smith disallowed the usual practice of having the 6th and 7th team members displace the scoring runners behind them but even that couldn't stop the Ephs.

Williams now gears up for the Little Three Championships, to be held Saturday at Amherst. The Ephs top competition will come from Wesleyan, as the Cardinals are slight favorites to win the title they have captured once in the last nineteen years. Defending cham-

W. Rugby

The WWRFC traveled to Burlington

Men's Soccer

continued from page 10

half the team was "kind of flat," according to Blanck. Tufts shot the ball into the corner from 12 yards out, but the Ephs soon rebounded. Masters scored off a penalty kick with 15 minutes left in the game, and Williams settled down into controlling the game again. Shortly after Masters' goal, Sam McIlwain '90 swept in to score the last goal of the game. The Jumbos had lost their lead, but they were not about to let it go. The Ephs played a solid defense. Williams played Babson today and will face Connecticut College Saturday, both tough teams who will test the Ephs' endurance.

Field Hockey

continued from page 10

sweeper Heidi Sandreuter, tightened and nullified the Jumbo attack while slick passing kept the ball in the control of the Williams forwards. By the final buzzer, the Ephs had fashioned a convincing victory that is sure to bring them an improvement in the weekly rankings.

This week, Williams faces two tough opponents, playing Connecticut College today and hosting Westfield State Saturday in the regular season finale. Both teams are NESCAC teams and if Williams can defeat them, they can expect to be asked to host the NIAC tournament and may receive a bid to the more prestigious ECAC playoffs.

Today, one out of two people who get cancer gets well. It's a whole new ball game.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY
Help us keep winning.

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond"
Williams '88

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and shoe and boot repair.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267

Women's soccer loses to Connecticut College and Tufts, leaving playoff hopes in doubt

by Kerr Houston

Tough losses may indeed build character, but the Williams women's soccer team would almost certainly rather have a couple of wins behind them than any developments in character brought about by a pair of close defeats last week. The Ephsomen, dropping a spot in post-season play, dropped a tight 3-0 decision to Connecticut College on Tuesday and then were tripped up 2-1 in overtime by Tufts U. on Saturday.

The setbacks left Williams with a 7-4 record, a frustrated but nonetheless supportive coach, and a must-win situation as they approach their final two games of the 1988 campaign. On Tuesday the Ephsomen carried a 5-game unbeaten streak on the road to face nationally-ranked Connecticut College. Connecticut seized an early advantage on a corner kick a mere five minutes into the game, but the Ephsomen regrouped and did not allow another goal for the rest of the half. The game remained close until Connecticut scored on a deflection mis-handled by sophomore netminder

Heather Martinez, who filled in admirably for regular Jen Plinsky '92. Melendy also noted that "all of our backs played well, including Amy Duncombe, who played an excellent game." However, the coach was not pleased with the

We really need a win against Mt. Holyoke if we're going to make the playoffs.

Becca Borden with just under five minutes left, and a breakaway only moments later. Smith, shut out for the third time this year, suffered from a lack of offensive firepower as they mustered only seven shots and were outshot for the first time in eleven matches. However, the defense played a fine game until the final five minutes. Coach Lisa Melendy praised the play of senior stopper Heather Martinez, who filled in admirably for regular Jen Plinsky '92. Melendy also noted that "all of our backs played well, including Amy Duncombe, who played an excellent game." However, the coach was not pleased with the ing, as they overcame a barrage of 26 Williams shots and what Melendy termed "our best game so far" to record a 2-1 victory.

Lara Grandison '91 turned in the only Williams goal, as she neatly headed junior Kelly Collins' cross past the Tufts keeper with only 2:30 remaining in the contest to force overtime. Although the Ephsomen have scored only twice in the last 280 minutes of play, Melendy seemed pleased with the unit's play against Tufts, singling out the outstanding play of scoring leaders Liz Nassif '92 and captain Lori Schen '89.

The pair of losses left the Ephsomen with a sense of purpose as they approach the end of the season. The squad travels to sixth-ranked Mount Holyoke on Tuesday, and Melendy commented that "we really need a win against Mt. Holyoke if we are going to make the playoffs." The team returns to the Purple Valley for its final match, a Saturday showdown with Vassar.

Volleyball

continued from page 10

successfully tried to pound the other into submission, but neither side proved especially effective. Good net performances by Holly Hedeman, McConnell, and Pappalardo held Bates at bay, but the Ephsomen did not make their offense click. Several kills by co-captain Nancy Hedeman kept the game close, but Bates ultimately triumphed 13-15. The second game was no better, as Bates turned in two deadly five point spurts.

Men's Rugby

continued from page 10

sides, mostly composed of freshmen, battled it out in front of an appreciative crowd of parents in the year's first black and white classic. Stars included lock Jason "Grizzly" Phillips, who dragged half the black pack with him whenever he ran the ball and inside center, Phillip 'Boats' Prentiss whose size 15 feet tore through an opening in the blacks,

Although the Ephsomen defense was tough, their inability to put points on the board proved costly, losing 11-15 in the second game. Thus, in a repeat performance from last year, Bates captured the Williams Invitational, with Williams finishing a disappointing second.

The Ephsomen will finish their regular season Tuesday in Albany, but have hopes of being invited to NIACs at Smith next Saturday. With a 2-3 record, NIACs would just be icing on the cake.

This weekend the squad returns home to host the Panthers of Middlebury, who beat the Ephs on opening day last year for only the fourteenth time in the history of the rivalry. The Panthers run a combination wing T and wishbone offense which the Ephs will concentrate on this week. "Either one is difficult to defend—the combination could cause some problems," said Farley.

In the two following weeks come Westleyan and Amherst, who played each other on Saturday, with Westleyan prevailing 27-0.

Football blanks Colby 21-0; prepares for Middlebury

continued from page 10

Hyde came through again on the next series, knocking down Colby's third down pass attempt to force a punt from the Mules '29, which left the Ephs at the enemy 45. On third and four from the 39, Kennedy handed to Horton, who scrambled all the way home to put the squad up 12-0. On the ensuing conversion, Kennedy passed to Holden for two points and the 14-0 lead.

Third consecutive TD. The White Mules continued to make life difficult for themselves, fumbling on the next series at their own 40, where senior safety Dave Clawson recovered. It was not long before Kennedy and Horton marched the squad 40 yards for the score, this time on a Kennedy one-yard keeper. The Ephs had scored on three consecutive series to take the 21-0 lead just two seconds into the fourth quarter, a lead which stood the rest of the game.

"At halftime, we thought we were in good position to win the game," said Farley. "We stopped ourselves offensively in the first half. Horton coming in obviously had a big impact. The momentum really swung our way."

This weekend the squad returns home to host the Panthers of Middlebury, who beat the Ephs on opening day last year for only the fourteenth time in the history of the rivalry. The Panthers run a combination wing T and wishbone offense which the Ephs will concentrate on this week. "Either one is difficult to defend—the combination could cause some problems," said Farley.

In the two following weeks come Westleyan and Amherst, who played each other on Saturday, with Westleyan prevailing 27-0.

Budweiser.
KING OF BEERS.

GENUINE

This week's recipient are the members of the Women's cross-country team, who put in an amazing team effort to win their fourth straight tournament on the year. Every member of the varsity seven (Anne Platt, Molly Martin, Andrea Cady, Ann Dannbauer, Cherie MacAuley, Cathy Cocks, and Stacey Smith) finished better than 14th in the 108 runner field. Ephsomen, this Bud's for you!

this Bud's for you!

BUD ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

E.G.O. Trip

BY JIM PFAFF/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- ACROSS
- 1 title of curiosity, once
 - 3 A. wood sorrel
 - 5 French flour
 - 7 "The Harry Ape" role
 - 17 On the Channel
 - 18 —de jambe (hallet movement)
 - 20 Kind of renewal
 - 21 "The Long Voyage Home," e.r.
 - 22 "Death's duel" author
 - 24 Paint splashes
 - 25 "You're You?"
 - 26 Conquistador Juan de
 - 27 Sec. of State: 1977
 - 29 English writer Arthur
 - 30 Alley button
 - 31 Mine, in a way
 - 32 Franklin's father was born here
 - 33 Voice of Tweety Pie
 - 34 "The Thief" actor
 - 36 Marks with scars
 - 37 Time past
 - 38 Farewells
 - 39 —bean rows will have
 - 40 "Poor Man's Tapestry"
 - 41 "Curse" of the Fates, to Plato
 - 42 Manta, e.g.
 - 43 He and Hickey took the stage together
 - 44 "Tears" poet
 - 45 Town in Liberia ur
 - 46 Bone hollows
 - 47 "Curse" of the Fates, to Plato
 - 48 Manta, e.g.
 - 49 He and Hickey took the stage together
 - 50 Monday-morning quarter-backing, e.g.
 - 51 That is: Lai
 - 52 Charged (Robinson vehicle)
 - 53 Eucalypt
 - 54 Unbond
 - 55 Extinct bird
 - 56 —of Paris
 - 57 "Henry the Fifth, thy — invoke"
 - 58 Aegean island
 - 59 Calico ponies
 - 60 Chinese dynasty
 - 61 Porsena
 - 62 Gelderland city
 - 63 Innuits, e.g.
 - 64 Francy
 - 65 Scotch pudding
 - 66 650, to Cato
 - 67 Expressions of disgust
 - 68 "The Emperor Jones"
 - 69 "Now sleeps the crimson moon"
 - 70 J.F.K. visitor
 - 71 Calls for silence
 - 72 Invitation reqs.
 - 73 The old ben
 - 74 "Tears" poet
 - 75 Town in Liberia ur
 - 76 Bone hollows
 - 77 "Curse" of the Fates, to Plato
 - 78 Manta, e.g.
 - 79 He and Hickey took the stage together
 - 80 Monday-morning quarter-backing, e.g.
 - 81 That is: Lai
 - 82 Charged (Robinson vehicle)
 - 83 Eucalypt
 - 84 Unbond
 - 85 Extinct bird
 - 86 —of Paris
 - 87 "Henry the Fifth, thy — invoke"
 - 88 Aegean island
 - 89 Calico ponies
 - 90 Chinese dynasty
 - 91 Porsena
 - 92 Gelderland city
 - 93 Innuits, e.g.
 - 94 Francy
 - 95 Scotch pudding
 - 96 650, to Cato
 - 97 Expressions of disgust
 - 98 "The Emperor Jones"
 - 99 "Now sleeps the crimson moon"
 - 100 J.F.K. visitor
 - 101 Calls for silence
 - 102 Invitation reqs.
 - 103 Mother-of-pearl
 - 104 Green dearest in price
 - 105 More underhand
 - 106 "Napoli": T.A. Daily
 - 107 "Test we lose our —"
 - 108 Browning
 - 109 Island off Venezuela
 - 110 Amazon tributary
 - 111 Book reviewer
 - 112 Bliven
 - 113 Changed a menu selection
 - 114 Rose, to Jackie
 - 115 Customary drink
 - 116 A.A.R.P. concerns
 - 117 Blood fluids
 - 118 Robeson of "The Emperor Jones"
 - 119 "Now sleeps the crimson moon"
 - 120 J.F.K. visitor
 - 121 Calls for silence
 - 122 Invitation reqs.
 - 123 Chat adlv
 - 124 Alder tree: Scot.
 - 125 Israeli city
 - 126 Circa: Abbr.
 - 127 Vehicle for
 - 128 "Curse" of the Fates, to Plato
 - 129 Manta, e.g.
 - 130 He and Hickey took the stage together
 - 131 Monday-morning quarter-backing, e.g.
 - 132 That is: Lai
 - 133 Charged (Robinson vehicle)
 - 134 Eucalypt
 - 135 Unbond
 - 136 Extinct bird
 - 137 —of Paris
 - 138 "Henry the Fifth, thy — invoke"
 - 139 Aegean island
 - 140 Calico ponies
 - 141 Chinese dynasty
 - 142 Porsena
 - 143 Gelderland city
 - 144 Innuits, e.g.
 - 145 Francy
 - 146 Scotch pudding
 - 147 650, to Cato
 - 148 Expressions of disgust
 - 149 "The Emperor Jones"
 - 150 "Now sleeps the crimson moon"
 - 151 J.F.K. visitor
 - 152 Calls for silence
 - 153 Invitation reqs.
 - 154 Mother-of-pearl
 - 155 Green dearest in price
 - 156 More underhand
 - 157 "Napoli": T.A. Daily
 - 158 "Test we lose our —"
 - 159 Browning
 - 160 Island off Venezuela
 - 161 Amazon tributary
 - 162 Book reviewer
 - 163 Bliven
 - 164 Changed a menu selection
 - 165 Rose, to Jackie
 - 166 Customary drink
 - 167 A.A.R.P. concerns
 - 168 Blood fluids
 - 169 Robeson of "The Emperor Jones"
 - 170 "Now sleeps the crimson moon"
 - 171 J.F.K. visitor
 - 172 Calls for silence
 - 173 Invitation reqs.
 - 174 Chat adlv
 - 175 Alder tree: Scot.
 - 176 Israeli city
 - 177 Circa: Abbr.
 - 178 Vehicle for
 - 179 "Curse" of the Fates, to Plato
 - 180 Manta, e.g.
 - 181 He and Hickey took the stage together
 - 182 Monday-morning quarter-backing, e.g.
 - 183 That is: Lai
 - 184 Charged (Robinson vehicle)
 - 185 Eucalypt
 - 186 Unbond
 - 187 Extinct bird
 - 188 —of Paris
 - 189 "Henry the Fifth, thy — invoke"
 - 190 Aegean island
 - 191 Calico ponies
 - 192 Chinese dynasty
 - 193 Porsena
 - 194 Gelderland city
 - 195 Innuits, e.g.
 - 196 Francy
 - 197 Scotch pudding
 - 198 650, to Cato
 - 199 Expressions of disgust
 - 200 "The Emperor Jones"
 - 201 "Now sleeps the crimson moon"
 - 202 J.F.K. visitor
 - 203 Calls for silence
 - 204 Invitation reqs.
 - 205 Mother-of-pearl
 - 206 Green dearest in price
 - 207 More underhand
 - 208 "Napoli": T.A. Daily
 - 209 "Test we lose our —"
 - 210 Browning
 - 211 Island off Venezuela
 - 212 Amazon tributary
 - 213 Book reviewer
 - 214 Bliven
 - 215 Changed a menu selection
 - 216 Rose, to Jackie
 - 217 Customary drink
 - 218 A.A.R.P. concerns
 - 219 Blood fluids
 - 220 Robeson of "The Emperor Jones"
 - 221 "Now sleeps the crimson moon"
 - 222 J.F.K. visitor
 - 223 Calls for silence
 - 224 Invitation reqs.
 - 225 Chat adlv
 - 226 Alder tree: Scot.
 - 227 Israeli city
 - 228 Circa: Abbr.
 - 229 Vehicle for
 - 230 "Curse" of the Fates, to Plato
 - 231 Manta, e.g.
 - 232 He and Hickey took the stage together
 - 233 Monday-morning quarter-backing, e.g.
 - 234 That is: Lai
 - 235 Charged (Robinson vehicle)
 - 236 Eucalypt
 - 237 Unbond
 - 238 Extinct bird
 - 239 —of Paris
 - 240 "Henry the Fifth, thy — invoke"
 - 241 Aegean island
 - 242 Calico ponies
 - 243 Chinese dynasty
 - 244 Porsena
 - 245 Gelderland city
 - 246 Innuits, e.g.
 - 247 Francy
 - 248 Scotch pudding
 - 249 650, to Cato
 - 250 Expressions of disgust
 - 251 "The Emperor Jones"
 - 252 "Now sleeps the crimson moon"
 - 253 J.F.K. visitor
 - 254 Calls for silence
 - 255 Invitation reqs.
 - 256 Mother-of-pearl
 - 257 Green dearest in price
 - 258 More underhand
 - 259 "Napoli": T.A. Daily
 - 260 "Test we lose our —"
 - 261 Browning
 - 262 Island off Venezuela
 - 263 Amazon tributary
 - 264 Book reviewer
 - 265 Bliven
 - 266 Changed a menu selection
 - 267 Rose, to Jackie
 - 268 Customary drink
 - 269 A.A.R.P. concerns
 - 270 Blood fluids
 - 271 Robeson of "The Emperor Jones"
 - 272 "Now sleeps the crimson moon"
 - 273 J.F.K. visitor
 - 274 Calls for silence
 - 275 Invitation reqs.

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

Bombardier beetles at home

"So then I am to Borg. You know, as long as we're under siege, one of us oughta moon these Saxons dogs."

Consider a Career in Communications...

A Master's from The Annenberg School of Communications, combined with your bachelor's degree, can take you into a management career in the mass media or telecommunications.

Here's what some recent graduates of Annenberg's Master's in Communications Management are doing:

Suzanne B., B.A., French, U.C. Berkeley
Director, European Sales and Marketing, International Home Video, MGM/UA

Steve B., B.A., Fine Arts, Ohio University
Senior Vice President, Creative Affairs, Columbia Pictures-TPV

Paul D., B.A., English, U. Michigan
Manager, Marketing and Public Policy, Pacific Bell

Sara K., B.A., Political Science, Duke
Director, Creative Services, Assoc. of TV Programming Executives

Jeff B., B.A., Psychology, Williams
Research Supervisor, Television Research, ABC

Pam R., B.A., Asian Studies, Mount Holyoke
Director, Public Relations, St. Paul Medical Center

Karl K., B.A., Economics, USC
Senior Telecommunications Consultant, Price Waterhouse

Wendell F., B.A., Radio/TV/Film, Northwestern
Manager, Audience and Syndication Research, Walt Disney Co.

HERE ARE TWO WAYS The Annenberg School, University of Southern California, Los Angeles, prepares graduates for their careers.

1. Course work in...
 - management of media firms
 - communications technologies
 - law and public policy
 - international communications
 - diffusion of innovations
 - communication in organizations
2. On the job learning...
 - internships in Los Angeles and Washington, D.C.

Please send me more information.

Name _____

Address _____

City/State/Zip _____

Currently Attending _____

MAIL TO: The Annenberg School of Communications
3502 South Hoover Street, University of Southern California, Los Angeles, California 90089-0281

Sports

Football posts 1st shutout in 7 years with 21-0 win over Colby

by Ted Hobart

The Ephs put a strong finish onto a shaky start on Saturday to come away with a hard-earned 21-0 victory over Colby College in Waterville, Maine. The win boosted the squad's record to 3-1-1 on the season and also gave the Ephs a 4-1 edge in the overall series against Colby.

The shutout was the first for Williams not only this season, but the first in seven years (the last a 30-0 rout of Union in 1981). This accomplishment is from a young defensive unit whose strength was questioned in the preseason and whose performance has far outpaced expectations. The defense has kept the Ephs in every ballgame and has come up with many crucial plays already this season.

Special recognition goes to tri-captain Dan Pritchard '89 and sophomore Ted Rogers. Pritchard had 12 tackles in the game from his inside linebacker spot to up his team-leading total to 47. Rogers, a defensive end, sacked the White Mule quarterback five times, bringing his total to 11 sacks on the season. Sophomore cornerback Mike Hyde also nabbed two Colby passers.

The shutout is even more impressive considering that Colby's offense came into the game rated second in NES-CAC with 1371 total yards. The White Mules broke a fifteen game losing streak two weeks ago with an emotionally-charged 34-33 victory over Tufts and last week just failed in a comeback bid in a 30-28 loss to Wesleyan.

Offense comes back strong

The Ephs' offense, coming off last week's 34-10 drubbing of Bates, did not have a very successful first half but came back much stronger in the second. The wind and rain in Maine made both offensive teams' job more difficult, and statistically the game was fairly even.

The Ephs managed just eight first downs all game to Colby's ten, but strong defense kept the net offensive yardage strongly in Williams' favor (226 to 108). The Eph offensive line again showed why it is among the most feared in the league, especially in the second half. The line allowed only one sack of quarterback Scott Kennedy '89 all day and opened gaping holes for the Williams backs.

Jon Horton '91, who did not practice much last week because of injury and did not play in the first half but came back in the second to gain 103 yards. When Horton passed the 100-yard barrier, it marked the third game this season (along with Tufts and Bates) and the fourth overall (including Amherst two years ago) that the sophomore has surpassed the 100 yard hurdle. In fact, Horton has gained 100 or more yards in every game in which he started and ran the ball regularly.

In the scoreless first half, neither team was able to move the ball very effectively. The closest either team came to scoring was when Colby started two series from inside the Ephs' 35. Williams stopped the first drive on the 15, but gave the ball back through a fumble two plays later on the 27. The second drive was stymied by Mike Hyde's first of two interceptions.

"In the soup"

"We turned the ball over too much on offense and gave them good field position—that left us in the soup a good bit in the first half," said Coach Dick Farley, adding, "I was pleased with the defense coming through the way they did."

The defense retained its tough posture in the second half, preventing Colby from gaining even a first down until the fourth quarter. Meanwhile the offense got back on track with a little help from the defense. Hyde's second interception of the game stopped Colby's second drive of the half on its own 31.

Horton and Mo Holden '90, who teamed to make an effective backfield combination in the second stanza, combined to ground the ball down to the Colby 19 before a penalty put the Ephs back at the 24. From there, Kennedy found junior Todd Strieter in the end zone to break the tie. Passing was definitely a rarity on Saturday, as the rainy conditions limited the Ephs' aerial attack to just three completions on eleven attempts. A failed PAT kick left

continued on page 9

Co-captain Mike Masters '89 heads the winning goal over the outstretched Hartford goalie in the squad's 1-0 win over the Division I team last Wednesday. (Scala)

Scoreless streak ends; men's soccer still undefeated 10-0

by Mariam Nafisy

Good and bad went hand in hand for the men's soccer team last week; the Ephs beat strong Division I Hartford last Wednesday, but were scored upon for the first time in 26 games by Tufts last Saturday. Said co-captain goalie Rob Blanch '89, whose shutout record ended with the Ephs' 4-1 victory, "Everyone was wondering how we'd respond after finally being scored upon—I think we responded pretty well."

Williams versus Hartford was probably the most exciting game the Ephs have played this season, as the two teams were evenly matched in terms of skill and intensity. The first half went scoreless, and play shifted back and forth across the field with shots on goal attempted by both teams.

According to co-captain Mike Masters '89, however, Williams outplayed Hartford in midfield, which gave them the edge needed to win. Junior sweeper Dan Calichman knocked the ball to Masters with 20 minutes remaining in the second half, and Masters, with his back to the goal, headed the ball in over the unsuspecting goalie.

The game ended with Williams winning 1-0, but it could have been an even more decisive victory with better luck; Calichman hit goalposts twice in his shots on goal, and sophomore Rob

Lake's goal was called back. Meanwhile, valuable midfielder Peter Lyn '91 sprained his ankle during the game and will be out for 10 to 14 days.

Tufts proved to be an easier team to beat last Saturday, but muddy field conditions made it difficult for the defense to do their job. The Ephs dominated the first half of the game, with Masters scoring first, 20 minutes into the half, off an assist by Doug Brooks '90. With 15 minutes left in the half, a scramble in the box gave Ambi Stern '90 the opportunity to send in a ball that had been deflected off the goalie. The score stood 2-0 at the half.

In the first 20 minutes of the second half, the Ephs continued to dominate.

Continued on page 8

8 - 1 Field Hockey looks to clinch ECAC berth this week

by Marc McDermott

The season was on the line and things seemed to be slipping away. Williams, ranked eighth among New England small schools, had to beat Tufts on their own field to keep their playoff hopes alive, yet at the half, Tufts was up 1-0 and the Ephwomen seemed to be caught in low gear.

"We had a long bus ride to get there, the field was wet, and we couldn't seem to get used to the conditions. We just weren't playing the way we usually do."

said Williams' captain and goaltender Wynn Hoblit of the first half.

The Jumbos had dealt the Ephwomen a paralyzing blow midway through the opening stanza when their winger tipped in a shot that had been deflected off both a Williams defender and the goalpost. It was only the fourth goal scored upon the 8-1 Ephwomen all year and the purple and gold seemed to be moving the ball just a little slower than normal the rest of the half.

Tufts could not hold Williams down for long, however, and the Ephs came out of the gates on fire. Juniors Mo Flaherty and Kristen Fredrickson scored within three minutes of each other midway through the period and the lead, and Williams coasted home with two more tallies, including one by leading scorer Judy Fleishman '90. The defense, led by freshman

Continued on page 8

Volleyball 2nd in own tourney, record to 23-3.

by Bob Nishols

After a hard-fought semi-final victory over Trinity, the Ephwomen fell to a mighty Bates team, finishing in second place in the second annual Williams Invitational Volleyball Tournament. With co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89 testing a very tender ankle and pulled stomach muscles, the Ephwomen improved their record to 23-3.

In their pool of four teams, the Ephwomen quickly prevailed over Westfield State College and Union College by identical scores, 15-1 and 15-9. Particularly effective in these two matches was Marianne Landa '90, a junior exchange student from Smith. She showed excellent velocity on her hits and has indeed improved her effectiveness considerably during the course of the season.

Combined with the steady hitting of Catherine McConnell '90, Laurie Hartsoe '91, and Holly Hedeman '92, the Ephwomen had no trouble in dominating the lady spikers from Bard, 15-7 and 15-1. In this match, Holly Hedeman and Landa combined for eleven kills. Co-captain and setter Shelley Whelpton '90 also showed off her considerable talents: four aces, four kills, and rock-steady setting.

In semifinal action, the Ephwomen went against Trinity, a peppy team that Williams had beaten earlier in the year. In the first game, Williams' tough serving was the key. Whelpton, Hartsoe, and Holly Hedeman combined for five aces. A noteworthy performance was turned in by Deirdre Pappalardo '92, who in place of Nancy Hedeman, turned in some sparkling net play. Trinity constantly tried to hit over the New York native, but were rudely surprised: two blocks and multiple tips.

After prevailing in the first game 15-10, the Ephwomen let the second game just slip away. Leading 13-7, the Holly Hedeman '92 powers a hit in Saturday's Williams Invitational Tournament. The Ephs captured second place behind defending champion Bates.

Ephwomen appeared to be very tentative about pounding the ball down Trinity's throats, relying on dinks and off-speed shots to excess. Thus, by rendering the second game 14-16, the Ephwomen were forced into a third and deciding game.

Holly Hedeman and Whelpton, who served up five consecutive points apiece, and two vicious kills by Landa were just too much for Trinity to overcome. The Ephwomen emerged triumphant 15-8, ready to avenge last year's loss to Bates in the first Williams Invitational Tournament.

In the final against Bates, the words of one spectator described Williams' dilemma perfectly: "There is simply no floor on Bates' court." Both sides un-

Continued on page 9

Men's rugby triumphs by one over Green Mountain Men

by Mark Staples

"The best thing about the day was the win," noted a very Bryan Baird '89 after Williams' last Division I rugby match of the season against UVM in Burlington, "because our playing was nothing to write home about." The tenacious outside center echoed the feelings of the entire club. Baird and his inside center Steve Lihen '90 scored two of the three tries that put Williams up by 12 points to UVM's 11 at the final whistle, but he and his side failed to come alive with the continued support play which produces convincing wins.

A slippery pitch prevented the superior scrummaging technique of the Williams pack to come into play, though the forwards controlled a disproportionate share of rock and maul balls. But even with decent possession, Williams failed to capitalize on the occasional breakthrough since too few supporting players were in close pursuit of the ball carrier. Fortunately, Williams kept hammering at UVM's mistakes in the hopes that scoring opportunities would arise.

Woody touches it down

Serum captain Sherwood Smith '89 found such an opening from a UVM line-out near their goal line. Smith raced after an errant pass from the scrum-half to his kicker and dove on the ball a split second before UVM could save themselves, giving Williams a shaky one point lead to hold for the remaining ten minutes of the game. The A-side held the lead and won the game, despite some heart-stopping defense with their backs against their own goal line. Fullback Chap Petersen '90 attributed the sporadic Williams play overall to the windy and wet playing conditions. "We always win when we can play with flair and we can only do that when the ball and field are dry—we typically crumble otherwise."

The B-side play mirrored the A's in the absence of enterprising play and support for the ball carrier, but the second fifteen could only pull off a 4-4 tie thanks to senior John Baker's try in the second half. Normally a fullback, Baker replaced the injured Ed Anderson '90 in the centers.

The C-side fared better than the B's. Powerful tackling from lock Dan Hackett '91 and the rest of his pack contained the UVM side. The most exciting moment of the game came from wing Tom Morgan '91. Morgan, who has been plagued by injury for most of the season, turned the corner round his opposite man and raced for the try line. Stopped a few meters short of a score, Morgan dashed to loose forward Vin Cannato '90 who barreled over the line for the side's sole try. A penalty kick by serum half Dan Foote '89 broke the 4-4 tie and brought the C-men a well-deserved win.

Back in Williamstown on Friday, two

continued on page 9

Differs Go Abroad—Though the golf season is a rapidly fading memory here in Williamstown, several members of the intramural Friday Afternoon Golf League had an unforgettable experience last spring. The group, shown in front of the clubhouse at the Royal and Ancient Saint Andrew's Golf Course, was made up of several students studying abroad and some Ephs who were visiting. The Old Course claimed many victims, but Bill Zax '89 led the way with a 94, followed by senior Brian Jennings '95.

Six college presidents join hands to fight prejudice

by Bill Savadove

Last Friday, six New England college presidents released a statement condemning "anonymous notes and communications of a blatantly racist nature." The statement was prompted by recent incidents of racial harassment at three New England colleges.

Although Williams was included on the statement, there have been no incidents of this type on the campus so far this year, according to members of the administration.

"The idea is that [the six presidents] hoped leadership on the issue would alert students and prevent copycat incidents," said college News Director Ellen Berk. In addition to Williams Presidents Francis Oakley, the presidents of Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, Smith, Wellesley, and Wesleyan affixed their names to the statement.

Two weeks ago, at Dartmouth College, black students, gay students and women active in feminist causes received a number of disparaging letters and obscene phone calls, according to an article that appeared in The New York Times.

Meanwhile, the administration of the University of Massachusetts continues to investigate racial slurs made over two-way radios.

At Smith, a note with racial slurs was slipped under a student's door. Another note was taped to a bulletin board. However, Associate Dean for Student Affairs Carol Weinberg said that a wave of racist feeling "coming to the surface is not expected."

Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards said that it is hard to gauge whether or not racial tension is increasing on American college campuses. However, she said, "Racial awareness is rising [on a national level] because we're getting a more diverse student body."

Would you vote for this man?

And the winner is...? While national polls show that the Presidential race is going Vice President George Bush's way, the students and faculty of Williams college overwhelmingly support Governor Michael Dukakis. See the new Record Insider for this and other stories, including the race for the statehouse between John Drew and Representative Sherwood Guernsey. For the national election, the Insider interviewed James MacGregor Burns, MacAlister Brown and George Marcus.

Virus forces Williams' students to practice safe computing

by Rob Weisberg

There's a virus going around campus, but don't expect to see the infirmary packed with students any time soon. This disease is a computer virus which has found its way into the Macintoshes at the Computer Center and is creating headaches for the employees there.

According to Peggy Shannon, a programmer/analyst at Jesup who is in charge of the fighting it, a computer virus is a small program that has the ability to duplicate itself onto any disk it comes in contact with. "It attaches itself to MacWrite or system folders," she said. If it gets into a hard disk, any person who uses that computer will have his disk infected.

The virus in Jesup is not a particularly serious one, she added. "There have been no lost papers. It's causing unusual errors, though. The affected Pascal disks for some of the computer science classes run out of memory way too early, so you can't run programs. Also, documents and applications won't open."

'It's important that people don't panic and come over to the Computer Center all hostile..'

Todd Fernandez '91, a technical consultant at Jesup as well as a student in Computer Science 134, said, "I first noticed a problem [on his Pascal disk for class] before reading period. You could type on it, but you just couldn't run programs. I got a new Pascal disk, but the same thing happened to it."

continued on page 4

Blacks and whites stay segregated on campus

by Janet Singleton

(College Press Service)—Last April, as campus race relations strained and blundered into confrontation at scores of schools, Princeton University senior Michelle Marsh went to a demonstration aimed at clearing the air.

"It was called 'Breaking Down Barriers,'" Marsh recalled. "The crowd that showed up was very integrated."

The show of brotherhood, however, didn't last. "Afterward, there was a dinner for the organizers, and I wound up being the only black student in the group. It [integration] broke down once again," Marsh said.

Her experience wasn't atypical. Black and white students may be friendlier to each other, but social segregation stubbornly remains the normal campus arrangement, students, faculty members and sociologists say.

Even the well-integrated anti-apartheid movement—which concluded nationally organized, fairly quiet rallies at scores of campuses the first week of October—has failed to keep black and white students from retreating to separate corners of school after the meetings end.

"Regardless of color," explained Monica Edwards of Wesleyan University's Black Student Union, "you're going to sit with your friends."

"We're not Utopia," added Tom Frye of the University of Chicago's Students for Divestment, whose members also tend to separate by race after their common work is done. He maintained, however, that "whether people sit at separate tables in a lunchroom is irrelevant."

Frustrating lack of integration Others aren't so sure. "Both sides can be frustrated by the lack of integration," said Bejay Lanoffield of Stanford's Students for a Free South Africa.

It's just "the social realities of racial separatism," maintained Chris Jones of the University of Michigan's Black Student Union.

Dr. Jacqui Wade of Bennett College in Greensboro, North Carolina, also observed that the "integrated, unified" anti-apartheid movement still hasn't had a social impact on students "everyday lives."

"We may go to a demonstration together," added University of Colorado anti-apartheid activist Jessica Fowler, "but the next day we don't hang out together. I don't know if that's a racial issue or not."

Many students and observers find the social segregation okay because it seems to be voluntary.

Cornell University professor and anti-apartheid activist Dr. Scott McMillin doesn't "think that is a form of segregation."

continued on page 9

Calendar of Lectures

Wednesday

6 PM "Soviet Perspectives on the Mind." James Wertsch, Belarus Policy Lounge.

7 PM "John F. Kennedy and the Vietnam War." Brooks Rogers.

Thursday

7 PM Dr. Thomas Fyfe will give a talk on "U.S.-Japan Trade Relations at the Semiconductor Industry." Griffin S.

8 PM Elliot Richardson will present a lecture entitled "The Relevance of Original Intent to Contemporary Constitutional Interpretation: The Case of the War Powers Resolution." Chapin Hall.

Some winter study trips fighting enrollment problems this year

by Rob Weisberg

Williams students suffering from mid-winter doldrums this January will have three fewer options for taking Winter Study courses abroad. Because of low enrollment, trips to South America, Jerusalem and Venice have been cancelled this year.

According to Assistant Registrar Keith Finan, the History 025 trip to South America and the Special 025 program in Israel were listed as a first choice by only four students each. The Art History 029 trip to Venice was even less popular, with only two students selecting it as a second choice.

Marlene Johnson, an associate professor of geology and former chairman of the Winter Study Committee, said, "Having three trips cancelled is unusual. We've had trips cancelled for a variety of reasons, such as political unrest, and sometimes students just aren't interested in the foreign country in question. But another reason is that costs are definitely going up for these trips."

Still, he said that a trip run last year to China had more applicants than it could accept, even though it cost $3000, one of the most expensive trips ever offered by the college. Johnson said he had trouble understanding why students would not want to travel to South America. "With everything that's going on in Chile [the country recently voted to end the rule of its current leader, General August Pinochet], I can't imagine why anyone wouldn't want to go," Johnson said.

Lack of interest in Latin America

Professor of History Russell Bostert suggested that the problem may lie within the Williams curriculum. "We haven't taught much Latin American politics here in a while," he said. "There appears to be a lack of student interest in the area."

A lack of interest, combined with poor publicity, also killed the Venice program, said Associate Professor of Art Edward Epping. This was the first year that the trip to examine the Guggenheim Foundation collection in Venice had been offered.

"It might have hurt," Epping added, "that there would be no Williams faculty or staff there this year. It may have scared students that there would be no one to check in with. Still, I don't know why it didn't fly. Maybe students thought the course looked boring."

Apathy wasn't a problem with the Israel trip, according to College Chaplain Carol Pepper, who was supposed to lead the program. "There's political unrest all over the country now. Students were reluctant to participate, and their parents were even more reluctant to let them," she said.

continued on page 3

Fullback Chap Peterson '90 cuts inside for a few dearly bought yards amid a mass of Albany defenders. The undefeated m. n. club gave the White Dogs a few lessons in the gentleman's game, beating Williams by a generous margin. For story, see page 11. (Scale)

The Good Person of Szechwan reviewed
Page 5

Men's soccer drops their first game
Page 11

Football improves record to 4-4-1
Page 14

The Williams Record

Dukakis: The Educated Choice

One issue of the 1988 Presidential campaign that concerns our community especially is education—what the candidates have accomplished in this area in the past and their stated programs for the future. As part of this academic community, we feel that Michael Dukakis' vision for America's future holds a clear place for the educational institution, the faculty and the student body.

In the last eight years the educational standards in America have dropped. A quarter of our public school students dropout before finishing high school, 25 million Americans are unable to read, and many people wanting to attend college cannot because of insufficient funds. George Bush's approach to education has been a 16 percent cut in aid for special programs to improve all levels of the school system.

This is the same George Bush who wants to be remembered as the 'education President.' Dukakis' track record, which shows extensive and continued improvement of educational programs, contrasts sharply with Bush's sudden about-face on educational issues. Dukakis has introduced programs to raise teachers' salaries, modernize classroom facilities, and create five times as many scholarships now as there were in 1981. As President, his Student Tuition and Repayment System and his National Teachers Corps would carry this commitment to education across the nation.

Dukakis wants to repair the damage done to education in the past eight years. If America wants to catch up in the classroom it will elect Michael Dukakis for President.

On The Record...

"I don't think that students care much about politics here."

—Nino Chelidze, exchange student from the State University of Georgia in the Soviet Union.

"When you plan a trip, and you're trying to plan an itinerary, you can become distant from issues such as cost. You always think financial aid."

—College Chaplain Carol Pepper on winter study trips

The Record's Op-Ed Department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication, either typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Chuck Samuelson at (413) 597-2289.

The Record's Op-Ed Department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words, and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

Correction

The feature in last week's Record that posed the question, "How has Alcohol Awareness week made you reevaluate your drinking at Williams?" mismatched the respondents and their pictures. We regret the error.

DEBBIE SNYDER Editor in Chief
TODD OWENS News Editor CHUCK SAMUELSON Opinions Editor TRAVIS PIERSON Arts Editor
TED HOBART & MARC McDERMOTT Sports Editors RICH WARD & JED SCALA Photo Editors
KIRSTEN HASENFUSS & MARY ILIFF Layout Editors KATIE ALBRIGHT Business Manager

News Assistants
STEPHANIE JONES, ANN MANTIL, BILL SAVADOVE, DAN SKWIRE, ROB WEISBERG
Sports Assistant
MARIAM NAFICY Photo Assistants
JAY STEINMAN, KARL THOMAS
Layout Assistants
ELISA DUONDJI, BILL PHILPOTT, ASHESHI SHAH

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Opinions

Letters

"Rhetoric" hurt Review defense

To the Editor:
I would like to take this opportunity to respond to Bill Grace's opinion article, "The Issue didn't Review the facts," in the October 25 edition of the Record. Mr. Grace's need to resort to flamboyant rhetoric and petty accusations shows only his desperation. In response, I, as writer of the piece in question, need merely the facts.
His first criticism is that four not three students were disciplined for harassing professor Cole. I got the names of the three students mentioned in my article from the Review itself. If this is an indictment of anyone's reporting, it is that of the Review.
Second, Mr. Grace denies the students entered Cole's classroom without permission. Alex Huppe, News Director for Dartmouth College, stated that testimony from the mediating committee's hearings affirms that the incident took place as I described.
In his next two points, Mr. Grace claims the students did not harass Cole, but merely invited him to reply to an article critical of his teaching practices and that it was Cole, not the students, who was the aggressor. Again, the college spokesman stated (in an interview on September 15) that hearings of the mediating Disciplinary Committee established that students harassed Cole.
Cole incident. Although Mr. Grace admits publishing names of officers (members) of the Gay Student Association in the Review, he denies writing letters to the students' parents. However, the GSA, the Native Americans at Dartmouth, the Women's Issues League and the Afro-American Society published a document on March 1, 1988 stating: "A member of the Review...prints the list of members of the Gay Student Association and sends copies of the Review to parents of people in the GSA." The college has not established the validity of their claim. Furthermore, the date of the incident is 1981, not 1987 and I apologize for my misunderstanding it caused.
Mr. Grace's final accusation is that of plagiarism. He claims that "Seventy-five percent of the article is a mere rewording of articles that appeared in the Daily Dartmouth." Perhaps it speaks for the accuracy of my description of the controversy if I recounted the event in the same way as the Dartmouth paper, but in fact, the only copy I even saw was a September issue verifying 60 Minutes' intent to cover the controversy. I did initially attempt to contact Richard Wendel '89, a former editor of the Review. He refused to comment, so I explained the Review's position based on statements in the Review itself.
I respect Mr. Grace's desire to share his opinions with the Williams community, but I believe it is important to distinguish between the Review's justification of their own actions and the facts as reported by a mediating committee. Also, I believe Mr. Grace should have addressed his concerns to the Issue itself, rather than contacting the Record.
Margaret Kohn '92

The final issue is a controversy that took place prior to the

Ultra-liberals are off-base on CIA

To the Editor:
This past week, Williams students were treated to the latest demonstration of intellectual firepower by the radical leftists on campus. The rather pathetic and juvenile attempt to discredit the CIA (delivered in the all-too-familiar parody format) was a typical example of the intellectual bankruptcy of the ultra-liberal agenda. In the absence of anything new to say to today's students, these self-appointed arbiters of morality retreat time and again to worn-out refrains against long-time targets such as the CIA.
Certainly, the radicals here at Williams are entitled to believe what they will about America and her international intentions. What is truly disappointing to those of us who relish lively campus debate, however, is the gutless manner in which the authors of the silly parody presented their "case." No names were signed to the piece of propaganda, no student group sponsored it. Instead, it was offered to students anonymously. The cowardice exhibited by those who wrote the all-campus mailing is appalling. If these students cannot stand behind their professed beliefs, they do not deserve to be taken seriously in the campus political debate.
Michael Barbera '89

10-1 played role in booze week

To the Editor:
After a twenty minute interview about Ten to One's participation in National Alcohol Awareness Week with a Record reporter, imagine my surprise when I picked up the Record and discovered that not only was Ten to One not mentioned as the co-sponsor of the week, but Ten to One's help was not mentioned at all. This article was not only a slap in the face of all the Ten to One members who helped with the week, but the article also ignored the time that Perry House members put into the Friday night party and the help that Williams security put into the Saturday Fun Run. These omissions from the Record are an example of the Record's neglect in informing the Williams community; and, as a member of this community, I hope that the Record attempts to rectify this situation.
Please note that the opinions expressed in this letter are my own and do not reflect Ten to One policy on the Record.)
Tammy Babcock '90

Change for better with Drew's view

To the Editor:
It is a great honor for me, the undersigned, to have the opportunity to endorse so qualified a candidate and so fine a teacher as John Drew for State Representative in the Second Berkshire District. Williams College now has a favorite son and we encourage members of the community to express their support for him at the polls. He is one of our own and it is high time we recognized the need for more people like him. Those of us who have been fortunate enough to get to know him in a class or through community activities, know, respect and treasure his unending concern for the individual.

Nicholas Antoun '91
Michael Barbera '89
David Belcher '89
David Bentley '89
Brian D. Carlson '91
Byung Choi '92
Jim Clarke '91
Pete Crawford '91

Jared N. Cumming '92
Jonathan Dailley '91
Rush Day '91
Bob Day '91
Arie Eisenstein '91
Todd Fernandez '91
Andrew Goldstein '89

Marilyn Head
Peter Ilchman '92
Robert Howie '90
Tina Huxley '91
Ken Levy '91
Robert Nishitaka '91
David Oman '90

Todd Owens '90
Chuck Samuelson '90
Brenda Shanley
Stefin-Erik Soelberg '91
Stewart Verdery '89
Sara Wagner '91
Tank Wilson

One good term deserves another

To the Editor:
As citizens of Williamstown as well as faculty and staff of Williams College, we enthusiastically endorse the reelection of Sherwood Quernsey for State Representative in the Second Berkshire District, which encompasses Williamstown, Dalton, Lanesboro, Hancock, New Ashford and parts of

Olga R. Beaver
Michael D. Bell
Deborah J. Bergstrand
Kim H. Bruce
Kathleen M. Case
Raymond Chang
Stuart B. Crampton

David P. Detbier
Keith C. Finan
Peter K. Frost
Judith M. Grinnell
Nancy J. McIntire
Markus E. Johnson
Fatma Kassamali

Thomas A. Kohn
Karen B. Kwitter
Patricia A. Leach
William J. Lenhart
Robert R. Peck
Christopher Pye

Irvin Shainman
Anne R. Skinner
Sheila Spear
Thomas Spear
Ouilford L. Spencer, II

Graduate advising needs shot in the arm

by Ann Mantil

Jocelyn Shadforth '88 was the only member of last year's graduating class to apply to graduate school in academic political science. She was accepted at Rutgers University and began this fall. "I said I went to Williams College and all these doors opened for me. Williams is just a major passport to so many programs, and the fact that they're not exploiting that is just incredible to me."

Only six percent of the class of 1987 went directly to graduate school after graduation from Williams, according to Director of Career Counseling Fatma Kassamali. This statistic only includes academic Ph.D. programs, not professional schools like law or medicine. "A disproportionately high number of people that go on to receive Ph.D.s come from smaller colleges, but Williams and perhaps the Little Three schools in general are at the bottom," Assistant Dean William Wagner said.

Williams' current system of graduate school advising is relatively unstructured, according to Wagner. Interested students first approach him, and he then steers them to a faculty member in the appropriate department.

Faculty biggest resource
"Whoever is advising them has to know something about the students and where they're likely to be competitive, and about the different graduate programs available," he said. "The only people familiar with both sides of the equation are individual faculty."

However, there is little or no centralization of the process within the department. "Right now students are going to five or six different places," Kassamali said. "There are materials within the department, at OCC [Office of Career Counseling] and in Sawyer Library. Then for counseling students go to Bill Wagner and a faculty member."

"I guess we shouldn't expect to be spoon-fed," Cathy Cocks '89, a history major who is considering graduate school, said. "I think in a way it's important to do it on your own, so that you decide what you want in a school. But it would be helpful to have a central source in the department. Dean Wagner's got a lot to do, and there are lots of people trying to see him."

"It seems pretty clear from my experience this semester particularly that she received from professors in the political science department was excellent. "They were very helpful in terms of funding possibilities and recommendations. But I don't think that on a macro level there's a very good system at all. What I find problematic is that departments aren't required to have one central person in charge of advising. It's difficult to know who to go to."

The Gaudino Committee's report last year recommended that a center for graduate school advising similar to OCC be created. "That would only work effectively in tandem with the departments," Shadforth, who was a member of the committee, said. "But it's really important in terms of the attitude the college is presenting to students. We have this great OCC that helps students find jobs, and a really

'I think a separate place [for graduate school advising] is a little bit ridiculous in such a small college.'

Funding and recommendations
Shadforth emphasized that the help weak graduate advising program. I really question what kind of message that's sending to seniors."

The Gargoyles Society last spring, according to Chris Nealon '89. "We're talking about two possibilities. One is pushing for an office of graduate school counseling. The other is to find out what the administration's version of effective advising would be."

The College Council sent questionnaires to the members of the class of '88 last spring, asking if they had ever been interested in the possibility of graduate school and, if so, whom they had first contacted. The survey also requested comments on the general quality of advising information.

"Overwhelmingly the answer from seniors was yes, there is a need for better graduate school advising," Nealon said. "Wagner and the administration disagreed with the Gaudino proposal, however. 'I don't think it would be worthwhile to have much more of a central advising program,' Wagner said. 'There's no way that one person can have all the different kinds of information required. I'd like to see every department designate a graduate school advisor.'"

Centralize the resources
"I think a separate place is a little bit ridiculous in such a small college," Kassamali agreed. "But I think ideally it would not be a bad idea to have everything centralized in terms of resources and people who are doing the counseling."

Events aimed at attracting possible graduate school candidates are being organized. The OCC is setting up graduate school panels for each of Williams' three academic divisions this year that will include alumni now in

"There's one, I'm hummed out. Two, I really want to take off a couple of years. Three, I have so many loans already. I don't want to accumulate more. Four, I'm not sure what I really want to do."

"There's the extensive alumni network here, which makes it easier to go off and get jobs," Wagner said.

'There's no way one person can have all the different kinds of information. I'd like to see every department designate a graduate school advisor.'

Other small colleges are also increasing efforts to point students toward graduate school. "My sense is, from talking to the OCCs and deans' offices in other small colleges, that there really hasn't been much of a structure, but that there is now a greater sense that more organization is necessary," Wagner said.

"There is concern about the academic profession replenishing itself if good people aren't encouraged to go on to graduate studies," Kassamali said she has heard several reasons why many Williams students are not considering graduate school.

"There's unconscious and overt pressure pushing people in other directions."

"I think also students have been discouraged in the past because the market was not very good in terms of professorships," Kassamali said. "Now that the market is better, maybe they'll be more encouraged."

Gordon Jones '89 is considering graduate school in physics next year, and said that he is not alone. "All but a couple of physics majors this year are at least considering grad school," he said. "At least half are planning to go next year."

Trip to United States gives 'different mirror' to Soviet students

Every student must make some adjustments when coming to Williams, but for Nino Chelidze, they have ranged from trying to think in Fahrenheit instead of Celsius to choosing her own classes. Chelidze is a Soviet exchange student from the State University in Georgia.

"I wanted to come here because I knew some people from Williams College in Georgia," said Chelidze.

Using American measurements instead of the metric system has been a minor change for Chelidze. However, she has experienced one big difference: the increased academic freedom. "Here you can choose what classes to take. At home, the schedule is written out for you by the department and all the classes are obligatory."

Because one has to decide what to study before applying and coming to the university, it is not possible to change your major. Chelidze is majoring in the English language and plans to do her thesis comparing American and British phonetics.

At Williams, she is studying Shakespeare, Introduction to Linguistics, and American History 102. "Language is the biggest barrier, but professors help me a lot... here is more work from the point of view that I have to do a lot of work with dictionaries," she said. Academic life is not all different though. "Discussions are similar to home. I think students are alike everywhere," she said.

The party scene at Williams is far different from what Chelidze was used to. "None of my friends [from Georgia] live on campus. One of the big cultural differences is that people want to live with their families. We have parties at home," Chelidze said. "People usually dress for parties at home. We always have a lot of food... people drink a lot but they also eat a lot so they don't get as drunk."

Doesn't like the tempo
Chelidze said she finds the American lifestyle a real change of pace. "I don't like the tempo. It's much faster... maybe not specifically at Williams, but in the business world too. Maybe it's good preparation for people here going into business."

Though she had to make many adjustments, Chelidze said she is glad to have the chance to experience this different culture. "Everyone should have the chance to go and think about differences and perspectives," Chelidze said. "There are different values and you see them and can improve yourself. You can see yourself in a different mirror."

She has a friend from Georgia participating in the exchange next year, and Chelidze knows what advice to give her. "The main thing I'll tell her is to bring warm clothes. Also, take a lot of dictionaries. People are really friendly here, but another difficulty is that I'm not accustomed to being so independent. I'm more used to relying on my family."

Being in the United States in 1988, Chelidze has seen the democratic process up close. As far as the presidential campaign is concerned, Chelidze said, "I have seen the debates. I don't think they're serious... just showing personalities. Only time can show who can be the best president." Chelidze also said that "I don't think that here students care much about politics. Many aren't even registered."

W.S. trips cancelled

Pepper added, however, that cost was also a definite factor in the lack of enrollment. "People were interested in going. Students came to the Chaplain's Office to express interest, but they said that the money was a problem." The trip was priced at $2800. "We scheduled in a tremendous amount of fun and opportunity, but if we had known that the price would be a problem, we could have designed a cheaper, pared-down, course," Pepper said.

She said that, from her understanding, the price was on par with other Winter Study programs abroad. "When you plan a trip, and you're trying to plan an itinerary, you can become distant from issues such as cost. You always think 'financial aid.' Next year we will plan a cheaper course," she added.

Associate Professor of Biology Steven Zlotoff, chair of the Winter Study Committee, said that the committee approves all aspects of any Winter Study course before it can be listed in the Course Bulletin.

"Generally, it's not an issue whether or not the course can be offered. Typically, the number of programs proposed is the number approved." He added that the committee itself does not cancel any trips, and does not encourage any trip sponsors or participants to do so.

Florence
An Academic Year Abroad in the Arts and Humanities
A year of undergraduate study immersed in the life and culture of Florence. The program combines university courses with individual tutorials and language study and, for students of the arts, work with Italian artists.
For information and an application, contact
SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE
SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE IN FLORENCE
Box WCWV
Bronxville, New York 10708

College Dems unorganized, underfunded heading into 1988 Presidential election

by J. M. Rubin
(College Press Service)—Just weeks before the presidential election, anyone who wanted to still couldn't find Yale University's chapter of the College Democrats.

"They haven't re-registered yet," reported Betsy Schiller, who answers the phone at the dean of students office.

While College Republicans nationwide prepare to harvest the fruit of "leadership seminars" and organizing manuals with dorm room-by-dorm room dragnets for Republican voters at some colleges on November 8, campus Democratic groups around the country seem to be struggling to get organized or, as in Yale's case, to be seen.

"College Dems," said Catherine Crane of the National Student Campaign for Voter Registration, "are less organized than they should be during an important presidential year. I don't know why."

Crane, trying to enroll the group in a registration effort, eventually learned the group's national president "by accident."

"I admit there appears to be total chaos and a lack of stability," conceded Dr. William Bertsch, faculty advisor to the Young Democrats at Colorado State University.

Many chapters, of course, have been productive and active. At the State University of New York (SUNY)-Albany, for example, the College Dems group has "had a voter registration drive and speakers like Lisa Dukakis," reported group co-founder Karen Baiter.

By the numbers of students who joined in September.

But other groups at Jacksonville State University in Florida, the University of Idaho and the University of Houston still were trying to scrape together initial organizational meetings in late September and early October. With little guidance in recruiting members, Oregon State's Democrats managed to draw exactly 12 people to an October 4 organizational meeting with state Chairman Harry Demaree.

"I'm anxious to help," one unnamed student told the Record in a letter, "but I can't find a (campus party) number to call."

She's not alone. Democratic National Committee (DNC) headquarters in Washington, D.C., was unable to get the phone numbers of or even name the College Democrats of America's executive director or national president.

"They changed receptionists," explained Jonathan Miller, the Harvard senior who is, in fact, the group's executive director.

State of disarray
College Democrats national President David Hale, a senior Vanderbilt University, said it's because the DNC is "in a state of disarray."

Miller agreed college Dems are not very visible, but argued it was because most of the 650 chapters go under the "Students for Dukakis" name.

By contrast, College Republicans Executive Director Susan Brackin said the CRs have "about 1,000" campus chapters, to which it regularly feeds campaign literature—exposed Dukakis's furlough program and that he's soft on crime—"organizing manuals, lobbying updates and training seminars."

The College Democrats, Hale noted helpfully, has "a nationwide newsletter." It also has a lot less money. Both Hale and Miller are full-time students working without pay, as opposed to Brackin and the CRs president, who both get

continued on page 9

Angry students vow to take action against rapists at the U. of Illinois

(College Press Service)—About 40 campus groups and some 500 University of Illinois students—historically among the most impatient, demanding and militant anti-rape activists in the country—marched on their campus October 12 demanding that, in the wake of a series of 10-13 rapes since last spring, administrators "make sure this place is safe."

Jeff Joehims, head of UI's Interfraternity Council, also told the assembled marchers that rape was "the number one" problem on campus.

UI spokesman Terry Shepard reported the massed students were holding "a generally anti-rape action," but that marchers said it was more than that, and that students themselves would act to insure campus safety.

"If we wait for the administration to do anything," explained Linda McCann of the Student Government Association, "we're going to wait a long time."

UI students have taken matters into their own hands before. In September, 1987, an anonymous flyer circulated around campus threatening "direct action" against alleged rapists.

Then spray-painted graffiti reading "U of I frat sexual rapists" appeared on two fraternity houses on a block from a dorm along with a banner warning "Boys Beware. Rape Will Not Be Tolerated."

The effigies were a reaction to the arrest of three male students accused of sexually assaulting a drunk freshman woman in their dorm. When the three where a 15-year-old girl reportedly had been raped the week before.

"Direct action" by students has become a little more common as administrators everywhere struggle, and largely fail, to prevent rapes.

At the University of New Hampshire in March, 1987, for example, women dangled three life-sized male effigies

And last April, about 100 University of Minnesota students briefly blocked the entrance to the campus police station to protest officers' failure to solve the case of an assailant named "Craig" who allegedly had repeatedly kidnapped and raped a UM freshman woman in her dorm room.

Police were never able to establish the incidents had happened.

Police at Illinois say they have a suspect in the series of rapes there, but that no arrests have been made.

In the interim, UI women feel like they're "under siege," McCann said, and will keep trying to stage dramatic events until the campus becomes safer.

"I'm not aware of anything that organized that dramatics is going on at other campuses," said Jan M. Sherrill, director of Towson (Maryland) State University's Center for the Study and Prevention of Campus Violence. "I think it's wonderful."

The London Theatre Program

of SARAH LAWRENCE COLLEGE and the BRITISH AMERICAN DRAMA ACADEMY

A unique opportunity for college students to study with Britain's leading actors and directors. Acting study and performance, supplemented by academic work. Full academic credit is provided for either a semester or a year. For details and an application, write:

The London Theatre Program, Box BW1L
Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N.Y. 10708

RICHARD D. SIMPSON G. VINCENT COUSLOU

the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.
BETSY BURBANK

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4808

Jesup warns students to safeguard software to ward off virus

continued from page 1

He added that the problems for computer science students don't appear to be too widespread. "As of Monday (last week), the TC's had only had a couple of complaints. Some people copied their programs off the Mac with the laserwriter in the lounge, and that computer is definitely infected," Fernandez said.

Shannon said that the clean-up process will take several weeks and that students should be patient as far as getting their personal disks checked. "We'll be deleting the infected files here this week," she said. "As long as you save the programs on other disks, erasing the infected disk will definitely kill this virus. We'll be cleaning up everything here.

"Next week, we'll tell students how they can have their disks checked, and cured if they need it. The Computer Center will provide people with free programs to check their disks, and we'll do the rest," she said. Shannon added that she hopes students will be educated on what to do if they ever encounter a virus again.

Fernandez said that TC's will be going around to the different academic departments to see if any of their Mac-intoshes hooked up to the computer network were infected. He emphasized that students should not get too upset about this virus. "It doesn't attack data, so no one will lose any papers or programs. It's important that people don't panic and come over to the Computer Center all hostile," he said.

Check all Mac disks

"People who use IBM's are completely safe. But everyone needs to check their Mac disks if it's possible they got infected, because if even one person's disk still has the virus, it can spread all over again," Fernandez said. The play's power is best translated onto a modern stage, as in its current production, directed by David Eppe, at the Adams Memorial Theatre Main Stage.

The plot of the play is at once mythic and moralistic and contemporary and convoluted. There is an impending sense of doom in the play's world, and, as Wang (Scott Figgins '92), the water seller tells the audience, "Many people think that only the gods can save the situation." Accordingly, three gods descend from above and travel the earth in search of one good person. They find her in the form of a prostitute named Shen Teh (Laura Richman '89), and allow her to start leading a respectable life in which her goodness can be realized by giving her money, with which she buys a small tobacco shop.

"We've been generous in assuming that no viruses would get into Jesup. We hoped this wouldn't happen, but now we'll be checking for viruses regularly."

Fernandez said that viruses were created by a group of computer programmers in the 1960s or 70s. "They were playing war games, trying to wreck each other's programs for fun. But they kept the viruses on a single machine, so they couldn't spread.

"In the early 80s a famous computer scientist, while receiving an award, mentioned how to create them. There was an unwritten rule not to spread that knowledge, and he broke it. Creating a virus is not that difficult, if you know how to do it."

Get Layered

Layering—practical and economical way of staying warm. A layering system can keep you comfortable throughout the Berkshire season. Shells by North Face, Marmot and Patagonia.

the Mountain Goat

"The Complete Outdoor Shop"

130 Water St., Williamstown (413) 458-8445 Open 7 Days Manchester Center, Vt. (802) 362-5159

Homecoming Buffet

Specially designed menus

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5

REGULAR DINNER HOUSE NO CHITS 8⁰⁰ PAID.

Arts

The Williams Record November 1, 1988 Page 5

AMT's "The Good Person of Szechwan" traverses societal and temporal boundaries

by Travis Pierson

Bertolt Brecht's "The Good Person of Szechwan" (usually titled and spelled "The Good Woman of Setzuan"), is concerned with changing the world, and, by using euphemisms such as atheism for Communism, attempts to establish moralistic norms and set up models for the use of force and idealism in establishing non-Capitalist systems. But it also deals with ideas of morality and individual responsibility in a non-political context, and it is on this level that the play's power is best translated onto a modern stage, as in its current production, directed by David Eppe, at the Adams Memorial Theatre Main Stage.

The plot of the play is at once mythic and moralistic and contemporary and convoluted. There is an impending sense of doom in the play's world, and, as Wang (Scott Figgins '92), the water seller tells the audience, "Many people think that only the gods can save the situation." Accordingly, three gods descend from above and travel the earth in search of one good person. They find her in the form of a prostitute named Shen Teh (Laura Richman '89), and allow her to start leading a respectable life in which her goodness can be realized by giving her money, with which she buys a small tobacco shop.

Her good heart makes running a profitable establishment difficult, however, so she creates an alter ego, in the form of a business-minded and hard-poled male cousin named Shui Ta, who throws out vagrants sponging off of Shen Teh, and begins to turn the business into a success. But soon Shen Teh meets and falls in love with an unemployed airman named Yang Sun (Michael Baratta '89), and begins to plan to marry him and give him money so that he can fly again and they can begin a life together. But Yang Sun reveals to Shui Ta that he does not reciprocate her love, and Shen Teh, who eventually discovers that she is pregnant, must grapple with the options concerning love and good sense surrounding her, and eventually reverts to the good person Shui Ta to reestablish her business and guarantee a future for her child.

The strength of the play lies in its ambiguity. For even though the dichotomy between Shen Teh's goodness and Shui Ta's rigidity is quite clear, the question of how goodness, good sense, and individual survival should be judged is left purposefully dangling at the end. The poetic epilogue (added later for American audiences who seemed befuddled by the play's original ending) tidily places the play's moral in that he did was firmly grounded in the concrete).

The characterizations in the production are equally Americanized, and although they retain their Chinese names, the characters assume various American stereotypical portrayals of their Oriental counterparts. Mrs. Shin (Shirley Kagan '89) sports a beehive and polyester pantsuits and a Long Island housewife accent, and Mrs. Mi Tzu (Mary E. Kipp '89) is portrayed as a red-haired slum queen tinted with tacky middle-class greed.

These broad characterizations work well in "The Good Person of Szechwan," since most of Brecht's characters are basically two-dimensional. Shen Teh is an exception, but even she is required to separate herself into two wholly different, static personas. Laura Richman skillfully balances Shen Teh and Shui Ta in an empathetic performance (except for an overbearing hand-on-back, pseudo-masculine strut, that makes it seem as though Shui Ta is suffering from back trouble, which occasionally carries over into the Shen-Teh character).

Michael Baratta is similarly impressive as Yang Sun, creating a character who must radiate both attractiveness and a certain amount of villainy. Supporting characters such as the carpenter Lin To (Wayne R. Fritzsche '89), sporting a strategically placed hammer, and the barber Shu Fu (Matthew R. Dubroff '90) add to the colorfully dressed and played cast of players.

Standing literally head and shoulders above the rest of the cast, however, were the three 11-ft gods, whose humor in their personifications of a decadent and dying morality, shiningly came through in grand performances by seniors Faustino Espinosa, Douglas B. Hunt and sophomore Michael Reisman.

A few flaws kept the production from complete success, however. Friday night's performance contained a considerable number of flubbed lines and missed cues, for example. But the biggest difficulty was undoubtedly the occasional musical breaks. For each solo, the singer took a microphone from the side of the stage and stood in front of the rest of the cast. Although logistical reasons may have made this necessary, the effect was one of disengagement from the rest of the play, and each singing part seemed like a small cabaret show, whereas the songs in the original script (of which many were dropped or changed) seem more closely linked to the rest of the text, and not made to stand out in such high resolution.

The other problem with the music in last Friday's production was that some of the songs sounded painfully bad. Although the music by senior Paul Uninard combined both Oriental and Western melodies in a way complementary to the rest of the production and stood quite well on its own, the singers and the orchestra too often did not mesh. Although the roles do not call for ideal voices, and a certain amount of gritty realism can work its way into the play's mood, the number of off-key notes and times when the music was going at a different speed than the singer made a number of the musical vignettes ineffective and discomforting. But overall, Eppe's production translates Brecht's play into a modern context quite successfully. The contemporary colloquialisms and accents mixed with the timeless themes of helplessness and the nature of good and evil managed to breathe life into Brecht's

"The Good Person of Szechwan" will be performed three more times, on Thursday, Nov. 3, Friday, Nov. 4 and Saturday, Nov. 5 on the Mainstage of the Adams Memorial Theatre.

Scott Figgins '92 as Wang, the water seller, introduces the audience to the "The Good Person of Szechwan." (Isackson)

Three Paintings by Alison Chandler

(Marcus)

Alumni artist exhibition series continues at Goodrich Gallery

by Travis Pierson

Goodrich Gallery continues its exhibition series of Alumni Artists this week with works by Julia Talcott '80, Alison Chandler '76 and Kelley Lane '86. The works by the three women have little similarity besides their Williams connection.

Talcott's works are on two facing walls. One side features her graphic works and illustrations for various magazines, and the other has three pastel, tempera and watercolor paintings. Her illustrations are distinguished by their clean lines and planes of solid color, while her paintings are more subtle and ambiguous, while still retaining a narrative quality.

Talcott claims that her paintings are stream-of-consciousness exercises which frequently grow out of the framework of a house motif. She then fills up the space with drawings and ideas, erasing and scratching out the less effective ones until a successful mood is created. One of the paintings, not yet titled, contains a sleeping figure under a starry sky, with Haley's comet flying overhead. Another, titled "Sing," contains catfishes and animals and a lone singing drummer in a space seemingly unencumbered by gravity. All of paintings and an intimacy usually restricted to drawings.

Alison Chandler's paintings, on the other hand, are square abstract expressionist oil paintings made of large strokes of solid color. Two other paintings are made of bright reds and blues and oranges on a white background, creating what seems to be a contemporary interpretation of abstract expressionist works of the 1950s in postmodern colors. A third work is black and white, and seems closely linked to works by artists such as Frankenthaler and Kline.

Art

her paintings, which were created during a trip she and her husband took in New Mexico and Arizona in 1985, contain a southwestern spirit in their adobe architecture and animal drawings, which seem taken from native American sources.

There is a mystical quality in her paintings, which seem at once insightful and childlike in their directness. By using pastel, tempera, and watercolors, they have a softness infrequently seen in oil

The Accused: Film as a life sentence

by D.W. Maze

"The Accused" tells the fact-based story of rape victim Sara Tobias (Jodie Foster). Sara enters a bar, has a few drinks, and when she goes into the back room to dance, she is forced onto a pinball machine and raped by three men while other vulgar swillies holler jubilantly. The men's defense is simply stated: Sara was hardly dehydrated; she was drunk, stupid and willing. Unfortunately, Sara has no witnesses to support her claim. Sara's lawyer, Kathryn Murphy (Kelly McGillis), feeling the case unwinnable, pleads bargains the charge down to reckless endangerment, without the consent of Sara.

Sara, discovering the plea bargain through local TV news, deems her lawyer's decision grossly unjust, and verbalizes her discontent to Murphy, who accordingly repents. Sara wants to convict the cheering onlookers of the rape for inciting a felony. A conviction would also allow the rape to go on the record, and the rapists would get the reckless endangerment maximum sentence of five years, instead of nine months. Sara's case hinges on Ken, an A-student best friend of one of the rapists who witnessed the rape. Ken, however, doesn't want to send his friend away for five years. Guess what happens. The film is utterly predictable. During the first five minutes, the film makes clear how it will lay itself out: the only witness to a gang rape is the best friend of one of the rapists, you can assume that the boy has a moral dilemma that must be overcome for justice to prevail. Of course, you also know that he will overcome this moral dilemma so that the jury can convict. The film is obvious and the dialogue is unrealistic and superficial. For instance, the pinball machine that Sara is raped on has a girl falling out of a basket while several basketball players hold their hands in the air; the game is called "Siam Dunk." The insinuation is obvious, perverted and infantile. After Sara's lawyer eyes the pinball machine, she notices that a high score reads KEN. Through her ingenuity, she convinces the jury that the rape was premeditated. During the first five minutes, the film makes clear how it will lay itself out: the only witness to a gang rape is the best friend of one of the rapists, you can assume that the boy has a moral dilemma that must be overcome for justice to prevail. Of course, you also know that he will overcome this moral di-

Ken, asking him of his relation to the rape. Ken says that he cannot talk right now, saying, "I've got a class."

Well, Ken is just going to have to miss his class, because Murphy has Ken's phone call to the police on tape.

Ken's response to his situation? "Aw shucks."

My favorite scene appears after the plea bargaining of the rapists, but before the incinerator trial. A man tries to pick up Sara at a record store, saying that he knows her from somewhere. Sara is kind about it, but when the man follows her to her car, she naturally becomes worried. The man leans into the driver side window and says, "I remember you now. You gave the free show at the bar." Sara gets crazed and looks the doors and rolls up the windows, but her car does not start. After an unbearably long time, her car starts and she drives out. But watch out Sara, the man has pulled in front of the exit to the parking lot, and you can't get out. What? You're going to fight back Sara? You're going to turn into his truck with your car? Sara goes a little off the deep end and winds up in a hospital, but man, is that truck smashed. "The Accused" drowns in cliché and adolescent ideas and should be forgotten.

Movies

Bankers Trust Company invites you to an Information Session on Monday, November 7th from 7:00 – 9:00 pm at the Office of Career Counseling, Stetson Hall.

Come and meet with our representatives to find out about "Merchant Banking—the Bankers Trust Way."

Bankers Trust Company

COMPANY INFORMATION SESSION

Monday, November 7th
7:00 – 9:00 pm
Office of Career Counseling,
Stetson Hall

Student Dems short on money

continued from page 3

silpends. While students can reach the College Republicans through an 800 number, the campus Dems don't have a Washington office of their own.

Many student Democrats, moreover, don't bother to call. Karen Balter of SUNY-Albany's Democrats didn't join the College Democrats of America because "there is a registration fee, and we have a budget of zero dollars."

Money part of the issue

"The Republicans have more funds," Crane said. "This has an impact on their ability to organize efficiently. The money is part of the issue."

One reason the party is so weak on campuses is that Democrats as a breed generally resist being organized, political scientists say.

"The Democratic party," said Marquette University Professor John McAdams, "is a coalition formed by people who agree on just enough to go to the polls and vote Democratic."

Republicans are "more homogeneous," he added. They "agree on more and could organize more easily."

Still others like Balter said the students who might otherwise join campus Democratic groups are often busy in organizations "like the New York Public Interest Research Group."

Democrats as a breed generally resist being organized, political scientists say.

Indeed, Executive Director Miller sees his group's members drifting into volunteer groups like the Campus Compact after the election.

Then, too, some observers think the College Republicans have more members because there's been a fundamental shift away from the Democrats.

"For college students, the image of the Republicans is one of good economic times," noted Eric Davis, a political scientist at Vermont's Middlebury College. "Carter and Mondale are the Democrats college students remember. Students aren't old enough to remember a Democratic administration that was 'successful.'"

Whatever the case, Miller figures the best way to improve his group's campus fortunes is by raising money. "After the election," he promises, "we'll make contact with all campuses and all chairmen of Students for Dukakis. We'll firm up our contacts, and start a nationwide fundraising campaign."

Campus segregation is the norm

continued from page 1

tion if by segregation you mean an enforced code that nobody dares to violate."

Indeed, Michigan's Jones thinks the social separatism is explained by people tending "to relate to whom they are comfortable with. I am more comfortable with other persons of Afro-American descent."

Different point of view

"Minority students," McMillin said, "have a reason to stick together because they share an experience and a point of view that other students don't share with them."

University of Massachusetts Professor Meyer Weinberg, who has been compiling data about U.S. campus race relations for 25 years, concurs. "I personally do not like separate seating, either voluntary or not. On the other hand, to black students, this may be one of the areas on campus in which they decide what they want to do themselves."

"I don't think this kind of decision is a separatist one about life," Weinberg added. Instead, it's the black students' way of saying "We don't think this is a very friendly place. I think this is pretty average for higher education."

Nevertheless, some activists think the anti-apartheid movement has helped mix the races at their campuses.

"When we eat together," reported Ann Friend of Western Michigan University's South African Solidarity group, "it's blacks and whites together."

Marsh said social circles at Princeton are becoming more integrated "as Princeton attracts more middle- and upper-middle class black students who are used to mingling with whites."

At Yale, activist Hosea Baskin said, the "people who do political work together also spend time on a social level together."

And in spite of the separatism on other campuses, "everyone wants to be optimistic" that integration can occur, Stanford's Lancelotti said.

DON'T WAIT! BOOK NOW FOR THE HOLIDAYS!

From New York	One Way
LONDON	179
PARIS	229
ROME	259
round trip
CARACAS	320
SYDNEY from LAX	868
HONGKONG	739

Taxes not included.
ALSO: Work-Study Abroad, Language Courses, Int'l Student ID, Youth Hostel Passes.
EURAIL Passes issued on the spot!
Call for the FREE CIEE Student Travel Catalog!
413-256-1261
AMHERST
75 So. Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002

YOU QUALIFY FOR INSTANT CREDIT!

Start making credit purchases IMMEDIATELY! We will send you a Members Credit Card at once with NO CREDIT CHECK. Buy any Jewelry, Clothing, Sporting Goods, Watches, Electronics & MORE! All with installment payments out of our "Giant 100+ Pages Catalog." Take 12 months to repay. Your personal credit card is a -second I.D.- valuable for check cashing, etc. plus your Students Credit Group A-1 reference will be on file to help you obtain other credit cards. So send in your $5 catalog deposit now. (refundable with your first order) Establish your credit today!

100% Satisfaction Guaranteed (or your Money Back)

MEMBERS P.O. BOX 4649
STUDENTS FORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA 33309

Sarah Lawrence College
Academic Year in

Paris

A semester or year of academic study for juniors and seniors. Students study in small seminars and tutorials with French faculty, and in such Parisian institutions as the Sorbonne, the Ecole du Louvre, and the Institut d'Etudes Politiques.

For information and an application, contact:
Sarah Lawrence College Academic Year in Paris
Box WCP
Bronxville, New York 10708

Sarah Lawrence College

Oxford

An opportunity for qualified undergraduates to spend a year of study at Oxford. Individual tutorials with Oxford faculty, Oxford University lectures, and an affiliation with an Oxford college immerse students in Oxford's rich education tradition.

For information contact:
Sarah Lawrence College at Oxford
Box WGWO
Bronxville, New York 10708

A Representative from National Westminster Bank will be visiting the Williams Campus on Thursday

November 3
at 7 PM in the OCC Library

to discuss career and summer opportunities in commercial banking.

All majors and all classes welcome.

☛ National Westminster Bank USA

MONITOR COMPANY

Strategy Consulting

Invites All Williams Seniors to Meet with Monitor Consultants to Learn about Employment Opportunities

Thursday, November 3, 1988
7:00 – 9:00 P.M.
Office of Career Counseling

Cambridge • London • Los Angeles • Milan • Toronto

THIS MBA PROGRAM COULD BRING YOU TO YOUR KNEES.

If you're going to pursue an MBA that gives you "real world" experience, consider a program that really offers you the world.

Babson MBA students have a unique opportunity to work in other countries, with some of the world's leading business organizations. (Audi AG, the Australian Trade Commission, Lego A/S, and Union Bank of Switzerland to name just a few.)

This special internship program is part of an overall concentration in international business that's available at Babson. And it could prove to be invaluable experience for your career.

Because today, corporations everywhere are taking a global point-of-view.

For more information about the Babson International MBA Program, just mail the coupon, or call us at 617-239-4317.

INTERNATIONAL MBA PROGRAM		Graduate Admissions Office Nichols Babson College Babson Park Wellesley, MA 02157
I am interested in the Babson International MBA Program. Please send me a catalog and an application form.
Name _____		_____
Address _____		_____
City _____	State _____	_____
Zip _____	Phone _____	_____
BABSON COLLEGE EXECUTIVE THINKING

Field hockey splits two games

by Marc McDermott

In a week that could have made or broken their season, the field hockey team bent but snapped back to stay in good position for a post season playoff berth.

The team faced two tough NESCAC opponents last week, Connecticut College and Westfield State, and needed to down both to have a chance at a spot in the prestigious ECAC tourney. A split would guarantee a seeding the lesser but still highly respected NIAC tournament, while a sweep would leave the players with nothing to look forward to but homecoming parties. In the end the team split, leaving them with a 9-2 record and a good chance to host the NIAC's.

For a while it looked like the Ephwomens were headed for something more, however, as they controlled the entire first half versus Connecticut. "We were totally dominating in the first half," said senior co-captain Kirsten Neuse. "We had more chances to score than in any other game all year and we blew every one of them." Connecticut didn't blow its chances however. The Camels drove into Eph territory only once, but they made it count and took a 1-0 half time lead.

Williams scoring leader Judy Fleischman '90 found the net to knot the game early in the second, but the Ephs didn't touch twice again and the game went to overtime. The Ephs kept up the intensity in OT, but the Camels punched through to win 2-1.

Williams 2, Westfield 0
Thus the Ephwomens needed a win against visiting Westfield on Saturday to consolidate their playoff hopes. Junior Mo Flaherty put Williams up on a corner hit in the first and freshman

Junior defender Beth McNulty brings the ball upfield during the Ephs 2-0 shutout of Westfield State. (Marcus)

Ashtley Edgar sealed the win late in the second when she put home a penalty shot given to the Ephs when the Westfield netminder obstructed the ball after blocking a Neuse blast.

The game was pretty even. We controlled the ball, but they still got it down the field. They got off more shots than Conn. College, but Wynn (Eph goalie and co-captain Wynn Hoblit '89) had a great game," commented Neuse.

The split week leaves the Ephs still at the mercy of the vagaries of the polls, but virtually assures them a NIAC berth. Williams strong record also gives them a good chance to be seeded #1 in the tourney, and thus serve as its host. Seedings and game times were determined over the weekend, but were not available as of press time.

Undefeated streak ends

Men's soccer suffers first loss to Camels

by Marian Nafley

In defeat lies inspiration: the men's soccer team is hoping to use their first loss of the season, 2-1 against Connecticut College last Saturday, as a springboard for future wins. Freshman back Alan Fidler summed up the team's optimistic attitude, saying, "The loss might help us out in the long run—now that we've lost we're going to play even harder so that it doesn't happen again."

in to tally one for the Ephs.

Bailey's goal was quickly followed by junior Doug Brooks' goal, assisted by Calichman. Finally, John Walker '89 broke away but was tackled and taken down in the box by a Babson player, and the resulting penalty shot by co-captain Mike Masters '89 sealed the Ephs' 3-1 win.

Saturday's game against

'The loss might help us out in the long run -- now that we've lost we're going to play even harder so that it doesn't happen again.'

even harder so that it doesn't happen again." Meanwhile, the Ephs are ranked no. 1 in Division III New England, and no. 3 in Division III nationally.

The team's win last Wednesday over Babson signaled, perhaps, their loss to Connecticut College. The Ephs went scoreless during the first half, while the Babson offense managed to break through once and score.

Based on their performances so far this year, it is highly unusual for the Ephs to be down at the half and scoreless. Williams rebounded quickly, however, to score during the first six minutes of the second half. Coordinating perfectly, Daniel Stern '90 kicked the ball to Dan Calichman '90, who headed the ball to Steve Bailey '91, who in turn headed it

Connecticut College again began with the opponent scoring first, this time about 20 minutes into the first half. Fifteen minutes later, Masters belted through the Connecticut defense to score on a direct kick that bent around the defense wall. The score was 1-1 at the half. With fifteen minutes remaining in the game, Connecticut scored again, and the Ephs couldn't make up the difference.

The Ephs have other opportunities to make up their loss, as they will almost surely win a berth in the ECAC playoffs, which will be held this tomorrow and Sunday. Possible competitors in the ECAC include Middlebury, Connecticut College, and Bowdoin. In addition, the Ephs will face Little Three rival Wesleyan.

Volleyball

continued from page 14

the stomach and ankle ailments, joined with sister Holly to rack up kills, four blocks and four aces between the two of them to keep Williams' match with Bates.

Smith falls going into the last match against one seeded Smith with a 1-1 tie, the Ephwomens' hope for a championship seemed almost impossible when they were jumped out to an early 4-1 lead in the game. However, after a strategic assault, rattling off an 11-2 leaving the stunned Smith spikers 12-6. The main offensive were again the Hedeman sisters, who piled up eight kills, a block, and an awesome display of power volleyball. Exchange Marianne Lands, who is herself from Smith, put her alma mater away, 15-7, with a wicked ace.

In the second game, the Ephwomens seemed ready to choke after building up a quick 4-0 lead. Unforced errors and sloppy execution allowed Smith to go on an unbelievable 8-0 run, leaving the Ephwomens trailing 4-8. However, after two Holly Hedeman aces narrowed the deficit to 6-8, Cathy McConnell '90 stepped up to the service line. Rising up to the occasion, McConnell served up nine straight services, thus quieting the Smith team and its energetic following.

Front row fireworks

The key to the 9-0 run was the Williams' powerful front line. The hitting of the Hedeman sisters, McConnell, Lands, Wheelton, and Harvase did not allow the Smith front line to hit back any decent returns. The Williams back row also executed brilliantly, setting up the front row with beautiful passes. Kris

Chris Giglio '89 battles his Lord Jeff opponent for possession of the ball in the opening round of last weekend's six team water polo tournament at Chandler. The Ephs failed in a furious comeback bid in the 9-8 loss to the Jeffs. Williams defeated its four other opponents, however, to qualify for this weekend's New England Championship tournament at Brown (Bellevue)

Women's rugby plagued by season-long scoring drought

by Laura Whitman

It has been a low-scoring season with a high occurrence of tie games for the WWRFC this fall. Hopes of winning the number one ranking in college division New England Rugby Football Union were dashed on Saturday as the A-side fell to Harvard 16-0.

Williams had incredible difficulty getting the ball out to the line, as scrumdowns turned into mauls with little yardage gained. Harvard's major game strategy was to deliver the ball into the hands of its fullback, a sprinter with an incredible foot. At times the match seemed like a kicking contest, as Williams fullback Katy Carr '91 booted for touch to win back lost territory.

On the line-outs scrum captain Rebecca Mattson '90 broke through repeatedly, spoiling Harvard's advantage. Clean tucks by Annabel Sheinberg '89 and Andrea Neumaier '91 also halted the Crimson's advance. The large tail-gate crowd, however, was most impressed by Williams' "switch" play on the penalties. Nevertheless the WWRFC let in four tries, all unconverted, leaving the match at a final score of Williams 0 - Harvard 16.

Josephine, the notorious N-H-U referee, commented, "If White had been able to get the ball out to the wings more quickly, they could have used their scoring opportunities successfully." She also noted that the Harvard A-side depended too heavily on its fullback for breakaway tries.

The following match was infinitely more inspiring, as Killer B Amanda Gallagher '90 scored a try within the first five minutes.

Each Williams try was more amazing than the next, as Gillian Flory '92 touched down a loose ball that had been kicked and bobbled by both White and Crimson players all over the try zone. Williams third and final try was one of perfect individual play by Robin Snyder '91, who kicked a high pop on the ten yard line, ran forward to receive it herself, then sprinted sixty yards on a breakaway to score. Harvard made one unconverted try, concluding the match at WWRFC 16 - Harvard 4.

Male ruggers downed by powerhouse Albany

by Mark Stepien

Williams rugby continued its roller coaster season last Saturday against the Albany Knicks with an eighty minute clinic from the undefeated men's club. A simple formula of quick passes to the backs and overloads along the line meant breakthrough after breakthrough against the brave but overwhelmed White Dogs. Despite Albany's superior play, Williams had its moments of near glory. Tenacious mauling by flanker Alby Gallun '89 set up a number of short passing attacks which, thanks to support by both pack and line, succeeded in penetrating deep into Albany's half of the field. No. 8 forward Chris Palmeco '89 also initiated some promising attacks, but the swarms of defenders stifled each one.

The B-side game against Albany drove home the lessons the Knicks had taught the A's. Despite a Bruce Young '90 penalty kick which put Williams in the lead at the half, the Albany try machine ground out another victory for themselves.

Bone-crunching authority
The C side played a scab team composed of A and B players from Tufts. Our young pack played brilliantly. Sophomore locks Dan Hackett and Mark DeFante controlled line-outs and halted every Tufts runner which came near them with bone-crunching authority. In the loose play, flanker Dave Lerner '90 set an example for his mates by always appearing first on the scene after set pieces and making exciting things happen through decisive and well-executed action.

Two tries by junior winger Geoff Beard and five points from the boot of scrum half Dan Foote '90 brought the Williams boys even with the Jumbos. Unfortunately, Tufts breached a second wind in the final minutes and, using their props as battering rams, managed to touch down the winning try. Team Future continued its winning tradition by soundly defeating Tufts' second fifteen. Forward Chris Mersereau '91 bulled his way into tackles, and in driving the opposition back, his supporting forwards found it easy to win rucks and mauls.

In the first try, the Williams pack displayed its strong technique. Flanker Randy Hesse '91 lowered his shoulder into a tackle five meters out and waited for his pack to converge on him and power him over the line. The hapless Tufts pack watched as the Williams were washed over them for the touch-down. In the backs, the speedy Ben Lewis '92 turned the corner and ran for three tries on the day. Needless to say, Williams went undefeated in third half competition.

Next Saturday, the Ephs face Wesleyan at home, a game that will ultimately decide the taker of the Little Three title.

There are three million Americans alive today who have had cancer. And now one out of two cancer patients get well!

"What distinguishes J.P. Morgan starts with the investment we make in you."

At J.P. Morgan, we look for potential, not polished skill. And if we find it in you, we'll give you outstanding training right from the start, and movement through different jobs. We offer opportunities to work for a global financial firm in corporate finance, sales and trading, foreign exchange, market research, audit and financial management, operations management and systems. So whatever your major, plan to attend this important career session or contact Lisa Nilsson Gabler, Corporate Recruiting, J.P. Morgan & Co. Incorporated, 23 Wall Street, NY, NY 10015.

Attend a J.P. Morgan
Information Presentation

Wednesday, November 2
7:00 PM
Office of Career Counseling

Confirm the time and location with your placement office

JPMorgan

Women's soccer splits two contests

by Kerr Houston

Spurred by the extraordinary play of senior captain Lori Schaefer and hopes of post-season action, the women's soccer team won its last two games of the 1988 campaign in impressive fashion, downing highly touted Mount Holyoke 3-1 and then polishing off Vassar 6-1.

The Ephraim had lost their last two games when they traveled to Mt. Holyoke, and it seemed that a defeat at the hands of the Mounties might end any chances for playoff opportunities. However, Schaefer refused to accept the idea of a shortened season, and she scored all three of Williams' goals to almost single-handedly lead the Ephraim.

Sixteen minutes into the first half, Schaefer took a pass from freshman Liz Nasser, beat one Mt. Holyoke defender, and put Williams up 1-0. After two minutes later, Schaefer notched her team-leading seventh goal of the season, heading junior Kelly Collins' cross between the Mt. Holyoke pipes.

Schaefer completed her hat trick early in the second half, scoring an unassisted tally to give the Ephraim a comfortable 3-0 lead. Mt. Holyoke gave its fans reason to cheer on a goal at 33:00 of the second half, but by then the Ephraim were already looking forward to their next match, a Saturday showdown with Vassar.

Vassar arrived at Cole Field sporting a mediocre 8-9 record, but the Ephraim soon made it clear that they were not going to take their opponents from Poughkeepsie lightly. Williams controlled headers, and testing the Vassar keeper early and often. At 26:00 of the first half, the Ephraim's Carin Cole '91 corner kick into a 1-0 Williams lead, and her seventh goal of the season. One minute later, Schaefer found herself on a breakaway deep in Vassar territory. As the goalie charged and a Vassar defender caught up with Schaefer, the Williams center midfielder pulled up, took a step to her left, and topped the ball past the helpless keeper for a 2-0 margin.

The Ephraim did not let up in the second stanza, as Schaefer charged the Vassar net only four minutes into the half. Her ten-yard blast went whizzing away by the Vassar keeper, but the rebound rolled to junior Susie Piper,

Sophomore Laura Mazder moves the ball downfield en route to scoring the final goal in the women's soccer team's 6-1 drubbing of Vassar. (Marcus)

Vassar arrived at Cole Field sporting a mediocre 8-9 record, but the Ephraim soon made it clear that they were not going to take their opponents from Poughkeepsie lightly. Williams controlled headers, and testing the Vassar keeper early and often.

At 26:00 of the first half, the Ephraim's Carin Cole '91 corner kick into a 1-0 Williams lead, and her seventh goal of the season. One minute later, Schaefer found herself on a breakaway deep in Vassar territory. As the goalie charged and a Vassar defender caught up with Schaefer, the Williams center midfielder pulled up, took a step to her left, and topped the ball past the helpless keeper for a 2-0 margin.

The Ephraim did not let up in the second stanza, as Schaefer charged the Vassar net only four minutes into the half. Her ten-yard blast went whizzing away by the Vassar keeper, but the rebound rolled to junior Susie Piper,

In the Spotlight...

The women's and men's cross country teams both sprinted to Little Three titles this weekend, keeping alive Williams' perfect record in Little Three competition so far this year.

It had to happen sometime, and it finally did. After a 28 game winning streak, the men's soccer team finally found its match, as the kickers lost to Connecticut College 2-1 on Saturday.

The football team posted its second consecutive 21-0 shutout, beating Middlebury on Saturday. The shutout may have been the Ephraim's second in two weeks, but it was only their third in seven years.

The 1st soccer title went to the Blue Collar Workers who beat the 11th place Blue in the championship matchup. Individual league awards went to leading scorers Nick Waltassari '89 and Susie Becker '89.

Orel Hershiser may have some competition right here in Billsville. Andy Bernheimer '90 recently racked up 94 2/3 consecutive scoreless innings on the mound in Nintendo Baseball. Of the danger he served up to Andre Dawson, Panda said, "I should have walked him."

of the game with 3:22 remaining. Keeper Santiago tended the nets for Williams, although she called on to make only one save and probably could have fit in a quick nap. Williams, on the other hand, cranked out 25 shots and raised its season goal total to 29.

The Ephraim's defensive unit was, once again, superb, allowing only their sixteenth goal of the year in fourteen games. Cole, the team's southpaw sweeper, showed a confidence and an array of moves that left the Vassar forwards shaking their heads. Schaefer, too, played well, leading a crisp passing unit and setting up several players with crosses and long balls.

With ten minutes remaining, coach Lisa Melendy gave the fans a glimpse of the future of Williams soccer, as Alison Bonner '92, Laura Anderson '92, Audra Mazder '91 and Elise Carson '91 each saw some action. The second stringers worked well together, as Mazder slugged home the final goal

BUD ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

From the locker room

by Marc McDermott and Ted Hobar

The time has come to get rid of all the fluff issues in the presidential campaign and get down to the real stuff. Forget all the garbage about education and social security, even the rhetoric about foreign policy and the budget—let's talk about the issue really on the minds of the public—sports.

Both candidates lay claim to distinguished athletic careers, but a closer look at their qualifications shows that one of them is not really qualified to be the commander-in-chief. Michael "Pearl" Dukakis played point guard at Swarthmore College in addition to captaining the cross country team. Swarthmore may be highly ranked in US News, but you certainly won't find it in 'The Sporting News. Swarthmore competes in Division III, and its playing fields hardly prepare one for the Cold War battlefields in Europe.

George "Oscarface" Bush, meanwhile, captained the Division I Yale Eli baseball team into the playoffs his senior year. The non-sports enthusiasts among you may not see the significance of this subtle difference, but to any red-blooded American the contrast is startling. Teddy Roosevelt did not say "Speak softly and carry a big stick," and when you sit across from Gorbachev at the negotiating table you play hardball, not hoops.

Besides, when was the last time the President threw the opening tipoff in the NBA finals? How can the President negotiate from a position of strength when he cannot brush Mikhail back off the plate, or out of Europe?

Neither vice-presidential candidate seems adequately qualified to assume the Presidency. Dan "The Natural" Quayle was riding the pine at De Pauw before his dad made a few calls to the coach. However, rumors that Papa Quayle used his influence to pad his son's stats are entirely unfounded. Questions of whether Dan had a ringer take key at-bats for him do still exist, though. Lloyd "You're no Babe Ruth" Bentson, on the other hand, was known to charge teammates outrageous sums of money to join him in the pregame meal.

We know that most voters dislike both candidates, and we agree. It's too late for '88, but here's the first endorsement of the '92 candidates. Bill "Chairman of the Boards" Bradley will head the Democratic ticket, but he will find no slouch in the GOP's Jack "Bombs Away" Kemp. Kemp was a great quarterback, but Dollar Bill is a Hall-of-Famer who won't be boxed out of the Oval Office.

GOFF'S SPORTS TRIVIA QUIZ

- 1) The Ephraim posted their second shutout in as many weeks with Saturday's 21-0 win over Middlebury. When was the last time (year) before last week that the Ephraim shut out an opponent in football?
- 2) What college basketball conference has won the most NCAA tournament titles in the last 25 years (use current conference alignments even they did not exist when the teams won)?
- 3) Only five different teams have reached the finals of the NBA Championships in the 1980's. Name them.
- 4) What type of boat won the most recent America's Cup sailing trophy?

Last week's answers: 1) Beer tap, radio, phone, etc.; 2) Orel Hershiser; 3) 2 as of last week; 4) Sox 1918, Bruins 1972, Celtics 1986.

Turn in your answers to Ted Hobar, Marc McDermott, or SU 2817 by Saturday, or call the Record office (X248) on Sunday before 5 PM. Last week's winner, Charles Stewart Verdery, wins a $15 gift certificate to Goff's Sports. Congratulations, Verdel!

Goff's Sports, Inc.

(413) 458-3605
15 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

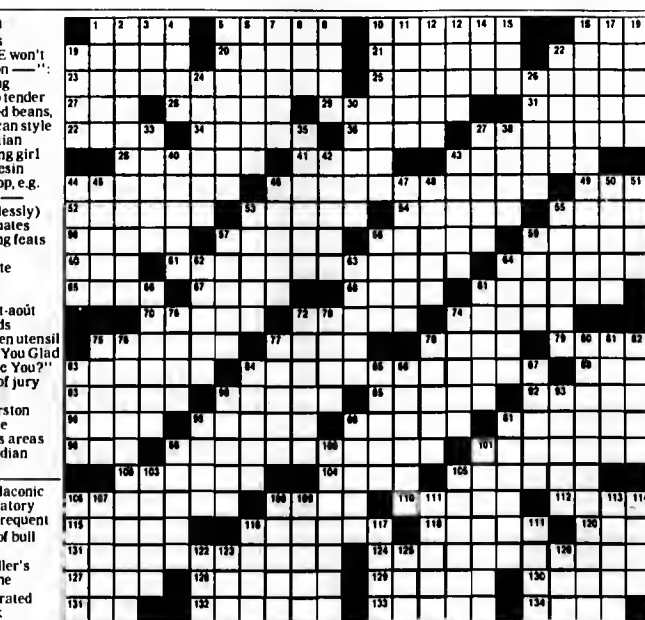

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Character Studies

BY JOHN GREENMAN/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Malenka

- ACROSS
- 1 Kind of check
 - 2 Wave modifier
 - 3 Cosmetician
 - 4 Max
 - 5 Erwin of early TV
 - 6 Ziti topping
 - 7 Idolize
 - 8 Rub with a rasp
 - 9 Eschew
 - 10 EL
 - 11 Assist at a wedding
 - 12 Sing
 - 13 Eyes amorously
 - 14 "Lady" of song
 - 15 Menial
 - 16 Adjust an alarm clock
 - 17 Contracts a cold
 - 18 Not impetuous
 - 19 Feel contrite
 - 20 JAY
 - 21 Pay hike
 - 22 KAY
 - 23 Gold
 - 24 Laughter role: 1932
 - 25 Concluding section
 - 26 Most indolent
 - 27 Use a divining rod
 - 28 Constellation near Norma
 - 29 Certain
 - 30 Certain
 - 31 Simmering
 - 32 Jockey's goals
 - 33 N. art colony
 - 34 Eccentric
 - 35 — Speed-wagon (rock group)
 - 36 Raison d'
 - 37 Spotted piece
 - 38 Expanded effort
 - 39 BEE
 - 40 Midwinter malady
 - 41 Autumns, in Avila
 - 42 Kirk and Hartman
 - 43 Yokum or Doubleday
 - 44 Stats for Mike Greenwell
 - 45 Authority
 - 46 Piquant quaff
 - 47 Ragus
 - 48 Building wing
 - 49 EX
 - 50 These go from alpha to omega
 - 51 Luge or pung
 - 52 — do-well
 - 53 Side petals
 - 54 Supernatural spirits
 - 55 Wars of the
 - 56 Diagonal weave
 - 57 Major appliance
 - 58 With calm assurance
 - 59 Say or Roy
 - 60 Cuban cat
 - 61 Norman town
 - 62 Most reasonable
 - 63 ESS
 - 64 Maneuverable as a sailboat
 - 65 Puccini's forte
 - 66 Heart's ease
 - 67 Houston
 - 68 Juliet-audit periods
 - 69 Kitchen utensil
 - 70 "You're Glad You're You?"
 - 71 Kind of jury
 - 72 Actor
 - 73 Placid
 - 74 Fandie
 - 75 Guido's high
 - 76 VEE
 - 77 Bedroom
 - 78 More laconic
 - 79 Undulatory
 - 80 Less frequent
 - 81 Tilt
 - 82 Fla exports
 - 83 Manipulates
 - 84 Swindler's scheme
 - 85 Celebrated Greek physician
 - 86 F.M.
 - 87 "Jezebel"
 - 88 Commencement
 - 89 "Cummon Sense" man
 - 90 N. African
 - 91 Liguria
 - 92 Laundromat
 - 93 Bowls at Jack-sonville
 - 94 Forfeits
 - 95 To any extent
 - 96 "E won't split on —"
 - 97 Kipping
 - 98 Sheep tender
 - 99 Cooked beans
 - 100 Mexican style
 - 101 Dancing girl
 - 102 Roll top, e.g.
 - 103 To no — (fruitlessly)
 - 104 Graduates
 - 105 Skating feats
 - 106 Imitate
 - 107 TEE
 - 108 ZEE
 - 109 Juliet-audit periods
 - 110 Kitchen utensil
 - 111 "You're Glad You're You?"
 - 112 Kind of jury
 - 113 Actor
 - 114 Placid
 - 115 Fandie
 - 116 Guido's high
 - 117 VEE
 - 118 Bedroom
 - 119 More laconic
 - 120 Undulatory
 - 121 Less frequent
 - 122 Tilt
 - 123 Fla exports
 - 124 Manipulates
 - 125 Swindler's scheme
 - 126 Celebrated Greek physician
 - 127 F.M.
 - 128 "Jezebel"
 - 129 Commencement
 - 130 "Cummon Sense" man
 - 131 N. African
 - 132 Liguria
 - 133 Laundromat
 - 134 Bowls at Jack-sonville
 - 135 Forfeits
 - 136 To any extent
 - 137 "E won't split on —"
 - 138 Kipping
 - 139 Sheep tender
 - 140 Cooked beans
 - 141 Mexican style
 - 142 Dancing girl
 - 143 Roll top, e.g.
 - 144 To no — (fruitlessly)
 - 145 Graduates
 - 146 Skating feats
 - 147 Imitate
 - 148 TEE
 - 149 ZEE
 - 150 Juliet-audit periods
 - 151 Kitchen utensil
 - 152 "You're Glad You're You?"
 - 153 Kind of jury
 - 154 Actor
 - 155 Placid
 - 156 Fandie
 - 157 Guido's high
 - 158 VEE
 - 159 Bedroom
 - 160 More laconic
 - 161 Undulatory
 - 162 Less frequent
 - 163 Tilt
 - 164 Fla exports
 - 165 Manipulates
 - 166 Swindler's scheme
 - 167 Celebrated Greek physician
 - 168 F.M.
 - 169 "Jezebel"
 - 170 Commencement
 - 171 "Cummon Sense" man
 - 172 N. African
 - 173 Liguria
 - 174 Laundromat
 - 175 Bowls at Jack-sonville
 - 176 Forfeits
 - 177 To any extent
 - 178 "E won't split on —"
 - 179 Kipping
 - 180 Sheep tender
 - 181 Cooked beans
 - 182 Mexican style
 - 183 Dancing girl
 - 184 Roll top, e.g.
 - 185 To no — (fruitlessly)
 - 186 Graduates
 - 187 Skating feats
 - 188 Imitate
 - 189 TEE
 - 190 ZEE
 - 191 Juliet-audit periods
 - 192 Kitchen utensil
 - 193 "You're Glad You're You?"
 - 194 Kind of jury
 - 195 Actor
 - 196 Placid
 - 197 Fandie
 - 198 Guido's high
 - 199 VEE
 - 200 Bedroom

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

"Hey, Bob, did I scare you or what?"

The creepiest of walls

Sports

Football heads into Little Three with second 21-0 shutout

by Ted Hobart

Having made their way through the toughest and easiest parts of their schedule with a 4-1-1 record, the Ephs now face the part of the season that people really remember—the Little Three. There is no better way for the squad to enter this crucial part of the season than with a second consecutive shutout win, a 21-0 victory over the Middlebury Panthers.

The pattern of the game was somewhat similar to last week's win over Colby by an identical 21-0 score, in that the offense had some trouble adjusting in the game's early going. This week it was due less to turnovers than to penalties. The Ephs were whittled for five penalties in their first four series day, racking up possession time and keeping Middlebury's offense on the sideline. Jon Horton '91 followed the "hogs" up front to amass 72 yards rushing in the first half alone.

Even when the Panther offense did get on the field, the Williams defense was quick to usher it off. The Ephs limited the Panthers to just three first downs and did not even allow them to get outside of their own territory in the first half. Only a few missed opportunities kept the Ephs from mounting a bigger lead than 7-0 at the half.

The second half started out with similar success for the Ephs. Though the first two Williams drives stalled, the defense forced two con-

Score by Quarters	1	2	3	4	Final
MIDDLEBURY	0	0	0	0	0
WILLIAMS	0	7	7	7	21

Team	Qtr	Time left	Scoring play	Score
W	2	14:16	Shean 12 yard pass from Kennedy (Ettemad kick)	7-0
W	3	9:52	Williams 50 yard interception return (Ettemad kick)	14-0
W	4	0:37	Chesley 6 yard run (Ettemad kick)	21-0

secutive turnovers from the Panthers to open the half. The first, a fumble recovered by linebacker Chris Partal '90, gave the Ephs the ball back at the Williams 30.

The Ephs failed on their next drive also, and Bill Crowley '91 punted the ball 42 yards to the Panther 25. On third and eight, Middlebury quarterback Tim Ostebo threw toward his receiver in the flat. However, strong safety Rich Williams '90 picked off the pass and ran 30 yards down the sideline for the score and the 14-0 lead.

Chesley returns
The Ephs received a lift in the second half. In the return of Neal Chesley into the action, Chesley, who dislocated his elbow in the opening game of the season against Hamilton and whose status for the Middlebury was unsure, pounded ahead for 61 yards on

Hogs hold the line
The strength of Williams' big offensive line allowed the Ephs to work the ball effectively on the ground all of the game, three of those for illegal procedure.

Head coach Dick Farley explained that most of those penalties were caused by the offense trying to call audibles (plays called at the line of scrimmage) to react to changes in the Middlebury defense. "They [Middlebury] had people jumping all around on defense. We were audible-izing and... we took too many penalties."
Even the penalties could not slow down the offense much, though, as the Ephs concluded their second drive of the game with senior tri-captain Scott Kennedy's 12 yard touchdown strike under one minute into the second quarter.

Hogs hold the line
The strength of Williams' big offensive line allowed the Ephs to work the ball effectively on the ground all 20 carries the second half. Even though Horton has performed spectacularly in Chesley's absence, it is reassuring to have a strong tandem healthy entering this crucial juncture of the season.

The Ephs were unable to mount any sustained efforts until they took over on their own 30 with 8:01 remaining in the game. The offense chewed up 7:30 off the clock in marching for the final score of the game, with Chesley charging six yards up the middle for the touchdown.

The defense increased its streak of shutout quarters to nine in the second half in the face of a revived Panther offense. Middlebury rallied for nine first downs and exploded for several big gains, but the Ephs came through when it counted, forcing turnovers or stopping third down conversions.

The defensive line hit Middlebury with several tackles for losses and sacks which left the Panthers facing long yardage situations against a stalwart Williams secondary. Middlebury faced seven third down situations needing seven yards or more for the first down, effectively neutralizing the Panther running attack.

This week the Ephs face the Wesleyan Cardinals, a dangerous offensive team who on Saturday lost to Hamilton 10-7 after failing on several opportunities deep in Hamilton territory. This year also marks the first time in many years that Wesleyan has a shot at winning the Little Three title outright, having previously defeated Amherst 27-0.

Junior Neal Chesley returned from his elbow injury in fine form, racking up 61 second half yards versus Middlebury. (Goodell)

Women's cross country dominates Little Three

by Cathy Cocks

As expected, the women's cross country team crushed Amherst and Wesleyan in Saturday's Little Three Championship at Amherst, scoring just 18 points to the Cardinals' 50 and the Jets' 66. The Ephwomen just barely missed posting a perfect score of 15, which indicates a sweep of the top twenty spots out of a field of 37 finishers.

Not merely content to win the meet, the Ephs ran well and posted very quick times. All of the top five broke twenty minutes for the 5000 meter (3.1 mile) course and many improved on personal times run in the Amherst Invitational earlier this fall. The Little Three victory is the second in as many years for Williams, and the strength of the team promises equally good results in the future.

Showing their combined talent and depth, the team's top runners led the race in a pack through the first mile, accompanied by only two Wesleyan and one Amherst runner. Then freshman Molly Martin took over the lead for the Ephs and raced unchallenged to win the individual title in an impressive 19:07 for the mildly hilly course. Behind her came Heidi Beebe '91, running a strong 19:39 to hold off the first Wesleyan runner (19:42).

Andrea Carly '92 and Anne Platt '91, both running despite injuries, were hard on her heels at 19:44 and 19:47 for fourth and fifth places respectively, while Ann Dannbauer '90 displayed her championship speed in overtaking three runners in the last 100 meters to finish sixth overall. Rounding out the varsity were Cathy Cocks '89 and Cherie MacAuley '92 in ninth and tenth places.

The next six places also went to Ephs as the team's second seven proved their ability to have won the meet without the varsity. They will get their chance to compete as a varsity squad next weekend in the ECAC meet in Albany, where they will race against many top-flight eastern teams.

The top seven will rest that week in anticipation of the NCAA Division III New England qualifying meet at Southern Massachusetts University on November 12. The final meet of the season, the New England meet, will offer tough competition against teams Williams has yet to meet, such as the University of Southern Maine, as well as the chance for the top individuals to qualify to run at Nationals.

Male harriers take contested title for 17th time in 19 years

by Steve Brody

The men's cross-country team put its season's training to the test on Saturday, traveling to Amherst for a highly competitive Little Three Championship. It was the Ephs who prevailed, getting back the title that they have won in seventeen of the past nineteen years with what freshman Bill McKinley called "a good, strong consistent effort by the team as a whole." The meet lived up to its competitive billing, as only six points separated the three teams. For the victory, Williams finished with 38 points to second place Amherst's 43 and Wesleyan's 44.

Mare Beltz '91 pulled away from the front pack during the first mile, and looked for a while as if he might run away from the entire field. But he led pack came back to Beltz, and he was joined by teammates Dale Johnson '90 and Dylan Cooper '91 as the runners approached the two mile mark.

"I felt great at that point," said Cooper. "Evans was breathing harder than I was, and I thought I had a good shot at winning." Cooper was referring to Amherst's Tom Evans, who is following his stellar junior season with an equally impressive senior year. And unfortunately for the Williams sophomore, cramps that developed during the third mile kept him from challenging for the win.

However, Beltz remained in contention, battling Evans through the race's first four miles. While the Amherst runner's strength allowed him to surge ahead for a comfortable win, Beltz distanced himself from the rest of the pack and cruised to second place. Behind him, Johnson fought a close battle with the top two Cardinal runners that gave him a sixth place finish. And, importantly, he beat Wesleyan's Peter Knight, a crucial factor in the Eph victory.

As Cooper fought through the cramps, he fell back to a pack of Eph runners that included McKinley, Nathaniel McVey-Finney '90, and Gil McCabe '89. McKinley finished strong to capture the ninth spot, and Cooper was behind him in tenth. McVey-Finney and McCabe ran together in 11th and 12th and left Wesleyan's fourth and fifth runners well behind them. Evan Driscoll '91 was sixth for Williams and 15th overall, finishing ahead of Amherst scorers and adding points to the Lord Jeff team score.

Williams also won the junior varsity race. Dave Nadelman '89 won the race after freshman John Davenport, running his best race of the season and leading, took a wrong turn on the poorly marked course. His peril was characteristic of the way the meet was hosted by Amherst. Runners had to battle both pedestrian and automotive traffic, weaving around people and cars, parked and moving, as they ran through the campus.

Williams now races the ECAC Championship Saturday in Albany before running the Division III New England Championships at Southern Massachusetts University on November 12.

Heads up!

Junior Dan Calichman and senior Emil Mugnani could not quite get to this cross before the Babson keeper punched the ball out of trouble. The Ephs downed Babson 3-1 but lost their first game of the season on Saturday, 2-1 to Connecticut College. For story see page 11. (Scala)

Volleyball takes NIAC tourney after split with Smith and Bates

by Bob Nisholka

After losing in five tough games to Division III powerhouse SUNY Albany, ranked fourth in the nation, last Tuesday, the Ephwomen headed into last Saturday's NIAC tournament at Smith as the third seeded team behind Smith and Bates, teams that Williams had lost to earlier in the year. Ultimately, the return of a healthy Nancy Hedeman '89 to the lineup, the vicious hitting of sister Holly '92, the spectacular service of Catherine McConnell '90, and a stellar, all-around performance by co-captain Shelley Whelpton '90 provided the spark for Williams' stunning NIAC performance.

At NIAC, the Ephwomen first battled fourth-seeded Bowdoin. In the first game, aces by Whelpton (2), Laurie Hartson '91, and Holly Hedeman helped Williams to jump out to a quick 5-1 lead. Marianne Landa '90 also contributed four kills while McConnell put down two more kills and a block as Williams took the first game 15-12.

In the second game, co-captain Whelpton personally put the game out of reach of the flailing Bowdoin team. The junior from Canada served up two five point aces to put the game away: first, to put the team up 5-0 in the opening minutes of the second game, and second, at 10-2, to end the second game by the score of 15-2.

Battle with Bates

After a short interlude, the Ephwomen confronted second-seeded Bates, who had just beaten the Ephwomen a week earlier to capture the Williams Invitational championship. With Hartson serving up seven straight points to help the Ephwomen to jump out to an 11-2 lead, Williams had no problem taking the first game 15-5.

However, just like the Williams Invitational, Williams once again lost the tempo of the match and ended up surrendering two straight games, 11-15 and 9-15. Bates' fantastic setting and digging simply turned the momentum of the entire match. However, the only redeeming quality about the entire match was the obvious return of co-captain Nancy Hedeman '89 to the starting line-up. Nancy, who had been crippled the past several weeks with

THE RECORD INSIDER

VOL. 1, NO. 1

November 1, 1988

FINISHLINE: ELECTION '88

An Inside look at the races for local and national offices

THE RECORD INSIDER

VOLUME 1, NO. 1

CONTENTS

ON THE COVER

The Great Debate

Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew is conducting his research in a real-life laboratory. Drew, a Republican, faces Democratic Incumbent Sherwood Guernsey in the race for State Representative.

5/ Challenger John Drew

13/ Incumbent Sherwood Guernsey

15/ Face-off

Coverage of the debate between Drew and Guernsey last Thursday.

Cover photo by Joel Isackson

CENTERFOLD

Where You Stand

8-9/ Students at Williams and Amherst tend to favor their governor over the Vice-President. Williams professors stand to the left of their students, with Bush barely making it onto the graph.

ARTICLES

3/ INTERVIEW: James MacGregor Burns on the 1988 Presidential election.

4/ INTERVIEW: George Marcus on the domestic policies of the Presidential candidates.

7/ OPINION: Why more and more Democrats are aligning with the Republican party.

11/ INTERVIEW: MacAlister Brown discusses Bush's and Dukakis' foreign policies.

16/ THE LIGHTER SIDE: A humorous look at the elections.

Copyright Insider, The Williams Record. No part may be reproduced in whole or in part without the express consent of the editors. All rights reserved. The Insider is published by The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267, the second issue of each month.
Editorial: (413) 597-2400

Business: (413) 597-2289

remember to Vote

About the Insider

With this issue, the Record begins publication of a new feature-- a news magazine. The magazine, the Insider, will be published with the second issue of the Record each month. The Insider will focus each month on a topic which has received coverage in the Record and examine it in depth from various perspectives.

This month we take a look at a topic that has engaged us locally and nationally for months and crystallizes this week. Three political science professors speak to us on the candidates running for office. MacAlister Brown examines the candidates' foreign policies. James MacGregor Burns observes politics in the '80's in general and this campaign in particular. George Marcus looks at the domestic policies of George Bush and Michael Dukakis.

In our more immediate vicinity, a political scientist puts theory into practice by challenging State Representative Sherwood Guernsey. Find profiles of Assistant Professor John Drew and Guernsey in this issue, along with coverage of their debate last Thursday.

Faculty divisiveness on campus politics yields to near-unanimity at the national level; only two professors who responded to our survey said they will vote for Bush. Students, although not as single-minded, also come out in favor of the Massachusetts governor.

As with all of our coverage, we welcome your comments. Please consider this an invitation to contribute letters, opinion pieces, or ideas for future editions of the Insider.

James MacGregor Burns on the Presidential campaign of 1988

RECORD: It has been estimated that this year voter turnout will be lower than 50 percent, the lowest level in almost 50 years. This is despite the proliferation of voter registration drives like the one at Williams. Why do you think this trend in lower voter turnout exists?

BURNS: Because millions and millions of people see no great stake in the election. One reason they don't see much stake in the election is that there is no real choice. They don't see the two candidates and the two parties standing for significantly different positions. And the voters are generally bored and turned-off by a campaign that lasts two years. There's also a lot of cynicism about the role of money [in the campaign]. So the result is a bored, apathetic, alienated, cynical group of people numbering literally in the tens of millions.

Plus, there is the existence of still-restrictive registration rules and the failure of the Democrats to mount an effective registration campaign, which would have called for an enormous effort by the Democrats at the grass roots earlier on.

RECORD: How do you think this trend can be reversed?

BURNS: By the Democrats nominating a candidate who will give the electorate a major and dramatic alternative to the Republican candidate. And I would add that based on his governorship in Massachusetts, Michael Dukakis could be that type of candidate.

RECORD: What do you think he might still be able to do in the final days of the campaign to appear as that type of leader?

BURNS: I think Dukakis could emulate Harry Truman in taking a very strong stand for the very liberalism that [Vice President George] Bush is attacking--a very dramatic stand against the conservatism that Bush embodies.

RECORD: Bush has evoked the word "liberal" constantly in this campaign. The charge that Dukakis is a liberal appears to hurt him in some voters' eyes. Why do you think this strategy of Bush's turned out to be effective?

'It's time for the conservatives, for various reasons. And I think there's been a great faltering on the part of the Democratic Party in making up its mind as to what kind of party it wants to be.'

RECORD: Do you believe that lower voter turnout helps the Republicans?

BURNS: Yes, I do. The non-voting [citizens] tend to be the low-income, less-educated persons, with a heavier incidence of blacks and other ethnic groups, and the like. Hence, demographically, they are likely to be Democrats. But that leaves out the "X factor," so that they would not really vote Democratic unless there were leadership of the Andrew Jackson or F.D.R. quality that would raise them to consciousness and persuade them to come to the polls.

BURNS: Well, in fact the anti-liberalism strategy has been successful (and, of course, we won't know until the election), it will be partly because Dukakis has not responded to it. But I feel the attack by Bush on liberalism is the most important development in this campaign. It goes far beyond this campaign and this election, because it's really an attack by American conservatism at the heart of the liberal ideal.

It is not only an attack on what has been the main ideology in the United States for the last 50 years, but it's also an attack on the great leaders who have embodied liberalism. This includes not only noted Democrats--Woodrow Wilson, Al Smith, Roosevelt, Herbert Lehman, Truman, L.B.J. and the like--but it also includes noted Republicans like Theodore Roosevelt, who called himself a progressive, Wendell Willkie, Henry Stimson, Thomas Dewey, Nelson Rockefeller and Dwight Eisenhower - all of whom considered themselves liberals.

RECORD: Nevertheless, to many conservative Republicans, Bush represents what they think is a throwback to the older, liberal Republicans such as Rockefeller and Eisenhower, as opposed to the Reagan conservatism of the Barry Goldwater style that's been seen for the last eight years. Do you think that Bush will turn out to be more of a liberal Republican, or do you think he'll stay with the style of the last eight years?

BURNS: That's a very important question and a hard one to answer. If one goes on the basis of his whole life, Bush does come out of the moderate, or liberal, Republican Party. If one measures him by the last eight years, he emerges as a very strong conservative. We know that on every major issue on which he has had to take a stand in those eight years, he has taken the conservative position, whether it's on abortion or gun control or whatever. Whenever he has faced a crucial strategy question, he has gone the way of the right.

What will he do in Presidency? On the one hand, he at last will have attained that office, so he can be himself. On the other hand, a man no sooner gets to be President in this country than he starts running for re-election, because the most humiliating thing in American politics is for a sitting President to be voted out of office, as both Herbert Hoover and Jimmy Carter were. So my guess will be that Bush will wander back and forth between those two positions, and will find that equally unproductive.

RECORD: One observable trend this year has been the increasing political power and significance, especially for the Democrats, of the South. Do you see that region of the country moving into political preeminence by the next election? And, if Dukakis loses, do you think the Democrats will feel compelled to take their next candidate from that region?

BURNS: Well, the South has been voting Republican for President now since 1928. It's a major source of Presidential electoral votes for the Republicans. In a sense this means the South will have less importance in future because it has less of a balance of power. It is now firmly in the Republican column, and I think it will be viewed as such. I expect that southern whites will increasingly go Republican, not only for the Presidency but up and down the whole ticket. So the answer for the Democratic Party would not be to find a candidate in the South, but to find a candidate that could win in the North, which after all still has most of the electoral votes.

RECORD: What do you think is responsible for what Republican leaders are calling a trend of realignment in voter identification over the last eight years?

BURNS: Well, I think Reagan has given great leadership to the conservative Republicans. He's been an attractive candidate and vote-getter. It's also part of the oscillation of American politics; it's time for the conservatives, for various reasons. And I think there's been a great faltering on the part of the Democratic Party in making up its mind as to what kind of party it wants to be.

RECORD: One of the criticisms levelled at both candidates is that, when it comes down to it, they really aren't all that different from each other. Do you think that we can expect to see a narrowing of the ideological gap between the two parties, and what would be the ramifications of that?

BURNS: I think whether the parties converge even more depends a lot on the outcome of this election. In a sense, the question is not of the two parties converging, because the Republicans have set their strategy and set their goal; it's really a question of whether the Democrats continue to cleave towards the middle. I think if Dukakis loses, and I'm not conceding this in any way at this time, there will be a tremendous fight within the Democratic Party for its future.

'Dukakis could emulate Harry Truman in taking a very strong stand for the very liberalism that [Vice President George] Bush is attacking.'

RECORD: This campaign has been criticized for its lack of substance and debate on important issues. Do you believe this lack of substance has been specific to the 1988 Presidential race, or do you think there's something about the nature of modern political campaigns that has created this problem?

BURNS: I think this tendency has been greater in this election than ever before and has been very much influenced by the phenomena we hear about--television coverage in "bites," with a tremendous emphasis on personalities and minor issues.

See BURNS,
Page 7

The Insider 1 November 1988/3

photo by Amy Beliveau

Domestic policies:

Professor of Political Science George Marcus was interviewed for the Record's special Election '88 section by Ann Mantil. Marcus is a specialist on statistical analysis, polling and domestic policy.

Photo by Miriam Marcus

RECORD: Is it possible to predict what kind of an impact either Bush or Dukakis would have on American domestic policy over the next four years?

MARCUS: Either candidate will be severely constrained in the kinds of programs he could initiate. The federal deficit is tremendous, so the funding just isn't available. Whatever the government revenues are, around $150 billion will have to go towards interest payments alone. The expenditures for defense aren't going to decrease; no one is talking about cutting the defense budget. Bush wants to let defense spending grow with inflation. Under Dukakis, real defense expenditures would go down somewhat, but it's still a huge part of the budget. So there isn't a lot of flexibility to initiate new programs, even though the list of things people are demanding is growing.

George Marcus discusses Bush's and Dukakis' stands

There's what some people call infrastructure: sewage systems, bridges, roads. But the number of bridges, the number of dams, the number of public buildings, structures that we rely on that are just falling apart—municipal hospitals, schools—is extraordinary. It requires tens of billions of dollars.

RECORD: Would the environment be another area where it will be impossible to initiate new programs, or at least difficult?

MARCUS: Not impossible, just extremely difficult, because the expense side is very high. People have talked about two components in particular, acid rain and the heating phenomenon. Both of those require doing something about fossil fuel plants that spew out carbon dioxide and sulfuric acid in large proportions, which then produce acid rain as well as heat the planet. The cost to merely rectify the acid rain component, by putting scrubbers and other kinds of controls, is billions of dollars. Doing something about the lakes and streams that have already been affected...again that's not a no-cost item as far as expenditures are concerned.

If one wanted to do something about turning away from fossil fuels, again that's extremely expensive. Of course there's nuclear energy, but there are political as well as economic and environmental issues which make that hardly a viable or an attractive alternative.

Medical care, however it's understood, is an extraordinarily expensive business. Moreover, the expense of medical care has been at an inflation rate far in excess of the general inflation rate. The population is becoming older. That means there's a larger post-retirement population with their own set of needs.

At the same time, there have been shifts in the character of the family. A family used to be a unit that took care of the children as well as of the aged. The family is now increasingly doing neither. That's why we've seen the demand for more affordable day care, for example. The family is no longer able to care for the aged, hence the growth of retirement programs. Insurance and nursing homes and other forms of age maintenance are now becoming a public responsibility. Those are grand changes that are taking place, whatever the federal government does, but it inevitably puts pressure on the federal government both for a regulatory oversight role as well as for a funding role. That makes a demand for greater federal dollars, and that's going to increase, whether it's a Bush administration or a Dukakis administration.

RECORD: How feasible do you think Bush's federally funded day care program is?

MARCUS: Well, as I understand the program, it won't reach many people. It certainly won't reach the people who most need it, who are the people in that layer of income where, if they got effective day care, they could have a self-reliant life through a job or a career. Our society is centered on the belief that everybody is, or ought to be, self-reliant,

'Bush's history is as a moderate. Out of necessity I think he's cloaking himself as a Reaganite, but I just don't believe it.'

but there are huge segments of the population for whom that is either inapplicable or inappropriate.

The whole system of education in this society is increasingly deteriorating. We expect children to become self-reliant some day, when they become adults. But as families are less able to provide what we expect as an investment in children, by way of medical care, proper social attention and upbringing and education, then that's something that the society has to provide.

An ideal situation would be a tremendously expanding pie—that is government revenues—with fewer and fewer claimants on it, but here we have the worst. The pie has grown at modest rates at best because of the need to decrease the deficit and service the government's existing debt. Plus, all the domestic areas seem to be claiming greater expenditures rather than less. It's hard to see how either presidential candidate is going to have an attractive set of choices.

RECORD: Both Bush and Dukakis are promising not to touch the social security fund as a source of current revenue. Do you believe them?

MARCUS: Probably, but more so because Congress and effective lobbying on the part of various organizations that represent social security recipients would be particularly effective at halting it pretty rapidly. So I think it's not a great risk.

'It's still possible for Dukakis to win. I think basically what he's started to do the last few days is what he needs to do to win.'

RECORD: If elected, how likely is Bush to continue the policies of the Reagan era?

MARCUS: Actually, I don't think he's very likely to at all. Bush's history is as a moderate. Out of necessity I think he's cloaking himself as a Reaganite, but I just don't believe it.

RECORD: In which areas do you think Bush would differ from Reagan?

MARCUS: I think he's much more inclined to use government in a positive way than See MARCUS page 15

JOHN DREW

A Williams professor challenges a third-term incumbent for a seat in the Massachusetts Legislature

by Dan Skwire

Western Massachusetts may seem far from the national political scene, but according to Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew, Republican candidate for the state legislature in the 2nd Berkshire District, the major choice that voters must make next Tuesday is the same in the local as in the presidential elections.

"If you want a liberal democrat who believes that the way to solve social problems is to throw money at them, then you should vote for Sherwood Guernsey," Drew said. "I represent a new breed of governing conservatives who want to create new and innovative ways of solving problems. We don't want to argue about ideology."

'It is immoral, unethical and just plain wrong to claim that the legislature meets 365 days a year.'

According to Drew, one of the most prominent issues in the campaign is the question of auto insurance rates. Massachusetts has government regulations that set identical rate ceilings for drivers in every part of the state, ignoring the higher risks of driving in eastern Massachusetts. This means that rates in the western half of the state are artificially inflated.

Supports current auto bill

Drew said he supports the insurance reform bill presently before the Massachusetts Senate, which proposes to cut rates statewide, but does not believe that it goes far enough in dealing with regional inequalities.

"The bill doesn't even begin to address the problem that the state exploits western Massachusetts. [Eastern drivers] should pay fair market rates, then work out their own solutions."

Drew made two proposals which he said will solve the insurance dispute. The first is gradual deregulation, which he said will lower rates in the west while making the increases more tolerable for eastern drivers. The second is state compensation for the artificially high rates paid by western drivers, covering the last 10 years.

"My argument is let's junk a very bad system. My opponent worked within the system

'The most important issue is what kind of philosophy do you want to see governing the country. I'm not telling you to vote for me because I will reform auto insurance, but because my methods will reflect a dynamic, new public philosophy.'

but rates went up 30 percent in three years. I will be more effective."

To bring new jobs to the area, Drew said he wants Pittsfield to be designated an economic development zone. This would give tax breaks to potential industrial investors there. He said that these tax savings would encourage the creation of new jobs.

According to Drew, Guernsey has been unsuccessful in the area of job creation.

Lost 3000 jobs in Pittsfield

"Liberal democrats don't want to decrease tax revenue," Drew said, "but we've lost 3000 jobs over the last three years in Pittsfield, primarily in manufacturing areas. My opponent has been in office for five and a half years, so he has presided over that loss of jobs."

Drew has criticized Guernsey and other legislators for taking excessive tax deductions on their salaries. Federal law permits legislators to deduct $108 from their taxable pay for each day the legislature is in session, but Drew has claimed that, through a loophole in the law, legislators are able to claim the deduction for the entire year.

"It is immoral, unethical and just plain wrong to claim that the legislature meets 365 days a year," Drew said. "There were no formal sessions between July 16 and October 24." He added that if he is elected he will work to persuade other legislators not to exaggerate how often they meet and he will not claim the deduction unless the legislature is in session that day.

'I represent a new breed of governing conservatives who want to create new and innovative ways of solving problems.'

In early September, Drew said he would continue to teach at Williams if he were elected, because the typical teaching load here is only five hours per week. He received some negative reactions about that comment, but he claims that the whole dispute was merely a misunderstanding.

Leave of absence

"The term 'teaching load' refers to hours spent in the classroom," he said. "It was bogus for people to say I was only working five hours a week. It was a real cheap shot." Drew then said that his subsequent decision to take a year-long leave of absence if he is elected was not influenced in any way by the reaction to his earlier comment.

Drew said that the greatest difficulty in running against an incumbent was trying to raise funds. "It's a real challenge to run against money," he said. "[Guernsey] is in power. He can do favors for people."

Drew was unable to provide an exact figure on his campaign expenses thus far, but he estimated that as of October 21, he had spent about $8000.

"I got a ton of money from my family and two big contributions from people associated with the state Republican Party. The rest has come from small checks of $25 here and $50 there."

The primary reason voters should vote for him rather than Guernsey, Drew said, is a matter of style. "The most important issue is what kind of philosophy do you want to see governing the country. I'm not telling you to vote for me because I will reform auto insurance, but because my methods will reflect a dynamic, new public philosophy."

Photo by Joel Isackson

Interview with Sherwood Guernsey Page 13

An Inside look at the race

Debate Page 15

RE - ELECT SHERWOOD GUERNSEY

"Sherwood Guernsey is as effective, honest and hard-working as any legislator I've ever known."

James MacGregor Burns
Woodrow Wilson Professor of Government Emeritus,
Williams College

A RECORD OF ACCOMPLISHMENT:

STATE REPRESENTATIVE
SHERWOOD GUERNSEY

GOOD GOVERNMENT: Sherwood was a charter member of a small corps of representatives who, in his first two years in the House, overthrew a long-entrenched, autocratic leadership and opened that body up to very democratic processes.

EDUCATION: When the Republican administration in Washington slashed student loan funds, Sherwood led the fight which resulted in nearly doubling available state student loan funds.

ENVIRONMENT: Sherwood is widely respected as a leader in protecting our environment. He sponsored legislation to preserve our wetlands and protect our ground water supplies, to substantially reduce emission of acid rain pollutants in Massachusetts, and to provide a $500 million bond issue to protect our open spaces. He also secured money for establishment, for the first time, of a Berkshire County office for the Dept. of Environmental Quality Engineering.

MASS. MoCA: It was Sherwood Guernsey who played a key role in securing the votes in the legislature to deliver an unprecedented $35 million in state money to realize the development of the Williams College/Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art.

UNIVERSAL HEALTH CARE ACT: Over one half million Massachusetts citizens under the age of 65 have no health insurance. Sherwood played an important leadership role in this year's passage of the historic, first in the nation, law which provides health care insurance for all.

AUTO-INSURANCE: For five years, Sherwood Guernsey has fought the various lobbies blocking the reform of our auto insurance laws. This year he is bringing that fight to a successful conclusion. The new law, which will probably receive final enactment this week, will have all the essential elements of legislation Sherwood introduced. The bottom line will be a savings to rate-payers of at least 16% - a total of over $400 million.

REPRESENTATIVE SHERWOOD GUERNSEY HAS BEEN ENDORSED BY 26 ESTEEMED WILLIAMS FACULTY AND STAFF (see their letter in this issue of The Record), AND BY THE WILLIAMS COLLEGE DEMOCRATS. IS IT ANY WONDER?-

RE-ELECT SHERWOOD GUERNSEY
DEMOCRAT - STATE REPRESENTATIVE

VOTE NOVEMBER 8
WILLIAMSTOWN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL, 7AM - 8PM

PAID FOR BY THE COMMITTEE TO RE-ELECT SHERWOOD GUERNSEY- MARGARET BOYER, TREASURER

Opinion: old values, new party

Reagan Democrats come home to GOP

by Russell A. Day '91

Reagan Democrats. We hear that term bounced around by the media every day. Both Dukakis and Bush target their messages to these important voters. But who are these people? What do Reagan Democrats stand for and why have they been voting Republican? While there is no entirely accurate stereotype available, I will attempt to describe a Reagan Democrat by focusing on a person I know well, my father.

A product of the Depression, my father grew up in the inner city clad in shirts issued by the welfare department. He was the son of poor, Irish Catholic parents, people who saw the Democratic party as their advocate, their hope. It was instilled in him that this party cared about him, about the "little guy" hurt by the heartless policies of those rich Republicans.

This background formed his political ideology. His first involvement in a politics came when he distributed Roosevelt literature at a Democratic rally. In 1948, he cast his first ballot for Harry Truman. Successively, my father supported Stevenson, Kennedy, Johnson and Humphrey for president. He served on his city's Democratic Committee and voted party line, always party line.

With the advent of the McGovern candidacy of 1972, however, came a reassessment of the party's values. With that change came also a sad split with many traditional Democrats like my father. For the first time, he, like many others, voted Republican.

Why the split? Traditional Democrats did not see in George McGovern the Franklin Roosevelt who had led them through a war. They saw, instead, a policy of retreat, of "peace at any price." Traditional Democrats did not see in these new party leaders the wholesome and optimistic youth of John F. Kennedy. They saw, instead, a rebellious youth bucking the values which they had long held dear. People like my father saw a party which opposed the death penalty and supported gun control, a party which embraced abortion on demand. While a strong supporter of Civil Rights, my father broke with the party when the emphasis changed from equal opportunity to preferential treatment, and he was not alone. This was not the Democratic Party he had grown to love. I know my father felt the way Ronald Reagan did when he said, "I didn't leave the Democratic Party, the Democratic Party left me."

Unfortunately, my father's party has yet to return to him and so many like him. Michael Dukakis represents weakness to these traditional Democrats. He supports the "disarm, the negotiate" these Democrats disdain. Michael Dukakis represents the degradation of values in society for these traditional Democrats. He supports abortion on demand, opposes a moment of silence in the classroom and believes teachers should not be mandated to lead their classes in the Pledge of Allegiance. Such positions further alienate these Reagan Democrats from their political home.

Many of them, however, are beginning to find a new home, a home where they can finally be comfortable again. That home is the Republican Party. This party is the one in which John F. Kennedy's words, when he said we must "pay any price, bear any burden" to protect freedom around the world still ring true. When the Republican party supports aid to the contras in Nicaragua, to the freedom fighters in Afghanistan and those in Angola, it is bearing that burden. This party decries abortion as murder, supports the death penalty as justice and a moment of silence as reasonable in a society based on both Judeo-Christian ethics and freedom of religion. These views appeal to the Reagan Democrat.

How will they vote on November 8? It seems clear that until the Democratic party returns to its roots, remembering that it was not supported merely for the programs it promoted, but the values it represented, these Democrats will continue to vote Republican. I know my father and other traditional still slightly cringe when they are forced to vote for the party they were taught to hate. They would like to go home to the Democratic Party. But as of now, when Reagan Democrats "go home" it will be to the party of George Bush, for the Democratic party has abandoned them and their values.

Burns predicts backlash against long campaigns

RECORD: Do you see any backlash against the way that campaigns are starting to evolve?

BURNS: Yes, I think there will be a backlash against these endless campaigns. This is great concern about the impact of these campaigns on the sheer health of the candidates and their families, the television triviality problem, excessive emphasis on personalities, et cetera. Yes, I think this has become so dramatic and has turned off so many people that there will be some kind of backlash. But the nature of the backlash is hard to predict.

RECORD: More and more Americans are using television to get their information about candidates and about political issues in general. What effect do you think TV has had on Presidential politics?

BURNS: I think television is very much a reflection of the basic politics in a country, just as the basic politics are influenced by television. And if the parties don't offer major alternatives, television will reflect that lack of conflict. Television can be a marvelous vehicle for dramatizing politics and educating the people politically. For example, television in the conventions can cover them wonderfully, because, with all its cameras, it can get into the caucuses and the smoke-filled rooms and show all the nuances and all the personality battles within a frame established by the party, which is the convention itself. But if you have conventions that do not know where I'd start--probably with both at the same time.

RECORD: Most polls do give Bush a small margin over Dukakis in the popular vote. However, most polls regarding the electoral college vote show Bush winning the election comfortably, with as many as 320 electoral votes. Do you believe the Republicans have a long-term "lock" on the electoral college, and what could the Democrats do to combat this?

'There is great concern about the impact of these campaigns on the sheer health of the candidates and their families.'

make decisions, where the roll-call vote is just a farce and a bore, where many of the speeches are boring, then television is going to play down the substance of the convention and play up the trivial, or perhaps not even cover the convention at all. So I think we have to reform both our politics and the media, and the two go hand-in-hand. I don't

BURNS: No, I don't think they have a long-term lock--a lot depends on what happens in this election. Actually, the electoral college works the other way. That is, if the Democrats could slightly increase their strength in the North, having now given up hope for winning the South, all they need to do in the big states is get between 50 and 55 percent of the vote, flatten the vote from Massachusetts to California, and win the big, urban, industrial states, which are supposed to be the foundation of Democratic Party power; and concede the Rocky Mountain States and the South. The electoral college could turn out to be a winning coalition for the Democrats.

RECORD: As far as a building a winning coalition, and the Democrats needing to decide what they will stand for in the future, do you see the Democratic Party attempting to redefine itself?

BURNS: Well, they may want to play down the term "liberal," if only because it's been so savagely abused. But in that case, the question is, "What do you substitute for it?" Do you substitute the great symbol of moderation, and turn off even more millions of people? Or do you move to the left, and become a more solidly progressive party? Perhaps "progressive" is the word for the Democrats in the future. Possibly even the word "radical," in its literal sense.

Poll results:

What you told us

If the results of the November 8 election are anything like what is indicated by a poll of Williams College students and faculty, it should be a landslide for Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis. Two-thirds of the students and nearly all of the faculty polled said they planned to vote for Dukakis.

The results of the poll are similar to those of a poll of Amherst students conducted by the Amherst Student about a week earlier. Fewer Williams students said that they were undecided, and more said they planned to vote for Vice President George Bush.

Although an overwhelming majority preferred Dukakis' running mate, Senator Lloyd Bentsen, to Senator Dan Quayle, who is running with Bush, the Vice Presidential selection appeared to affect the Presidential choice of only a few of those polled.

Most professors polled said that Dukakis would be better at dealing with both economic and foreign policy issues. Students were much more divided on the subject. A majority said that Dukakis would be better for the economy, but more preferred Bush's approach to foreign policy. Despite Bush's claim that he wants to be "the education President", both students and faculty said that Dukakis would be better for education.

If the Presidential election were today, for whom would you vote?

About these polls...

One hundred students were selected randomly to participate in the poll. Ninety were contacted between October 23 and 29.

Questionnaires were sent out to seventy-five professors on October 21 and 24. Fifty-five responded to the survey.

The Amherst Student sent questionnaires to every student at Amherst. 446 students responded.

Which candidate do you think would be better at dealing with foreign policy issues?

Which candidate would be better for education?

If the Presidential candidates were running alone, for whom would you vote?

If the Vice-Presidential candidates were running alone, for whom would you vote?

Are you registered here or at home? (Students only)

With what party are you registered?

Which candidate do you think would be better at dealing with economic issues?

JOHN DREW

for state representative

He'll stop the power abusers.

Do you know these facts about John Drew's opponent?

- Rep. Sherwood Guernsey and his fellow legislators use their power to create a $36,000 tax deduction for themselves by artificially extending the legislative session to an unbelievable 365 days-a-year. (See, The Berkshire Eagle, 8-11-88.)
- Rep. Sherwood Guernsey recently used his authority to give himself a retroactive 37% pay raise. He called his pay raise a public emergency.
- Rep. Sherwood Guernsey now wants to keep his salary at the new $41,000/year level while at the same time increasing his "free time" by using his influence to cut the legislative session in half.
- Rep. Sherwood Guernsey doesn't believe we should demand that legislators show up for work before we hand over their $45-a-day travel allowances.
- Rep. Sherwood Guernsey doesn't believe that we should audit the State Legislature either, even though we audit every other form of public expenditure.
- Rep. Sherwood Guernsey says he needs that $36,000 tax deduction to cover "job-related expenses" . . . even though he owns three homes, works as a lawyer on the side, and earned between $10,000 and $20,000 last year in the stock market.

I want you to feel proud of your state legislators."

Paid for by the Committee to Elect John Drew 79 Southworth Street, Apt. #1, Williamstown, Massachusetts 01267

PAID POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENT

Brown looks at foreign policy

Mid East offers challenge for the next President

Professor of Political Science MacAlister Brown was interviewed for the Record's special Election '88 section by Soojin Kim. Brown is an expert on foreign policy.

RECORD: Is there a key foreign policy issue in the 1988 Presidential campaign? If so, what is it, and how would a President Bush or President Dukakis handle the particular issue?

BROWN: I'm leaving out national security issues involving the kind of armaments and expenditures we make. I would treat that as national security policy rather than foreign policy, although that's a somewhat artificial separation. With respect to foreign policy, I think the Middle East remains the most challenging area. The next President will within the foreign policy establishment for so many years, as CIA Director for a year and as Vice President for eight years, that he has a long record of supporting the current policies. I don't know whether he'll be able to find fresh ideas and new perspectives.

RECORD: What might these fresh ideas be?

BROWN: Well, the PLO is threatening to declare a state of Palestine, and we will be faced with whether to deal with such a state even though they don't control their own people....The potential role of Iran under a new foreign policy requires some fresh thinking. The situation in Lebanon, which remains bitterly divided, also calls for new thinking.

Dukakis has been very general in his approach. We don't know enough about where he'd go. I think he'd be as partial to Israel as his predecessors have been.

'The U.S. economic position has shrunk in comparison to 30 years ago. The world economy is bigger and our role is smaller. Our trade imbalance seems to be out of control, our leadership in such industries as automobiles has declined.'

have a chance to create normal relations with Iran and to work harder to achieve a peace agreement between Israel and the Arabs. This will call for good judgement, as well as personal initiative such as Jimmy Carter showed at the time of the Camp David agreements.

I think a President Bush would be very much accustomed to the current policy efforts, and it might be harder for him to bring in new thinking and new personalities to work on different approaches to pushing Israel and the Arab states toward agreement. [Bush] may be somewhat tied to the approach which has not succeeded in the past. President Reagan in 1983 came up with a proposal for a peaceful solution and Israel and the Arab states immediately shot it down. No more efforts were made thereafter. I think the next President has got to remain flexible and continue to keep up the pressure on Israel and the Arab states to move toward an agreement.

Also, we continue to sell arms to Israel and give arms to Egypt, and we appeared to be partial to Iraq in the war between Iran and Iraq, so that there remains a lot of repositioning to do in the Middle East.

RECORD: What indications have there been that Bush would be tied to the current thinking on foreign policy?

BROWN: That's only a supposition. I'm not certain on that, but Bush has worked RECORD: Throughout the campaign, Bush has attacked Dukakis on the ground that Dukakis is inexperienced in the foreign policy arena. Is Bush justified in his criticism?

BROWN: I think it's a fair issue for Bush to raise, inasmuch as Governor Dukakis hasn't worked in the Washington arena in foreign policy. At the same time, Bush has been an ambassador to the U.N. and to China, head of the CIA, and he has participated as Vice President in a number of ceremonial visits. Still, we have had former governors who have been successful as foreign policy leaders, for example, Franklin Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson and even Ronald Reagan. So I think that the important question is judgement and ability to analyze situations and to engage in diplomacy, [skills which] governors do get experience in.

I wouldn't necessarily leap to the simple conclusion that George Bush would in fact conduct a better foreign policy simply because he has more experience.

RECORD: Which foreign policy issue is best for each candidate to emphasize? Are there foreign policy issues which each candidate can turn to his advantage?

BROWN: Bush makes the most headway with the nuclear freeze movement, which Dukakis supported. Bush argues that with a nuclear freeze, we would not have the bargaining leverage with the Soviet Union that President Reagan was able to use in negotiating a reduction in arms.

The best issue for Dukakis would be the Iran-Contra arms exchange, but I don't think he's made a lot of headway with it...partly because Bush was only involved as an onlooker rather than the initiator of the policy.

On the issue of the general detente with the Soviet Union, I think people welcome the changes that are taking place there. Bush is trying to claim credit for pushing the "evil empire" into a new phase in its history.

It's hard for Dukakis to argue the other case—that these changes would have taken place with or without the Reagan Administration's policies...that is, that the changes in the Soviet Union are not simply a function of what President Reagan has done but are a function of the personality of Gorbachev and his success in coming to power.

RECORD: Then Dukakis doesn't have a positive issue through which he can directly enhance his own image?

BROWN: Dukakis has another issue. He would end U.S. support of the Contras, and he would emphasize working with Central American governments in a constructive approach to the problem of Nicaragua.

RECORD: There has been much talk of a decline in U.S. influence and global standing. Do you feel this is true? If so, what effect would it have on the administration of a President Dukakis or a President Bush?

BROWN: I think the U.S. economic position has shrunk in comparison to 30 years ago. The world economy is bigger and our role is smaller. Our trade imbalance seems to be out of control, our leadership in such industries as automobiles has declined. Our inability to control our deficit again threatens inflation and monetary instability so that we simply are not the kind of dominant economic power that we used to be.

At the same time, the European community has consolidated and enhanced its economic influence as have the newly industrialized states such as South Korea, Taiwan, Singapore and others.

This would affect voters to the extent that workers lose their jobs in declining industries. There has been a plea for protection which President Reagan has resisted to his credit, but there is a temptation for candidates to appeal to the protectionist instinct of unemployed workers in manufacturing industries. Both candidates have avoided any firm promise of protection, but it is a rallying cry, and there are suggestions from Senator Bentsen that we should insist on reciprocity in countries that we trade with, so that our products enter [their markets] on a fair basis.

But I regret that Dukakis hasn't made more of his theme that America needs to improve competitiveness through better education, job re-training, research. Neither candidate has really inspired the country to think about its educational achievements compared to competitors like Japan.

'I think Dukakis is philosophically opposed to American intervention, and Bush is the opposite because of his experience with the CIA and the Reagan Administration.'

Other ways of stopping our decline might be tax breaks, and advantages can be given to specific industries where we may have a competitive advantage. This would mean moving in the direction of the Japanese policy of selecting the winners. This can be carried too far, and become unduly constricting. The use of government sponsored research is another way, and improvement of the general attitude of labor to productivity over which a President doesn't have much influence, but again the kind of inspirational leadership of a Franklin Roosevelt could play a part.

[Regarding the two candidates], one is a competent, cold technician and one is a man

See BROWN

page 15

The Insider 1 November 1988/11

Mike Dukakis has brought out the best of Massachusetts. He'll build the best America.

Jobs.

Mike Dukakis has cut unemployment in Massachusetts from more than 11% to 3.4%. He has helped create more than 400,000 jobs in the last five years. Mike Dukakis fought for and passed one of the nation's toughest plant closing laws.

Crime.

Mike Dukakis will lead a real war on crime and drugs. Under his leadership Massachusetts cut crime 13% from 1983 to 1988 while crime increased nationally. He increased State Police funding 36%. Cocaine use among high school seniors in Massachusetts has declined five times as fast as the rest of the country.

Education.

Mike Dukakis has enacted sweeping school reform, raised teachers' salaries and introduced new technology in classrooms. Under Mike Dukakis's leadership, state scholarships have increased five-fold since 1981. As President, Mike Dukakis will enact a Student Tuition and Repayment System (STARS) that will allow students to repay college loans through future payroll withholding.

Housing.

Mike Dukakis created the Home Ownership Opportunity Program, providing more than $200 million for 2,500 privately built units at 30 to 40% below market prices for first time buyers. He's helped private developers build 8,000 new housing units and bonded almost a billion dollars for programs to produce public housing. The result: 35,000 new units in the past five years. Mike Dukakis has increased funding for the homeless from $9 million in 1983 to $160 million in 1988. Today we've got 77 shelters. In 1982, we had two.

Environment.

Mike Dukakis has enacted one of the most effective state Superfund laws in the nation, protecting our children from deadly toxic wastes. He led the fight to stop acid rain and successfully fought to protect Georges Bank—one of the region's most fertile fishing grounds—from offshore oil drilling.

The Bush Republicans have produced a trade deficit that has cost American workers two million jobs. They've turned their backs on those who want a helping hand. After nearly eight years of "voodoo economics" and indifference to workers, America needs leadership that will invest in workers and the workplace.

George Bush has failed as the nation's Drug Czar. The cocaine flow across our borders has tripled on his watch. His Administration has slashed funds to local law enforcement officials, and in 1987, they demanded a 65% cut in funding for the Crime Victim's Program.

George Bush and the Republicans have cut aid to education 16% and slashed funds for programs ranging from special elementary instruction to college loans.

George Bush's Administration has slashed funding for affordable housing by more than 80%. Home ownership has fallen every year since the Republicans took office. They have attacked the FHA and VA programs that gave millions of Americans a chance to buy their first home.

The Bush Republicans have neglected the environment, mismanaged the Environmental Protection Agency and appointed officials who have coddled polluters rather than punish them. They gave us James Watt, Rita Lavelle, and an environmental wrecking crew that auctioned off our natural heritage.

SHERWOOD GUERNSEY

The third-term incumbent defends his seat against Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew

by Sara Dubow

Sherwood Guernsey, Democratic state representative of the 2nd Berkshire District, said he believes the key issues in his campaign for reelection campaign are the questions of experience and his record of service to his constituents. It is a record that Guernsey said his Republican opponent, Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew, is distorting.

Drew has accused Guernsey of receiving "special privileges", citing a tax break, pay raise and many "job-related expenses" that are covered by state money. Guernsey said, "The tax break is from the federal legislature. I didn't vote on it. All of his colleagues take it. It is totally legal."

"This is the worst kind of negative campaigning," Guernsey said. "He distorts the facts and misleads the public....[Drew] vastly overstates the tax advantages and falsely assumes it is a part-time job. I work between 70 and 80 hours a week and serve 35,000 constituents whose needs don't disappear when the legislature is out of session....my expenses far exceed the tax benefits."

'Ninety percent of the jobs in the state come from small businesses and ninety percent of new small businesses fail.'

Guernsey added that Drew's other major issue, auto insurance reform, will, in all likelihood, be completed shortly.

"For five and one half years I have led the fight for auto insurance reform," Guernsey said. He said he supports a three-fold plan that focuses on tightening up the current fraud provisions, strengthening the enforcement provisions and increasing the tort threshold, a plan that would increase the amount of medical damages necessary for bringing a case to court.

"One effect of the bill would be to bar minor claims for pain and suffering and reduce litigation." The second major provision would ensure that the insurance rate of bad drivers would be significantly higher.

Unlike Drew, Guernsey does not support total deregulation. As the system is now,

'We always have to fight for attention for our area. We have few legislators. Constant persistence is what pays. If you lose one or two, you keep fighting. That persistence is why I'm so successful.'

there is a maximum insurance rate imposed by the state. The removal of this price ceiling will not induce insurance companies to lower their rates, Guernsey said.

"I do not want complete deregulation, that is giving our pocketbooks to the insurance companies....Saying deregulation lowers rates doesn't make it so....He is wrong on that and he should know better."

Guernsey said that if the currently proposed reforms are approved, the savings for drivers in western Massachusetts will be around 16 percent, with somewhat higher reductions for safe drivers.

Guernsey said that his response to the needs of the district is one of the most important issues of the campaign.

"That includes speaking to issues of health care, education, the environment, job development and the elderly....People's needs fall into all of these areas. Drew hasn't discussed any of these and I have."

An example of this is his Universal Health Care Bill, Guernsey said. The bill, which provides care based on need rather than on ability to pay, will go into effect in 1992.

Guernsey said also he secured the funds necessary for opening a Department of Environmental Quality Engineering in the Berkshire area. He said his new bill, which deals with solid waste, provides incentives for regulated landfills and for recycling. To help create more jobs in the area, Guernsey said, he initiated legislation on small business incubator programs. This will culminate in the Berkshire Business Ventures, Inc.

'For five and one half years I have led the fight for auto insurance reform.'

Program to help small business
"Ninety percent of the jobs in the state come from small businesses and ninety percent of new small businesses fail," Guernsey said. His program will create small business cooperatives which provide up to five years of rent security and centralized services for small ventures. Businesses will be free to leave the group when they feel financially secure.

According to Guernsey, the community has lots of room for student involvement. He mentioned the Berkshire Food Project as an example.

"Students can use their education to help others. Williams students in the public schools could be developed even more." He added that MassPIRG and MassMOCa are areas for student participation.

Guernsey said that the 2nd Berkshire District has certain special difficulties.

"We always have to fight for attention for our area. We have few legislators. Constant persistence is what pays. If you lose one or two, you keep fighting. That persistence is why I'm so successful."

He said that grass roots support is the philosophy of his campaign. He doesn't take PAC money, and the campaign has been run entirely on individual donations. Thus far, he has raised $22,508 from 605 individual contributions.

Interview with John Drew
Page 5

An Inside look at the race

Debate
Page 15

BUSH '88

George Bush is a leader who will be an effective President.

When you consider the issues, the experience, and the positions,

George Bush is the clear choice.

The Deficit

- Favors balanced budget amendment
- Favors line-item veto
- Favors Flexible Freeze
- Opposes tax increases

Domestic

- Supports increases in education spending
- Supports child care bill giving parents the choice
- Favors tough drug laws and penalties
- Opposes cuts in Social Security trust fund

Defense

- Favors modernization of conventional forces
- Supported INF and supports START talks
- Supports negotiating through strength

Environment

- Opposes hazardous offshore drilling
- Supports ban on ocean dumping
- Supports strong enforcement of acid rain treaty

George Bush served as:

- Congressman ... 1966-1970
 - worked for open housing bill
 - strong civil rights enforcement
 - environmental protection
- UN Ambassador ... 1971-1973
- RNC Chair ... 1973-1974
- Ambassador to China ... 1974-1975
- CIA Director ... 1975-1976
- Vice President ... 1981-1988
 - led drug task force
 - led regulatory reform task force
 - led terrorism task force

Candidates night forum

Drew and Guernsey face off over the issues

by Dan Skwire

Democratic State Representative Sherwood Guernsey and Republican challenger John Drew came face to face last Thursday night in a Candidates' Night sponsored by the League of Women Voters.

In what rapidly developed into a heated confrontation before nearly 100 people at the Harper Center, Drew accused Guernsey of taking unethical tax breaks on his legisla-

If [Drew] really wants to change the law, he is running for the wrong office."

The two candidates also clashed over the issue of auto insurance reforms. Guernsey pointed to a bill now before the State Senate, which he has supported, and said that it will result in 16 percent savings on insurance rates, returning $400 million to state consumers.

Drew said that the bill did not address the fundamental issue of how drivers in the

'If you think I've done my job, please give me your vote. If not, throw me the hell out.'
-County Commissioner John Pignatelli

tive salary. Waving copies of an August 11 Berkshire Eagle story on the tax break over his head, Drew said that Guernsey and other legislators had turned a $108 per day tax break into a $36,000 windfall by exaggerating the length of legislative sessions.

"It is a lie to state that the legislature works 365 days a year, when every schoolchild knows it doesn't," Drew said. "As the next state representative I will be more honest."

Guernsey said that he takes the full tax break but it is not unethical.

"I have found it scandalous how my opponent has exploited the issue and distorted the facts," Guernsey said. "My integrity has been called into question, but there is no integrity in distortion."

70 to 80 hours a week

Defending the need for the tax break, he said, "Our expenses far outweigh any alleged tax savings. The Berkshire Eagle and my opponent falsely assume that this is a part-time job. It is a full-time job. I work 70 to 80 hours a week. I have put 35,000 miles on my car."

Guernsey added that the tax savings stem from a federal, not a state law.

"We didn't vote on it, pass it, or lobby for it.

western part of the state were being exploited to artificially subsidize rates for eastern drivers. He said he would propose new legislation to compensate Western drivers, by providing them with an extra 16 percent savings on top of those savings gained by the current bill.

Drew added that by pursuing a policy of comprehensive reform and trying to deal with all of the insurance lobbyists at one time, Guernsey had failed to accomplish satisfactory reforms as soon as he could have.

Difficult to achieve reform

Guernsey replied that Drew was being unrealistic. "Until you have been there and seen the halls full of insurance people, lawyers, repairmen and all the other lobbyists, until you've stood up to them, you don't know how hard it has been to achieve this reform."

Other candidates speaking at the forum included incumbent county commissioner John J. Pignatelli and challengers Paul L. Babeu, John M. Chivers and Kenneth G. Warren. Pignatelli, who has been a commissioner for 31 years, spoke in favor of maintaining a strong county government and

Debate Humor

Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew and State Representative Sherwood Guernsey demonstrate that their debate was not all confrontation.

cautioned voters about giving up their electoral power.

"The Berkshire media seems to have taken a poor view of county government," Pignatelli said, "and I don't for the life of me know why. When you deal with a government 130 miles away, you're asking for trouble, believe me. Don't ever relinquish power over any elected office."

Babeu and Warren also said they favored keeping county government in place, but Chivers said that government at the county level is ineffective and should be eliminated.

"The county government is a self-contained bureaucracy that feeds upon itself. We need to effectively dismantle it and give power back to the cities and towns. The county is too large of a geographical area to include every town and all of its problems."

Voters must choose two of the four candidates for county commissioner, and Pignatelli is widely regarded as a shoo-in for reelection. "Whether I've done anything good or not, I don't know," he said, "but people keep putting me back in office. If you think I've done my job, please give me your vote. If not, throw me the hell out."

George Marcus

continued from page 4

Reagan. I think that had Bush won the nomination in '80, when he ran against Reagan and lost, I don't think you'd have seen Reaganomics. I don't think you'd have seen the sharp attempts to cut governmental programs of every sort. I think he's a much more moderate, conventionally minded Republican. This may be something he'd hate to hear, but I think he'd be much more a Republican of the Rockefeller sort.

RECORD: How effective do you think Bush would be in dealing with a Democratic Congress?

MARCUS: I don't think he has any great standing among Democrats per se, and I don't think he has any great gifts of negotiation. I don't think he's going to be nearly as effective as Reagan was in bringing in with him large numbers of Republicans who won and attributed their success to him. Reagan's assets were to gain a Republican majority for his first term in the Senate and to have the Democratic senators fearful that his success in '80 would be turned against them in '82 or '84. Bush won't have that kind of clout.

RECORD: On the flip side of that, do you think that if Dukakis were elected he would be effective enough as a party leader to command support for his legislation?

MARCUS: That's harder to say and harder to foresee. He's an outsider in that he represents the state legislatures. He's established his ability to work with other governors. He hasn't displayed any special ability to work or mobilize House and Senate members to strongly invest in his campaign. Whether that was by design on his part, to gain control over the campaign, or if it reflects a distance between them is another matter.

RECORD: In spite of all the increasing demands for revenue that you've talked about, which programs do you think will be cut under either candidate?

MARCUS: It's hard to say. The budgets over the past four or five years have reduced most of the easy ones. The ones that are left have strong, powerful interests sustaining them. There are programs that all of us might identify as not particularly crucial, but they have strong legislative support by virtue of industries. Agriculture is an example of a huge expenditure, $30 to $50 billion a year, but it's hard to see that being cut by either administration, because of the political power of agriculture.

That's why we have a budget deficit. On the one hand, tax revenues were cut substantially by the tax cut, and everywhere one looks on the domestic side, by and large there has been a demand for increasing rather than decreasing expenditures.

MacAlister Brown

continued from page 11

of many roles and personalities who is good at going along with existing policies, so it's not an inspiring choice.

RECORD: The Republican Party has been more interventionist in recent years. How will a President Bush continue this policy? What can we expect from a President Dukakis?

BROWN: At the moment, in the areas of American intervention, specifically Nicaragua, Afghanistan, Cambodia and Angola, efforts are being made to work out a compromise solution. I think Dukakis is philosophically opposed to American intervention, and Bush is the opposite because of his experience with the CIA and the Reagan Administration.

The Sandinistas intend to maintain themselves in power, but they might make small concessions toward their opponents without giving up control over the country. The critical thing for the U.S. should be whether Nicaragua provides bases for foreign powers, say Soviet naval bases or Cuban army forces, which I don't think it intends to attempt to do. The other thing is whether they provide a base for revolutionary activity against American interests in the region. I suspect that if neighboring countries become engaged in the peace process, the possibilities of subversive activities by Nicaragua are diminished.

Dukakis won't ask for any military assistance for the contras, and he will encourage the peace process among Central American governments, mainly through the Arias plan.

The Williams Record

VOL. 102, No. 9

USPA 684-680

November 8, 1988

The men's soccer team advanced to the finals of the ECAC playoffs with its 3-0 win over Amherst. The Ephs also downed Bowdoin and Wesleyan last week; they face Amherst again tomorrow in a regular season game that will determine the winner of the Little Three title. Above, Doug Brooks '90 evades a sliding Lord Jeff. See story on page 12. (Scala)

Student unharmed after accident on Homecoming night

by Dan Skwire

While walking from Spencer toward the Freshman Quad at about 1:00 Sunday morning, David Willmott '92 was struck by a car in front of the President's driveway on Park Street. The car was being driven by David Morrison '90.

According to Williamstown Chief of Police Joseph Zolito, Morrison turned left from Route 2 onto Park Street and was weaving in and out of several people in the road. Morrison told police officers at the scene of the accident that he had been traveling in the vicinity of 20-25 miles per hour.

According to Zolito, Morrison said he swerved right to avoid some students on the left side of the road, but misjudged the distance and struck Willmott from behind.

Willmott said he was knocked unconscious for a few minutes and was then taken to North Adams Regional Hospital, where he was treated and released. He spent the night at Thompson Health Center and returned home the next day.

"It's really not a big deal. I'm not hurt at all," Willmott said.

Morrison said that he had not been drinking the night of the accident. Zolito said that police officers administered field sobriety tests at the scene of the accident and Morrison was not brought into the station or given a breath test.

Zolito said that Morrison was cited with negligent operation of a motor vehicle, failure to grant right of way to a pedestrian and operating a motor vehicle without having a license in possession. He will have a hearing in the future.

Admissions seeks diversity, hopes boys will be girls

by Soojin Kim

Gender may become a deciding factor in the admissions process for the class of 1993 at Williams College, according to Director of Admissions Philip Smith.

In response to the ratio of 59 percent males to 41 percent females in the class of 1992, the Advisory Group on Admissions and Financial Aid made a formal recommendation this past academic year to favor women when choosing between two equally qualified candidates towards the end of the admissions process. Smith said that this recommendation is in line with the college's policy of admitting a minimum of 45 percent women for each class.

"When choosing between two equally qualified candidates, one male and one female, we have to ask which will do more for the institution. The woman, just by virtue of being a woman, will bring more to the community (because of the current imbalance)," said Joan Edwards, acting dean of the college.

The lopsided male/female ratio was not due to the admission of fewer women, but to the higher number of matriculating men than expected.

'The woman, just by virtue of being a woman, will bring more to the community.'

Admissions had originally projected a class size of 510; 543 students matriculated. Smith said that the 35 "extra" students were all male.

continued on page 3

Threats, insults stir up racial tensions

(College Press Service)—New outbreaks of racial insults were reported at the University of Massachusetts and nearby Smith College as UMass prepared for a week-long commemoration of a 1986 fight between black and white students that left ten people injured.

Racial tensions also have plagued the University of New Mexico, Stanford University, Dartmouth College and DePauw University in recent weeks despite seminars and meetings designed to teach white students racial sensitivity and to ease blacks' sense of alienation on predominantly white campuses.

At Smith, President Mary Maples Dunn sent a memo to the school's 2,700 undergraduates saying that notes with racial slurs had been slipped under a student's door and tacked on a bulletin board.

A separate memo from the Office of Student Affairs said that other students had received similar notes since mid-September. The school said an investigation was under way.

The UMass administration is looking into reports of racial slurs made over walkie-talkies two weeks ago on a frequency reserved for foremen and supervisors of the Physical Plant Department.

Not joking around

"I've been working as a dispatcher here 13 years and I've never heard anything like that," said Dennis Hmieleski, who was on duty at the time. "You hear people joking around sometimes and you take it for that, but it was the tone of the voice. You could tell it was no joke."

Hmieleski said he wasn't certain who made the remarks. He said he and other workers reported them to the department's director.

The 1986 fight at UMass was one of the most notorious racial problems that have plagued American campuses during the last three school years. Five white UMass students, disappointed that the Boston Red Sox had lost the World Series to the New York Mets, beat up a black Mets fan. A subsequent racial brawl left ten injured. UMass officials later expelled several of the white students involved in the initial attack.

continued on page 7

Students sling mud but also address issues at mock debate

by Sara Dubow

Anyone who felt that this year's presidential candidates had not adequately addressed the issues had one last opportunity to explore the campaign by attending a mock debate sponsored by MassPIRG last Wednesday night. During the debate, students representing Dukakis and Bush discussed topics including education, trade, the ACLU and housing problems.

'Dukakis doesn't see what people can do to help other people. Both [candidates] see the problem. Bush sees the solution.'

Bill Hoch '89 and Mark Sorensen '90 of Students for Dukakis took the Democratic side while Russell Day '91 and Bob Howie '90 of the Garfield Republican Club spoke for George Bush.

The debate was moderated by College Council President Trace Blankenship '89 and the panelists were Chuck Samuelson '90 of the Williams Record and Jim Berkley '90 of the Issue. The format was identical to that of the televised presidential debates.

In their opening statements, both sides focused on the fundamental differences between the candidates. "George Bush is not Ronald Reagan," said Sorensen, "and it is Michael Dukakis who is in touch with the feelings of Americans. Show time is over."

"This presidential election presents a clear choice between two very different ideologies," said Howie for the Republicans. "Vice President Bush wants America to be a leader in the world.

Governor Dukakis is ashamed of this leadership role and American successes."

Samuelson began the questioning by asking the Republicans what steps George Bush would take to remedy the United States' fall from being the world's largest creditor nation to the world's largest debtor nation.

"There are two ways to deal with Japan's unwillingness to lower their trade barriers," said the Republicans. "Michael Dukakis would increase our barriers in response. Instead, we should use as an example to get the Japanese to realize that it is in their benefit to lower their barriers."

The Democrats responded by saying that Ronald Reagan has set up many "optional quotas" that act as trade barriers. They also cited a decrease in U.S. competitiveness and the inability of George Bush to make decisive budget cuts as major problems.

Berkley raised the issue of the derogatory use of the word "liberal" throughout the campaign, and the Democrats said they were willing to accept that label. "Dukakis is liberal in the sense that Roosevelt and Kennedy were. He cares about the nation and will work hard for the people. If being liberal means helping all Americans, and looking out for all the citizens of this country, Dukakis is a liberal."

The Democrats also addressed the subject of Dukakis' non-opposition to the American Civil Liberties Union's desire to remove the words "In God We Trust" from our currency and "under God" from the Pledge of Allegiance.

"Dukakis supports the general premise of the ACLU, but Bush has put him on the defensive on specific issues. This should not be an issue in the campaign," they said.

Supports radical ACLU
"That sounds like Mike Dukakis," said the Republicans. "On one hand he supports the radical ACLU interpretation of separation of church and state, but he also supports Judeo-Christian ethics. He can't have it both ways."

The Republicans were then asked how Bush would reconcile his emphasis on ethics and morality with instances of "heinous disregard for the law" that have occurred under the Reagan administration.

"No one will deny there have been ethical problems in this administration," they answered, "but George Bush supports spreading ethics throughout Congress, and has proposed an ethics commission."

In response to a question on the candidates' views on abortion, the Democrats said, "Dukakis sees the issue of abortion in terms of a woman's rights. He believes a woman should make a decision based on her personal moral code."

The Republicans then argued Bush's side of the topic. "Abortion is an issue of human rights, not woman's rights," they said. "It is a heinous crime." Asked whether opposing abortion but supporting the death penalty is contradictory, they said, "An unborn child is innocent, while a criminal chooses how to act, and is guilty."

Defending the vice president's views on homelessness, the Republicans said,

continued on page 4

Mark Sorensen '90 (left) and Bill Hoch '89 defended the views of Governor Michael Dukakis during a mock debate sponsored by MassPIRG last Wednesday night. (Beliveau)

Drew and Guernsey square off in heated debate.

Faculty exhibit at WCMA.

Field Hockey captures NIAC title.

The Williams Record

Appearance versus action

In 'An Open Letter to President Oakley,' published last week, members of the Williams Anti-Apartheid Coalition professed concern for "the Administration's silence about South Africa and the status of Williams College's investments there." Aside from the inaccuracies that Oakley addressed in a campus mailing, the WAAC letter seemed more concerned with protesting a problem than trying to solve it.

It is ironic that the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility met on the same night that the WAAC letter was published to discuss whether the college's policy of divestment advocacy was as effective as it could be in putting pressure on South Africa's apartheid government. No members of WAAC attended this open meeting.

The ACSR is the college committee responsible for reviewing all proxies of companies in which the college owns stock. The committee is composed of faculty, administrators, alumni and students. Each proxy is discussed and voted on individually by the committee, which then presents its recommendations to the Finance Committee of the Board of Trustees for approval.

The college pursues a policy of divestment advocacy as opposed to divestment because "the latter surrenders the possibility of influencing companies to withdraw; the former retains that possibility and vigorously exploits it." (Memorandum to ACSR instituting divestment advocacy, September 18, 1986. Published in Williams Reports, September, 1987.) In practice this policy means the college supports proxies asking that U.S. companies withdraw from South Africa.

By reviewing each proxy separately, rather than pursuing a policy of blind divestment as WAAC suggests, the ACSR is able to determine what the impact would be if the company did, indeed, leave South Africa. For example, the ACSR has in the past voted against proxies asking that U.S. pharmaceutical companies divest. Committee members said they felt that, because the companies marketed medications of particular importance to the black population, demanding their divestment would only aggravate the plight of black South Africans. Yet WAAC says, "As long as Williams has holdings in South Africa, however small, you are supporting the apartheid regime."

If the members of WAAC were, as they claim, "willing to debate with the Administration on these and other issues relevant to South Africa," they would have been at the latest meeting of the ACSR. But, additionally, it seems that they could have used the space in the issue more effectively by outlining and substantively discussing the policy of divestment advocacy. As Oakley pointed out, the administration has published several explanations of this policy, including the eight-page Williams Reports already mentioned. This statement remains available to any students who find themselves concerned enough to ask for it.

As has happened many times in the past, it seems that a protest group found themselves too caught up in their protest to notice or participate in discussions aimed at solving the problems faced by the Williams community. While WAAC was worrying about their statement, the ACSR was discussing the problem. Which group, then, was truly concerned?

VOTERS ALL ACROSS AMERICA ARE PONDERING THE SAME PRESIDENTIAL QUESTION ON ELECTION NIGHT...

FER GOSH-SAKES, DO I HAVE TO PICK ONE?!!

VOTING BOOTH

On the Record...

"I'm going back to culinary art, which is what I worked in before coming to Williams."
-- Soon-to-be former Log manager Dave Lamare on his post-Log plans.

"I don't think the Williams faculty represents the American people, thank God."
-- Garfield Republican Club member Russell Day '91 in a campus debate in which he represented the views of Vice President George Bush.

"It's nothing but negative campaigning. Shame on you for doing it. Shame on you for bringing it up. You demean the office."
-- State Representative Sherwood Guernsey on challenger John Drew's style of campaigning.

The Record's Op-Ed Department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication, either typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Chuck Samuelson at (413) 597-2289.

The Record's Op-Ed Department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

DEBBIE SNYDER Editor in Chief
TODD OWENS News Editor CHUCK SAMUELSON Opinions Editor TRAVIS PIERSON Arts Editor
TED HOBART & MARC McDERMOTT Sports Editors RICH WARD & JED SCALA Photo Editors
KIRSTEN HASENFUSS & MARY LUFF Layout Editors KATIE ALBRIGHT Business Manager

News Assistants
STEPHANIE JONES, ANN MANTILL, BILL SAVADOVE, DAN SKWIRE, ROB WEISBERG
Sports Assistant
MARIAM NAFICY
Photo Assistants
JAY STEINMAN, KARL THOMAS
Layout Assistant
ELISA DUGUNDJI, BILL PHILPOT, ASHESH SHAH

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Letters

The closing of the Eph mind Goal of satire was to educate

To the Editor:

After attending the Economics department's pre-election discussion, at which the four faculty members disagreed only on who disliked Reagan-Bush economic policies the most, I wondered why the department did not encourage a conservative economics professor to defend the Bush side of the issues.

After reading the Record's poll, however, I can see why it is difficult for our faculty to engage in two-sided political debate. Only three members of the faculty are Republicans; 94% of our faculty supported by less than half of mainstream America.

I know most liberals will cringe at this analogy, but does this not sound a lot like what we heard last year about the racial mix of the faculty? Many of last year's arguments for affirmative action asserted that we need a more heterogeneous faculty to provide students with viewpoints beyond the "white" perspective. Does it make any sense to argue this point at a school which only has three Republican professors?

If we are going to be at all consistent, how can Williams so passionately advocate racial heterogeneity on the basis that students should get a balanced education, while not even mentioning the overwhelming ideological homogeneity on this campus?

How far should we go towards ideological diversity in our faculty? Is it appropriate to attract more conservative professors to Williams with a program similar to the one used to attract more minority professors? Conservative professors are certainly in the job market; they are a minority of America's professors but not nearly as small a minority as they are at Williams. When a social sciences department at a liberal arts college is all liberal, is it a liberal arts college? Or is it a social sciences department at a liberal arts college?

To the Editor:

In yet another exercise in presenting all views that disagree with the status quo as suspect, Michael Barbera '89 indulged in a particularly hostile bit of radical-bashing in his November 1, 1988 letter to the editor. Referring to anti-CIA protestors as "pathetic, juvenile, intellectually bankrupt, gutless and cowardly," Barbera seemed to be staking a lot of faith in the idea that if you speak enough epithets at people, you don't need to make intelligent arguments about substantive issues.

So, to set the record straight: the CIA parody was sponsored by the Society Organized Against Racism, members of whom were protesting earlier the arrival of a CIA recruiter at OCC on October 26. The parody originated at the University of California-Berkeley, taken from a group who were given attribution at the bottom right hand corner of the xerox; the views expressed therein accurately reflect those of the protesting students, who were intending that the satire would get to students to seriously question CIA recruitment. Since nobody at SOAR actually wrote the parody, it didn't seem fair to pass it on and thereby offending Michael Barbera.

So much for the details. There is a larger point to be made here, involving Barbera's idea that some groups on campus - and some points of view at this academic institution - do not merit being heard. Without even bringing up the absurd idea that protesting the practices of an organization that has revealed itself as an agency of assassination and international terrorism is somehow an abnormal act, I question Barbera's idea that the means of discourse chosen by the protestors was "juvenile." Judge for yourself. Although the CIA recruiter was a satire, it contains true (and factually verified, for those interested in doing the research) information about what the CIA really does and what its ideology continues to be. Beret of facts (other than the childish posturing that "liberals" are all "gutless"), Barbera's letter stunts to add Who's the boss?

Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards shares a laugh with her father, Richard Edwards, Robert Sterling Clark visiting professor in the History of Art. (Beliveau)

Students muzzle campus press

(College Press Service)--In what may be an outbreak of partisan feelings as Election Day approaches or just a budding of frustration toward college papers, angry students at the University of South Dakota, Georgia State University and California State University at Long Beach have threatened to censor their campus papers in recent weeks.

The student government at Cal State-Long Beach, in fact, has shut down the Union, an irreverent "Alternative" student paper, for violating campus prohibitions of "lewd, indecent or obscene behavior."

"To just cut off what you find offensive is not fair, and I think it violates some rights," complained Union Associate Editor Ethel Powers.

"By closing the Union down, they can silence an opposing voice," Editor Gary Stark added.

There has been a series of campus newspaper censorship episodes since last January, when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Hazelwood v.

Kuhlmeier that high school officials can regulate the content of student newspapers if those papers are run as journalism class labs.

Some colleges were quick to invoke the ruling. In April, for example, Cal State-Los Angeles officials fired Joan Zyda, the student newspaper advisor, because they didn't like the content of the paper.

Officials at Pima Community College in Arizona, Chapman College in California, San Jacinto College in Texas, and Western Kentucky University also tried to censor or halt student papers and cultural events in the wake of the court's decision in recent months.

Better uses of money

"We just felt that we could do better things with the money," said student government President Roger Thompson.

"The paper is degrading to me and others as well," agreed Justino Aguilu, president of the Journalism Students Association. "This degrading does not help students in any way."

Two years ago, student politicians blasted the Union for publishing a page of stick figures engaged in sex. Last year, bothered by the newspaper's style and content, the student government cut the budget from $25,000 to $10,000. Stark said it costs $40,000 to publish the paper annually. The rest of the funding came from advertising.

At South Dakota, Greeks, College Republicans and dorm government officials have pressured the student government to stop funding the Volante, the campus paper, because of its content.

Greeks and dorm government officials say the paper is biased against them, while College Republicans claim the Volante "glorifies Democrats."

Student government President Tim Glynn, however, says funding will continue for the paper. He hopes to convince the paper to increase its coverage of its critics, but doesn't want to cross a "fine line" and regulate what goes in the paper. "How do you tell a newspaper what to write?" he asked.

At Cal State-Long Beach, Union staffers say student politicians, who hauled away the paper's computer equipment and cut funding, also are retaliating.

"We can't publish without the equipment," said Stark. "They don't want the paper to publish." The student government, he said, is getting even for the irreverent Union's criticism of student government leaders.

"We won't parrot what the Senate wants to hear," Powers said.

At issue is the Union's September 26 issue, which contained a satirical supplement called the "Sexually Frustrated."

Historians at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore are working to preserve an unusual campus landmark: an outhouse and its antique graffiti dating from the turn of the 19th century. The privy belonged to the family of Charles Carroll Jr., whose 1801 mansion is the centerpiece of the Hopkins Homewood campus.

"Privys from that period are very rare, and this one is even more rare because of its architectural distinction," says architect Jack Walte, who is the director of the restoration project.

The ten-seat facility, designed in the federal style, has a brick exterior and arches and a pyramidal wood-shingle roof. The interior, painted in light with its original olive-gray paint, is covered with graffiti dating from when the property was used as a country school for boys. Scrawled in pencil across the panelling are scribbles, drawings and adolescent verses.

"New York's the place for money/Boston is the place for war/Baltimore's the place for pretty girls and this is the place for ---," reads one toilet poem.

"It's a typical bathroom humor," says Susan Tripp, curator of the university's historical collection. "Things haven't changed that much in a hundred years."

In Other Ivory Towers was collected from college newspapers and College Press Service.

Have you seen any of the homecoming game?

"Yes, I'm taking stats. Do you realize that the opposing team's number 78 weighs 245 lbs? I bet he's got a high

"Yes, I've seen most of it from the bench, except when I couldn't see through the coaches' heads."-Dave

"There was one?"-Stew Verdery '89

"No, I'd rather drink warm beers on this beat up car."-Jeffrey Biersach '90

"Yes, it's my last homecoming as a student so I wanted to watch some of it."-Sarah Marcus '89

Drew, Guernsey trade final shots at radio debate

by Dan Skwire
Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew, Republican candidate for state representative, attacked incumbent Sherwood Guernsey's (D-Williamstown) advocacy of a pay raise for state legislators in a debate last Thursday. The candidates also clashed over auto insurance, affordable housing and job development.

"Every time I hear my opponent's convoluted justification for this pay raise, I am reminded of the joke about why lab technicians prefer experimenting on politicians rather than mice. That is because, frankly, there are some things up us just won't die."

"I think you should be ashamed of yourself for making that kind of analogy if you're running for this office," Guernsey shot back. "Either you respect the office or you don't."

The half-hour debate, which was broadcast on WNAW 1230 AM, was filled with similar accusations and exchanges by the candidates. Discussion of Bailout Issue 1, which proposes the pay hike, was the first issue of controversy.

A full time job

Guernsey said that Drew might not be so persistent in questioning the expenses of being a legislator if he had to face them himself. "The position of a state legislator is a full-time job," Guernsey said. "When we vote on legislation, we're representing the interests of five and a half million people. The job deserves the wage."

Drew opposes the pay raise because it ties legislative salaries to those of other state workers, a provision which he feels is a conflict of interest. In addition, he has repeatedly criticized Guernsey and other legislators for taking excessive tax breaks on their salaries.

Later in the debate, Drew was questioned about his negative campaigning tactics, particularly in regard to the unethical tax break criticism. He answered that it was his responsibility to provide the people of the Second Berkshire District with a viable reason for removing an incumbent from office.

Drew challenged Guernsey to release his tax returns and show voters just how much the deduction really cost him. "Maybe you're right," Drew said. "Maybe it's only $18,000, but I still think that's a heck of an abuse of power."

The two candidates continued their ongoing disputes over auto insurance reform. Guernsey pointed with pride to a bill enacted by the Massachusetts legislature last week which he says will result in 16 percent saving for drivers in the state.

Drew, however, criticized Guernsey for not addressing the issue of regional discrimination in insurance rates. "Frankly, Sherwood," he said, "after five and a half years, you're not part of the solution to auto insurance, you're part of the problem."

"Sixteen percent savings is the problem?" Guernsey asked. He then explained why he had needed so much time to pass the bill granting insurance reforms.

continued on page 7

Calendar of Lectures

Wednesday
8 PM "American Poetry in Russia," by Andrei Sergeev, the U.S.S.R.'s foremost translator of American poetry. Weston Hall Lounge.

8 PM Ruth McDonough Fitzpatrick, national coordinator of the Women's Ordination Conference, will lead a discussion on "Women in the Ministry." O'Connell Room, Thompson Chapel.

8 PM "Is God Conceivable?", by Anthony Kenny, visiting professor of philosophy. Room 231, Lawrence Hall, followed by a reception in Steison Faculty Lounge.

Thursday
8 PM John Mellor, director of the International Food Policy Research Institute, will speak on "Eliminating Third World Hunger: What is Required?" at the CDE.

Friday
8 PM Dan O'Meara, from the University of Quebec, will talk about South Africa. Driscoll Lounge.

8 PM "From Racism to Racial Unity," by Nathan Rustein, former news editor of NBC and ABC news and author of To Be One (1988). Room 231, Lawrence Hall.

Upcoming
Consumer activist Ralph Nader will be speaking at Williams on November 14. He will address the role of corporate power in the United States, and will deal with a number of socioeconomic issues pertinent to the issue.

The program is sponsored by the college's Lecture Committee. Ken Leiter '90, a member of the committee, said that Nader will preside over a question-and-answer session following his speech. The 8:00 PM lecture will be preceded by a public press conference at 7:00 PM.

The Lecture Committee, which is composed of four faculty and four student members, has funded Nader's visit at a cost of over $4000. The committee exists to sponsor major speakers to address the Williams and also helps fund other campus organizations if and when they invite speakers of their own.

Leiter said he was confident of the lecture's success. "He is a good speaker and a fascinating man. He will definitely draw crowds...He is a man who has done a lot for America."

The Log saga continues:

Lamarre leaves Log leaderless

by Lynn Huddon

Resignations, old and new, were major items on the agenda of the College Council at their meeting last Thursday. The council elected Sanand Raghunandan '90 to fill the position vacated by John Bellwoar '89, who resigned two weeks ago. Additionally, the imminent resignation of Log Supervisor Dave Lamarre generated a proposal to improve the financial situation at the Log.

The council was finally able to break the deadlock which had been preventing them from obtaining the two-thirds majority needed to elect a new secretary.

According to council rules, a replacement officer has already been a member of the council. Raghunandan, who was elected to the council last year, has been on the Division III Committee, the Peer Advisory Committee, and the Elections Committee. He also helped organize the transportation to Albany service.

Outside of the council, Raghunandan was treasurer of MassPUG last year, as well as vice president of Purple Key. He is presently a Junior Advisor.

"I wanted to become more involved at a higher level," he said. "Being secretary is more than just tinkering minutes and making up the agenda, and this way I'll be able to do some substantial work."

Improve house transfers

As secretary, Raghunandan said he would like to improve the house transfer system and help develop the proposed multi-cultural center for the benefit of the community. He said he plans to remain on the Division III Committee and continue the revisions concerning non-major courses begun last spring.

He said he also wants to push the new minority course requirement presently being discussed by the Campus Committee on Race Relations and the Committee on Educational Policy.

"I think it's important that that requirement has some value, that we make sure it's not something people are not leaving dining services and Williams because of the problems the Log has been having."

fulfill without even knowing they're doing it," Raghunandan said.

While the problems of choosing a new secretary were ended at the meeting,

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

"I'm going back to culinary arts, which

is what I worked in before coming to

Williams and during the summers since

I've been here," Lamarre said. "I was

offered another opportunity in the

area, with The Orchard, and I took it."

Lamarre's resignation creates a problem as to who will manage the Log at

the Log's financial situation was not a

factor in his decision. "I'm not leaving

dining services and Williams because

of the problems the Log has been having.

I probably wouldn't leave this year, one

way or the other," he said.

Work late nights for low pay

Join the Williams Record

Typing & Word Processing Service

- Resumes • Correspondence
- Manuscripts • Papers

10% discounts for students
Main Street Secretarial Service
57 Main St., Rm. 225, North Adams, Mass.
(413) 664-7121

2 for 1

an EVERYDAY Film Developing Special

- FREE 2nd set of prints. (at time of developing)
- 4"x6" superprints or 3 1/2"x5"
- 24-hour service (ask for details)

Photoworks Building
4 Water Street
Williamstown, Mass.
(413) 458-3113

CROSS-COUNTRY
SKI SALE

November 11 through November 20

Introductory		Reg.	Package
Peltonen Zephyr	$119	$153.50
Salomon 301 Boot	$65	$56
Salomon Touring Binding	$20	$17.50
Swix Fiberglass Pole	$16	$12
	$220	$139

Touring		Reg.	Pack.
Peltonen Zephyr	$155	$198.50
Salomon 301 Boot	$65	$56
Salomon Touring Binding	$20	$17.50
Swix Fiberglass Pole	$16	$12
	$256	$184

Backcountry (Williamstown only)		Reg.	Pack.
Peltonen Zephyr	$219	$191
Salomon 301 Boot	$65	$56
Salomon Touring Binding	$20	$17.50
Swix Fiberglass Pole	$16	$12
	$348	$298.50

Performance		Reg.	Pack.
Peltonen Zephyr	$149	$119
Salomon 301 Boot	$65	$56
Salomon Touring Binding	$20	$17.50
Swix Fiberglass Pole	$16	$12
	$348	$284

All skis, boots, poles and bindings, available individually at discounted package prices during sale. Also, special prices on 1987 models.

the Mountain Goat
"The Complete Outdoor Shop"
Manchester Center, Vt. 800-866-4139 Open 7 Days 540 Water St., Williamstown (413) 458-0440

Pack of Lies.

What are the three biggest lies in the world?
Smoking is relaxing. Smoking is glamorous. Lung cancer won't happen to me.
This year, 125,000 Americans learned the truth about smoking when they were diagnosed with lung cancer.

EVERY QUITTER IS A WINNER.
The Great American Smokeout. Nov. 17.

Be friends with Constantine

To become a salaried member of the Record's advertising staff, call David or Madeline at 597-2289.

Campus racial incidents on the rise

continued from page 1

Soon after the fight, racial epithets were found spray-painted on steps at Smith. A year later, two black administrators and the first black woman to earn tenure at Smith resigned, saying the school shut minorities out of decision-making.

Reports of new troubles at the Massachusetts campuses came as UMass prepared for a week-long commemoration of the 1986 fight.

To mark the anniversary, the university planned racial sensitivity events, including a "Hands Across UMass," a chain of students linking hands across campus, and a lecture by Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young.

Smith, moreover, unveiled a plan to have minorities make up 20 percent of its faculty by 1995 and a larger percentage of its freshman class by the same year.

A committee of Smith faculty, trustees, administrators and students came up with the plan after 200 students marched on the president's house in April with a list of grievances.

"It's a good plan, especially when one considers it's coming in to fill a complete vacuum," said Wambui Mwangi, president of the Smith African Student Association.

At Stanford, a poster at a predominantly black fraternity was discovered earlier in October with the word 'nigger' scrawled on it. Two weeks earlier, a flyer depicting Beethoven as brown-skinned, with wild, curly hair, big lips and red eyes was left outside a black student's room.

Dartmouth Dean Edward Shanahan last week wrote a letter to all students condemning a series of handwritten notes anonymously delivered to campus blacks, women and gays. The notes warned the students to drop out.

"It's really frightening," said student Kris Miller of the Women's Issues League. "I know this guy is targeting me."

Six DePauw University fraternities and sororities apologized for a "ghetto party" that featured decorations including graffiti slurs against minorities. Members of the six houses at the Indiana campus staged a candlelight vigil October 17 and marched from the Alpha Tau Omega house, where the party was held, to the Association for Afro-American Students office. Members of the two groups conferred, shook hands and embraced.

Since the 1986 fight at UMass, racial tensions have spread alarmingly to campuses nationwide, including Fairleigh Dickinson and Mississippi State universities, Dartmouth, Rutgers State, Hampshire and Tompkins-Cortland colleges and the universities of California-Berkeley, Michigan and Illinois, to name just a few. Tensions also reemerged at UMass last year, when 100 minority students protesting racial violence and low minority enrollment occupied a campus building for six days.

Field Hockey

continued from page 12

team selected its five best hitters, each of whom was allowed one shot on goal. Kershaw opened the scoring with her third goal off the day and sophomore Julie Carroll also knocked one in while Hohli denied the first four Camels she faced, negating the need for the fifth shooters and sealing a trip to the finals for the Ephs.

Tufts, not Trinity
In the finals, Williams faced Tufts, who beat Trinity 2-0 in the opening round. The Ephs had misplayed Tufts 4-1 earlier in the season, but the Jumbos were undaunted, and held the Ephs to a scoreless first half. The tired Ephs cleaned up their game in the second stanza, however, as freshman midfielder Ashley Edgar ripped the nets for her third score of the year to put Williams ahead. The defense held for the rest of the game to complete the shutout and Flaherty led the victory and the championship with a late goal. Williams ends their season as NIAC champions, with a 11-2 record. Team leaders in scoring were Flaherty (6 goals, 6 assists), Judy Flesherman (6g), Kershaw (3g, 2a) and captain Kirsten Neuse '89 (3g, 1a). With only two (albeit highly valuable) starters, Hohli and Neuse, being lost to graduation, the team should be even better next year, and their sights will be set on an ECAC title.

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond"
Williams '88

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and shoe and boot repair.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267

Drew defends Pine Cobble

continued from page 3

"Anybody who's been down in Boston understands you've got to stand up to the special interest groups. They are all over the place. Over the years, however, consumers got outraged enough to call their legislators and overwhelm the special interest groups."

Pine Cobble important
Other issues discussed in the debate included the candidates' plans for promoting job development and providing affordable housing in the area. Drew said it was important for the college to complete its Pine Cobble development of faculty housing.

The project is currently being delayed by controversy over the endangered halcyon honeycreeper plant found in the area. Drew added that he was disturbed about the efforts of environmentalists to block the development for the sake of "this honeycreeper plant."

After the debate, both candidates said they were pleased with their performances. "I feel great about it," Drew said. "I feel I scored points showing the discriminatory features of auto insurance, and I feel I've set the agenda for the entire campaign. That's what a challenger has to do."

"I think the debate went very well," Guernsey said. "If you look at [Drew's] answers, I don't think he has any proposals. I still have not heard how he would respond to the people's needs. I fully expect to win."

Virus destroyed

(College Press Service)—Good student detective work found and eliminated some potentially lethal computer "viruses" at two campuses last week.

At Baylor University, an unnamed student reported finding the "Scores" virus—which, like most such programs, reproduces itself until it wrecks data and operating systems—in three campus computer systems.

At the University of Colorado, student Greg Youngs found that 85 campus Macintoshes were infected with another type of virus, and then eliminated the virus before telling CU's Computing and Network Services office about it, the Campus Press reported.

The CU virus was unusual if only because most such destructive programs are for IBM and IBM-compatible computers, Northwestern University Prof. John Norstad said.

"There have been 40 viruses discovered this year in the IBM community, and only three in the Apple community," he said. The Scores virus at Baylor has infected computers at the University of Michigan, Florida and Texas this term, Norstad said.

Scores got to Baylor, it turns out, when Baylor student Ahmad Jilani got a computer disk in the mail from his brother, who attends Cornell University. Neither Jilani nor his brother knew the disk was infected, Jilani said.

Baylor officials and CU's Youngs used new virus detection programs to debug the computers. Many of the debugging programs, Norstad said, "are only three or four months old."

Sarah Lawrence College

Oxford

An opportunity for qualified undergraduates to spend a year of study at Oxford. Individual tutorials with Oxford faculty, Oxford University lectures, and an affiliation with an Oxford college immerse students in Oxford's rich education tradition.

For information contact:
Sarah Lawrence College at Oxford
Box WCWO
Bronxville, New York 10708

COLLEGE TAXI

"WILLIAMSTOWN'S ONLY TAXI SERVICE"
458-2100

WILLIAMSTOWN PEOPLE - SERVING WILLIAMSTOWN PEOPLE

MAKE A DIFFERENCE... TEACH!

Teaching means shaping the future of thousands of lives. Teaching means rising to the challenge of one of today's most exciting and vital professions.

DO YOU love learning? feel a responsibility to future generations? seek a rewarding and worthwhile experience in secondary school teaching?

Explore the possibilities. Join the Fellows in Teaching Program at Teachers College, Columbia University. For more information, meet with Mr. Jan Owen at the Williams' Office of Career Counseling on November 10th from 9:30 to 1:00 pm. OR Contact: Prof. A. Lin Goodwin, Box 216, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, NY 10027 (212-678-3788)

Some days, it's nice to leave the humanities behind.

When your daily routine becomes too routine, come to the Pub at The Orchards. We're now featuring delicious blackboard specials that include hearty sandwiches, charcoal-grilled burgers, soup and salad. All priced to appeal to your personal economics.

Plus we offer quick service in a warm, comfortable atmosphere. Along with very convenient hours - from noon 'til five o'clock daily. So make your escape soon to the Pub at The Orchards. Only minutes away but it'll feel like another world.

Williamstown, Massachusetts (413) 458-9611

Toxic Waste Dump.

The Great American Smokeout. Nov. 17.

CAMPUS REPS NEEDED

Earn big commissions and free trips by selling Nassau/Paradise Island, Cancun, Mexico and ski trips to Vermont & Colorado. For more information call toll free 1-800-231-0113 or in CT 203-967-3330.

PUT YOUR DEGREE TO WORK
WHERE IT CAN DO A WORLD OF GOOD

Your first job after graduation should offer you more than just a paycheck. We can offer you an experience that lasts a lifetime.

Working together with people in a different culture is something you'll never forget. It's a learning experience everyone can benefit from.

In Science or Engineering, Education, Agriculture, or Health, Peace Corps projects in developing countries around the world are bringing help where it's needed.

If you're graduating this year, look into a unique opportunity to put your degree to work where it can do a world of good. Look into Peace Corps.

RECRUITERS AT WILLIAMS!

- FILM INFORMATION SESSION - Wed., Nov. 16 at 6pm in the Career Office, Stetson Hall.
- INFORMATION BOOTH - Wed., Nov. 16 from 11-3pm in the Student Union, Baxter Hall.
- INTERVIEWS - Thurs., Nov. 17. Sign up in the Career Counseling Office.

The toughest job you'll ever have
PEACE CORPS

14 C

Spring Break

Specials!

CANCUN	$479
NASSAU	$499
FREEPORT	$519
MARGARITA ISLAND	$519
ANTIGUA	$579
ARUBA	$599
ST. MAARTEN	$649

All packages include:
• Round trip air
• 7 nights hotel accommodation
• Round-trip transfers
• Luggage handling
• Free T-shirt

Call Right Away for Details!

Need some Christmas Money? Call us, we are looking for a campus rep!

THE TRAVEL STORE

We make great vacations!
105 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267
(413) 458-5052
outside Mass. 800-225-5052

YOU QUALIFY FOR INSTANT CREDIT!

Start making credit purchases IMMEDIATELY! We will send you a Member's Credit Card at once with CREDIT CHECK. Buy any Jewelry, Clothing, Sporting Goods, Watches, Electronics & MORE! All with installment payments out of our "Giant 100+ Pages Catalog." Take 12 months to repay. Your personal credit card is a second I.D. - valuable for check cashing, etc. plus your Students Credit Group A-1 reference will be on file to help you obtain other credit cards. So send in your $5 catalog deposit now. (refundable with your first order)

Look for your credit card! 100% Satisfaction Guaranteed (or your Money Back)

Name _____
Address _____
City _____
State _____
Zip _____

MEMBERS P.O. BOX 4649
PORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA 33338

- Boston
- San Francisco
- London
- Paris
- Munich
- Tokyo

Wednesday, November 16, 1988
OCC Library - Stetson Hall
7:00 PM

THE CLIP SHOP

THE HAIR SALON FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

- Hair Salon
- Perms
- Color
- Cellophane
- Conditioning
- Relaxers
- Highlighting
- Make-Ups
- Facials
- Skin Care
- Manicures
- Pedicures
- Nail Tips
- Waxing
- Ear Piercing

Call for an appointment or just walk in

GIFT CERTIFICATES

10 SPRING STREET
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
800-231-0113 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH STREET
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6803

125 NORTH STREET
BENNINGTON, VT.
(802) 442-9823 or (802) 442-2348

WE'RE A SEBASTIAN ARTISTIC CENTER. THE SALON THAT MAKES THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN OK AND EXTRAORDINARY FOR MEN AND WOMEN

"This year I'll get organized."

And this year I really mean it. So I'm buying myself an IBM® Personal System/2® computer to help me do everything from organizing notes and revising papers to creating high-quality graphics, and more. And not only is this IBM PS/2 easy to learn and use, but if I'm eligible, I'll save up to 40% with my discount.

Who knows, with this IBM PS/2, I may be so organized even my socks will match.

Stop by the IBM PC Fair
on Thursday, November 10th
in the Baxter Lounge
from 10 AM until 3 PM

Students, Faculty and Staff
can now purchase with a 40% discount

IBM and Personal System/2 are registered trademarks of International Business Machines Corporation.

SPORTS SHORTS

M. X-Country

by Steve Brody
The men's cross-country team sent a seven man squad to Albany State on Saturday for the ECAC Championships. All the Ephs ran solid races, leading to a tenth place finish in the thirty-team field, behind first place Rochester Institute of Technology.

The Ephs' effort was led by Brian Coan '92 and Evan Driscoll '91. Coan and Driscoll got out to a good start, pushing themselves in order to be in good position among the over 200 runners in the race and avoid having to pass on the frequently narrow 5.05 mile course. Running together, they came through the mile mark in 50th and 51st places. Switching places between themselves, they moved to 46th and 47th over the next four miles before the race's finish. With about 600 meters to go, Driscoll made a move to pass Coan. "I let him go by me at that point," said Coan, "because I knew it was too early to kick." Coan's strategy paid off, as he caught a lifting Driscoll in the last 200 meters to take 46th place.

Behind the Ephs' front two, Brendan Kearse '92 was heading into his usual ferocious finish. He passed teammate Steve Brody '90 with a half mile to go to move into 75th place, but he wasn't finished there. Kearse caught nine more runners in the race's final 800 meters to finish 66th.

Brody held on to his position, finishing 75th, just ahead of the Ephs fifth man, Brian Fields '89, who was 79th. The race concludes a very successful senior year for Fields, who ran the best times of his career and moved up to secure himself a solid varsity spot. The Ephs will conclude their season this weekend, as they send their top seven runners to the Division III New England Regional at Southeastern Massachusetts University. The Ephs look to get back into the top ten at the meet, a feat they have not accomplished since 1985.

W. X-Country

by Cathy Cocks
Taking on 33 complete teams (at least five runners) and 43 in all, making a field of 222 runners, the women's cross country team once again acquitted itself honorably, running competitive times placing 13th in the highest meet so far this season. The occasion was the ECAC championship in Albany on the RPI campus on Saturday.

Leading off the Ephs' effort in the unseasonably warm weather was junior Stacey Smith, who ran a very solid time of 19:50 for the 5000 meter (3.1 mile) course to take 59th place. Next to finish in the tightly packed field was Mika Brzezinski '89, running 20:12 for 75th overall, just ahead of Mary Moule '91 (77th), in one of her strongest races of the season. Moule collapsed at the finish but fortunately recovered within a half an hour.

Completing the scoring for Williams were Jessica Walker '91 and Heather Smith '92 at 101st and 113th respectively, and rounding out the varsity at 133rd was Sue Donna '92, coming back from an injury that has prevented her from competing all season. The Ephs' admirable performance is another indicator of the depth of talent on this season's team, as Williams' top seven sat out to rest for next week's NCAA New England Regional Qualifier. The next six runners easily dominated the majority of the varsity teams competing in the region. In coach Larry Bell's opinion the best team Williams has ever had, the Ephwomen are ranked second only to the University of Southern Maine among New England Division III schools and will be giving their rivals tough competition for the regional championship this Saturday at Southeastern Massachusetts University.

W. Crew

by Cara McCandless
Women's crew swept the Head of the Fish regatta October 29, winning all but one event entered and the overall points trophy with the help of a strong novice men's team. Garnering the traditional, laminated fish head trophies in the varsity eight, novice eight, and mixed eight (four varsity women and four novice men), Williams dominated UVM, Albany, and Skidmore, with many rowers racing twice.

The week before, Williams traveled to Boston for the legendary Head of the Charles regatta, a three mile course past thousands of cheering, partying fans. The Charles is always an intense, fun regatta; this year Williams women were granted enough entries that the whole varsity team could row and the novice first eight could race in the Youth eight event. Psyched and confident after their exceptionally strong placing at the Holyoke regatta the week before, the Williams boats knew they would have nothing to lose by racing aggressively against the national class competition the Charles always provides.

The novice first eight, after powerfully moving through several boats ahead, lost precious time because of difficulty navigating the convoluted course. The Championship Heavyweight four gave their all, although they were short on crucial practice time that brings a boat together as an efficient rowing unit. The Lightweight eight had one of those memorable races where everything goes right, the boat swings smoothly, and the feeling makes all those hours of training worth it.

The Championship Heavyweight eight looked like their race was going to be similarly awesome until halfway through the course when the coxswain's intercom system went out. When most of the boat cannot hear the cox, especially difficult that Sunday because of the strong winds on the course, the competitive unity of thought so vital to rowing as an aggressive boat is lost. Still turning in a strong race, the first varsity eight is aiming to make the Grand finals in the Dad Vail this spring.

The crew team now begins gearing up for winter training; the new state-of-the-art rowing tanks and erg room replace Lake Ontario as workout centers. This strong and exciting fall season will motivate the as it trains for the spring.

M. Crew

by Dave Katz

The Head of the Charles regatta in Boston two weeks ago marked the end of the varsity men's fall season. The Ephs entered boats in three events in this largest regatta of the season and had to be encouraged by their strong performances.

The weather that Sunday was hardly ideal, with strong winds and cold temperatures making conditions miserable. The race drew crews from colleges all over the country and entrants from around the world.

The Championship Eight Event matched the Ephs against crews from the best colleges and clubs in the country, including the victorious Penn Athletic Club eight (which was made up of the Olympic four, pair without coxswain and pair with coxswain). Harvard, Navy, and UCLA followed the Penn AC boat but did not seriously challenge the runaway winners, who perennially form virtually unbeatable crews from among the best clubs in the country.

The Williams heavyweights (seniors Andy Hoddick, Jeff Kip, Dave Katz, Seth Burns, and Mike Harper, along with juniors Mark Cullen, Mike Mader and Todd Owens, coxed by Kate Iversen '90) rowed a strong race, passing two boats over the 3-mile course and finishing sixteenth out of 32 crews. In fact, had the Penn AC boat not been entered in the event, Williams would have qualified for an automatic entry into next year's regatta (by virtue of the fact that the Ephs' time was within 5 percent of second-place Harvard's).

In the Club Eight Event, the Ephs' second eight looked to improve on last year's fifth place in the event. The five seniors in the second eight (Dave Sette-Ducati, Dave Beischer, Jon Headley, Seth Rabinowitz, and Michael Cheung) were joined by three talented freshmen, Wole Coaxum, Tom Wide-man, and Phillip Walton.

The second eight encountered some trouble at the Weeks Footbridge when they tangled with Brook University. The men still managed to finish 17th and capture another automatic entry in the event next season with a 17:15:04 finish (just within 5 percent of MIT's winning time of 16:27:93).

The most successful finish of the day for the Ephs came in the first event entered on Sunday morning, the Club Four Event. Stroked by junior Dwight Eyrick, the Williams four placed ninth in the 35-boat field. Eyrick was joined by classmate James Small and sophomores Geoff Oxnam and Henry Woo, while the boat was directed by coxswain Susan Yoo '91 en route to its impressive finish.

The men's varsity eight felt that their strong performance in the Charles regatta put the team within striking distance of last year's Dad Vail champion Florida Institute of Technology, while the strong rowing of the underclassmen in the Club fours and the second eight was certainly encouraging. The team has already begun preparing for the spring season in the spring, looking forward to the Little Three and Dad Vail regattas.

Water Polo—

continued from page 12

four unanswered goals to pull ahead 8-6. The fourth quarter saw the loss of three Williams starters due to triple fouls, but Williams refused to relinquish its well-earned lead. The Ephs proved the depth of their team when the subs kept up the intensity of these valuable players. At the final buzzer, the score was Williams 11, Amherst 10.

This victory represented a true team effort. Tri-Captain Andy Kaplinsky scored 4 goals, each of which sparked the team at key moments in the game. Hole-setter Than Healy powered in 3 goals of his own. Captain Dave Cantor had a backhand shot from the hole which fired the team into its comeback.

Captain Will Dudley, Chris Giglio, and Mike Lane each put a hole in the Amherst sieve as well. On defense, Lane played an amazing game in the hole. Goalie Gavin Webb earned his name as Wall of Meat as he continuously turned aside Defector shots, including a crucial four-meter penalty shot. Most importantly, Williams worked as a team, as an offensive threat and a defensive barricade.

The team now looks forward to next weekend's Eastern Championships to be held here at Williams.

W. Soccer—

continued from page 12

considerably by the second half, as the Ephs controlled the midfield and began to string together some passes. The Ephs' efforts paid immediate dividends, as captain Lori Schaen '89 tickled the Middlebury nets with an assist from freshman Liz Nasser a mere two minutes into the second stanza.

The game remained a deadlock until the 83:00 mark, when Battelle again came through, this time on an indirect penalty kick. Battelle's second tally proved to be the final margin, as Middlebury held on to advance to the finals of the tournament.

Coach Melendy was understandably disappointed with the outcome of the game. The Ephwomen outshot their opponents 18-11 and, according to Melendy, "dominated the game," but could not turn their advantage into goals. Despite the loss, however, Melendy did look forward with enthusiasm to next fall. "We have a real strong team coming up next year. We were a young team this year, and although there will be several key spots to fill, we have some skilled players ready to step in."

200 Year Old Farmhouse to share
- tenant will have private bedroom and access to 52 acres, fireplace, barn, washer and dryer; 5 minutes to Williams campus. $250 / month all utilities included. Call Daytime 663-5295 or Evening 458-3914

Government Homeal
$1.00 (U. Repairs) Foreclosures,
Tax Delinquent Property,
Now Selling. This area! Call
(Refundable) 1-518-459-3546
Ext. H4491AB for listings.

Support the
March of Dimes
CHILDREN'S FOUNDATION

NEW YORK
WHERE LIBERAL ARTS GRADUATES CAN BECOME PRICE WATERHOUSE PROFESSIONALS
NEW YORK
AND EARN AN ADVANCED DEGREE IN BUSINESS AT NEW YORK UNIVERSITY

There are many reasons why the Big Apple is considered to be the best place to launch a business career. Take, for example, the Price Waterhouse/New York University business program for liberal arts graduates.

It is a challenging and competitive 15 months to be sure. But it is time well spent.

You'll spend your days working on the professional staff of the New York office of Price Waterhouse. And some nights and two summers attending the New York University Graduate School of Business Administration, where you can obtain an MS in accounting. Then, if you like, you can continue on for your MBA.

Even while attending NYU full-time, you will remain on full salary at PW. When you complete the program, you will have earned an advanced degree from one of the country's top business schools. You will also have gained invaluable practical experience working for one of the leading business advisory firms in the world. Experience which includes consulting with client executives on important business problems.

If you think you might be interested in the upcoming program, you should plan on taking your GMATs no later than March of 1989.

And to learn more about this truly unique career and educational opportunity, and to meet some of the participants currently in the program, plan on attending the upcoming Price Waterhouse information session:

Wednesday, November 9, 1988

7:00 p.m.

Stetson Hall

An equal opportunity employer, M/F

Price Waterhouse
EXPECT MORE FROM US

Merrill Lynch Capital Markets

will host an Informational Meeting and Reception for

Williams Seniors

to discuss the

Corporate Finance Analyst Program

and the

Debt and Equity Intern Program

on

Monday, November 14, 1988

5:30 p.m.

Office of Career Counseling

Men's rugby crunches Yale 25-6

By Mark Stepien
By all accounts, it was a great day for Williams rugby and a fitting performance for visiting alumni. Thanks to the efforts of Chap Petersen '90, Yale brought three sides to the Purple Valley for an unofficial Division I face-off, in which the White Dogs of Williams prevailed 25-6.

The White Dogs remembered their first play of last year which resulted in a humiliating loss to the Elis in New Haven and came on from the opening whistle with a fifteen man attack which did not let up during the entire match. "I was psyched to see the backs mixing it up today—they definitely played their best game of the season," commented veteran hooker Chaz Benedict '89.

The backs could hardly have failed to keep the boys in blue eating dust with switches, breakthroughs, and quick overloads when they received such quick possession from the rucking forwards and precision passes from scrum half James Mannix '89. The Williams play accelerated in a virtuous circle of textbook rucking and mauling and daring back play. Most of the forwards which gave the backs the confidence to play enterprising rugby.

Baird's touch of finesse
Winning the ball a bit quicker than usual gave the backs a chance to exploit spontaneous openings in the opposition. Senior outside center Bryan Baird put on a virtuoso display of hard running with a touch of finesse that saw him pierce the try zone twice. The most heartening element of Baird's runs, and about the game in general, was the supporting Williams players who outnumbered the Elis around the ball.

A number of times, the Eli fullback would see a wall of white when trying to collect a deep kick; and one time, his failure to clear the ball immediately resulted in a try for 8-man Chris

Senior flanker Chris Palmedo bursts through three Eli defenders en route to touching down a try in the men's rugby team's 25-6 trouncing of Yale. (Scala)

Palmedo '89 who scooped up the loose ball and crashed over the line to score in the corner. Great place kicking by fullback Petersen brought the final toll to 25-6.

Killer B's attack
The Killer B's had a closer match but still managed a 6-0 victory thanks to the boot of fullback Bruce Young '90. Ed Andersen '90 emulated his A-side counterpart's daring running style but unfortunately failed to elude the Yale cover defense on any of his jaunts. The B-side really deserved some tries considering the way they took last week's technique drills to heart. The forwards, led by junior lock Kevin Cook rucked magnificently, especially in the second half.

In a combined C and D game Williams reaffirmed the tremendous depth at its command. Junior scrum half Dan Foote scored yet another in his string of opportunistic tries this season by carrying over a loose ball just when it appeared play had broken down. Debut tries were had also by giant freshman lock Ian Gallagher and sophomore flanker Radar Rich. Though the playing season is over for the C and D sides, the first two teams will face the hated defectors next Saturday at Amherst, from whence they hope to return with the treasured prize of 22 black jerseys.

In the Spotlight...

If the Football and Men's soccer teams defeat their Amherst counterparts this week, Williams will have completed a clean sweep of Varsity Little Three competition.

Fullback J. Chapman Petersen '90 kicked two of three conversions and all three penalty kicks to score 13 of the White Dogs' 25 points on Saturday.

Andy Kaplinaky '90, Mike Lane '90, and Gavin Webb '92 led the water polo team to an 11-10 swamping of Amherst in the title match of the New England Championships.

In women's rugby, Rebekah Tinsla '90 managed to break out of her tight head prop position to touch down two tries and was inches from another.

Athlete of the Week

This week's recipient is junior field hockey player Amy Kershaw. Kershaw led her team to a NIAC championship by scoring four goals in the two round tourney, including the game winner in the triple overtime thriller versus Connecticut College. Kershaw ended the season third in team scoring with six points, behind classmates Judy Fleishman and Mo Flaherty. Congratulations, Amy.

From the locker room

by Marc McDermott and Ted Hobart
"The Miami Heat is up by one with five seconds remaining in game seven of the NBA Championship finals. Magic Johnson inbound the ball for the Lakers—he passes to Jabbar in the low post. Kareem wheels and jacks up a sky hook, but it's blocked by Pat Cummings and time runs out!! The capacity crowd here in Miami is going crazy as their hometown Heat have won the NBA Championship in their first season in the league!!"—NOT.

A more likely scenario for the season-ending Heat game goes as follows: "And Johnson and Jabbar leave the game after the second quarter with the Lakers leading by seventy points, virtually assuring the Heat yet another loss and the honor of compiling the worst single season in NBA history. The crowd, which was lured into the game by the prospect of an air-conditioned arena, has been invited onto the court for a pickup game at halftime. However, there are not enough spectators to field two full teams."

Ah yes, the age of expansion. At present, the NBA is in the midst of expansion and all the other major sports leagues are considering the 'E' word. It is ironic that the league that can least afford expansion at present is the one expanding. After all, the NBA has several franchises that are not drawing well or making money.

So many cities across the country are claiming that they are the perfect place for expansion of the leagues that it is hard to imagine to what lengths the cities will go to attract franchises. Indianapolis and Phoenix both enticed football teams to relocate, and Indianapolis is offering to build a new stadium for a prospective baseball team.

Washington, D.C. is clamoring for another baseball franchise after having lost two Senator teams. Florida has grown tired of its traditional role as host of intersquad spring training classics and claims it has several communities which should receive expansion teams.

So what, some say. Give them a team. Expansion is not a new idea, and the same arguments against it have failed before and will probably fail again in the face of potential profits. But let's face it—it is downright painful to watch three more Clippers come into the NBA, or the St. Petersburg Sweat join the National League. If the Mets, with their 2.91 staff ERA, are looking for pitching this off-season, how will the Sweat staff fare? Probably like a bunch of sore-arm softballers.

While we would like to see a halt to this rampant expansion, we are too realistic to expect the owners to forego profits in protecting their game's integrity. Thus we propose building a 50,000 seat baseball stadium in Hopkins Forest to host the new Williamstown Whackers of the AL East. If you can't beat 'em, join 'em.

GOFF'S SPORTS TRIVIA QUIZ

- 1) Who was the first man to run a mile in under four minutes?
 - 2) Who was the first black player in major league baseball?
 - 3) Who was the legendary Ohio State football coach who was fired after attacking an opposing player after a game?
 - 4) Notre Dame has had many unforgettable football players. In 1979, running back Vegas Ferguson broke the career rushing record of what famous runner?
- Send your answers to Marc McDermott, Ted Hobart, or SU 2817 by Saturday, or call the Record office (x2400) Sunday before 5 PM. Last week's winner was Mike Pappasadoro '88, who was visiting for Homecoming. Thattaway Paps!
- Last week's answers: 1) 1981 was the last year the Ephs had two shutouts in a row; 2) PAC-10, formerly the PAC-8 won the most titles; 3) Lakers, Celtics, Sixers, Rockets, Pistons; 4) A catamaran won the America's Cup.

Skaters Hockey or Figure

Excellent Selection
Terrific Prices

-Accessories of all kinds
-Sticks from Montreal; Canadian and Christian Expert Skate Sharpening

Goff's Sports, Inc.

(413) 458-3605
15 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA 01267

Open
Mon.-Sat. 9-5:30
Thurs. 9-8:30

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Fractured Phrases

BY CHARLES M. DEBER/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Malaska

- | | |
|--|--|
| ACROSS 1 Soundred 4 Angels' headgear 6 — as the eye can see 14 Fixed or frozen follower 19 Fabulist George 20 Two-line verse 21 Beach 22 Weather, to a poet 23 Israeli airport 24 Tailor trousers 25 Pauline's problem 26 Exhausts 27 Silkworm 28 Routines 29 Frauds 30 Inclination 31 Get lost, after four 32 They may justify means DOWN 1 Son of Jeppunneh 2 Cherish 3 Commemorate 4 Disappointments, after four 5 "... and pulled out —" 6 Numbers same 7 Black Sea port 8 San talk 9 Humane org. 10 Shaves a sheep 11 Heard of grain 12 C. e. g. 13 Play parts 15 Danish county 16 Appraise 17 Sputtered, as an engine 18 In particular 19 L.B.J. beagle 20 Diamond and Lagerbl 21 W.S. Porter 22 Mata — 23 Devour, after five 24 Penn and Tell, for short 25 Famed marbles 26 Map 27 Seives 28 Max and Buddy 29 Parbolla 30 Newman and 31 Revere 32 Bullfrog's 33 Inclination 34 Right to the jaw, after four 35 "Dammit, after 1968 musical" 36 Double features 37 "Mikro-kosmos" composer 38 Stadium sounds 39 Thal in Toulouse 40 Closefisted 41 Slightest 42 French vineyard 43 Broiled entree, after three 44 Land contract 45 Frighiens 46 E rode, as a river 47 Lasagna or linguine 48 America's Uncle 49 Warehouse function 50 "Alice Doesn't Live Here" 51 West African country 52 Baseball's Sparky 53 Parachute strings, after four 54 Breed of cattle 55 Fur piece 56 Certain U.S. resident 57 Baby powder 58 Lasted 59 Mount in Tasmania 60 Dig 61 Wagtail's cousin 62 Desert, after four 63 Caterpillar's hair 64 Greek portico 65 Leave, after seven 66 Half of DCC 67 American ostriches 68 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 69 Type of school 70 Prof. rank 71 Dud 72 Thanksgiving 73 City in Ohio 74 Net minder 75 Width, e.g. 76 Melts 77 Coal container 78 Bonnie's beau 79 "Tin —" 80 Gaur's wife 81 Specialization, after eleven 82 Christie's Miss 83 Novelist Sinclair 84 On one's toes 85 Before, to the Bard 86 An Astaire 87 Kurosawa movie: 1985 88 Frenzied 89 Lasagna or linguine 90 Flax fabric 91 For 66, e.g. 92 Chess: Comb. form 93 Skills, in Sevilla 94 Untidy 95 Word of Lasent | 96 "Tin —" 97 Gaur's wife 98 Specialization, after eleven 99 Christie's Miss 100 Novelist Sinclair 101 On one's toes 102 Before, to the Bard 103 An Astaire 104 Kurosawa movie: 1985 105 Frenzied 106 Lasagna or linguine 107 Flax fabric 108 For 66, e.g. 109 Chess: Comb. form 110 Skills, in Sevilla 111 Untidy 112 Word of Lasent 113 Greek portico 114 Leave, after seven 115 Half of DCC 116 American ostriches 117 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 118 Type of school 119 Prof. rank 120 Dud 121 Thanksgiving 122 City in Ohio 123 Net minder 124 Width, e.g. 125 Melts 126 Coal container 127 Bonnie's beau 128 "Tin —" 129 Gaur's wife 130 Specialization, after eleven 131 Christie's Miss 132 Novelist Sinclair 133 On one's toes 134 Before, to the Bard 135 An Astaire 136 Kurosawa movie: 1985 137 Frenzied 138 Lasagna or linguine 139 Flax fabric 140 For 66, e.g. 141 Chess: Comb. form 142 Skills, in Sevilla 143 Untidy 144 Word of Lasent 145 Greek portico 146 Leave, after seven 147 Half of DCC 148 American ostriches 149 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 150 Type of school 151 Prof. rank 152 Dud 153 Thanksgiving 154 City in Ohio 155 Net minder 156 Width, e.g. 157 Melts 158 Coal container 159 Bonnie's beau 160 "Tin —" 161 Gaur's wife 162 Specialization, after eleven 163 Christie's Miss 164 Novelist Sinclair 165 On one's toes 166 Before, to the Bard 167 An Astaire 168 Kurosawa movie: 1985 169 Frenzied 170 Lasagna or linguine 171 Flax fabric 172 For 66, e.g. 173 Chess: Comb. form 174 Skills, in Sevilla 175 Untidy 176 Word of Lasent 177 Greek portico 178 Leave, after seven 179 Half of DCC 180 American ostriches 181 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 182 Type of school 183 Prof. rank 184 Dud 185 Thanksgiving 186 City in Ohio 187 Net minder 188 Width, e.g. 189 Melts 190 Coal container 191 Bonnie's beau 192 "Tin —" 193 Gaur's wife 194 Specialization, after eleven 195 Christie's Miss 196 Novelist Sinclair 197 On one's toes 198 Before, to the Bard 199 An Astaire 200 Kurosawa movie: 1985 201 Frenzied 202 Lasagna or linguine 203 Flax fabric 204 For 66, e.g. 205 Chess: Comb. form 206 Skills, in Sevilla 207 Untidy 208 Word of Lasent 209 Greek portico 210 Leave, after seven 211 Half of DCC 212 American ostriches 213 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 214 Type of school 215 Prof. rank 216 Dud 217 Thanksgiving 218 City in Ohio 219 Net minder 220 Width, e.g. 221 Melts 222 Coal container 223 Bonnie's beau 224 "Tin —" 225 Gaur's wife 226 Specialization, after eleven 227 Christie's Miss 228 Novelist Sinclair 229 On one's toes 230 Before, to the Bard 231 An Astaire 232 Kurosawa movie: 1985 233 Frenzied 234 Lasagna or linguine 235 Flax fabric 236 For 66, e.g. 237 Chess: Comb. form 238 Skills, in Sevilla 239 Untidy 240 Word of Lasent 241 Greek portico 242 Leave, after seven 243 Half of DCC 244 American ostriches 245 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 246 Type of school 247 Prof. rank 248 Dud 249 Thanksgiving 250 City in Ohio 251 Net minder 252 Width, e.g. 253 Melts 254 Coal container 255 Bonnie's beau 256 "Tin —" 257 Gaur's wife 258 Specialization, after eleven 259 Christie's Miss 260 Novelist Sinclair 261 On one's toes 262 Before, to the Bard 263 An Astaire 264 Kurosawa movie: 1985 265 Frenzied 266 Lasagna or linguine 267 Flax fabric 268 For 66, e.g. 269 Chess: Comb. form 270 Skills, in Sevilla 271 Untidy 272 Word of Lasent 273 Greek portico 274 Leave, after seven 275 Half of DCC 276 American ostriches 277 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 278 Type of school 279 Prof. rank 280 Dud 281 Thanksgiving 282 City in Ohio 283 Net minder 284 Width, e.g. 285 Melts 286 Coal container 287 Bonnie's beau 288 "Tin —" 289 Gaur's wife 290 Specialization, after eleven 291 Christie's Miss 292 Novelist Sinclair 293 On one's toes 294 Before, to the Bard 295 An Astaire 296 Kurosawa movie: 1985 297 Frenzied 298 Lasagna or linguine 299 Flax fabric 300 For 66, e.g. 301 Chess: Comb. form 302 Skills, in Sevilla 303 Untidy 304 Word of Lasent 305 Greek portico 306 Leave, after seven 307 Half of DCC 308 American ostriches 309 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 310 Type of school 311 Prof. rank 312 Dud 313 Thanksgiving 314 City in Ohio 315 Net minder 316 Width, e.g. 317 Melts 318 Coal container 319 Bonnie's beau 320 "Tin —" 321 Gaur's wife 322 Specialization, after eleven 323 Christie's Miss 324 Novelist Sinclair 325 On one's toes 326 Before, to the Bard 327 An Astaire 328 Kurosawa movie: 1985 329 Frenzied 330 Lasagna or linguine 331 Flax fabric 332 For 66, e.g. 333 Chess: Comb. form 334 Skills, in Sevilla 335 Untidy 336 Word of Lasent 337 Greek portico 338 Leave, after seven 339 Half of DCC 340 American ostriches 341 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 342 Type of school 343 Prof. rank 344 Dud 345 Thanksgiving 346 City in Ohio 347 Net minder 348 Width, e.g. 349 Melts 350 Coal container 351 Bonnie's beau 352 "Tin —" 353 Gaur's wife 354 Specialization, after eleven 355 Christie's Miss 356 Novelist Sinclair 357 On one's toes 358 Before, to the Bard 359 An Astaire 360 Kurosawa movie: 1985 361 Frenzied 362 Lasagna or linguine 363 Flax fabric 364 For 66, e.g. 365 Chess: Comb. form 366 Skills, in Sevilla 367 Untidy 368 Word of Lasent 369 Greek portico 370 Leave, after seven 371 Half of DCC 372 American ostriches 373 Tin Man's plea in Oz film 374 Type of school 375 Prof. rank 376 Dud 377 Thanksgiving 378 City in Ohio 379 Net minder 380 Width, e.g. 381 Melts 382 Coal container 383 Bonnie's beau 384 "Tin —" 385 Gaur's wife 386 Specialization, after eleven 387 Christie's Miss 388 Novelist Sinclair 389 On one's toes 390 Before, to the Bard 391 An Astaire 392 Kurosawa movie: 1985 393 Frenzied 394 Lasagna or linguine 395 Flax fabric 396 For 66, e.g. 397 Chess: Comb. form 398 Skills, in Sevilla 399 Untidy 400 Word of Lasent |
|--|--|

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

The End (Act One)

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

The Far Side cost

Gridders down Wes. in 19-0 shutout

by Ted Hobart

Watching Saturday's Homecoming football game versus Wesleyan was likened by one observer to watching the men's soccer game versus Wesleyan on Saturday morning. "You just know Wesleyan's not going to score." Indeed, Wesleyan's football team fared no better offensively than its soccer counterpart, falling 19-0 to the 5-1-1 Ephemen.

The shutout may have been a welcome surprise to the visiting alumni, but shutouts are becoming old hat for the Ephemen and their fans. The Williams defense notched its third straight shutout (for the first time since consecutive shutouts of Springfield, Trinity, and Union in 1964) and extended its streak of shutout quarters to 13 (including the fourth quarter of the 34-10 win over Bates).

The pattern of the win has also become familiar. In the first half, the Williams defense held the Cardinals' offense to just two first downs while forcing three turnovers. The Ephs' offense, however, was its own worst enemy in the opening phases of the game, handing Wesleyan a like number of turnovers and taking five costly penalties.

Sophomore tailback Jon Horton ran consistently in the opening drives, averaging nearly four yards per carry in the

Wesleyan tripped themselves up in their first chance in over twenty years to win an outright Little Three Title and now only the hated 'Herst stands between Williams and a second straight championship. (Steinman)

Williams defense. On second down and three to go on his own 27, Cardinal quarterback Ed Lukowski ran an option to the right, where sophomore the touchdown from four yards out for a 6-0 lead.

It looked as if the Ephs were about to notch another quick score when on Wesleyan's following possession defensive tackle Dan Newhall '91 hauled down a Lukowski pass which was deflected by Rogers. The opportunity was lost, though, when Kennedy's first down pass was intercepted by a Wesleyan linebacker, and the Ephs took a 6-0 lead into the locker room at the half.

The second half, too, followed recent trends, as the offense came to life. The offensive line wore down its Cardinal counterparts while the Ephs hung on to the ball and mounted several big drives. Williams racked up ten first downs in the second half while nearly doubling its first half yardage (136 to 70).

Kennedy led the Ephs on two long drives to open the second half, hitting fullback John Perryman '90 over the middle or Scott Shean '91 for big gains. The first drive was capped by senior Jeff Elmard's 37 yard field goal which posted the Ephs to a 9-0 lead.

The second drive, a 44 yarder, ended when Neal Chealey '90 plowed in from the Wesleyan 3 for the 16-0 lead. The score effectively put the game out of reach, as the Ephs' defense was so stingy that the Cardinals could not even get past midfield until there were less than three minutes remaining in the game.

The scoring was not finished, however, as the Cardinals turned the ball over, for the seventh time, late in the fourth quarter on the game's most unusual play. On third down from the Cardinal 23, Lukowski was forced to scramble back toward the end zone in the face of pressure, where he bumped into the referee and fumbled the ball. Senior nose tackle Mark Duff pounced on the ball on the one yard line.

A twenty yard penalty on the next play put the Ephs back out at the 21, where they were forced to settle for a field goal on fourth down, finalizing the tally at 19-0.

This week, the squad plays its biggest game of the year—the showdown with the struggling Lord Jeffs of Amherst. A win on Saturday will give the team its second consecutive Little Three Title.

Season ends at 11-2

Field Hockey claims NIAC's

by Marc McDermott

Vindication was the one thought on the mind of the field hockey team during the long bus ride to Hartford, CT, for the NIAC championships. Vindication for the Ephs' only regular season in conference loss (2-1) to Connecticut College, their first round opponent. Vindication for not being chosen first seed and host of the tournament despite having the best record of the participants and having beaten first seed Trinity 2-1 during regular season play. Vindication which could come only in the form of two wins which would bring the Ephwomen the NIAC trophy they had been denied in the finals the year before. Vindication was had with a 5-3 stroke off win over Connecticut and a 2-0 final round trouncing of Tufts.

The opening round defeat of Conn. College was the women's toughest contest of the year. Through two evenly played 35 minute halves and three 10 minute overtime periods, the grueling contest raged. As in their earlier meeting, the Ephwomen outshot the Camels nearly 2-1 (29-15), but the Camels nevertheless pierced the net just as often as the frustrated Ephwomen.

Just as in the regular season matchup, Connecticut jumped out on top, scoring just 5:30 into the game. This time, however, the Ephs matched with an Amy Kershaw '90 goal thirteen minutes later. Play careened up and down the field with both teams touching twice once more before the half. The Williams score again came from the stick of Kershaw, this time with an assist from the team's scoring leader, Mo Flaherty '90.

After 27 scoreless second half minutes, Connecticut went ahead for the third time on senior Jessica Horrigan's third goal. Williams had just eight minutes left to tie, and allowed 7:28 of them to tick away before Flaherty powered one in. Senior captain and netminder Wynn Hohlt turned away every one of the Camels' offerings in all three overtime periods, but the Williams forwards were equally stymied by Connecticut freshman goalie Laurie Sicha, who had seventeen saves on the day.

Thus after having played five periods, each of which ended in a tie, the game had to be decided by a stroke off. Each continued on page 7

Aquamen drown defectors 11-10 in N.E. finals

by Ray Neufeld

Two opposing aquatic powers met on a neutral field of battle. The forces joined and the waters churned. When the clash was ended, one team emerged from the turbulent pool -- a new New England Champion.

This scene was enacted this past weekend. The site was Brown University's swimming pool. The foes were Williams and Amherst. After five years, the Williams Water Polo Team recaptured the Division II New England Championship title from their perennial rivals from down the road.

On Saturday evening Williams faced Dartmouth in the preliminary round. Dartmouth played a rough, hack and slash game of desperation, but the skillful band from the Purple Valley soundly defeated the Green Mountain boys, 10-6. This victory intensified the team's for its greater battle the following day.

Williams drew first blood from the Defectors, but Amherst answered quickly with a goal of its own. The teams traded goals, but by the end of the half the Defectors had pulled ahead 6-4. The third quarter was an exercise in desire. Twice before, the Ephs had second half come-back victories against Amherst, and once they had come back and lost by a single goal.

This time the Ephs would come back early and with intensity. They scored continued on page 9

Scores by Quarters		1	2	3	4	Final
WESLEYAN		0	0	0	0	0
WILLIAMS		0	6	10	3	19
Team	Qtr.	Time left	Scoring play
Wes	2	6:23	Kennedy 4 yard run (kick fails)			6-0
Wes	3	8:47	Elmard 37 yard field goal			9-0
Wes	3	2:41	Chealey 3 yard run (Elmard kick)			16-0
Wes	4	3:44	Elmard 27 yard field goal			19-0

first eight possessions of the half. The Cardinal defense front pursued very well and sacked quarterback and tri-captain Scott Kennedy '89 three times in the first four drives, which along with several costly penalties stymied the Williams offense.

The only score of the half, a touchdown by the Ephs with 8:37 left in the half, was set up by the swarming Wil-defensive end Ted Rogers was waiting for him. Rogers hit Lukowski just as he pitched the ball to the trailing halfback, who was unable to catch the errant pitch.

Eric Moe '89, who had raced up from his cornerback position, then took out the halfback and recovered the fumble in a superior individual effort. Four plays later, Kennedy ran a bootleg for

Middlebury's Batelle scores twice to end W. soccer's season

by Kerr Houston

As the women's soccer team members packed their bags and climbed into the bus after their season-ending 2-1 defeat on Saturday, they must have only had one name in their minds: Anne Batelle. The Middlebury scoring sensation had pumped home both goals for the Panthers, despite a conscious effort by the Ephs to stop her, and had thus almost singlehandedly sent Williams to its fifth defeat of the year.

The Ephwomen, now 9-5-1, entered the four-team Northeast Intercollegiate Athletic Conference tournament as the third seed and expected a tough match with second-seeded Middlebury. The Panthers had already dealt Williams one defeat this year, as Batelle scored the only goal of the contest to lead Middlebury to a 1-0 triumph at Cole Field on September 27.

Nevertheless, Williams coach Lisa Melendy was looking for only one thing in Saturday's rematch-- a victory. She assigned senior Heather Martinez the dubious honor of shadowing Batelle and hoped that her squad would continue the offensive fireworks that had led to nine goals in the last two games.

A case of nerves

However, the first half turned out to be a defensive struggle, as Batelle notched the only goal of the period on a direct kick. The Ephs, according to Melendy, "weren't passing too well, and we were a bit tentative. As a team we weren't clicking as well as we had been recently, and I guess that could be attributed to nerves."

Williams apparently had calmed down continued on page 9

Women's rugby ends season-long scoring drought with 22-0 drubbing of U. Conn.

by Laura Whitman

This year the Wesleyan Women's Rugby Club, pleading injuries and administration reprimands, decided not to participate in Little Three competition, leaving the WWRFC scrambling for matches on Homecoming. Luckily both Smith College and the University of Connecticut were both willing to extend their seasons by one more week and act as Wesleyan understudies.

Although initially more interested in gazing at the men's club, Smith revved up its one-woman scrumhalf scoring machine, who proceeded to touch down three tries, none of which were converted. Molly Fuschl '91, the Williams scrumhalf, rallied her players and began to tackle everything in sight. Also noted by several alumnae (Used Bagges) at the sideline was the ferocious play and tenacious tackling of Alice McCarthy '90.

In the second half, sophomore Joanna Betz made her debut across the tryline, scoring four points for Williams and delighting her onlooking parents. Moments later, she received a blow to the head and was taken off the pitch, which was less than delightful for Mom.

"That's my girl," Papa Betz said proudly. Joanne's try was classically converted by Colleen Boland '92, leaving the final score at Williams 6, Smith 12.

The second match was an unlikely team-up of lost orphans from the University of Connecticut, several WWRFC defectors, and Smith's scrumhalf against the athletic Killer B's.

The competition was marked by one Williams try after another. Heidi Zimmerman '91 touched down the opener, firing up her side for some intensive scoring. Prop Rebekah Timin '90 released her liney-wanna-be frustrations, racking up two consecutive tries for Williams, one of which was converted for extra points. Two more scores, touched by Jackie Graves '90 and Kara Lynch '90 respectively, were both converted, bringing the final score to Williams 22, U. Conn 0.

The WWRFC regrets the imminent conclusion of the fall rugby season, but looks forward to its final match against those Defectors to the East, who "can't bet jerseys because our administration won't pay for them this year."

Co-captain Mike Masters '88 maneuvers his way past a Bowdoin player in Friday's 3-0 win over the Polar Bears in the first round of the ECAC playoffs. (Scala)

Men's soccer wins 3 on consecutive days

by Marlan Nafay

Winding down the regular season with a spectacular rebound, the men's soccer team downed Bowdoin, Wesleyan, and Amherst last week. What was particularly impressive about the Ephs' victories was the fact that they took place on three consecutive days, a grueling feat for any team to perform. In addition, the Ephs' wins this week followed their only loss of the season, the October 29th game against Connecticut College.

The Ephs' season record now stands at 14-1, and their game against Amherst tomorrow is the only one left in the regular season. Elated, Coach Mika Russo said, "I just don't have enough praise for [the team]...they've shown courage--some of them have played 270 minutes this week."

The Ephs played Bowdoin on Friday as part of the ECAC playoffs, beating the Polar Bears 3-0, the same margin by which they beat them on October 15th. Goals were scored by John Walker '89, Doug Brooks '90, and Steve Bailey '91, with Williams holding a 1-0 lead over the Polar Bears at the half.

Then, on Saturday, the Ephs beat Wesleyan 1-0, in a game that was part of the regular season and earned the squad the first half of the Little Three Title. The one goal of the game was scored by Walker, off an assist from co-captain Mike Masters '89 during the first half. Masters was subsequently taken out of the game for the entire second half, to "save" his energy for the next day's game.

The highlight of the week was Sunday's game against Amherst. Exhausted, the Ephs played a weak first half, but both teams were scoreless. But, says Masters, "we didn't want to go into overtime." The Ephs rebounded.

When Rob Lake '91 was fouled, Masters took advantage of the penalty kick to score. Lake himself scored next, assisted by Masters. Finally, Doug Brooks '90 tallied one for the Ephs off a rebound, leaving the final score 3-0.

Masters attributed the team's domination over its opponents this week to its cohesiveness: "Everyone played solid ball and helped each other out. There was no real star of the weekend." Lake, however, took the opportunity to single out co-captain goalie Rob Blain: "In both the tournament games [Blain] was instrumental in our wins. He was basically impenetrable."

The Lord Jeffs do have a chance for revenge, albeit unlikely, tomorrow at Amherst. The game will decide the taker of the Little Three title. Meanwhile, the Ephs must rally to face further ECAC playoff opponents this week.

Protestors object to Last Temptation

by Ellen Drought and Sara Dubow
The nationwide protests that erupted in response to "The Last Temptation of Christ," Martin Scorsese's controversial film depicting the life of Jesus, reached Williamstown this week. Images Cinema's showing of the film has prompted demonstrators from throughout the Berkshires to picket outside the theater.

The objections have centered on the revisionist interpretation of Christ as having human weaknesses, such as the dream sequence which shows him imagining marrying Mary Magdalene and having sex with her.

Protestors have come from a variety of Christian churches, according to Ray Babeu, a demonstrator and host of "God's Masterpiece," a North Adams television program.

"I resent this film coming to Williamstown, with the church five hundred feet away," Babeu said. "You're not talking about a human person, but God's only son, who redeemed me."

Referring to what he sees as increasing openness on issues such as pornography and homosexuality, Babeu said, "I just see a breakdown in society. It's time to speak out for Jesus. I'm pushing for revival in the Berkshires."

No confrontation
He said that the pickets have been in very good taste, and there has been no

The nationwide uproar over The Last Temptation of Christ came to Williamstown Saturday when picketers protested its showing at Images. (Beliveau) confrontation with the moviegoers. "They have the right to go. We have the right to protest." Babeu filmed the protest and those attending the movie, which aired on his Monday night show.

He has not seen the movie. "You don't have to take the cap off the sewer to know it stinks. It's just trash." George Mansour, owner of Images, said of the protest, "It's fine as long as they're obeying the law. If they didn't demonstrate we wouldn't have as many customers. I think it's kind of peachy." Theater manager Donald Fisher was quoted to the November 12 Berkshire Eagle as saying, "I should go out and thank them [the protestors]. You realize this creates the audience for the film. We have a very good crowd. They're defeating their own purpose. But it's their right to protest." Although no Williams students were involved in the protest, the feelings continued on page 3

CEP okays minority course requirement

by Justin Smith
The Committee on Educational Policy approved a proposal for a new minority course requirement last week. The faculty will vote on whether to adopt the proposal at December's faculty meeting.

If the proposal is adopted, each student, starting with the class of 1993, will be required to complete a course primarily concerned with minorities or the non-Western world by the end of the sophomore year. The course could also be used to fill one of the division requirements.

The proposal was sent to the CEP by the Campus Commission on Race Relations in early October. After lengthy debate on the specific wording of the proposal and a joint meeting with the CCRK two weeks ago, the CEP approved the proposal. Professor of Psychology Saul M. Kassir, chairman of the CEP, said they made no substantive changes.

"There are a [large number] of courses which satisfy the requirement," Registrar Charles R. Toomajian said. Although the CEP has compiled only a tentative list of the existing courses which satisfy the new requirement, studies conducted by the CEP and the CCRK last year indicate that approximately forty-four percent of students currently fulfill the requirement by the end of the sophomore year and roughly seventy-seven percent fulfill the requirement continued on page 9

Student hit by bus, treated and released

by Bill Savadove
For the second time in as many weeks, a Williams freshman was hit by a motor vehicle.

Shortly after 10:00 A.M. yesterday, a Pine Cobble school bus was heading west on Main Street when Robert Serrano '92 stepped off the curb in front of the Faculty House directly across from Hoxsey Street.

According to witnesses, Serrano failed to spot the bus, which was traveling under 30 miles per hour. Williamstown Police Chief Joseph Zito said that the bus driver applied his brakes, but failed to stop in time. Serrano was not using a cross walk. "Every student down there takes the shortest distance between two points," Zito said. "We're asking everybody, please use the crosswalks." Serrano was taken to the North Adams Regional Hospital, where he was treated for "minor trauma" and released. He sustained no major injuries. According to Zito, the selectmen have discussed painting more crosswalks, and plan to coordinate with the college to do so in the spring.

Greenfield murder sets off campus rumors

by Sallie Han
For the last several weeks, Williams College has been buzzing with rumors about a psychotic Greenfield youth who killed his girlfriend and is headed west on a reign of terror and mayhem. Most people know him as the "Greenfield Ax Murderer," and everyone, it seems, has a story about him. "All I heard was that there's this guy running around with an ax, who thinks he's Jason [from the movie "Friday the 13th"] and he killed his girlfriend." "He definitely has a Jason identity." "I heard he lives next to Elm Street." "I heard he thought he was Jason. I heard his car was parked on Route 2 about 15 miles from here."

"Rumor has it that an old woman driving down Route 2 saw him standing in the middle of the road with an ax." "The only thing I heard was that there cut all the lines." "I heard that someone was missing, that somebody was loose, I don't know from where. He killed someone multiple times to her back and head." A warrant is out for the arrest of 19 year old Mark Branch, the leading suspect in the case. Branch has lived in Greenfield for the past three years and, according to Greenfield Chief of Police David McCarthy, he and Gregory were no more than acquaintances. Gregory's body was found at 12:38 p.m. by her twin sister who immediately called the police. The police determined that Gregory had been stabbed approximately 35 times.

There should be no fears that [the murderer is] going to pick out a dorm or a house or a person and kill someone.'

was this guy who killed a woman and that later he was in Cumbria and Farms—and he totally backed up this woman. Oh, and then Halloween night, my friend called me and told me don't go out by yourself—don't go out at all—he's on campus. And then the night of the blackout people were saying Jason some campus somewhere—that was the Jason story. I don't know how much of it was supposed to be true."

The real story
In fact, none of these stories are true. According to the Greenfield police, an 18-year-old girl, Sharon Gregory, was

continued on page 6

Sophomore cornerback Mike Hyde breaks up an Amherst pass attempt in Saturday's 21-0 thrashing of the Lord Jeffs at Amherst, a victory which gave Williams its second consecutive Little Three Title. The win should also secure the Ephs atop the NESCAC rankings. (Marcus)

Gridders capture 2nd straight Little Three in 21-0 shutout of Jeffs

by Ted Hobart
It was second down and seven yards to go for the Lord Jeffs of Amherst at the Williams 25. The Ephs had just capped a 72 yard drive, which had taken up most of the third quarter, with a touchdown pass for a 14-0 lead in this all-important game. Finally, however, Amherst had found a way to break

Newhall '91 was waiting for Frisch and delivered a picture-perfect hit which jarred the ball loose from Frisch's clutch. Free safety Dave Clawson '89 pounced on the loose ball for the Ephs. Seven short plays later, tri-captain quarterback Scott Kennedy '89 hit sophomore Scott Shean on a 50 yard touchdown strike for a 21-0 lead just

Score by Quarter	1	2	3	4	Total
WILLIAMS	7	7	7	7	21
AMHERST	0	0	0	0	0

Game Stats: Time left: 1:00
 5:53 - Boston 1 yard drive (Elmwood kick) 7-0
 W 3 3:48 - Stricker 9 yard pass from Kennedy (Elmwood kick) 14-0
 W 4 1:40 - Shean 50 yard pass from Kennedy (Elmwood kick) 21-0 through the Williams defense, and had gained 32 on the last four plays. The Amherst fans, silent for most of the game, finally had reason to cheer, and cheer they did. The momentum of the game had seemingly shifted to the Lord Jeffs.

So on second down and seven, the Jeffs ran fullback Phil Frisch into the left side of the line. Unfortunately for the Jeff faithful, defensive tackle Dan into the fourth quarter, and the game was effectively over for everyone but the statisticians.

The Ephs captured their second consecutive Little Three Title, the second under head coach Dick Farley, and upped Williams' series lead to 54-43-4 and the Little Three Title lead to Williams 32, Amherst 26, and Wesleyan 12, with five ties. The win also finalized the continued on page 7

Hairy honeysuckle accord reached.

PAGE 3

The sociological implications of Pet Shop Boys examined.

PAGE 5

The end of peer advising?

PAGE 10

The Williams Record

Why non-Western studies?

Last week the CEP approved a new minority/non-Western studies requirement that threatens Williams' liberal belief in academic freedom while offering a mere token gesture to those who feel the school's lack of such a requirement is a travesty. In an attempt to subvert the controversy that would surely follow the consideration of a truly "legitimate" requirement, the CEP has stifled the debate as to what is truly best for this campus.

The proposal is inadequate because it will only focus the issue of minority studies on those few students—23 percent—who do not already take one of the courses allowable under the new plan. It also stifles the campus debate on what should be the larger issue of the wisdom of mandating minority and non-Western studies in the first place.

The plan passed by the CEP that will come before the faculty in December would require that every student take at least one course from among those already offered in minority or non-Western studies before he or she graduates. Currently 44 percent of Williams students fulfill this requirement before the end of their sophomore year; 77 percent do so by the time they graduate. A more effective solution would be the revision of the current Freshman Winter Study seminars to focus on minority and non-Western cultures. This proposal would serve to expose the 23 percent of the student body that currently receives no such instruction in those fields. It would also expose all students to these concerns within academics at a point when the content of the seminars could influence the students' future course choices.

To implement such a proposal in this way would also allow the interdisciplinary focus that WSP is supposed to stress. The concentrated time span of WSP also would lend itself to the in-depth consideration of subject matter that such a topic necessarily requires. Because students would be learning the subject as their sole field of interest for the month of January, a natural appreciation of the subject for what it actually is would follow. Students would not look at the subject as a class but as it relates specifically to the field of minority studies.

As the proposal currently stands, those students and faculty members who oppose the creation of such a program have had no opportunity to criticize it. They can rightly point out that the seemingly small and incremental change is really the first step in a radical revision of Williams' educational ethos. Likewise, those people on campus who very strongly support the concept embodied in the CEP proposal can point out that the CEP plan does little to address the structural difficulties they see in the current educational establishment.

The WSP proposal would be a step towards increasing awareness of the type of concerns presented in a minority/non-Western studies program while allowing for the type of debate of such proposals that the CEP avoided. Any further changes need to be debated in the open and with an appreciation for the real issues at stake.

On the Record...

"The only thing I heard was that there was this guy who killed a woman and that later he was in Cumberland Farms—and he totally hacked up this woman. Oh, and then Halloween night, my friend called me and told me don't go out by yourself—don't go out at all—he's on campus. And then the night of the blackout people were saying Jason cut all the lines."

—a student, wishing to remain anonymous, in the hope that the Greenfield ax-murderer doesn't cut her down.

"It's like kicking a dead dog, or beating a dead horse."

—Director of Dining Services Jim Hodgkins on the futility of efforts to revitalize the Log since the drinking age went up to 21.

Letters

Distribution causes hunger

The following are answers to a survey of 201 students. The percentage of those who responded correctly is in parentheses:

An estimated 40,000 people die of hunger-related causes each day (46%). At least 20 million Americans go hungry at least part of each month (45%). National estimates of the number of homeless people in the U.S. range from 350,000 (the Reagan Administration's 1984 estimate) to 3 million (94%). Of the 35 million Americans living in poverty (an admittedly vague term), only 16 million receive cash welfare (60%). Women work 2/3 of the world's working hours, receive 10% of the world's income, and own only 1% of the world's property (16%). Approximately 25% of the world's population is chronically undernourished (55%).

Hunger and Homelessness Week is upon us and we each should take some time out of this week to become aware of the world hunger problem. It is, admittedly, difficult to empathize with the millions of hungry people when we as Williams feel few qualms about wasting food. For us, no hunger exists that cannot be alleviated by a quick trip to the snack bar or a meal in the dining hall. How, then, can we relate to the lives of people who would be shocked to see the display of food presented at a Williams dining hall, a display that we take for granted?

We would like everyone reading this letter to stop right now and try to imagine themselves as a person in a poor country, such as Bangladesh or Somalia. Just think about how your life would be different. Now ask yourself if you think there is something inherently better about you, something that makes it acceptable to have nations of people starving while you have a surplus of food. If your answer is no, then do something about it. The something could be as little as ceasing to waste any food you eat, or as big as finding a job after college which would give you the power to implement change. Sol Linowitz, the Chairman of the Presidential Commission on World Hunger has said that the world's grain production is 1.5 billion tons per year. This means that enough grain is produced to give everyone two pounds per day. The problem, then, clearly lies in the inequality of food distribution. Alleviating the hunger felt by others will in no way cause us to go hungry. Why not become aware of the world to which we are the exploiters of the world, and why not do something to change that?

Hilary Johnson '91
Michelle B. Yednak '91
MassPIRG Hunger Action Group

Down in front and glad of it

To the Editor:

To this neophyte, the toughest part of learning about soccer in the golden Mike Russo-Mike Masters era has been the necessity of standing up in the bleachers because it is impossible to see over the student spectators who stand along the sideline.

At long last, in the Amherst game, the referee forced everyone on the sideline to take a seat. Suddenly watching soccer was like watching any other spectator sport. I saw no evidence that the students who were forced to sit down were inconvenienced. How sweet it would be if the practice of watching a game while seated was adopted permanently.

Ray Warner
Williamstown

A proposed new building for the 1st Agricultural Bank on this site at the end of Spring Street has created controversy. Critics say a planned drive-in window is especially objectionable. (Beliveau)

New Spring St. building meets opposition

by Justin Smith

Chester Soling, a private developer in Williamstown, is planning to construct a new building for the First Agricultural Bank on a vacant lot at the corner of Walden and Spring streets. If town authorities approve the present plan, the building will incorporate a drive-in window and a teen youth center in the basement of the building.

According to Anita Barker, chairman of the Williamstown Board of Selectmen, some town authorities including a majority of the selectmen are challenging Soling's plan to build the bank, objecting primarily to the drive-in window. "I don't like the drive-in," Barker said. "I feel drive-ins are for suburban banking rather than urban banking." Barker is concerned that the drive-in window will add to traffic congestion on Spring street. She also expressed concern that an increase in vehicular traffic caused by a drive-in window might endanger the safety of pedestrian traffic on Walden Street. "I don't want to see more vehicular traffic on Walden," she said.

Widen Walden street
Although the Williamstown Planning Board originally opposed the plan for a drive-in arrangement, the Zoning Board of Appeals disregarded their advice and approved Soling's plans, Barker said. The Board of Appeals granted all the necessary zoning variances with one stipulation, that Soling's development company, Solico, must widen Walden street from 20 to 24 feet to accommodate the extra traffic caused by the drive-in window.

Ordinarily, the Zoning Board of Appeals has the final word as far as approving construction plans. However, as road commissioners, Selectmen may in this case have the power to block the current plan. Selectmen who are unhappy with the drive-in window arrangement hope to block it by opposing plans to widen the street. Controversy has developed over the jurisdiction of the Selectmen.

As a further complication, Barker said Soling originally believed he could widen the street regardless of the town's final ruling since he owns much of the land on both sides of Walden. The Town Council met last night to try to resolve the conflict. In the end, Barker said, a solution may depend on arbitration between the various parties. "We aren't happy about the drive-in," Barker said, "but we're not sure about our jurisdiction. We feel as road commissioners...[that] we do have something to say about the street widening."

College council proposes Log stay open only one night a week

by Anne MacEachern

The latest chapter in the Log saga was written at Thursday's College Council meeting. Council members said they want the Log to remain open only one night a week, and discussed how to fill the gap left by the departure of Log Supervisor Dave Lamarre.

Director of Dining Services Jim Hodgkins had previously suggested ending the weekly 21 nights and performance nights as the Log has been consistently losing money. The council and Hodgkins agreed that the Log lunches and pizza dinners are a success. Hodgkins said in a separate interview that more staff than students are at the Log over a quarter of the time, and average 21 Night attendance is only 30 students. He said he wants to open the Log on a special request basis.

According to the College Council plan, the Log would remain open one night a week, alternating between 21 Night on Wednesdays and performance nights on Fridays. Council members said that the decreased frequency of the events may attract a greater number of students.

More money won't help
According to Hodgkins, the decline in the Log's popularity is a direct response to the rise in the drinking age three and a half year ago. He said this means that more money will not help the situation. "It's like kicking a dead dog, or beating a dead horse."

According to the College Council plan, the Log would remain open one night a week.

Instead of hiring a replacement for Lamarre, the council recommended hiring a student manager to serve as a liaison with food service and paying food service workers overtime to work evenings at the Log. If the plan is approved, the council will pay one third of the operation costs.

In other business, the council discussed the planned multicultural center, which was one of the demands made by the Coalition Against Racist Education last year. Council members said that one of the problems is the anonymity of the center. They said most freshmen never knew about it, and most upperclassmen have forgotten about it.

"If people aren't real psyched about it, that's part of the problem," Matt Levin '90 said.

Josh Becker '91 reported that November 13-19 is Hunger and Homelessness Week, and said that a benefit will be held in Mission Dining Hall Thursday evening, November 17, with raffles and singing groups. On Friday, November 18, Hater will host a global food night in which participating students will be randomly assigned to the first, second or third world, and eat a dinner representative of their world. All proceeds will go to the Berkshire Food Project, he said.

Protestors picket Images

continued from page 1

expressed by the demonstrators were shared by some on campus. Louise Chan '89, a member of the Williams Christian Fellowship, said that "it distorts Jesus' image as presented in the New Testament. I'm offended by the portrayal of him as a lusty wimp who is misdirected as to what God's calling is."

"This past Wednesday, we set up a table in Hater," she said. "We had copies of a secular commentary on the movie and also another article. We just wanted to give information to people who were unsure about the movie."

No plans to see movie
Chan has not seen the movie, and has no plans to.

Others see the objections as unfounded, based on the movie's message. MaryEllen Sullivan '89 said that most of the objections that she's heard have centered on the dream sequence. "As a Catholic, you have to believe Jesus Christ is a man, so it's conceivable

What do you think of the future of the U.S. under President Bush?

Interviews by Miriam Marcus and Amy Balivau

"I am planning to go to Australia during junior year and I don't think I am coming back. Good luck America!"—Chad Asarch '91

"The U.S. is safe now under the great American hero George Bush. If Dukakis had won, the Russians would have overrun Washington by May."—Bill Ryan '89

"I'm anxious to see what will happen. I think we're going nowhere."—Seanna Connor '91

"We want to know if we should kill ourselves now or wait until Bush does it for us."—Alexa Sand '91, Fiona Smythe '91

"The country's much more interested in Bush right now than anything else."—Jason Priest '91

College agrees to preserve patches of hairy honeysuckle

by Greg Ilart

As part of the college's continuing efforts to maintain state and community goodwill regarding the development on Pine Cobble, college officials met with state officials in Boston on Monday, November 7, to agree on a plan for preserving the population of hairy honeysuckle on the site of the proposed housing development.

President Francis C. Oakley, Treasurer William S. Reed and Professor of Biology Henry W. Art met with State Secretary of Environmental Affairs James S. Hoyte and representatives from the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act Unit and the Massachusetts Natural Heritage Program. They agreed that the college will not build on the seven lots on which the hairy honeysuckle, listed as a rare plant in Massachusetts, now grows.

Because of this agreement between the state and the college, Williams will not be required to submit a statement of environmental impact to the state. Had Hoyte required such a statement, development on Pine Cobble would have been delayed for a year, according to Director of Public Information James Kolesar.

For the next five years, college botanists will be able to study the hairy honeysuckle growing in the lots. At the conclusion of this five-year period, Williams and Natural Heritage officials will decide if the lots should remain permanently undeveloped or if the college should be allowed to build there.

The college also agreed with Hoyte that it will transplant the hairy honeysuckle which stands in the path of the planned subdivision's roadway. These are the only plants which will be moved. "Any time you transplant there is a risk that it won't work," Art said, "but it is certain that if [the roadside honeysuckle plants] aren't moved they will be destroyed. We will try to salvage as many as possible. All of the patches are protected with snow fencing so they won't get trampled inadvertently. "We are in the process of contacting local arborists and botanist gardens to see if they are interested in receiving the plants, and we are also looking for other sites on Pine Cobble for them."

The little-known plant has been found at only two other sites in Massachusetts. Originally discovered in Williamstown along the Route 7 corridor, the plant's only other known locations are the Pine Cobble site and a patch in Lee. The most prolific growth of the hairy honeysuckle lies in the Pine Cobble subdivision. According to Art, 31 patches have been identified on Pine Cobble.

The college will not build on the seven lots on which the hairy honeysuckle...now grows.

The Williamstown Planning Board has also entered the Pine Cobble fray, deciding that the college's plan to clear and regrade certain lots in the subdivision would have to be reviewed. The Board will visit the site sometime in the next three weeks to determine if the college's plan is feasible and complies with the drainage plan for the subdivision.

"The drainage plan is the main thrust of the visit. When the topography is changed, the natural drainage is also changed," Planning Board Chairman Charles Schlesinger said. The Board wanted to ensure that a satisfactory drainage plan is still in effect, he said.

Meanwhile, construction of the road and other work will soon begin under the direction of J.H. Massimilian Inc. of Pittsfield, with which the college is planning to sign a contract.

Women suffer peer harassment

(College Press Service)—Female college students too often suffer "peer harassment" from their male classmates, a new report by the Association of American Colleges in Washington D.C. charges, and it makes it harder for them to go to college.

The AAC, which in recent years has sponsored numerous reports saying college women weather an inhibiting "chilly climate" on campus that men escape defined "peer harassment" as humiliating, unwanted sexual comments and derogatory sexual innuendoes in its report, "Peer Harassment: Hassles for Women on Campus."

"Women often see these as bad things but feel they can't do anything about it. Women don't complain because they see it as normal behavior, as the way men are, or they don't think anything will happen."

"For too many students, relationships between men and women are not always positive," the report said. "Too many women experience hostility, anger and sometimes even violence from male students."

Combat sexual harassment

The report arrived as many campuses were trying new ways to combat sexual harassment of students and campus employees.

Pennsylvania's Millersville University, for example, formed a committee in October to educate students about sexual harassment. "It will not be tolerated," said Doris Cross, the committee's chairwoman. "This university wants to move ahead and there is no place for it here."

Some schools require students to participate in sexual awareness seminars.

Southern Methodist University now forbids amorous student-faculty relationships, as do the universities of Pennsylvania and Delaware, and Temple, Brown and Harvard universities.

In fact, many campuses already are operating the kinds of programs the AAC suggests to help combat the problem.

"I never feel they're doing enough," Sander said of the efforts. "Institutions are just becoming aware that this is a problem. This is just a beginning."

Students, too, have tried. A University of Massachusetts fraternity canceled a bikini contest last spring when the event's sponsor, Miller Beer, was petitioned by offended students. About 50 students picketed a University of Maryland fraternity where several members had surrounded and threatened a woman who had complained about a song they were chanting about gang rape at a campus bar.

continued on page 9

DEBBIE SNYDER Editor in Chief
TODD OWENS News Editor
CHUCK SAMUELSON Opinions Editor
TRAVIS PIERSON Arts Editor
TED HOBART & MARC McDERMOTT Sports Editors
RICH WARD & JED SCALA Photo Editors
KIRSTEN HASENFUSS & MARY ELIIP Layout Editors
KATIE ALBRIGHT Business Manager

News Assistants
STEPHANIE JONES, ANN MANTU, BILL SAVADOVE, DAN SKWIRE, ROB WEISBERG
 Sports Assistant
MARIAM NAFICY
 Photo Assistants
JAY STEINMAN, KARL THOMAS
 Layout Assistants
ELISA DUGUNDJI, BILL PHILPOTT, ASHESH SHAH

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered as a Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1975 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Work continues on Hopkins Hall?

The $9.3 million renovations, which began in May, 1987, are expected to be completed by December. (Beliveau)

Work late nights for low pay

Join the Williams Record

Interested in Public Policy?
and
The Career of a Wharton Graduate?Earn a Ph.D., M.A., or M.B.A. in Public Policy and Management atWhartonAnd Take Your Place As One of Tomorrow's Leaders.For information about these programs, write to:
Admissions Coordinator
Department of Public Policy and Management - Box 26
The Wharton School
University of Pennsylvania
Philadelphia, PA 19104

WHAT IS STRATEGIC MANAGEMENT CONSULTING ALL ABOUT?

For a clear picture of the occupation and what distinguishes Price Waterhouse's Strategy Consulting Group (SCG), come join us at:Time: 7:00 p.m.
Date: Tuesday, November 22
Location: OCCThe agenda will include a discussion of recent SCG projects, a staff consultants' role within client project teams, characteristics of "ideal" candidates, with time to answer all of your questions about consulting.

Price Waterhouse

News Briefs

Guernsey defeats
Prof. Drew

by Dan Swire

Last Tuesday, voters overwhelmingly returned State Representative Sherwood Guernsey (D-Williamstown) to office by a margin of four to one over Republican challenger John Drew, an assistant professor of political science at Williams.

"He ran a hard race," Guernsey said of his opponent's unsuccessful campaign. But he added that he was not surprised at the lopsided results, citing a poll in the last week of September that projected he would win 75 percent of the vote. "It was a great, solid victory, and I feel proud of it."

Drew agreed that the results were not surprising, adding that the unexpectedly high voter turnout contributed to his defeat. However, he said, "I'm new to this area, and when you consider my starting so late, 20 percent represents a victory. I have no regrets whatever."

"Most people don't win the first time out," he continued. "The whole point is to go out and make mistakes, and the bigger they are, the better they are, because you learn that much more from them. From a spiritual perspective, there is no such thing as a defeat."

Drew also said that his experience in running for office has helped his teaching in a great deal. "There were things I knew intuitively were important, but to know first-hand the impact of a campaign has given me a renewed understanding of the role that money plays. It has brought an air of reality to my teaching."

Regarding his plans for the future, Drew said that he in no way intends to give up the political life. "I'm very interested in running again," he said. "I'd be happy to run against Sherwood again in the future, only with more money and lead time. If you put in the time and effort, you can bump off one of these incumbents."

Meanwhile, as Drew begins to plot his strategy for 1990, Guernsey said he is hard at work preparing himself for a busy term in the legislature. He said that increasing the opportunities for manufacturing jobs in this area and providing universal health care for the elderly would be his two top priorities.

for the next two years, but added that the election of George Bush to the presidency may force him to take on a third task.

"If Dukakis had been elected, he would have mounted an effective war on drugs," Guernsey said, "but I am very skeptical about the help we will get from George Bush. If we don't get significant help from Washington, I'll try to devise a more expansive program on the war against drugs."

Guernsey said he thought that his responsiveness to the needs of the people in his district was the key factor in the election, and said that he has no immediate plans to seek any other office.

"I love the Berkshires, and I want to stay here with my family," he said. "I've seen an effective legislator, and the results [of the election] show it. The margin of victory was a tremendous vote of confidence. I want to continue the work I've been doing, and I look forward to doing it."

ACSR may change South Africa policy

by Soojin Kim

The Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibilities considered broadening its disinvestment advocacy policy at its most recent meeting. The modified policy would mean calling for the complete withdrawal, including the elimination of indirect sales and investments, of U.S. companies from South Africa.

Under the new definition adopted by TIAA CREF, a retirement pension fund to which almost all educational institutions contribute, withdrawal will mean the termination of all marketing rights or obligations, as well as licenses and franchises to supply goods, materials, products, services or technology to South Africa. Professor of Political Science MacAlister Brown, the chairman of ACSR, said. The committee is discussing the adoption of the same definition for the college.

According to College Treasurer William S. Reed, the committee is also concerned that U.S. companies which leave behind non-equity ties when they pull out do not hurt the South African government, but merely deprive black South Africans of the companies' support of schools, legal assistance agencies and equal employment opportunities.

Thus far, the ACSR has discussed the April 1988 report on Divestment and Non-Equity Ties. It has also studied reports put out by Investor Responsibility Research Center, Inc. on the types of relationships that companies have retained with South Africa after pulling out. The companies that have been studied are General Motors, Ford Motors, Coca Cola and IBM.

Williams College currently holds $15 million out of an endowment of $280 million in the stocks of companies that have some business operation, usually less than one percent, in South Africa, Reed said.

"The world economy makes it very difficult to enforce a non-relationship with a part of the world. We don't have an answer to that problem yet, but we are trying to tighten up our policy," he said.

Phone service disrupted temporarily

by Ann Mantil

Williams students trying to reach out and touch someone were thwarted in their efforts last week. Dismal long-distance numbers resulted in a resounding silence from the receivers of most campus phones.

Jean Richter, manager of telecommunications administration, sent out an all-campus memo attributing the problem to AT&T. However, she later said that the long-distance failure was actually caused by a malfunction in the college system.

"At the time of the memo, we thought it was an area problem. People off-campus were having the same problem. One source also told me that other companies were having problems too. I figured that if I told people the college was having problems, they would leave our office alone long enough for us to fix it."

Richter said that glitches in the software of the college's dimension system were responsible. "When they were doing some configurations for some lines I have at Williams, the remote maintenance people made a mistake and cut off some lines. You could call some places and not others."

Long-distance calls could be completed through any pay phones during the week, and also through the operator. "There's a restriction on operator-assisted calls because students have been abusing it. But the operator will put the call through if she has something to bill to—if it's a collect call or a credit card call," Richter said.

Calling cards were distributed to all college administrative offices, so that no services were disrupted. Richter said that because of the disruption of lines coming into the software program, the option of dialing "1" before a long-distance number was affected. "For the past week anyone who was in the habit of not dialing a '1' couldn't get out."

All problems were resolved by Thursday afternoon, according to Richter. She said she was not surprised at the telephone problems because of the construction work around Hopkins Hall. "The fact that we even had a dial tone after all the construction that's been going on is amazing."

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond"
Williams '88

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and shoe and boot repair.

(413) 458-4321

66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.

01267

Sam Stone
Original Cleaners

Artworks: Leslie Parks, an exhibition of 13 large, shaped canvases based on early Renaissance Florentine painter Giotto's Arena Chapel frescoes, will be on view at WCMA beginning November 19. The cycle, designed specifically for WCMA's Class of 1993 Gallery, has taken more than a year to complete, and the works, which are 15 by 24 feet canvases, take advantage of the entire space, visually leading the viewer on to the next by responding to the natural flow of the room.

Rasputin's
Music BoxPet Shop Boys
Introspective

by Travis Pienon

For the past few years, Pet Shop Boys have been making unabashedly commercial, dance-pop music and have generally been very successful at it. But they stand for more than another meaningless dance band, and Pet Shop Boys, as a cultural product of the times, are perhaps the musicians who best exemplify and express the mood of the late 1980s.

Generally mindless dance music (and heavy metal) has completely overtaken the top 40 in popular music today, and Neil Tennant and Chris Lowe of Pet Shop Boys embrace this musical milieu, and, by intellectualizing it, transform it into something much more (and simultaneously nothing more) than a disco beat. Their nearest spiritual forefather would be Andy Warhol—Pet Shop Boys being contemporary pop pop artists. And this gets to what makes the group stand out—their personification of a concept. Tennant, who used to be a music critic for England's New Music Express, takes from his knowledge and forms them into Pet Shop Boys' own blend of disenfranchised beats. Their duet with Dusty Springfield, and their cover of an Elton "Always on My Mind" demonstrate the group's genuine love for pop music and its heroes. Yet they shake up these tribute with a liberal dose of irony and modern sophistication; they take from commercialism and the pop past and transform it into the mood of the future. Pet Shop Boys are also reflexive in nature since they are commentators on pop commercialism, and simultaneously, they are disciples of it, and could not exist outside of late 20th century values. They are both the subject and object of their songs.

They are arguably the most narcissistic band of all time, with almost half of their song titles contain the words, "I" or "my," and their lyrics invariably referring to what "I want" or "I was" or "I don't." As their second single "Opportunities (Let's Make Lots of Money)" exemplifies, these two are out for their own good, and it is difficult to differentiate art from life where Pet Shop Boys are concerned.

Like most bands, Pet Shop Boys are posers. In publicity photos or videos they are invariably looking forward with moody, abstracted looks on their faces. Tennant, being the vocalist, (and therefore the most important member of the group according to traditional pop canon) stands a few feet in front of Lowe, and is snappily dressed in a hip suit, while Lowe remains in the background in equally stylish mod/home boy attire. The difference between them and other groups is that their pose is so obviously premeditated that it borders on parody. They are conscious of the place of their already have on albums? Pet Shop Boys are products of the system, and they know it, yet they and they embrace and use it in a stylized and premeditated way.

And speaking of commercialism, there's the concept of remixes. During the first decades of rock history, over six minute songs were limited to ground breakers like "Hey Jude" or the 17 minute "Sister Ray." With the invention of dance remixes, any song can be made epic length by simply repeating the same chord or beats hundreds of times. Through this device, Tennant singing "I want a dog" for eight minutes

Like Disco, Introspective, their new album, features six songs, and it boasts "over 50 minutes of music." Within their characteristically sharp graphic can be raised to the heights of "Stairway to Heaven." What could be more genius than making people shell out an extra five bucks for a 12 inch single of a song they already have on their albums? Pet Shop Boys are products of the system, and they know it, yet they

Pet Shop Boys Chris Lowe and Neil Tennant looking out from the shore.

Goodrich performance falters

by Steve Best

"62 1/2 Minutes with Nidog & Slyn X," a performance by Robert Godin and Sherry Steiner performed last Saturday in Goodrich Gallery, was an exercise in what has been called "text-sound" art.

Art

This mode of performance art has been defined by Richard Kostelanetz (in a summary paragraph which was handed out at the start of the performance) as an art form where "texts must be sounded and thus heard to be read." In contrast to those that must be printed and thus be seen... To be precise, it is by non-melodic auditory structures that language or verbal sounds are poetically charged with meanings or resonances they would not otherwise have." As far as the definition of "text-sound" art goes this aim does not seem to be terribly problematic. Unfortunately, within the context of Nidog and Slyn X's performance the objective gets muddled, making the performance itself hard to endure.

Nidog & Slyn X's production did not preserve or enhance the meaning and expressive content the texts (poems, "labyrinth of absurdities") were meant to communicate. In fact, if the act of performance accomplished anything it was to suppress much of the expressive and thematic content of the works themselves.

The artists asked (in their prepared synopsis) whether anyone had heard of Neo-noism. Well, I can't say that I have. What I can say, however, is that I think I got a taste of it in this performance. Nidog & Slyn X presented what I see as a perfect example of a "non-performance." "62 1/2 Minutes..."

lacked many of the elements which I've come to expect of performance art. It lacked any element of commentary, audience engagement and a critical awareness of any contemporary issues, especially those of gender. I emphasize gender because the set included two mannequins; the one representing Nidog (Robert Godin) dressed in a green shirt (read: "masculine") and the other representing Slyn X (Sherry Steiner) dressed in a pink shirt (read: "feminine")—not critical characterizations in the least. In addition, the piece lacked one of the most important elements of contemporary performance art—that of the personal commitment the artist has to the work presented.

The unsettling inactivity of Nidog & Slyn X made the viewer question whether "62 1/2 Minutes..." could actually be called a performance. And, in turn, one began to doubt whether the need exists for these texts to be performed at all.

Without a Clue: Check it out

by D.W. Maze

Without a Clue is a funny and amusing farce based on Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes characters. The new twist is that Sherlock Holmes (Michael Caine) is actually a hired actor companion of Dr. John Watson (Ben Kingsley), who is the real genius of deductive reasoning.

Watson, at first, couldn't afford to be known as a great crime solver because it would jeopardize his chances at getting a high position as a medical doctor at a particular institution. He therefore created the mastermind Sherlock Holmes and found an actor to play him. Watson, however, was passed over for the position anyway, and now wants to fire the line, and, in the process, forgets about the woman watching and frequently inebriated Sherlock Holmes.

But the Strand, a publication printing the stories of Sherlock Holmes, doesn't go for the idea of "John Watson, crime detector," claiming that the public wants Sherlock Holmes and if Watson tries anything, they'll sue. Watson decides that his only alternative is to team up with Holmes, but not before they solve the biggest case of their lives: when the five-pound engravings are stolen from the treasury, Watson hires Holmes and pronounces, "The game is afoot."

There are some great moments in Without a Clue. Whenever Holmes and Watson search for clues when Police Chief Lestrade is in the room, Holmes takes out his giant magnifying glass, and walks around, blurting "ah-ha's," and "Hey, Lestrade, this is really interesting over here," and while Lestrade comes running, Watson searches for the real clues.

The reporter tells Holmes that he is being silly, but Holmes takes him aside and says, "Without looking up, tell me how many windows there are on the building under which we're standing." The reporter cannot answer, and Holmes is victorious. Watson later asks Holmes if he knew how many windows were on the building.

"Gee, I haven't the foggiest," he answers. "The film is not photographed beautifully. It does not use any art of the cinema, and it falls short in a lot of places. But for light amusing entertainment, Without a Clue is quite enjoyable. Several comical scenes hold the movie together, and these are worth seeing. It is utterly predictable of course, but this doesn't matter. The police officer tells him to leave, but Watson tells him, 'I am the partner of Sherlock Holmes.' The officer gets really excited, saying, 'Me and the wife read all of Sherlock Holmes' cases, but still can't let you in. You better ask Mr.

Holmes what to do next time so you don't waste your time."

Without a Clue is a funny and amusing farce based on Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes characters. The new twist is that Sherlock Holmes (Michael Caine) is actually a hired actor companion of Dr. John Watson (Ben Kingsley), who is the real genius of deductive reasoning.

Unfortunately, Watson gets repeatedly mistreated throughout the film by people who think he is an idiot. When he is accompanied by Holmes, goes to search for clues at the scene of a crime, and a Police Inspector stops him from entering a building, Watson declares, "Let me in there, I am Dr. Watson." The police officer tells him to leave, but Watson tells him, "I am the partner of Sherlock Holmes." The officer gets really excited, saying, "Me and the wife read all of Sherlock Holmes' cases, but still can't let you in. You better ask Mr.

Arts
in View

Tomorrow night at 8 PM in Lawrence 231, artist Jeffrey Schiff will lecture on his work currently on exhibit in WCMA... A Williams Theatre performance of Plinter's "Other Places" will be performed at DownStage at 7 PM on Friday... At 8 PM Friday, Duane Michaels will lecture on his own photographs in Lawrence 231... Also Friday at 8 PM, Ephoria will perform in Brooks Rogers... An opening reception will be held for the exhibitions "Record" and "ARTWORKS: Leslie Parks," Saturday, Nov. 19 at 3:30 PM at WCMA... Also Saturday, Williams Choral Society, conducted by Kenneth Roberts will perform at 7 PM in Chapin Hall... At 9 PM Saturday, the "Souls" a reggae band, will give a concert in Laseil.

The fourth song, "I'm not scared," originally written by them for Patsy Kensit of Eight Wonder, is a great pop work, and their version, set among the Paris riots of 1968, creates a completely different mood than the original. Tennant's nasal, unemotional voice singing the words "I don't care, baby, I'm not scared" markedly contrasts with Kensit's squalid, but emotive vocals.

Introspective also contains a remix of "Always in My Mind," which is combined with a new addendum called "In a House." The former, which was a hit single earlier this year, has to rank as one of the best cover tunes of all time. They take the schmaltzy crooner song, which has been performed by Las Vegas-Elvis and Willie Nelson and transform it into something beautiful as well as a parody/tribute to all of the song's sources.

The final song is another cover version, Sterling Vold's politically oriented "It's Alright." A line from it, "Generations will come and go/ But one thing is for sure/ Music is our life's foundation" mirrors Pet Shop Boys' taking the signs of a culture and putting them into music, thereby guaranteeing their accessibility and survival.

Last I forget to mention, besides the intellectual streak running through Pet Shop Boys' music, they write some great songs. Tennant and Lowe really know how to hit emotional chords, and their musical ability from Please to Actually to Introspective has become progressively better. So there it is. I've let this dance music skeleton out of my closet. Perhaps everything previously discussed is just a rationalization covering up the fact that I happen to like a dance-pop band, but, last I forget to mention, I have seen more than a few Expone and Jody Watley tapes in the collections of Williams students. So perhaps I am not alone in my occasional lapses into pop decadence.

Rumors of 'Jason' are far from the truth

continued from page 1

According to McCarthy, the police do not believe that the murder had any relation to Jason, Satan or any type of ritualistic behavior. He said there was no indication that the murder was an "unusual type killing."

"It is rumor, more or less factual," McCarthy said, "that Mark [Branch] was deeply involved in horror-type movies." He stressed, however, that Branch's interest in movies such as "Friday the 13th" is not any different from that of the movie-going public in general, and said the police do not feel the "Jason factor" is necessarily legitimate in this case.

Calculated and premeditated

McCarthy said that the police investigation has shown Gregory's murder was calculated and premeditated. The person who killed Gregory had taken precautions and had apparently been planning for some time.

"This was not a chance-type murder. There should be no fears that [the murderer is] going to pick out a dorm or a house or a person and kill someone," McCarthy said.

Information on Mark Branch has been sent out on the nation-wide police teletype system and pictures have been distributed to police departments throughout Massachusetts.

At Williams, according to Director of Security Ransom Jenks, no special measures are being taken. Jenks said he is aware of some paranoia on campus but believes there is no real cause for concern. There would be nothing to worry about, he said, "if students would just take the normal precautions—lock their doors when they go out, walk with another person beside them at night."

WILLIAMSTOWN TRAVEL

The Travel alternative in Williamstown

- AIRPLANE AND TRAIN TICKETS.
- CHARTER AND CUT-RATE FLIGHTS.
- INEXPENSIVE SPRING BREAK TOURS TO HAWAII, THE CARIBBEAN, FLORIDA & EUROPE.

GUARANTEED LOWEST PRICES FOR YOUR ITINERARY.

BOOK THOSE THANKSGIVING AND X-MAS FLIGHTS HOME NOW TO ENSURE LOWEST FARES.

Contact our Campus Representative, Day or Night

KEN LEITER X6534

618 Main Street "ONE CALL DOES IT ALL" 458-2156

Mirror

Be the First of them all

6 John Street Hoosick Falls, N.Y. 686-3124

FRAGRANCES AND SKINCARE PRODUCTS FOR MEN AND WOMEN

OFFERED AT UNBELIEVABLE PRICES

Handbags, Sunglasses, Scarves

You've thought about it.

You've tried to imagine what it would be like.

You know it would be exciting. And quite possibly the most rewarding experience of your life...

Three Americans overseas in Asia, Africa and South America speak frankly on what Peace Corps life is like for them.

It isn't easy and it isn't for everyone—they'll tell you that up front. But if you've ever considered going overseas in the Peace Corps, then now is your chance to see and hear for yourself what could be "the toughest job you'll ever love."

Note: Former Peace Corps volunteers will be on hand to answer questions following the 25 minute film. And it's free!

RECRUITERS AT WILLIAMS!

- FILM/INFORMATION SESSION—Wed., Nov. 16 at 6pm in the Career Office, Stetson Hall.
- INFORMATION BOOTH—Wed., Nov. 16 from 11-3pm in the Student Union, Baxter Hall.
- INTERVIEW5—Thurs., Nov. 17. Sign up in the Career Counseling Office.

U.S. Peace Corps

The Movie

"The Toughest Job You'll Ever Love"

OE1m

continued from page 12

ment, after running by Bates Robert Sprague, the second place NESAC finisher, in the final 200 meters.

"Yes!" McVey-Finney, like Beltz, was unsure of the length of the final course loop, and kicked early. The move cost him a few places, but he still came in 22nd in 25:46. The ecstatic Eph junior's only comment at the finish was, "Yes! I love this course!"

Completing the Eph's scoring, Johnson surged ahead of McKinley to finally breaking the drought three minutes into the second half when Doug Brooks '90 sent the ball into the net off an assist from Masters. The Ephs managed to fight off the Indians even though they performed below their norm: "For the last 20 minutes, we were completely unorganized, and we failed to control the ball or even clear it effectively," said Coach Russo. Perhaps the Ephs were simply tired from the effort it took to beat Amherst 3-0 twice in a row. Last Wednesday's game was part of the regular season and was the game that decided the Little Three, while November 6th's game was an ECAC playoff game. The second game found Williams in a 1-0 lead at the half, the first goal having been scored by capture 60th place in 26:30, nine seconds ahead of freshman standout McKinley, who was 68th. The race was won by Jim Kimball of Brandeis in 24:36. Amherst's Evans twisted his ankle during the first mile, but still managed to finish eighth and will go nationals for the second straight year. Williams will be represented by three runners at nationals, as the two runners from the men's team will be joined by Anne Platt '91, who was third in the women's race. The race is at George Washington University in St. Louis.

Men's Soccer

Rob Lake '91 at 28:15 off an assist by Brooks. Williams extended its lead in the second half when Masters scored twice, assisted by Laderoute and John Kennel '91, respectively. The Little Three title had been retained.

Blank, Masters retire

With the end of the season, Williams says goodbye to the following players: Masters, Blank, Emil Mugnaini, John Walker, and W. Bryan Jennings. Looking toward next year, Russo says he will have to develop more of a scoring balance among the team because he won't be able to rely on one single player, like he did on Masters, anymore. With a strong group of sophomores and juniors on the rise, however, the future looks promising.

Typing & Word Processing Service

- Resumes
- Correspondence
- Manuscripts
- Papers

10% discounts for students

Main Street Secretarial Service

57 Main St., Rm. 225, North Adams, Mass.

(413) 664-7121

Local Movie Listings

(subject to change after Thursday)

Bennington Cinema I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179

U2: Rattle and Hum 7:05
The Accused 7:00 & 9:15
Child's Play 7:05 & 9:10
They Live 9:05

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

The Last Temptation of Christ 7:30
A Clockwork Orange 7:30
Life of Brian (starting Friday) 9:30
Track 29 7:00 & 9:00 (starting Sunday)

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873

Gorillas in the Mist 6:50 & 9:15
They Live 7:00 & 9:20
Without a Clue 6:50 & 9:15
Child's Play 7:00 & 9:20

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

A Fish Called Wanda, Child's Play, Gorillas in the Mist, Punch Line, The Accused

Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30

Who Framed Roger Rabbit, Big, Ernest Saves Christmas, U2: Rattle and Hum, They Live, Halloween IV

Sun-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rte 8, Lansburgh, 459-2558

A Fish Called Wanda 12:45 3:40 6:30 9:15
They Live 1:20 4:10 7:10 9:50
Everybody's All American 1:00 3:30 6:45 9:30
The Accused 1:05 3:45 6:55 9:40
Ernest Saves Christmas 1:30 4:15 7:20 10:00
U2: Rattle and Hum 1:15 4:00 7:15 9:45
Child's Play 1:10 3:55 6:50 9:20
Iron Eagle 2 1:20 4:05 7:00 9:35
The Great Outdoors 12:55 3:50 7:05 9:25
Without a Clue 12:50 3:35 6:40 9:25

Reel Vintage
Bronfman
Sunday at 3:00 & 7:30

Closely Watched Trains

CROSS-COUNTRY

SKI SALE

November 11 through November 20

Introductory Packages

Peltonen Zephyr	Reg. $119	Package $83.50
Salomon 301 Boot	$55
Salomon Touring Binding	$20	$17.50
Swix Fiberglass Pole	$16	$12
	$220	$139

Touring

Fischer Country	Reg. $155	Pack. $98.50
Crows	$65	$56
Salomon 301 Boot	$65
Salomon Touring Binding	$20	$17.50
Swix Fiberglass Pole	$16	$12
	$256	$184

Performance

Fischer Top Skate	Reg. $149	Pack. $119
Karhu Silver Skate	$99	$75
Salomon Binding	$35	$32
Swix Skisette	$65	$60
Pole	$348	$284

Backcountry

Fischer Europa 99	Reg. $219	Pack. $191
Crows	$85	$72
Herrell Raiser	$85
Swix Binding	$28	$23.50
Swix Fiberglass Pole	$16	$12
	$348	$298.50

Telemark (Williamstown only)

Karhu XCD GT	$195	$180
Annie Broadfield	$255	$215
Chowdhury XOT Binding	$46	$42
Leki Adjustable Pole	$50	$48
	$516	$479

All skis, boots, poles and bindings, available individually at discounted package prices during sale. Also, special prices on 1987 models.

the Mountain Goat

"The Complete Outdoor Shop"

Open 7 Days

190 Water St., Williamstown, MA 01267-0449

Give thanks for friends, family!

Send Harkmark Thanksgiving cards to show your gratitude.

McClelland's

36 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
413-597-8151

YOU QUALIFY FOR INSTANT CREDIT!

Start making credit purchases IMMEDIATELY! We will send you a Members Credit Card at once with NO CREDIT CHECK. Buy any Jewelry, Clothing, Sporting Goods, Watches, Electronics & MORE! All with installment payments out of our "Giant 100+ Page Catalog." Take 12 months to repay. Your personal credit card is a second I.D.—valuable for check cashing, etc. plus your Students Credit Group A-1 reference will be on file to help you obtain other credit cards. So send in your $5 catalog deposit now. (refundable with your first order). Establish your credit today!

100% Satisfaction Guaranteed (or your Money Back)

Name _____ City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Address _____

Phone _____

MEMBERS Students Credit Group

P.O. Box 4649
FORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA 33338

Gridders roll over Jeffs 21-0

continued from page 1

squad's record at 6-1-1, the best since 1979's 7-0-1 squad.

"Took a lot out of them!" They had been successful two weeks in a row, and they were driving the ball, said second-year senior Farley, "It seemed that after they fumbled the ball, it took a lot out of them."

The outcome was not so certain from the outset, however, as the Ephs dominated the game but could not post any more than a 7-0 lead at the half. Once again, though, the Williams defense was dominant, extending its shutout streak to four complete games (13 complete quarters counting the fourth quarter of the 34-10 win over Bates).

In the process, the defense held Amherst to just 169 total yards (39 passing) on only ten first downs, grabbing two interceptions and one fumble. The shutout lowered the points-per-game average of NESAC's best defense to below eight (63 points in eight games). The defensive unit's strength was questioned in the procession because of the youth and inexperience in key positions.

Asked if he was surprised at how strong the defense turned out to be this year, Farley said, "I knew the talent was there, and the young guys really came through. [Sophomores] Ted Rogers and [Ken] Dulaney hadn't had much experience, and the linebacker crew stood up well."

Pritchard comes through

Farley cited junior linebacker Chris Parisi, Mike Simpson, and John Perryman, as well as senior Dan Pritchard. Pritchard, a tri-captain, took over the difficult position of call linebacker and "provided us a lot of leadership," according to Farley.

The offense, meanwhile, was having its best day in weeks, and Kennedy put together his best game of the year, passing for 182 yards (10 for 16, no interceptions). Kennedy also ran for 33 yards, bringing his all-purpose yardage total to 215. More than the statistics have shown this season, Kennedy again led the offense forcefully. In fact, Kennedy probably would have had at least one more passing touchdown had it not been for two unfortunate fumbles by receivers after they had caught the ball.

The offense once again had some trouble getting going early in the game, gaining just one first down in its first three series. The Ephs could not be expected to roll over the rearguard and inspired Lord Jeff defense, which had helped in consecutive upsets of Tufts and Trinity in the previous two games (the Ephs led Tufts and lost to Trinity).

The Ephs were buoyed on offense by the midseason return of senior quarterback Brian Jurek, whom head coach Ostendarp had benched earlier in the season in favor of a more pass-oriented offense. The Ephs were clearly outmatched in this contest, though, as the Jeffs could not get beyond their own 46 yard line in the first half.

The only score of the first half came on a 52 yard Williams drive early in the second quarter which showed encouraging signs for the Eph faithful. The Amherst defense knew enough from watching films of earlier Williams games to key on tailback Jon Horton '91. Unfortunately for Amherst, the Williams offense varied its style effectively, using tight end Matt Moynahan '92 and fullback John Perryman '90 as effective complements to the tailback. According to Farley, "We threw a little more because their secondary committed to the run too much, and we got some big plays when their kids were more concerned with the run."

Horton and Kennedy finished up the drive, though, with Horton diving over the line from the one with 9:23 to play in the second quarter, and senior Jeff Ettemad's conversion put Williams up 7-0. That tally was to be the only one of the half, but the Ephs wanted more than just one touchdown to sit on. "You can't come into a game in this league against these teams and expect to shut them out," said assistant coach Renzie Lamb in a halftime interview.

In previous games, the defense had frequently set up the offense in good scoring position through turnovers, but this time the offense needed no help. Though the defense certainly won the battle of field position, the Williams offense came up with its own big drives and key plays in the second half. Starting on their own 28, the Ephs ate up almost ten minutes of the third quarter with an 72 yard scoring drive which featured newly inserted tailback Neal Chesley '90 running roughshod over the outmatched and tiring Amherst defensive line. The drive was capped by a pretty pass from Kennedy to Todd Strier '90, who had slipped away from the Jeff secondary in the end zone.

When the Lord Jeffs took over on the ensuing kickoff, they seemed inspired as they marched all the way down to the Williams 25 after a strong kickoff return. Only Newhall's superb effort halted that drive and gave the ball back to the Ephs.

Kennedy and company did not waste time in capitalizing on the opportunity, either. Just into the fourth quarter, on second and ten from the fifty, Kennedy hit Shean over the middle for apparently a big gain. Shean then outran the confused Amherst secondary all the way to the endzone for the game's final touchdown.

Kennedy completed two more big passes on the next two Williams drives in the fourth quarter, but both were nullified when the receivers could not hold onto the ball in their ensuing runs. The only real challenge in the fourth quarter was whether the Ephs could keep their shutout streak alive. Amherst mounted one long drive down to the Eph's 35, but the stalwart defense came up with a big four down stand to stall the Jeffs on that attempt. Interceptions by Chris Parisi '90 and Eric Moe '89 stopped Amherst's final chances.

Amherst came into the game hoping to reverse last season's outcome, where the Ephs stunned the overconfident Jeffs. Though the Jeffs were surging, but the Ephs were too steady and too strong. The win should secure the Ephs atop the NESAC rankings, and have them looking confidently toward next year.

M. Rugby

continued from page 12

leashing one of the frothiest plays of the season. Prop Will LaFave '90 drove the ball into three Amherst tacklers and, seeing a wall of white-shirted supporters out of the corner of his eye, flipped the ball backwards as the 'Hersat pack converged on him. Teammate Alby Gallun grabbed LaFave's pass and made a few yards gain before being blindsided by a brave but doomed defender. Miraculously, Gallun managed to keep one free hand on the ball and pass to fly-half Stepias who was sweeping past him. Straightening up in order to force the cover defense back to the center of the field, Stepias held the ball until junior inside coater Steve Linen's man had to commit himself to the ball carrier. With a three-on-two overload created by the skill and flair of the Williams side, Chap Petersen muscled over for a try in the left corner. Petersen's brilliant conversion kick sealed the 15-7 victory and insured that the Amherst players will shiver shirtless through the winter.

Barebacked B's

Unfortunately, the Williams B-side could not muster their best game, which could have beaten the solid Amherst B's. Instead, the killer B's appeared flat. Though each player had his moment of promise, there were simply not enough white jerseys around the ball to sustain a convincing attack. The first half seemed promising. Despite two Amherst tries, Williams came back with a seemingly orthodox passing movement in the backs into which burst junior fullback Bruce Young. Obadiah seared past the line and sidestepped Amherst counterpart for a try under the posts which he easily converted.

The Young try and the sight of senior Pete Sepe scooping up loose balls all over the pitch gave the White faithful hope that the sun would shine on their dogs that day.

Despite that silver lining, the B-side couldn't come out from under their cloud. The Amherst backs were swift and the Williams defense was a bit slow to catch them. At the end of eighty minutes, Amherst had won a convincing victory of 23-6. More importantly, they lost their jerseys to the hated traitors of 1821. No doubt the loss will make the B-side hungry for revenge. Come the Little Three Tourney, they will take double pleasure in beating the backs of those boys and setting the record straight.

280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"

THE SPIRIT SHOP

Case Closeout Specials

Molson's Canadian Beer cans $13.99/case+dep.
Hofmeister Swiss Beer bottles $13.99/case+dep.
Calgary Canadian Beer bottles $13.99/case+dep.
St. Pauli Girl German Beer cans $15.99/case+dep.
Haffeneffer Malt Liquor bottles $12.99/case+dep.
Grolsch Dutch Beer bottles $13.99/case+dep.

While Supply Lasts
Mon. - Sat. 9 a.m. - 11 p.m.
PROPER I.D. REQUIRED

LIVINGSTON

Galleries

Little Red School House
37 West Road
Bennington, Vermont
802-447-0035

Fine Custom Framing

Livingston Building
8 John Street
Hoosick Falls, New York
518-686-7571

GET INTO THE BUSINESS OF BUSINESS CONSULTING.

Spicer & Oppenheim, one of the fastest growing national CPA firms, is offering the opportunity to learn more about a unique 15-month Master's Degree in Accounting/Business program, conducted in participation with New York University's Graduate School of Business Administration.

We cordially invite all Liberal Arts students to attend an INFORMATION SESSION & DISCUSSION Thursday, November 17, 1988 at 7:00PM Office of Career Counseling Stetson Hall (Lower Level)

SPICER & OPPENHEIM
A MEMBER OF SPICER & OPPENHEIM INTERNATIONAL
CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS

Your Personalized Path To Success.

The Investment Banking Division of Goldman, Sachs & Co.

cordially invites the students of Williams College to an information session on the two-year Financial Analyst Program.

Tuesday, November 15, 1988

7:00 p.m.

Office of Career Counseling

All Majors Encouraged to Attend

Informal Reception to Follow

Goldman Sachs

Low interest may end program

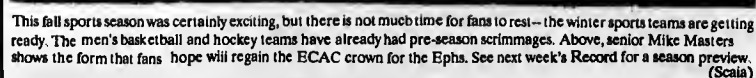

Lack of publicity

Chase said he believes the programs lack of recognition is a factor in the drop-off. "Lack of publicity might be one reason," he said. "Sophomores don't know what's going on. I don't have the sense it's being bad-mouthed."

An endangered species

Other options for better advising are being considered, according to Assistant Professor of Philosophy Philip Clayton, chair of the Committee on Undergraduate Life's subcommittee on academic advising. "If it really looks like peer advising is an endangered species, we need to look for radical

In the meantime, the future of peer advising as it exists now looks bleak. "I don't think there will be peer advising next year," Chase said. "I'm not sure what there will be."

The shirt off his back The contrast could not be clearer. The face of junior prop Will LaFave shows the exultation of the hard-fought 15-7 victory over the Jeffs, while a dejected defector prepares to hand over the treasured purple and black prize to an eagerly awaiting Ephman. (Scala)

In the Spotlight...

While the football team amassed some impressive yardage statistics against Amherst on Saturday, some 15 members of Pratt House gained over 118,000 yards running the annual Pratt House to Pratt Field relay on Saturday morning. Leaving Mission Park at about 1:30 A.M., the valiant runners (with football) arrived at Pratt Field in Amherst approximately 9:00 A.M. Saturday completing the nearly 60 mile course in fine fashion.

This week's recipients are the senior tri-captains of the football team—linebacker Dan Pritchard, defensive tackle Dave Montgomery, and quarterback Scott Kennedy, who Saturday led the Ephs to their second straight Little Three Title. Pritchard and Montgomery anchored the stalwart defense which has not given up any points in its last four games, while Kennedy posted his best effort against Amherst, throwing for 182 yards and two touchdowns. Congratulations to all!

From the locker room

If the sheer number of games is the problem, simply take away a few of the regular season games. After all, the soccer team had 14 of them this year. Williams is not the only school affected—the first four teams at the women's cross country qualifier were NESCAAC teams, so fifth place Smith will represent New England. Athletes all over the league are discontented with present regulations, and we believe that the ideal of the student-athlete can be reconciled with national competition.

Send your answers to Ted Hobart, Marc McDermott or SU 2817 by Saturday or call the Record office (x2289) Sunday before 5 PM to enter. This week's winner, Dave Clawson, wins a $15 gift certificate to Goff's Sports. Congratulations, Clawson!

Bain & Company, Inc.

Management Consultants
cordially invites

Williams College Classes of 1989 & 1990

to a presentation and reception on

Associate Consultant Career Opportunities and Internships in Corporate Strategy Consulting

- Boston
- San Francisco
- London
- Paris
- Munich
- Tokyo

Wednesday, November 16, 1988
OCC Library - Stetson Hall
7:00 PM

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Particularizing

BY BERT H. KRUSE/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- | ACROSS | | DOWN | |
|---------------------|----------------------------|--------------------------------------|--------------------|
| 1 Kindergarten | 33 Rose's love | 14 Attired | 89 Cell-product |
| 5 Melville | 34 Divinity with a load on | 15 Undergo change | 90 gland |
| 9 protagonist | 35 Curious fabric | 16 Gaining fixedly | 70 Lollapalooza |
| 10 Troy suffered on | 36 Caboodle's pal | 18 Motor | 71 To flatter |
| 14 Succeeded: | 37 Wave lift | 19 Immature | 72 Encourages |
| Colloq. | 40 Dugong | 20 Menarche, e.g. | 73 H.R.E. rat |
| 16 Betelgeuse | 42 ...in republic | 21 Homeric products | 74 ...of Dadaism |
| 17 Ruined | 43 Griffith | 22 Beginning | 80 Lauren Bacall |
| 18 Betelgeuse | 44 Griffith's creator | 23 Chastity | 82 Cargo units |
| 21 Elected | 45 A Waugh | 24 Indian tongue: | 83 ... (stone) |
| Gives oneself on | 46 Very large | Var. | (famous table) |
| 21 Election results | 47 Tree trunks | 27 Villain | 84 Vocal apparatus |
| 22 Western | 48 Proverbially | 28 Putative | 85 ... at home |
| autoc. | 49 Cap item | 29 Dry for | 86 It was a |
| 24 Dozed | 49 Toy | 31 "Taras Bulba" author | 87 Bearcat |
| 25 Single man | 50 Prisoners | 32 Conqueror in a | 88 Barbershop |
| 27 Vegetarian | 51 Conqueror in a | Latin idage | |
| bigwig | 52 Bard's before | 53 Veloz's | |
| 28 Certain | 53 Veloz's | dancing | |
| reading matter | 54 Kind of | 55 Fervent | |
| 30 indestructible | 54 Kind of | 56 Fervent | |
| 32 Perch | 55 Fervent | 57 Fern part | |
| | | 58 Sayer's "The Tailors" | |
| | | 59 Experienced | |
| | | 60 ... John and family | |
| | | 61 Tarts | |
| | | 62 Antarctic cape | |
| | | 63 ... titate | |
| | | 64 Born to a Parisienne | |
| | | 65 Cook one's (dash another's hopes) | |
| | | 66 Tarts | |
| | | 67 Tarts | |
| | | 68 Tarts | |
| | | 69 Tarts | |
| | | 70 Tarts | |
| | | 71 Tarts | |
| | | 72 Tarts | |
| | | 73 Tarts | |
| | | 74 Tarts | |
| | | 75 Tarts | |
| | | 76 Tarts | |
| | | 77 Tarts | |
| | | 78 Tarts | |
| | | 79 Tarts | |
| | | 80 Tarts | |
| | | 81 Tarts | |
| | | 82 Tarts | |
| | | 83 Tarts | |
| | | 84 Tarts | |
| | | 85 Tarts | |
| | | 86 Tarts | |
| | | 87 Tarts | |
| | | 88 Tarts | |
| | | 89 Tarts | |
| | | 90 Tarts | |

THE FAR SIDE By GARY FARSON

THE FAR SIDE By GARY PARSON

"Okay, buddy. Then how 'bout the right arm?"

Men's soccer does it again—wins second ECAC Tourney

by Mariam Nafley

It is fitting that a team whose season was filled with superlatives ended its season in a superlative way: the Williams men's soccer team downed Amherst, Monclair State, and Hobart College last week to capture the Little Three and ECAC championship titles. Among the team's impressive stats was the fact that its captain, seniors Mike Masters (two-time All-American) and Rob Black, posted records as the all-time Williams leading scorer and as the all-time Williams and New England (all divisions) career shutout leader, respectively. In addition, this is the second straight year that the Ephs have won the ECAC title with a 17-1-0 season record, under 1987 Division III Coach of the Year Mike Russo. When asked to describe his feelings about the season, Coach Russo said, simply, "We're ecstatic."

Russo's feelings are not unfounded: the Ephs won their ECAC title by beating Hobart College 2-1 last Sunday, in one of the only three games this season in which Black was scored upon. In a display of what is to come, the first goal of the muddy game was scored by freshman Laurie Laderoute, who headed a ball from Stephen Bailey '91 into the net with four minutes left in the first half.

The Ephs carried their momentum into the second half and quickly scored: all-American Dan Calichman '90 was tripped as he brought the ball from midfield into Statesman territory, resulting in a Masters penalty kick that shot past the goalie only a minute into the second half.

Eph speed neutralized the Statesman reacted powerfully, testing Black time after time. In all, Black had seven saves during the game. Finally, Hobart managed to get the ball past Black, but the goal proved to be futile: Williams dominated the game until the clock ran out.

Forward Rob Lake '91 outmaneuvers a Bowdoin opponent in the Ephs' 3-0 blocking of the Polar Bears in the opening round of the ECAC playoffs eleven days ago. The Ephs capped another spectacular season on Sunday with a second consecutive ECAC Championship. (Beliveau) ten minutes later. Russo remarked, "The mud [on the field] neutralized our speed, which was our main advantage over Hobart—[the Ephs] deserve praise because even though the field conditions didn't suit our style, we had the courage and the strength to hold up."

The Ephs had narrowly beaten Monclair State the day before with a score of 1-0. They went scoreless during the entire first half of the game, continued on page 6

Senior scrumhalf James Mannix dishes the ball out to the line following a successful scrumdown. The WRFC captured the prized jerseys of the Jeffs in the traditional bet, downing Amherst 15-7. (Scale)

Men's Rugby leaves Lord Jeffs shirtless after 15-7 victory

by Mark Stepiak

Everything came together for the Williams Rugby A-side last Saturday against the archrival Amherst defectors. The mighty White Dogs entered the Amherst pitch with memories of a solid victory against Yale behind them and a 10-1 side in front of them. Amherst applied the pressure early with a try from a spotted Williams line-out, but the Dogs merely seemed annoyed at having to wait a little longer before unleashing the type of fifteen man rugby which few teams can counter. Amherst showed their strengths and weaknesses early; though the forwards had their hands full with sound Amherst technique in the set pieces and secondary play, the backs soon realized that speed without imagination is no match for the pre-planned running plays in the Williams arsenal.

Jack must score!

Midway through the first half, Williams answered the Amherst score with a try in the corner by junior wing Phil Jack. The play began from a Williams penalty from which wing Bob Goldstein '89 dived back to the corner of the field in order to link up with his teammates. Skillful passing between forwards and backs alike kept the hapless black and purple defenders perpetually trailing the action as the ball swept swiftly across the field before finding Jack burning onto the Chaz Benedict '89 pass for the touchdown. A strong conversion kick by fullback Chap Petersen '90 and a penalty kick to each side put Williams ahead by 9 points to 7 at the halftime whistle.

Bickering among the cocky Amherst players mixed with the play of the first half helped the Williams confidence to wax, and more than a few of the A-side players drooled longingly at the Amherst jerseys they knew would soon be theirs. By the second half, Williams had dissected the Amherst game and adapted to it. Line-out troubles were solved by heaving the ball to senior 8-man Chris 'Springs' Palmedo who tapped to scrumhalf James Mannix '89 for the dive pass to outside half Mark Stepiak '89. Whenever Amherst tried a long throw in, on the other hand, Stepiak lined up on the receiver for a crunching tackle to deny them possession.

Frothy play

Continual hammering on defense, with especially noteworthy tackles from hooker Benedict, kept Amherst from making any threatening breakthroughs. Meanwhile, Williams maneuvered for field position before un-

continued on page 7

Platt to Nationals

Female harriers run to first place in Division III New England meet

by Cathy Cocks

The women's cross-country team carried its unbeaten streak one further on Saturday at Southeastern Massachusetts University as the Ephs crushed all the competition at the NCAA Division III New England Qualifier meet, winning Williams' first-ever regional championship with an impressive display of talent and solid team running.

The University of Southern Maine, expected to be Williams' stiffest competition, mysteriously failed to make even a respectable showing. In the runner-up spot was Bates, with 120 points to Williams' 89; third was Colby, followed by Bowdoin.

Since all the top teams are bound by NESCAC rules and therefore cannot attend the national meet, held in St. Louis this year, fifth place Smith will represent the region. The individual winner was Nicole Fogarty of Brandeis, who ran away from the field to win in 16:47 for the 5000 meter (3.1 mile) course, and second overall was Megan White of Smith in 17:15.

The conditions were perfect, with bright sunshine and the temperature in the mid-forties, and the completely flat grassy course was dry for a change, with only one patch of mud just after the mile mark. Despite having a starting box in good position to take the first turn of the course well, the Ephs felt they got out poorly in the field of over 200 runners, and a few had to jump over runners who had fallen in the crush.

Platt qualifies for nationals. Nevertheless, from there on in the Williams women demonstrate the ability they have shown all season. Sophomore standout Anne Platt cut 40 seconds off her previous best and left no doubt of her talent and determination as she raced to third overall in a superb time of 17:41 for the 5000 meter course.

In about sixth place and in a large pack with a half mile remaining, Platt kicked them all down to earn a berth at nationals next week, making up for last year when she missed qualifying by one place. That frustrating fate she left to teammate Molly Martin '92, who put in a powerful race to finish 11th in 18:05. A strength runner, Martin moved up steadily throughout the race, running an impressive second half to overtake many faster-starting rivals. Both made the All-New England honor roll, comprised of the top fifteen finishers.

Third scorer for the Ephs was Andrea Cady '92, who bettered her previous best by over a minute to grab 18th in 18:27, and not far behind her Anne Dannbauer '90, running her strongest race of the season to take 27th overall in 18:35. Right on her heels came the team's fifth and final scoring runner, Helde Beebe '91, who grabbed 30th in 18:43.

Completing the varsity were Cathy Cocks '89, closing out her last cross-country season with a personal best of 19:18 to take 54th, and Cherlie MacAuley '92, who in spite of suffering from mononucleosis ran a strong race for 65th in 19:31.

With all the top five runners finishing in under 19 minutes for 5K and no one running over 20 minutes, Williams might well have made a good showing at the national meet. As it is, the Ephs look forward to next year, when all but one of the varsity seven will return, along with some top-flight recruits, returning juniors, and current team members who missed the season due to injury or illness. Meanwhile, good luck to Anne Platt in St. Louis!

Men's cross-country takes 4th in NE Div. III

by Steve Brody

The men's cross-country team went to the Division III New England Championships at Southeastern Massachusetts University on Saturday looking to brush aside injury and illness to capture a top ten finish.

The results of the meet far exceeded the squad's expectations, as the Ephs took third place, their highest finish ever, and qualified two individuals for the National Championships on Saturday in St. Louis. Behind first place Brandeis (23) and second place St.

Joseph's (102), Williams scored 172 points, beating NESCAC rivals Bates, Colby, and Tufts, in the 31 team field.

The Ephs were led by their qualifiers, sophomores Marc Beltz and Dylan Cooper, who were followed by junior Nathaniel McVey-Finney, who missed a nationals spot by thirteen seconds. The race went out fast on the flat 8,000 meter SMU course. Cooper and Beltz passed the two-mile mark in 9:57, with the rest of the Eph squad close behind. They each picked up the pace on the course's long road loop after the second mile.

'Looking for Mr. Evans'

"I kept looking for (Amherst runner Tom) Evans," said Beltz, "because I knew that if I was near him I was doing well."

While Cooper and Beltz made strong moves on the road loop, an even bigger surge was turned in by McVey-Finney. He pushed the slightly uphill first half at a frantic pace, then used long strides to move into the top twenty. Further back, Dale Johnson '90 and Bill McKinley '92 ran competitively, holding on to their positions as the Ephs remaining scorers.

Coming off the road loop, Beltz passed Cooper as the runners went by the four-mile mark.

"It wasn't sure exactly where the finish was," he said, "so I started pushing early and just kept going."

The nearly mile-long kick by Beltz brought him past four competitors and into the finish in tenth place with an excellent time of 25:21. He dragged Cooper along behind him, as the other Eph sophomore was 12th, ten seconds back of Beltz.

"I had a good kick," Cooper commented on page 6

Women Ruggers slam the 'Herst

by Laura Whitman

The WWRFC made an excellent last showing in its final match against Amherst, bringing home fifteen more black jerseys and two solid victories, 13-0 in the A-side game and 7-4 for the B's.

In the first five minutes of the A-side game, Ann Arnason '89 dodged her way through the Amherst line, scoring a try and immediately putting Black on the defensive. Williams looked very strong and easily dominated the pitch, keeping the ball well past the fifty throughout the match. Wing Gina Coleman '90, just out of an arm cast, and standoff Heather Adams '90 played as if on fire, catching with hands of velcro and gaining much yardage for White.

After a hard drive by the Williams scrum, Andrea Neumaler '91 broke out of her tight second row position to gain possession of the ball and run it deep into the try zone. Scrumhalf Kerry Kilander '89 touched down for points, and fullback Katy Carr '91 converted it. Moments later Carr picked up three more points for Williams by successfully kicking through on a penalty, ending the match 13-0 for Williams. For the B-side game Amherst was not able to supply a full side of either players or shirts, so the Killer B's found themselves up against a rag tag team of black jerseys mixed with shamed A-side players in pink undershirts. The residual anger at losing the first game gave Amherst the power needed to score one try, but Williams quickly responded with greater fury.

Two fine plays stood out in the B-match. In the first, Jackie Graves '90 ran thirty yards with the ball, outwitting her opponents. When finally tackled by Amherst, the ball flew up into the hands of another Amherst girl, whereby Jackie, still falling down from the initial tackle, dragged the second girl down with her. Thus tackle and counter-tackle occurred within seconds, returning possession of the ball to White.

Jackie also scored a try in the same half, which was not converted. The second notable play was a free kick by scrumhalf Kara Lynch '90, who scored three points for her side with style and nonchalance. Alumnae observers were particularly impressed, as they had never before seen this drop kick method used successfully in a women's rugby game. The B-side match concluded at Williams 7, Amherst 4.

Like a gun, Than Healy fires a shot in Sunday's championship game of the Eastern water polo tournament. The Ephs lost 9-8 in the finals to Queens College, who scored the game-winning goal with just two minutes remaining on a four meter penalty shot. Williams fought its way to the finals through earlier victories over the University of Maryland and George Washington University. (Ward)

MassPIRG sponsors hunger week at Williams

by Stephanie Jones

Last Thursday evening at Baxter Hall, many students who wanted aboyu chicken thighs had to go without. These students were role-playing Third World citizens as part of National Hunger and Homelessness Week, to make people more aware of these problems.

The project, from November 13 to 19, was sponsored by the National Student Campaign Against Hunger, and colleges all over the country participated. MassPIRG members Hilary Johnson '91 and Michelle Yednak '91 were in charge of the events at Williams.

"We feel [Hunger and Homelessness Week] is important since we're at Williams where we're so secluded from the real world, and especially the third world. I have no idea what it's like to be hungry," Johnson said. "I can't think of anything that's more worth doing than something that builds your awareness of the plight of others."

The week's events included educational movies at the Log on Tuesday, a jamboree and a raffle on Thursday, Global Food Night on Friday, and weighing the waste at Baxter, the results of which should be published shortly.

The Accidentals, the Springstreeters, Ephoria, the Ephs, the Williams Octet and Combination Pizza performed at the jamboree, to a crowd which filled Mission Dining Hall. Information about the problems of world hunger were interspersed between the performances. A raffle, with 12 prizes donated by the Chaplain's Office and Williamsown merchants, was held at the end.

Tickets to the jamboree cost two dollars and raffle tickets cost one dollar. Johnson said proceeds would be split evenly between the Berkshire Food Project and the Carmelite Fathers Social Services which help provide food

continued on page 6

Visiting Assistant Professor of Political Science Desmina Williams leads a discussion on how individuals can affect the world hunger problem. She spoke at Global Food Night in Baxter Hall, one of the events of National Hunger and Homelessness Week last week. (Steinman)

Feminists protest in Baxter display case

by Soojin Kim

"It's pretty depressing when you're forced to feel alienated by a part of your body," Christy Calame '89 said. She, along with Leslie Felch '89, founded the group responsible for the feminist protests which began October 10 with the Baxter display, "Figures of Speech," and continued last week with "Blueprints for Women," a series of five displays in Baxter.

In addition to the displays, the group's protests have consisted of a series of posters displayed in campus dining halls and Sawyer Library, showing dismembered parts of the female body.

"The ideal of beauty lots of times divides women and leads to competition over, say, who's thinner," Calame said. "Although [the display last week] was trivial stuff like women brushing each other's hair or women playing with make-up, the scenes we staged showed women having friendships with other women."

"Blueprints for Women" was designed to expand on the message of the group's earlier display, "Figures of Speech," which involved three women dressed in bikinis of magazine advertisements. "We felt an obligation after tearing down the dominant aesthetic—after pointing out the tyranny of society's ideal of femininity that can drive women to anorexia—to show that we can have our own aesthetics and establish our own standards," Calame said.

Positive Images

To that end, the display case in Baxter presented positive images of women that were created by the participants rather than by society, according to Calame.

She added that the display was responding in part to sexism at Williams, which she said is real and harmful to women. "It's reflected in little things like thinking hairy legs are disgusting and whistling at someone and yelling, 'great ass.'"

"I've also noticed that women aren't too vocal in classes; we're not as confident as men," Calame said. "Then there are problems with the attacks on women about which the administration doesn't seem to be keeping us fully informed."

Felch said that the displays have already generated reaction on campus and even started dialogues among students. In response to the body parts project, the group has received three positive letters from women who shared their own stories.

"Many students come to Williams without any cause to question their values, everything is smooth and easy for them," Felch said. "It's encouraging that we've gotten people to think, talk and even question the values they hold."

On the project's minus side, however,

continued on page 9

Nader speaks on pitfalls of corporate power

by Justin Smith

Williams students headed off en masse to the huge investment banks of New York and Boston nevertheless packed Chapin Hall last Monday night to hear consumer guru Ralph Nader speak about the issues that he addresses in his latest book, The Big Boys.

Power and Position in Corporate America.

Nader's visit to Williams began at 7:30 p.m. Monday with a press conference in the basement of Chapin Hall. From then on, he spoke to students and answered questions almost continuously until his Stetson Hall reception ended at 1:00 Tuesday morning.

"The principal source of power in our country... [is] corporate power," Nader said. He said there is an increasing centralization of power in America.

In his speech, Nader traced the gradual evolution of popular movements and government intervention against corporate power from the Populist-Progressive movement of the early twentieth century to the period of the late sixties and early seventies when a variety of regulatory laws like the Safe Drinking Water Act were passed.

Nader said the latter period of activity

continued on page 7

Minority course proposal prompts fiery CC debate

by Justin Smith

A College Council debate on the proposed minority course requirement degenerated into a shouting match last Thursday as President Trace Blankenship '89 was forced to bring the meeting to order first by pounding his fists on a desk and, later, by turning the lights off.

The proposal, which was recently approved by the Committee on Educational Policy and sent to the faculty for final assent, will create an American minority/non-Western course requirement in addition to the current divisional requirements. The course would be one of the nine already required for graduation.

Council member Monique Waddell '90 said she opposes the proposal because it is too broad in scope and will permit students to fulfill the new requirement by enrolling in classes that do little to promote understanding about the plight of American minorities.

She called for a study to find out what percentage of students have taken courses concerning American minority populations, cultures, or interests. "That is where the level of intolerance is, that is where the fundamental problem is... It is the school's responsibility, if in fact it is to educate us, to do that."

"Requirement would detract"

David Shuman '92 also opposes the proposal, but for a different reason: "The best English class I took in high school was an Afro-American literature class. I would not have gotten as much out of the class if there were people in the course who were forced to be in that course because they had to fulfill a requirement. I think it would have detracted from the course," he said.

Ultimately, 15 council members voted in support of a modified, "more restrictive" version of the CEP's proposal. In two other votes, eight members supported the original proposal as presented by the CEP, and eight members voted in opposition to any new course requirement.

The modified requirement would include classes pertaining chiefly to American minorities but exclude courses pertaining to other non-western "world cultures" which would not focus directly on minorities in America. These latter courses are included in the CEP's proposal.

Farhan Haq '89, a member of the Coalition Against Racist Education as well as of the Campus Commission on Race Relations, which originally proposed the requirement, emphasized the gravity of this potential change. He said it would reduce the number of available courses from the CEP's estimate of roughly one-hundred to only about twenty-two. Therefore, according to Haq, only about twenty percent of Williams graduates currently fulfill the requirement by the time they graduate. This contrasts with the CEP's plan, which has a requirement currently fulfilled by about eighty percent of graduates.

Ultimately, 15 council members voted in support of a modified, "more restrictive" version of the CEP's proposal.

Blankenship plans to report the results of the vote to Professor of History Charles Dew, chair of CCRR, and Associate Professor of Psychology Saul Kassir, chair of the CEP.

Final plan for Log

The council also came up with a final plan for the new Log's nighttime activities. The council reached an agreement with the administration whereby the Log will be open one night a week, alternating between Wednesday and Friday nights during January and February. Wednesday nights will be 21 nights, while Fridays will be reserved for live entertainment. Blankenship said the new arrangement will cost the College Council only $1,000, saving approximately $5,000.

Blankenship also informed council members of a plan to institute a shuttle service from the Mission Park parking lot every hour on the hour from eight to eleven p.m. In addition, Blankenship said the College is having difficulty finding an adequate vandal-proof intercom to install at the parking lot. The intercom, if installed, will serve as a hot-line to the security office.

Democrats propose greater restrictions on financial aid

(College Press Service)—Students in the near future will have to participate in community or military service in order to get financial aid, if a proposal made by Senator Lloyd Bentsen (D-Tex.) and the Democratic Leadership Council in the last days of the presidential campaign becomes law.

If it does, it would be another string Congress has tied to student aid in recent years to change students' behavior.

Bentsen said the law would wipe out most current forms of student aid and substitute "vouchers" worth $10,000 for each year of community service or $12,000 for each year of civilian work for a military service that a student performed.

In campaign speeches at Stanford University, the University of California at Los Angeles and in appearances in Dallas and Minneapolis early this month, Bentsen said that students could then use the vouchers to help pay for college, vocational training or for a down payment on a house.

But while Bentsen and fellow senators J. Bennett Johnston (D-La.), Barbara Mikulski (D-Md.) and Sam Nunn (D-Ga.) endorsed the plan, it got a cool response from financial aid officers, students' representatives and the U.S. Department of Education.

Others were more concerned that the measure would further change financial aid from an effort to help students pay for college into a social tool.

continued on page 4

"Young Girl Seated in Garden" fetched $2.75 million for the Clark Art Institute, which sold three Renoirs at a recent auction. See story, page 3. (photo courtesy of the Clark)

Record announces the 1989 editorial board.

PAGE 2

Birds may prevent new Mission Park lot from flying.

PAGE 3

Fall scorecard shows Little Three sweep by Ephs.

PAGE 9

Opinions

The Williams Record

TO CELEBRATE ITS BIRTH, I HAVE RENOUNCE THE USE OF TERRORISM.
HAVE A CIGAR...

On the Record...

"This is a disgusting display of faggotism, pervertism, communism, anti-Americanism. Need I go on?"

— A comment written on the glass case in Baxter Hall during the display entitled "Blueprints for Women."

"I would not have gotten as much out of the class if there were people in the course who were forced to be in the course because they were forced to fulfill a requirement."

— College Council member David Shuman '92 on his opposition to the CEP minority studies requirement.

"It's now just a cash cow feeding the public a line of not so sacred bull... They're just spoiled profiteering brats."

— Consumer advocate Ralph Nader, in a press conference before his address in Chapin Hall on November 14, on the present state of the automobile insurance industry.

Record Editorial Board -- 1989

With this issue the Record ceases publication for 1988. Publication will resume on January 10, 1989, under new management. The Record is pleased to announce the editorial board for 1989:

Todd Owens.....Editor in Chief
Chuck Samuelson.....Executive Editor
Travis Pierson.....Business Manager
Rob Weisberg.....News Editor
Ann Mantil.....Insider Editor
Stephanie Jones.....Opinion Editor
Ann Mantil and Stephanie Jones.....Arts Editors
Mariam Naficy.....Sports Editor
Jay Steinman and Karl Thomas.....Photo Editors
Bill Philpott.....Layout Editor

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words, and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication, either typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Chuck Samuelson at (413) 597-2289.

"Go ahead, read my lips...You're dead meat!"

Freedom will find a way

by Chuck Samuelson

Hunger is a world problem and not a political issue. Most people will agree with me that it is for more important to try to reduce hunger than to resort to a polemical distortion of the facts to promote political ends. MassPIRG's use of world hunger week should have turned your stomach. The convenient "fact" sheets they put in every dining hall on campus completely skirted readily available statistical evidence in order to promote their own political ends.

In a letter to last week's Record, two members of MassPIRG said we should realize "the extent to which we are the exploiters of the world" as a reason to be concerned about world hunger. Regardless of our beliefs, the present "world order" should not be the reason we are concerned about hunger, the misery it brings to other human beings should be.

What disturbs me the most is not that MassPIRG makes the issue of suffering a political issue (I suppose such irresponsibility is unavoidable) but that they distort the facts to promote their cause. O.K. Suppose just for a minute that I buy the hit about democracies selfishly hoarding food and single-handedly giving the rest of the world nothing but misery and famine. Why, then, are none of the "undeveloped" nations democratic? Just for a minute I ask every closed-minded person at Williams (at which there are none except for the minority that admits to being Republican) why no free market democracies in the world suffer a hunger problem comparable to that of the so-called "third world nations." Maybe, just maybe, the failure lies not in our selfishness and lack of compassion

Suppose just for a minute I buy the bit about democracies selfishly hoarding food...?

but in the failure of this nation and others like it to adequately expose those values which do, in fact, lead to a more efficient "distribution" of resources. Freedom works. Why is it that everyone concerned about world hunger has to believe that America is at fault? Most Americans, I think, are saddened beyond belief by the pictures of Ethiopian famine, Jamaican disaster and Polish poverty. What, however, can we actually do to change these most unfortunate situations? Why is it that people "concerned about world hunger" always point to "uneven distribution" and seemingly say that a controlled central authority can allocate resources better? The fact of the matter is that this is a lie. The Marxists in Ethiopia who use food as a weapon in that famine-ridden nation certainly don't allocate resources very well. The Soviet Union and Poland are collectivists and a large part of the pressures for reform in those countries come from a desire on the part of their inhabitants to become more efficient, get more to eat, and improve their standard of living.

Perhaps, if we can make a quantum leap of faith and assume that not everyone who wants and prays for the end of suffering in this world is a proponent of worldwide revolution, then we will agree that there are other ways to improve the material conditions of the people of this world. We live in a society that has been more successful than any other in history. We live in a society that Abraham Lincoln called "the last, best hope of earth." Maybe it is time for those people who believe in the potential of freedom to tell those people who don't believe to open their eyes and look at the facts.

Letters

Non-Western Studies is unwise in WSP

To the Editor:

Your criticisms of the non-Western studies requirement passed recently by the CEP are well taken. However, your suggestion that Freshman Winter Study seminars be revised to incorporate this requirement would prove both impractical and ineffectual for the following reasons:

Under the question of practicality, currently attempting to add intensive exploration of non-Western cultures to an already over-burdened and often shallow interdisciplinary framework would further dilute the effectiveness of seminars that many freshmen feel are already diluted. The purpose of separate courses in non-Western studies lies in the thorough study of minority issues, not in hasty associations. In fact, with the very effectiveness or desirability of freshmen seminars in question as a whole, it would be unwise to place further weight on this overtaxed, underselected system.

Furthermore, the treatment of non-Western studies within a WSP course would prove insufficient. Except for more popular classes such as the Harlem Renaissance, which deal exclusively with the American minority concerns, assigning a sufficient amount of reading to illuminate non-Western issues in depth would prove impossible given the limited time (and attention span) of the seminar participants. The small number of class discussions occurring in January cannot accommodate the serious evaluation of these difficult issues. The proposed requirement for non-Western studies should be improved and made more explicit. However, it provides a legitimate means of alerting Williams students to the reality and importance of understanding cultures outside our own. Eric Verby '91

Study estimates incidence of AIDS on campuses

(College Press Service)—As many as three out of every nine thousand college students may have AIDS, according to the preliminary results of a nationwide study involving 20 campuses.

The results, if they hold up when the full study is completed in February, indicate students are not paying much attention to efforts to get them to change their sex habits and mean a significant portion of the American student body is at risk of catching AIDS, observers say.

"If the figures hold up, there is more concern than we had anticipated," said Dr. Roland Zick, director of the University of Colorado health center. "There is an infection rate in that range that students will simply have to start paying more attention to educating themselves."

However, Anne Sims of the Center for Disease Control added, "At this point, the numbers are so preliminary it's practically meaningless." She said that meaningful estimates won't be available until the study is finished in February.

The CDC, along with the American College Health Association, is gathering and testing 1,000 blood samples drawn from students on 20 campuses for other medical reasons to see how far AIDS has spread.

Few know which 20 campuses are in the study, but Tulane and Rutgers universities as well as the universities of Colorado, Maryland and Georgia have acknowledged they are participating. Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome is caused by a virus which destroys the body's immune system. The virus is most typically contracted by having sex or sharing intravenous needles with an infected person, or by contaminated blood products. There have been more than 76,000 cases reported in the United States since 1981, with 43,000 fatalities.

Campus lifestyles, health administrators believe, leave students especially vulnerable to the disease.

False sense of security "Students are a sexually active group," said Dr. Florence Winship of the University of Georgia health center. She added that because they tend to be young and inexperienced, many students feel a false sense of security.

Students not immune "The only thing we can show from these preliminary results is that there is infection on college campuses. College students are not immune from AIDS," she said.

"The figure cited is based on just one quarter of the sample, added Miguel Garcia-Tunon of the American College Health Association. "In that sense it's inconclusive. It's just a number. But what's important is not to fixate on a number, but to deal with the problem on campuses. Students must be aware of this."

"It's not surprising to me," Winship said of the preliminary figure. Although she admitted that the data might be skewed, she predicted that the final tally will be similar to the preliminary results.

"In general," said Rich Wolinski of the AIDS Education Project at California State University at Long Beach, "college students have a fairly high knowledge about AIDS. They know how it is transmitted and what they can do to protect themselves, but they do not consider themselves vulnerable."

In September, the CDC reported the AIDS scare apparently had not markedly changed students' sexual habits, prompting Assistant U.S. Secretary of Health Dr. Robert E. Winship to urge campus officials to try harder to educate students about the disease.

Winship said that one-fifth of the reported AIDS cases occur among people 20 to 29 years old.

"Since the average incubation period [for AIDS] is seven years or longer, it's clear that many of the 14,000 patients in this group were high school or college age at the time of their infection," Winship said.

Moreover, a 1987 survey of college students by Bionick Associates, a New York polling firm, revealed that only 6 percent of men think about AIDS before choosing sexual partners.

Not protecting themselves And officials at the universities of Texas and Arizona and Denver's Metropolitan State College have reported that the rates of other sexually transmitted diseases have not declined, suggesting that students are not protecting themselves against AIDS.

"It's a little frustrating," Winship said. "Their behavior doesn't go along with their education. We need to do everything we can to transfer that 'yes-I-know-about-it' attitude to a change in their behavior."

She believes students simply may be unwilling to listen to "parental figures" like older college health officials. "Students listen to their peers more than folks who look like their parents," Winship said.

Georgia now has a peer counseling program in which students spread the word about AIDS, Winship reported.

Virtually every campus in the U.S. now has some kind of AIDS program. Some have supplemented education programs by installing condom machines on campus.

continued on page 6

Bird sanctuary slows plans for Mission lot

by Holly Hatcher

Williams College's scrapes with nature are not limited to the Pine Cobble development being postponed by the hairy honeycreeper. A nearby bird sanctuary has delayed indefinitely the plans for a new Mission Park parking lot which had been scheduled to be completed this fall. The new lot will be behind the tennis courts.

According to Assistant Dean William Wagner, who chaired the committee that recommended the construction of a new lot, it was staked out this past summer, but environmental disputes concerning draining problems prevented the construction of the lot. The sanctuary would be affected by the oils and wastes of the cars running off from the lot. To avoid this, the lot will not be paved and stones will be used to prevent any run-off.

Wagner said the committee looked into the issue of parking spaces available to students, faculty, and guests. The committee's final report found a serious lack of parking spaces. The report was submitted to the College Council, which made further suggestions on how to correct the situation.

Arson raised questions The Mission Park parking lot arson attempt raised security questions about the new lot. Wagner said that any lot is out of the public eye and can easily fall prey to such an incident. But since the suggested site is "an area of high student use and there is a need for student parking," he hoped that security would present less of a problem.

Wagner said he sees the location of the new lot as targeted to relieve congestion in the Mission area, not just when school is in session. "In the summer time it's an abysmal place to park when the courts are in use," he said.

The lot will accommodate over seventy cars, Wagner added. A tentative date for completion of the lot has not been set. If nothing is done before the ground freezes, construction will have to be postponed until the spring, when the ground thaws, he said.

More importantly, Chan said, the survey revealed a high degree of student willingness to participate in more elaborate recycling procedures. Ninety percent of those responding to the

Survey shows student concern for environment

by Justin Smith

While the collection of college students has been labeled as apathetic, Williams students are concerned about environmental problems, according to a survey conducted by the Williams chapter of MassPIRG. Over 300 students responded to the survey, which was conducted by John Chan '91.

Results of the poll, which asked students to evaluate the urgency of various problems plaguing the environment, show that a majority of Williams students are aware of and concerned about current environmental problems, Chan said. He added that some of the issues that students noted as important were acid rain, air pollution, water pollution, depletion of the ozone layer and toxic waste disposal. Over half the students polled indicated that the problems associated with radioactive waste disposal and ozone depletion are "extremely important."

More importantly, Chan said, the survey revealed a high degree of student willingness to participate in more elaborate recycling procedures. Ninety percent of those responding to the questionnaire said they would separate various types of trash for recycling were the College to provide separate trash bins.

"The [question] we were really psyched about was question eight, which shows that the campus recycling plan is really effective. We hope to turn that support into increased conservation," Chan said the current program has heightened student awareness of the need for recycling.

The Williams MassPIRG chapter conducted the survey in conjunction with a statewide MassPIRG effort to measure the environmental awareness of Massachusetts voters.

"We will be having a statewide press conference just to give the public an idea of which issues MassPIRG thinks are important and to let politicians know how the public feels about environmental issues," Chan said.

He said he is also orchestrating a survey of North Adams/Williamstown area residents. MassPIRG will compile the results of this second survey early this week.

Stoddard said he fully agreed with the Clark's decision to sell the paintings. "I think it makes great sense. You're not selling anything you want to display, and the price has never been so high. It's just the time to do it."

The Clark has not displayed the three paintings since 1956.

David Brooke, the director of the Clark, was unavailable for comment on the museum's specific plans for the money. Stoddard, however, said he believes Clark will attempt to fill out some holes in its collection.

"They need a good late 19th century painting," he said.

"I think it's a good idea because the world is becoming a smaller place and it's important to learn about other cultures," Scott Freeman '90

"I think it's a good idea because the world is becoming a smaller place and it's important to learn about other cultures," Scott Freeman '90

"I think it's a good idea because the world is becoming a smaller place and it's important to learn about other cultures," Scott Freeman '90

"I think it's a good idea because the world is becoming a smaller place and it's important to learn about other cultures," Scott Freeman '90

"I think it's a good idea because the world is becoming a smaller place and it's important to learn about other cultures," Scott Freeman '90

"I think it's a good idea because the world is becoming a smaller place and it's important to learn about other cultures," Scott Freeman '90

Condoms come in collegiate colors

(College Press Service)—Shot glasses, bumper stickers and sweatshirts bearing college insignia may soon have to make room on college gift shop shelves. Condoms are now available in school colors.

Students at most schools will be able to get them soon, said Nicholas Fogel, Jr., president of College Condoms, the San Diego firm that's selling the devices to selected campuses in California, Arizona, Florida, Iowa and Kansas.

The condoms are sold in packets of six for a suggested retail price of $2.99. "At USC, the packets are three red and three yellow. At the University of California, it's three blue and three yellow. For schools with three colors it's two, two and two," Fogel explained.

Red, yellow, dark and light blue, black, green and pink condoms are available, but students soon will be able to buy them in brown, emerald, white and practically any color, Fogel said. The inspiration for the product came when Fogel attended a basketball game with an alum of the University of North Carolina. The friend wore Tar Heel sportswear, prompting Fogel to tease that he probably also wore a Tar Heel condom.

The idea stayed with Fogel. His first consignment of 14,000 packets went on sale four months ago. A second batch of 240,000 boxes is almost ready for the marketplace.

"School colors have relieved the stigma of buying a condom. [Students] don't feel like they're really buying condoms. They can joke about it."

Mort Spiegel, manager of Campus Drug near Arizona State University, said, "People have to become aware that it is here. We've sold a couple, though. I think it will catch on."

Staff doubled in first year Currently the Williams center cares for seven infants, 18 toddlers and 20 preschoolers and has room for no more, Cooper said. The staff has doubled since the first year, and in addition there are seven or eight regular student volunteers, she added.

While rapidly increasing costs in child care are common, Buntzen said that the problem is not as pronounced at Williams. "Two years ago the cost of day care was just incredible—it's still very high," she said. "Then the full cost for two children was almost $10,000 a year. This resulted in a wave of protest, which caused the college and CCB to work out more reasonable rates."

Williams Reed, treasurer of the college and vice president for administration, said, "We rent space at St. John's and pay the rent and utilities. It helps keep the cost down, although it's still horribly expensive."

The need for low-cost day care also concerns the salaries of the teachers and administrators of the facility involved, which people generally agree are too low. Williamstown resident Steven Masters, whose daughter attends the college center, said he sees a real problem in this conflict.

Very expensive "There's a dilemma with child care—you're looking for people to look after and stimulate your children, yet you're also faced with the cost of that. You want quality care, not babysitting, and it's really going to cost you if it's done well."

"Salaries for child care are going to attract people who do for love, not for money," he added. "We've been lucky at the college center because there are some wonderful people there but you're never sure they're going to stay because they need to make two or three times what they're making to justify their staying." Cooper expressed a similar view, saying, "[If] you're not getting great financial rewards, obviously caring about children is the main reason for staying."

All three noted that providing child-care services for parents who are educators is unique in some respects. "One of the reasons there's burnout [in the profession] is that college parents are very demanding about the services they receive," Buntzen said. "The caretakers have to be responsive both to the child and to a concerned group of parents, who have their own theories about child care."

"We have a philosophy [the parents] agree with—a developmental approach, learning by doing," Cooper said. She referred to her previous experience serving less educated, single-parent mothers. "Here the parents are more informed, knowledgeable and more questioning."

"The faculty here has a better idea of what quality child care is. They're educators and they want their kids educated from an early age," Potvin said.

What do you think of the minority course requirement proposal?

Interviews by Miriam Marcus and Amy Beliveau

"I think it's a good idea because college students should be more exposed to minority issues."—Ted Rogers '91

"Are people going to hate me if I answer this question truthfully?"—Andy Munzer '90

"I think it's good because the world is becoming a smaller place and it's important to learn about other cultures."—Scott Freeman '90

"I think it's a good idea for the students coming in. I think it will give them a more well-rounded education, although not for those of us already here."—Matt Essen '91

"I'm from Minnesota and I know nothing about other races so I would like to learn and I think it should be required."—Dave Bakken '90

"I think it's a good idea because I love learning about minorities but unless it's required I don't think I'd be motivated to sign up for one."—Kathleen Judge '91

DEBBIE SNYDER Editor in Chief
TODD OWENS News Editor CHUCK SAMUELSON Opinion Editor TRAVIS PIERSON Arts Editor
TED HOBART & MARC McDERMOTT Sports Editors RICH WARD & TED SCALA Photo Editors
KIRSTEN HASENFUSS & MARY ILLIFF Layout Editors KATIE ALBRIGHT Business Manager

News Assistants
STEPHANIE JONES, ANN MANTIL, BILL SAVADOVE, DAN SKWIRE, ROB WEISBERG
Sports Assistant
MARIAM NAFICY JAY STEINMAN, KARL THOMAS
Layout Assistants
ELISA DUGUNDI, BILL PHILPOTT, ASHESH SHAH

Copyright 1988 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Lawmakers consider tying strings to student aid

continued from page 1

In recent years, the government has made aid a way to insure that students and their schools complied with civil rights laws, military registration laws, immigration procedures, tax laws and debt ordinances.

In October, lawmakers agreed to strip aid from any student convicted of using or selling drugs.

"Financial aid is the source of federal dollars to assist students, so the government is making this a major tool of social influence in higher education," said Dr. John Anderson, financial aid director at Oregon's Portland State University.

Conditioning financial aid "holds students ransom to whatever is the agenda of Congress at a given time," said Janet Lieberman, legislative director for the United States Student Association in Washington, D.C.

USAA, she said, is against using student aid as a tool for any purpose except funding a student's education.

According to Shirley Boardman, aid director at Indiana University and Purdue University's combined Indianapolis campus, the plan would also hurt the economy by keeping newly graduated students out of the workforce, and thus deferring the day they start paying taxes to the government.

Social engineering
Anderson and Lieberman deride the idea of tying politicians' goals to student aid as social engineering that doesn't work.

The eight-year-old law that makes male students wear they've filled out Selective Service forms, for example, really hasn't helped the government track down draft evaders.

Anderson noted that the Department of Education tried to verify if students who said they'd filled out the military forms had truly done so, and found that 90 percent were telling the truth. "They didn't find evaders, but they're still continuing with this," he said.

Schools have not actively opposed the military registration string because they themselves don't have to go to the trouble of deciding if students are telling the truth on the forms.

"Part of the application form asks if the student has complied with the law. He checks the box. There's no verification on the part of the school, so there's no big problem," said Rich Bishop, the University of Connecticut's associate director of financial aid.

And some are upset with Congress' new effort to deny aid to students who have been convicted of violating drug laws, not because of any sense of violated principle, but because it would be difficult for the financial aid office to administer.

"I know the university to know when a prosecutor has called for denial of financial aid?" Boardman asked.

Despite all the arguing, observers expect Congress will consider tying a new string to aid-cutting aid to students who go to schools where more than 20 percent of their predecessors defaulted on their student loans when it convenes in January.

Whatever else they do or don't accomplish, such strings slow campus procedures down, and makes them more extensive.

"Every wrinkle makes the aid process more complex," Boardman said. "It ties up the administrator and the counselor in compliance work."

"Schools," Anderson said, "are being asked to do more as institutions than ever before. But the government hasn't provided money to support these activities."

Logistics are baffling
"There is no good network to look up [a student's record]. And if the student was convicted in Los Angeles in 1989, then comes to Indiana, we have no way to find this. The logistics baffle me."

"It's so uniquely American to try to tie everything to legislation and money," she added. "Why pick this one kind of criminal behavior? It's unfavorable to have possessed marijuana; a serial tax murderer is okay?"

"I know they're trying to find a way to win the drug war, but is this going to discourage someone from using drugs?" she said.

Student borrowing reaches all-time high

(College Press Service)—Students are borrowing more money than ever before to go to college, despite congressional efforts to reverse the trend, a report released at a Washington, D.C., conference last week found.

"It is very discouraging that all we did for five years resulted in something that is not more positive for students," said Marguerite Dennis of Georgetown University, who presented the findings of her study of student borrowing to the Consumer Bankers Association meeting in Washington.

Dennis was referring to the five years of debate that resulted in the Higher Education Reauthorization Act of 1986.

Congress must "reauthorize" the government's ability to fund federal campus and student programs every five years. In the reauthorization process between 1980 and 1986, college lobbyists tried to raise the amounts of money Congress could give to campuses and to retrofit aid programs to ease students' debt burdens.

Dennis' study of how the act has worked out, however, found students are taking out bigger loans and that more students are borrowing money since it was passed.

Her study also found that, while more schools—perhaps as many as 66 percent of them—now offer some kind of "alternative financing" for students, the reauthorization bill made it more complicated for students to apply for aid.

Recycle the Record

try and anti-war sentimentality. Scotty's father wishes Scotty to be like his brother Alden, who willingly went to Vietnam. Meanwhile, Scotty's mother (Mariette Hartley) is supportive, but distant and numbed by the pain of her own life. Scotty's best friend, Ralph (Robert Downey) does not want to go to Vietnam either, but he cannot stop smoking pot and flunking out of college and gets put on draft lists. There's also Ralph's sister Beth (Winona Ryder), a smart high school senior who eventually hooks up with Scotty. And then there's Ralph's and Beth's mother (Joanna Cassidy), who Scotty's father takes a liking to. Within this group of six, there is a lot of action going on.

The film's characters are undeveloped caricatures. After Ralph flunked out, Scotty and Ralph spend the summer as (according to Scotty's interpretation) "leaves" — they go where the wind blows them. But Ralph wants to return home, saying that maybe he isn't a leaf after all, but a rabbit. And so

My intrepid assistant and I struck down Route 8 with a half tank of gas, Visa cards and a mission to set these rumors straight, much in the way that the Jason rumors were settled. And sure enough, like a green beacon in the November sky, there was the sign: "Mall Entrance Next Right." We slipped into one of the many parking spaces and entered the very real mall through the food court entrance. Lord have mercy, there it was, the food

blage of agro-rock practitioners known as The Tribe, has worked with such groups as Revolting Cocks, Pale Head and 1000 Homo DJs. On this new release, Jourgensen has teamed up with Paul Barker, another spokesman for The Tribe, and the result is richer, rawer and more inviting than anything Ministry has previously come out with.

The mixture of synthesizers and an industrial music philosophy is often a dangerous one. The combination of the two often generates what many feel are the worst aspects of music today—tiny sound without depth combined with pretentious, yet mindless, bombast in a kind of disco-boddy written mesh that sits in the listener's gut for a long time afterwards, making him or her feel disgusted, used and ill.

But, and this is a big, fat but, if a group has the song writing and technological talent to successfully mix the two, the result can be the most gripping genre that contemporary music has to offer. Industrial has the advantage of striking to the core of emotions, either violent, sexual, or unlabeled, either acknowledged or suppressed, by using methods ranging from metallic percussion (ie. trash cans) to extreme feedback noise to samplers taking sounds or words from the real world and reworking them, to create a composition better classified as an aural sculpture (not the Strangers' kind) rather than a traditionally approached and composed work of music. Likewise, synths are immediate, and, while an inherent shallowness in their value often accompanies this, they, especially for a generation reared on Eno and Gary Numan, form a direct route to a certain pleasure zone for the conditioned listener. The successful combining of industrial's austere high mindedness and disco's bourgeois beat can provide a thrill ride unequalled.

One group that has successfully followed this course is Ministry, whose new album Land of Rape and Honey (Sire), is a welcome change from their earlier records. Contrary to the usual pattern of bands, who tend to become increasingly commercial as their album catalogue grows, Ministry has taken a reverse turn here, and actually uses real guitars and drums on some of the tracks, maintaining a mean, and occasionally downright punk, attitude.

Ministry is the brainchild of Alain Jourgensen, who, as part of the assem-

Choral Society performance produces mixed results

by Sean A. Timmons

The Williams Choral Society under the direction of Kenneth Roberts gave its first concert of the year Saturday night. Included in the program were two Bach cantatas, Nos. 21 and 56, and an adventurous work by the Polish composer Witold Lutoslawski entitled "Trois Poemes d'Henri Michaux."

The Choral Society was joined by orchestra and four soloists: Melanie Hilton, soprano, Carol Randies, mezzo-soprano, Rodney Nolan, tenor and William Parker, bass.

The high point of the evening was without doubt the Lutoslawski work. "Trois poemes" requires an orchestra of winds, brass, harp, two pianos and twenty-one different percussion instruments. This small orchestra was placed on the left side of the stage, while the reduced chorus was placed on the right side, creating a very pleasing effect, especially since the work involves some moments of antiphony between the singers and the orchestra.

Admittedly, a twentieth-century work involving a lot of percussion, and including compositional effects such as indeterminate notation and twenty-seven part harmony in the chorus, is likely to be interesting no matter what the quality of the performance happens to be. Roberts, however, was able to bring the performers to such a level of intensity that the piece was riveting from the first to the last. Especially exciting was the wide variety of tone colors obtained by Roberts in this performance. For instance, the first movement, "Penelope," is clearly meant by Lutoslawski to have a dreamy, rolling quality, which was achieved brilliantly in the orchestra. By contrast, "Le grand Combat," as the title suggests, requires more strident, almost violent playing and singing, and again the group was up to the task, with especially fine performances in the percussion ensemble.

On the whole, Mr. Roberts conducted a pleasant concert, but it is disappointing that the fervor the audience got a taste of in the Lutoslawski piece could not have been carried over into the Bach.

The music of the Souljahs followed the custom of the latter criterion in its subject matter, yet their songs were more up-beat and thus slightly deviated from the West Indian tradition of laid-back sermons characteristic of Bob Marley.

Though the Souljahs' performance featured modern equipment such as synthesizers and electric guitars, the message in the music remained unal-

One can only applaud the Williams Choral Society and Roberts for such a fine performance of a demanding work, and hope that the Choral Society will continue to provide an opportunity for the Williams community to hear contemporary works in such excellent performances.

Unfortunately, the Bach cantatas lacked the verve of the Lutoslawski piece. While the members of the chorus clearly knew their parts and gave a creditable performance of them, they never seemed to get into the spirit of Bach's writing, with the result that some of the counterpoint was made muddy. Even where the singing was clear, it often lacked the energy to make these sections convincing. More problematic than the choral performance, however, was that of the soloists.

Clearly the finest of the singers was Parker, who had some marvelous moments, particularly in his duet with Hilton in Cantata No. 21. Even he, however, seemed to falter a little in Cantata No. 56. His long aria on the text "Broken is my yoke" sounded overworked, not light and airy as the movement seemed to require. He was, however, a competent singer with a full tone and good projection. None of the other soloists was able to meet his standard, although Hilton did have some occasional strong moments.

The orchestra for these cantatas consisted of strings, oboes, bassoon, trumpet, timpani and continuo in No. 21, and strings, oboes and continuo in No. 56. In general, the orchestra played very well, achieving a good balance with the chorus, and displaying some very fine playing in the first violin and bassoon parts.

On the whole, Mr. Roberts conducted a pleasant concert, but it is disappointing that the fervor the audience got a taste of in the Lutoslawski piece could not have been carried over into the Bach.

1969: A date to be broken

by D.W. Maze

1969 is the story of Scotty (Kiefer Sutherland), an antiwar college freshman and minor league hippy. Scotty's father (Bruce Dern) does not appreciate Scotty's loafing, driving cross country and anti-war sentimentality. Scotty's father wishes Scotty to be like his brother Alden, who willingly went to Vietnam. Meanwhile, Scotty's mother (Mariette Hartley) is supportive, but distant and numbed by the pain of her own life. Scotty's best friend, Ralph (Robert Downey) does not want to go to Vietnam either, but he cannot stop smoking pot and flunking out of college and gets put on draft lists. There's also Ralph's sister Beth (Winona Ryder), a smart high school senior who eventually hooks up with Scotty. And then there's Ralph's and Beth's mother (Joanna Cassidy), who Scotty's father takes a liking to. Within this group of six, there is a lot of action going on.

The film's characters are undeveloped caricatures. After Ralph flunked out, Scotty and Ralph spend the summer as (according to Scotty's interpretation) "leaves" — they go where the wind blows them. But Ralph wants to return home, saying that maybe he isn't a leaf after all, but a rabbit. And so

My intrepid assistant and I struck down Route 8 with a half tank of gas, Visa cards and a mission to set these rumors straight, much in the way that the Jason rumors were settled. And sure enough, like a green beacon in the November sky, there was the sign: "Mall Entrance Next Right." We slipped into one of the many parking spaces and entered the very real mall through the food court entrance. Lord have mercy, there it was, the food

blage of agro-rock practitioners known as The Tribe, has worked with such groups as Revolting Cocks, Pale Head and 1000 Homo DJs. On this new release, Jourgensen has teamed up with Paul Barker, another spokesman for The Tribe, and the result is richer, rawer and more inviting than anything Ministry has previously come out with.

The mixture of synthesizers and an industrial music philosophy is often a dangerous one. The combination of the two often generates what many feel are the worst aspects of music today—tiny sound without depth combined with pretentious, yet mindless, bombast in a kind of disco-boddy written mesh that sits in the listener's gut for a long time afterwards, making him or her feel disgusted, used and ill.

But, and this is a big, fat but, if a group has the song writing and technological talent to successfully mix the two, the result can be the most gripping genre that contemporary music has to offer. Industrial has the advantage of striking to the core of emotions, either violent, sexual, or unlabeled, either acknowledged or suppressed, by using methods ranging from metallic percussion (ie. trash cans) to extreme feedback noise to samplers taking sounds or words from the real world and reworking them, to create a composition better classified as an aural sculpture (not the Strangers' kind) rather than a traditionally approached and composed work of music. Likewise, synths are immediate, and, while an inherent shallowness in their value often accompanies this, they, especially for a generation reared on Eno and Gary Numan, form a direct route to a certain pleasure zone for the conditioned listener. The successful combining of industrial's austere high mindedness and disco's bourgeois beat can provide a thrill ride unequalled.

One group that has successfully followed this course is Ministry, whose new album Land of Rape and Honey (Sire), is a welcome change from their earlier records. Contrary to the usual pattern of bands, who tend to become increasingly commercial as their album catalogue grows, Ministry has taken a reverse turn here, and actually uses real guitars and drums on some of the tracks, maintaining a mean, and occasionally downright punk, attitude.

Ministry is the brainchild of Alain Jourgensen, who, as part of the assem-

Arts

Pictured (l. to r.) are lead vocalist Max Dixon and lead guitarist Paul Tulloch of the Souljahs, who performed in Laseil last Saturday night.

Souljahs take a fresh musical approach

by Larry Smith

In the latest of a series of events sponsored by the Williams Black Student Union, the reggae group, the Souljahs, performed at Laseil gym Saturday night. Traditional reggae music has been characterized by a strong rhythmic beat and lyrics which often relate a problem or express anxiety about universal subjects, such as racism and world hunger.

The music of the Souljahs followed the custom of the latter criterion in its subject matter, yet their songs were more up-beat and thus slightly deviated from the West Indian tradition of laid-back sermons characteristic of Bob Marley.

Though the Souljahs' performance featured modern equipment such as synthesizers and electric guitars, the message in the music remained unaltered. With such songs as "Holocaust" and "Planet Earth," the group revealed their concern for human suffering and social justice which not only echo, but intensify the edicts of Bob Dylan and the declarations of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Saturday marked the second appearance of the Souljahs to the Williams campus. They held a concert last year and were so successful that they were invited to give another show. The group has gained popularity and have even come to the attention of such major labels as Warner Brothers.

Though reggae music conforms to the category of music in the black tradition, its appeal is wide-ranging. This claim is backed up by the multi-racial audience of approximately 200 students and community members that witnessed the concert. In a like manner, the dichotomy of young and old further supports that reggae music has the ability to assimilate all those who listen, and alienates only those who do not wish to augment their sense of music value.

The mood of the evening was set before one verse was uttered from the band. The dark lighting was sufficient to lure the crowd into a mellow mood, which is essential to be swayed by the trance-like aura of the music. Unlike other forms of music where the meaning is stranded in a sea of high-tech instruments, the simple beat of reggae music allows one to "do his own thing," whether that means dancing or reflecting upon the singers' questioning of the status quo.

The music of the Souljahs compels the listener to become active in the affairs of men and women rather than simply sit back and allow others to continue in their malicious endeavors. In fact, the performers often invited the audience to join in the melodic protest by calling for a response of affirmation or repetition of certain lyrics.

In view of the serious issues addressed by the Souljahs, one might get the impression that the members of the group are politically-motivated radicals who only seek to condemn those persons or institutions that persecute humanity. However, they simply seek to make an impression on their audiences while entertaining them in a most interesting musical expression.

Music

King, Jr.

Saturday marked the second appearance of the Souljahs to the Williams campus. They held a concert last year and were so successful that they were invited to give another show. The group has gained popularity and have even come to the attention of such major labels as Warner Brothers.

"My day at the Berkshire Mall"

by Joo Bank

A mall in the Berkshires? Bad craziness at best, something too strong for these parts I reckon, but hey, at the risk of sounding like a geezer, there was no Pizza Hut or Tanning Hut or video arcade at North Adams Shopping Center my freshman year. Sure, I remember all the controversy in the Advocate, but I thought that was well into the future. Around October, the word from those who ventured beyond Tony's Eats on Route 8 contained scattered rumors of a movie complex, a food plaza and a Benetton. This required serious investigation.

My intrepid assistant and I struck down Route 8 with a half tank of gas, Visa cards and a mission to set these rumors straight, much in the way that the Jason rumors were settled. And sure enough, like a green beacon in the November sky, there was the sign: "Mall Entrance Next Right." We slipped into one of the many parking spaces and entered the very real mall through the food court entrance. Lord have mercy, there it was, the food court: Burger King, Philly Steak, Taco Bell, the Chowder Hut and seemingly thousands of others than spun in a bright blur of heavenly bliss. It was too much to take. Well, almost.

Our first stop after a frantic lunch at Taco Bell was Tape World (perhaps providing a twisted sort of balance to Record Town at the opposite end of the mall), which is, in fact, tape, compact disc, poster and bumper stick world. One of the first things we noticed about the mall was that almost every store had a poster rack inside, with posters that may or may not be related to the store's other wares. Aside from the teenaged clerk in Tape World, we were alone with Tiffany, John Cougar Mellencamp and Bruce Springsteen. I asked the clerk if they had the new Sonic Youth album. She looked at me as if I had asked for a plate of fried iguana entrails. "You might try Taco Bell," she said. The in-store music changed from Debbie Gibson to the Muzak version of the Menudo remix of "Silent Night." This may have been our cue as Ali moved from a roundabout gothicy approach to a more textured angrier one. The second song, "The Missing," is a total shock on first listen. An assault of heavy guitar and drum work, it mirrors the best of punk energy and early PIL's mesmerizing use of repeated chords. The other three songs of the first side, "Delity," "Golden Dawn," and "Destruction," are all equally engrossing. Admittedly, there is not too much that is overwhelmingly new here. The themes running through songs like "Golden Dawn" and "Destruction" are self-evident and have been seen before in more artful and subtle ways, but Ministry's handling of them is exactly what the word, but, like most of the tracks that follow it (there are 13 songs on the CD), is a dialogue-drama-sound collage that engages the listener's imagination and senses. This, and similar works such as "Punk in Park's Zoo" round out a difficult, but ultimately inspirational album.

Skinny Puppy's stream-of-consciousness lyrics are some of the most morbid to be found anywhere — a mixture of the grandiloquent and the flatulent — but the lead singer's raspy voice is so scary that you don't question his sincerity. A sample from "Hospital Waste" goes: "Blast and raw eye blood shot lid color concealed crimson trip thin lit mess code of darkness stop the ocean counting blood coughing blood and needle syringe in the island thirst of drought raised through the real end."

This is the poetry of the new generation. As artists and raw as some may see it, this style and similar sentiments are what the most progressive musicians of the age are forwarding. The unrolling of a relentless scroll of violence and revulsion seems to be the most effective way for artists to reach people who are already numbed by our fast-forward world. Ministry and Skinny Puppy are just two out of an increasingly large group of minstrels meshing the sounds of industry and musical technology, and, in doing so, are redefining contemporary aesthetics.

"We're leaving now."

Surely the pet center might bear better fruit, we hoped. The display window was the kind that allows customers to observe animals at play and in their cages. A sign announced that "All dogs are exercised regularly by our staff." A small crowd had gathered to watch a rather inept husky pup trip and waddle about on the floor. Deeper inside the store we noticed that there was a sort of changing room, where two teenage girls appeared to be arranging posters of soft focus kittens inside a rack. Time to leave.

No posters were in either The Limited Express or Benetton, except for those United Colors of Benetton posters on the wall. What kind of person would dress up like that? I don't know about you people, but I do not feel a thin boy wearing a fringed suede jacket, face paint and a couple of Indian feathers in his hair is an adequate representation of the United States. Somebody in authority should be alerted.

The mall was crowded, but not overly so and the people seemed to be looking but not buying. The clerks, still relatively unjaded to the scene, pounced with vigor on every customer as they entered their shops. Maybe it was the Berkshires hospitality, but Ali told me that the girl at the Clinique counter in Seigler's was the friendliest she'd encountered in cons. True, they even laughed at my jokes about spending a lifetime in analysis if I used the women's scrubbing gel that she tried to sell me. I asked if they had a poster rack. "No, but you might try the pet center," she said.

At the art supply store, I flipped through the poster rack (actually a fine art rack since the posters cost something like thirty dollars each, unframed), while Ali waited about twenty minutes. The mall was crowded, but not overly so and the people seemed to be looking but not buying. The clerks, still relatively unjaded to the scene, pounced with vigor on every customer as they entered their shops. Maybe it was the Berkshires hospitality, but Ali told me that the girl at the Clinique counter in Seigler's was the friendliest she'd encountered in cons. True, they even laughed at my jokes about spending a lifetime in analysis if I used the women's scrubbing gel that she tried to sell me. I asked if they had a poster rack. "No, but you might try the pet center," she said.

At the art supply store, I flipped through the poster rack (actually a fine art rack since the posters cost something like thirty dollars each, unframed), while Ali waited about twenty minutes. The mall was crowded, but not overly so and the people seemed to be looking but not buying. The clerks, still relatively unjaded to the scene, pounced with vigor on every customer as they entered their shops. Maybe it was the Berkshires hospitality, but Ali told me that the girl at the Clinique counter in Seigler's was the friendliest she'd encountered in cons. True, they even laughed at my jokes about spending a lifetime in analysis if I used the women's scrubbing gel that she tried to sell me. I asked if they had a poster rack. "No, but you might try the pet center," she said.

At the art supply store, I flipped through the poster rack (actually a fine art rack since the posters cost something like thirty dollars each, unframed), while Ali waited about twenty minutes. The mall was crowded, but not overly so and the people seemed to be looking but not buying. The clerks, still relatively unjaded to the scene, pounced with vigor on every customer as they entered their shops. Maybe it was the Berkshires hospitality, but Ali told me that the girl at the Clinique counter in Seigler's was the friendliest she'd encountered in cons. True, they even laughed at my jokes about spending a lifetime in analysis if I used the women's scrubbing gel that she tried to sell me. I asked if they had a poster rack. "No, but you might try the pet center," she said.

At the art supply store, I flipped through the poster rack (actually a fine art rack since the posters cost something like thirty dollars each, unframed), while Ali waited about twenty minutes. The mall was crowded, but not overly so and the people seemed to be looking but not buying. The clerks, still relatively unjaded to the scene, pounced with vigor on every customer as they entered their shops. Maybe it was the Berkshires hospitality, but Ali told me that the girl at the Clinique counter in Seigler's was the friendliest she'd encountered in cons. True, they even laughed at my jokes about spending a lifetime in analysis if I used the women's scrubbing gel that she tried to sell me. I asked if they had a poster rack. "No, but you might try the pet center," she said.

Temple, Barker & Sloane, Inc.

invites all interested students to

"Starting Your Career in Management Consulting"

Wednesday, November 30 at 7:00 p.m.
Office of Career Counsel Library

Temple, Barker & Sloane, Inc.
Management and Economic Counsel

Rice was the only thing on the menu for the majority of students at Global Food Night, where about 160 students participated in an illustration of hunger problems around the world. (Steinman)

Hunger week features jamboree, dinner

continued from page 1
and shelter to people in the primarily Hispanic Latino neighborhood of the Bronx.

"Beyond our expectations" "We thought it went really well, beyond our expectations," Johnson said. The jamboree and raffle raised $570. About 160 people participated in Global Food Night the following evening, she said. At that event, participants were assigned to First, Second or Third World groups. The Third World group had to sit on the floor and could only eat one serving of rice and drink water. The Second World people were allowed to have vegetables as well as rice and could sit at tables. The First World group could have unlimited food and drinks, were waited on and sat at tables with candles, tablecloths and baskets of bread and fruit.

People were assigned to their groups randomly. 15 percent in the First World, 30 percent in the Second World and 55 percent in the Third World, the approximate division in the real world. Students were allowed to give food to people in other groups.

After the dinner, a discussion was led by Visiting Assistant Professor of Political Science Dessima Williams, a native of Grenada. She said she had been shocked when she came to Baltimore as a child and saw a man eating leftovers out of the garbage and emphasized that hunger is not something that exists merely in certain parts of the world. "There is no Third World. The Third World is here; the First World is in Kenya."

Williams said the event was a way of getting people aware of the problem of hunger. "There is always more around than we can consume; the inverse is true of two-thirds of the world." She said, however, that except in an emergency situation merely sending food to alleviate guilt was not the solution. "Sending food just worsens the problem...Bangladesh is not going to produce why should they when they can get it free." She added that the problem is to help other countries become able to produce their own food.

"The notion of food aid has to be replaced with the notion of food self-sufficiency," Williams said. According to Mike Reisman '90, who was in the Third World group, "Exercises like this are a good way to point out the problem, but you really have to go to the sources."

More aware of problem

Many students who participated said the event made them more aware of the problem. Cliff Majerski '91, who was in the second world group, said, "It was amazing how I started thinking of myself all of a sudden. I got some food from the First World and I sat over in the First World so I wouldn't have to share any."

"I guess it made me feel a little guilty. It was kind of like a game. That might be offensive to some people but I thought it was pretty effective," said Catherine Carroll '91, who was in the First World group. "I thought it was good at bringing to the surface some of the feeling people had and that was important," Brian Dolan, a senior in the Second World group, said. "I live near Boston, and when I go to the city, down side streets, I see beggars...A lot of the people here don't get to see that kind of thing and this was important in bringing it to their minds." He said he believed the dinner made people think about the problem and might make people act.

Some people, however, said they did not believe the dinner was effective enough. "There weren't that many people here...People didn't really take the situation anything more than comically. I think also that it isn't going to change anyone's eating habits. There is so much waste at this school," Ben Peacock '91, who was in the Third World group, said.

"I think it's really good, but you can only do so much if you don't have any actual contact with the people we're worrying about," said Scott Ringgold '92, who was also in the Third World group. He said he believed that most people at Williams were privileged and detached from the problem. "I have a real problem with some of this because you're only aware of it as long as the guilt is there...but it needs to be done," he said.

Andrea Cousins '89, a junior in the Third World group, said, "Before I went into it I didn't think it would help...Very few people end up actually committing themselves to [action]. However, she added, "I heard a lot of good comments. I'm starting to feel more positive and hoping that a lot of people will get involved."

Johnson said they plan to have a meeting sometime soon to discuss other ideas people have to analyze the events and decide what could be done better for next year.

Berkshire Mall

continued from page 5

minutes for the clerk to figure out the new IBM cash register to ring up the sale. The lady behind the counter was a confused forty six and one of those people against whom machines are constantly conspiring. The frustration in her face showed as I think she became increasingly aware of the danger that she could be replaced by a gum snapping teenager girl within a week. It's a hard driving, do or die capitalist monster of a world at the mall.

The mall has two bookstores: a Waldenbooks, which has a good selection of diet books and Harlequin romances, and a place called Lauriat's, which has real books, including one by a here unnamed member of the Williams College faculty. Our credit cards took a heavy beating there, but the service was friendly. The clerk tore up the carbons, telling us to "Have a good read." I was going to ask her about the poster rack, but I thought better of it.

The real is a blur. Having been used to Spring Street and Water Street shopping districts for so long, our consumer sensory inputs had overloaded and we had barely managed to traverse the length of the mall before we joined others screaming madly in a rush for the exits.

At this point it might be a good idea to dispel some facts and replace them with some healthy rumors about the mall:

Fact: The mall is only one level with about thirty or so stores.

Rumor: The mall is enormous and visitors are provided with relief maps of the seventeen levels, and the true number of stores has never been recorded. There are hotel rooms available for visitors who get lost and are unable to make it back to their cars before closing.

Fact: The mall has ten movie theaters.

Rumor: The mall not only has movie theaters, but also a 2,000 seat repertory theater featuring first run Broadway shows with the original cast. Phantom of the Opera was playing when we visited. There is also an experimental theater still under construction. Laurie Anderson will do the ribbon cutting when it opens.

Fact: The film Rattle and Hum is playing at the Berkshire Mall.

Rumor: U2 is planning on doing a Christmas benefit concert in the food court. Tracy Chapman will open.

Fact: The Cineplex is not showing any horror movies at the moment.

Rumor: Jason the Greenfield slasher is being harbored by the girls at the Esprit store and preys on customers who take more than three items into the fitting rooms.

The Berkshire Mall. A place where you can get a fajita, a Tiffany tape, or an iguana. A place with poster racks. Christmas music and artificial trees. A Santa's lap to sit on. In short, I have seen the Massachusetts Miracle, and this is it.

Local Movie Listings

(subject to change after Thursday)

Bennington Cinema I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
Punch Line 7:00 & 9:15
The Accused 7:00 & 9:15
Child's Play 7:05 & 9:10
Starting Wednesday: Scrooged, Everybody's All American

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
Track 29 7:00 & 9:00
Who Framed Roger Rabbit (Starting Wed.) 7:00 & 9:00
Running on Empty (Starting Fri.) 7:00 & 9:00
Sorcerer (Starting Sun.) 7:00 & 9:00

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
7:00
Gorilla in the Mist 7:00 & 9:20
Land Before Time 7:10 & 9:15
Without a Clue 9:20
Child's Play 7:10 & 9:15

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
The Good Mother, Child's Play, Gorilla in the Mist, Punch Line, The Accused
Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30
Land Before Time, Fresh Horses, 1969, Oliver & Company, High Spirits, Ernest Saves Christmas
Sun-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2538
1969 7:10 9:50
Oliver & Company 12:30 2:30 7:00 9:00
Everybody's All American 1:00 6:45 9:30
The Accused 1:05 6:55 9:40
Ernest Saves Christmas 1:10 6:50 9:20
U2: Rattle and Hum 9:25
Child's Play 9:25
Iron Eagle 2 1:30 3:35 7:20 10:00
Land Before Time 1:20 7:05 9:35
Without a Clue 12:40 2:40 6:45 9:15
Fresh Horses 12:50 6:40
1:15 7:15 9:45

AIDS

continued from page 3
chines in dormitories and student unions, or by distributing condoms for free.

Critics say condom distribution promotes sexual promiscuity.

The Board of Regents of the Texas State University System, for example, stopped health centers at four of its schools from distributing condoms earlier this year.

And the University of Washington administration has resisted installing condom machines, preferring educational methods to prevent AIDS instead.

"Students are not mature," Winship said. "They don't plan ahead." Condom machines, especially in dormitories, "let them have better access later in the thinking process," she said. "It's controversial, but it's realistic."

Toxic Waste Dump.

At press conference, Nader discusses issues

Renowned consumer advocate Ralph Nader addressed a standing room only crowd at Chapin Hall November 14 on "Corporate Power in America." Before the lecture, he spoke to members of the local press, including Justin Smith of The Record, on a wide variety of issues. What follows is a transcript of the press conference.

QUESTION: What's your analysis as to why question 4, the initiative to shut down the Yankee Rowe and the Pilgrim nuclear power plants, failed? What went wrong, and what should be done now?

RALPH NADER: First of all, a lot of politicians who knew better either stayed silent or lined up on the Boston Edison side. I think it became a real limousine paper test of political loyalty and very few politicians wanted to countermand it. I've never seen a liberal and corporate establishment congeal so rapidly on an issue, a lot like a command performance. They even got some presidents of major universities, MIT, the University of Massachusetts...to sign on.

And yet, it was an insupportable position. Pilgrim has been closed half of its sixteen years. It was a troubled plant even by the standards of the Reagan Administration. It does not have an evacuation plan that has been approved, it has a problem with its containment structure...I know of no other place in the country where there is a stronger argument to shut down a nuclear plant.

QUESTION: Do you think it had anything to do with the amount of money that was spent, by either side?

NADER: Oh, of course. What was it, it was MassPILG and a few other groups on one side up against $5 million spent by Boston...I don't believe in being against nuclear power in theory and supporting it in practice. If you're against it, you're against it. Period. And this is one of the worst plants in the country.

Yankee Rowe is a twenty-eight-year-old plant and it's only got another five or six years. It's an aging plant. Referring to one of the nuclear regulatory commissioner's statements recently, "Aging plants are time-bombs waiting to happen." There's increased risk with an aging plant.

"I just hope they never wake up some day and read the headlines of a meltdown at Pilgrim."

It's also a very small plant. If they're both operating they're four percent of New England's electricity. So you had a perfect situation for closing down the plants, leading the country in the roll-back of nuclear power. That would have been a nice thing to do. But even more important is, the more energy we think we have from conventional sources, the more we're going to waste, and the less attention we're going to pay to energy efficiency and alternative solar and other alternatives.

QUESTION: So, in a nutshell, why did it fail?

NADER: Not enough resources to get the message across and a lack of political courage among politicians who knew better. [Senator Edward] Kennedy (D-Mass.) should have come out against it. [Representative Edward] Markey (D-Mass.) should have come out against it...I just hope they never wake up some day and read the headlines of a meltdown at Pilgrim and say to themselves, "We wish we did it differently." If you can't shut this one down, what are you going to do, wait for a Chernobyl?

This is an industry that has run wild from its original mission of safe prevention. It's now just a cash cow feeding the public a line of not-so-sacred...Imagine if we ever get the insurance industry to be the sentinel for health and safety in this country, on the side of environmentalists, on the side of workers' safety groups, on the side of auto safety groups? They're just spoiled profiteering brats.

QUESTION: What's going to happen with the consumer and the safety issues, the kind of issues you're interested in, in the next four years? Will things improve over the Reagan era?

NADER: The only difference is that there's such a backlog of neglect in California, was passed, insurance companies there threatened to leave the state. [President-elect George Bush] has got to do better than Reagan. But that's not saying very much. If somebody at ground level in this room and his successor goes up an inch there's a lot farther to go. But you see, you're going to have the greenhouse effect on, you have some even bigger and more lucrative market. But in Massachusetts, there are still a lot of problems in Massachusetts insurance...The ultimate thrust of proposition 103 is to restructure the insurance industry so it becomes more efficient, more dedicated to safety and health...and more accurately sound in the way of establishing its rates...I want to hear insurance companies say they have cut costs by putting better bumpers on cars, air bags in cars, better fire prevention.

Second, I wouldn't ask the question that way. The only question is, is the public going to require them to be better, more now than in the days of Reagan. That's where it is going to happen.

QUESTION: What's the next big issue?

NADER: Well, there are a lot of things. One is, we want to build more democratic tools at the grass roots, we want to get more state initiative, referendum, and recall. We want to get more free access to the mass media for citizen groups when they are engaged in electoral battles...We want to spread the concept of group buying, fuel group buying, insurance group buying, bank services group buying, in order to increase the bargaining power of the consumer and increase their ability to have an impact on public policy...The corporations are organized, the consumers are not.

QUESTION: What is your biggest defeat?

NADER: Well, the biggest defeat is sort of the battle I never really fought which was Ronald Reagan's victory...He has set this country back pretty serious problems coming up. You have the wealthy people out on Long Island disgusted with what's coming up on their beaches. So he's responsive to that coming from Kennebunkport. So it's not going to be much of an improvement, especially since the emergency is greater than ever.

Second, I wouldn't ask the question that way. The only question is, is the public going to require them to be better, more now than in the days of Reagan. That's where it is going to happen.

QUESTION: What's the next big issue?

NADER: Well, there are a lot of things. One is, we want to build more democratic tools at the grass roots, we want to get more state initiative, referendum, and recall. We want to get more free access to the mass media for citizen groups when they are engaged in electoral battles...We want to spread the concept of group buying, fuel group buying, insurance group buying, bank services group buying, in order to increase the bargaining power of the consumer and increase their ability to have an impact on public policy...The corporations are organized, the consumers are not.

QUESTION: What is your biggest defeat?

NADER: Well, the biggest defeat is sort of the battle I never really fought which was Ronald Reagan's victory...He has set this country back so far. He has weakened this country in some basic economic, environmental, and community areas. Historians will spend a generation trying to quantify and cover it.

Let me just give you an example. This country is now up for sale to Japan and other foreign investors. Why? Because it has a very strong dollar. Why? Because of the huge deficits. Why? Because Reagan doubled the military budget and sharply cut taxes, especially corporate taxes...He never sent a balanced budget up to Congress.

You're seeing our industry and resources being sold off to Dutch, British, German and the Japanese in particular at bargain basement prices. You know if you lose control of your own economy, you become a debtor economy and become more reliant on foreign financing, you lose increasingly your political freedom. So, we've become the victim of absentee ownership, which I've always disliked when the U.S. did it to other countries.

Look, what has he ever said to young people? Has he ever made a major address to College students other than to tell them to "Go for the gold"? He has no sense of inspiring community efforts, he has no sense of inspiring idealism. The President is the principal culprit for idealistic energies.

QUESTION: What do you think is the biggest problem with this country?

NADER: The feeling of millions of Americans that civic action is not worth their while. Notice I didn't say all Americans, millions of Americans.

Nader lectures to a packed Chapin Hall

continued from page 1

ism prepared the way for a corporate rebellion which has manifested itself in the form of the Reagan Administration.

"The counter-attack came. This is something you always have to keep in mind in any reform movement. At your highest point of victory is when the seeds of the opposition are being sown," he said.

Some days, it's nice to leave the humanities behind.

When your daily routine becomes too routine, come to the Pub at The Orchards. We're now featuring delicious blackboard specials that include hearty sandwiches, charcoal-grilled burgers, soup and salad. All priced to appeal to your personal economics. Plus we offer quick service in a warm, comfortable atmosphere. Along with very convenient hours - from noon 'til five o'clock daily. So make your escape soon to the Pub at The Orchards. Only minutes away but it'll feel like another world.

theorchards
Williamstown, Massachusetts (413) 458-9611

LIVE A LIFE OF EXCITEMENT, MYSTERY, AND LITTLE SLEEP.
Join The Williams Record

THE SPIRIT SHOP
280 Cole Avenue, Williamstown
458-3704
"Free Delivery"

Case Closeout Specials
Molson's Canadian Beer cans $13.99/case+dep.
Hoffenperle Swiss Beer bottles $13.99/case+dep.
Calgary Canadian Beer bottles $13.99/case+dep.
St. Pauli Girl German Beer cans $15.99/case+dep.
Haffner Malt Liquor bottles $12.99/case+dep.
Grolsch Dutch Beer bottles $13.99/case+dep.

While Supply Lasts
Mon. - Sat. 9 a.m. - 11 p.m.
PROPER I.D. REQUIRED

photoworks
tgtl

Traits
Affordable Framing
Distinctive Portraiture
Weddings, Groups
Seniors, Teams

If it has anything to do with photography we do it here.
Supplies & Cameras

4 Water Street Williamstown 458-3113

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
SLEEPING 31 WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS 01267
TEL 458-3113 FAX 458-3113

Give thanks for friends, family!

HAPPY THANKSGIVING

Send Hallmark Thanksgiving cards to show your gratitude.

McClelland's

36 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
413-597-8151

YOU QUALIFY FOR INSTANT CREDIT!

Start making credit purchases IMMEDIATELY! We will send you a Members Credit Card at once with NO CREDIT CHECK. Buy any Jewelry, Clothing, Sportswear, Electronics, etc. All with installment payments out of our "Giant 100+ Pages Catalog." Take 12 months to repay. Your personal credit card is a -second I.D. - valuable for check cashing, etc. plus your Students Credit Group A-1 reference will be on file to help you obtain other credit cards. So send in your $5 catalog deposit now. (refundable with your first order)

Establish your credit today!
100% Satisfaction Guaranteed
(or your Money Back)

Name _____
Address _____ City _____
State _____ Zip _____

MEMBERS P.O. BOX 4649
STUDENTS PORT LAUDERDALE,
CREDIT GROUP FLORIDA 33338

THE CLIP SHOP
THE HAIR SALON FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

HAIR

Call for an appointment or just walk in

GIFT CERTIFICATES SPECIAL STUDENT DISCOUNTS

49 SPRING STREET WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS. (413) 458-9167 or (413) 458-8585

122 NORTH STREET PITTSFIELD, MASS. (413) 447-9576 or (413) 442-6903

125 NORTH STREET BENNINGTON, VT. (802) 442-9823 or (802) 447-2646

We're a Sebastian Artistic Center
We make the difference between OK and Extraordinary!

COLGATE UNIVERSITY
...invites you to consider a career in teaching.

Colgate University offers the Masters of Arts in Teaching degree to liberal arts graduates interested in teaching high school science, mathematics, English, and social studies. Generous financial aid is available to qualified students. For more information write to: George E. De Boer, Chairperson, Department of Education, Colgate University, Hamilton, NY 13346/Phone: (315) 824-1000.

Spring Break Specials!

CANCUN	$479
NASSAU	$499
FREEPORT	$519
MARGARITA ISLAND	$519
ANTIGUA	$579
ARUBA	$599
ST. MAARTEN	$649

All packages include:
• Round trip air
• 7 nights hotel accommodation
• Round-trip transfers
• Luggage handling
• Free T-shirt

Call Right Away for Details!

AMERICAN EXPRESS Travel Service

Need some Christmas Money? Call us, we are looking for a campus rep!

THE TRAVEL STORE
We make great vacations!

105 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. 01267
(413) 458-5786
outside Mass. 800-225-5052

We're an easy pick-up

Spring Street stores
Water Street stores
Colonial Shopping Center
Town Hall
The Williams Inn
Cole Avenue stores

The Williams Record

SEMESTER IN SPAIN (BEGINNER OR ADVANCED)

Not just for Spanish majors only, but for everyone: beginners, "in between" students, and advanced. Put some excitement into your college career!

BEGINNER OR ADVANCED: Cost is about the same as a semester in a U.S. college: $3,670. Price includes jet round trip to Seville from New York, room, board, and tuition complete. Government grants and loans may be applied towards our programs.

Live with a Spanish family, attend classes four hours a day, four days a week, four months. Earn 16 hrs. of credit (equivalent to 4 semesters taught in U.S. colleges over a two-year time span). Your Spanish studies will be enhanced by opportunities not available in a U.S. classroom. Standardized tests show our students' language skills superior to students completing two year programs in U.S. Advanced courses also.

Hurry. It takes a lot of time to make all arrangements.

SPRING SEMESTER—Jan. 30-May 29
FALL SEMESTER—Aug. 29-Dec. 19
each year.

FULLY ACCREDITED—A Program of Trinity Christian College.

For full information—send coupon to:

SEMESTER IN SPAIN
2095 Laramie Ave.
Grand Rapids, Michigan 49506
(A Program of Trinity Christian College)

CN 1000

college you attend _____

your name _____

your present street address _____

city _____ state _____ zip _____

If you would like information on future programs give permanent address as below your permanent street address _____

city _____ state _____ zip _____

The shortest distance between you and what's going on on campus

The Williams Record

DRUMMOND CLEANERS, INC.

"Locally Owned And Operated By Jim Drummond" Williams '88

Clothes, like everything else, are getting more expensive. However, by proper cleaning and pressing they will not only last longer, but look, feel and smell their best. We suggest you stop in and see us. DRUMMOND CLEANERS INC. also offers a fast and efficient shirt service, alterations and shoe and boot repair.

(413) 458-4321
66 Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass.
01267

Sandone
Dry Cleaning & Alterations

One out of ten women will develop breast cancer!

"I know. I was that one in ten. And mammography helped save my life."

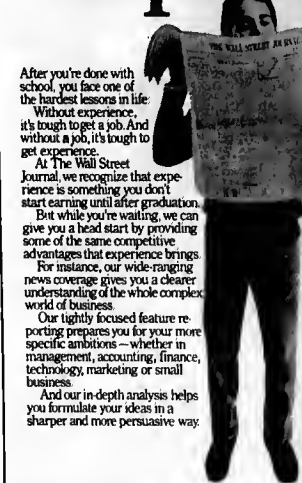

Debra Strauss

Thanks to mammography, a fast end simple x-ray technique, breast cancer can now be detected at its earliest stage—while it is still highly curable. If you're over 35, the American Cancer Society urges you to please call your doctor for an appointment.

Commemorating
75
Years of Life!
Join us

Maybe there is a substitute for experience.

After you're done with school, you face one of the hardest lessons in life: Without experience. It's tough to get a job and without a job, it's tough to get experience. At The Wall Street Journal, we recognize that experience is something you don't start earning until after graduation. But while you're waiting, we can give you a head start by providing some of the same competitive advantages that experience brings. For instance, our wide-ranging news coverage gives you a clearer understanding of the whole complex world of business. Our tightly focused feature reporting prepares you for your more specific ambitions—whether in management, accounting, finance, technology, marketing or small business. And our in-depth analysis helps you formulate your ideas in a sharper and more persuasive way.

To subscribe, call 800-257-1200* Ext. 1066 toll-free. Or mail the coupon—start your subscription to The Wall Street Journal at student savings of up to $48 off the regular subscription price. That's a pretty generous offer. Especially when you consider what it actually represents. Tuition for the real world.

The Wall Street Journal
Learns the daily story of the American dream 2000
*In Pennsylvania, call 800-222-3380 Ext. 1066
©1988 The Wall Street Journal

LIVE A LIFE OF EXCITEMENT, MYSTERY AND LITTLE SLEEP.

Join The Williams Record.

35mm Color

Prints and Slides from the same roll

Seattle FilmWorks has adapted Kodak's professional Motion Picture film for use in your 35mm camera. Now you can use the same film—with the same fine grain and rich color saturation—Hollywood's top studios demand. Its wide exposure latitude is perfect for everyday shots. You can capture special effects, too. Shoot it in bright or low light—at up to 1200 ASA. What's more, it's economical. And remember, Seattle FilmWorks lets you choose prints or slides, or both, from the same roll. Try this remarkable film today!

Ideal for use in Canon, Nikon, Minolta, Konica, Olympus, Pentax... any 35mm camera including the new autofocus cameras.

FREE Introductory Offer

RUSH me two 20-exposure rolls of Kodak MF film for my 35mm camera. I'd like a 2-roll starter pack including Eastman 5247* and 5294* Enclosed is $2 for postage and handling. 100% Satisfaction Guaranteed 2000

NAME _____
CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____
Mail to: Seattle FilmWorks
500 Third Ave. W.
P.O. Box 34056
Seattle, WA 98124

Kodak, 5247 and 5294 are trademarks of Eastman Kodak Co. Seattle FilmWorks is a wholly owned subsidiary of Seattle FilmWorks Inc. Seattle FilmWorks is not affiliated with the National Student Photo Association. *1987 SPW

Council Travel

DON'T WAIT! BOOK NOW FOR THE HOLIDAYS!
From New York
LONDON 179
PARIS 229
ROME 259
Round trip
CARACAS 320
SYDNEY from LAX 866
HONGKONG 739
Taxes not included.
ALSO: Work-Study Abroad, Language Courses, Int'l Student ID, Youth Hostel Passes, EURAIL Passes issued on the spot!
Call for the FREE CIEE Student Travel Catalog!
413-256-1261
AMHERST
79 So. Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002

Camera Ready Resumes

Offset Printed in just a few hours!
53 Main St.
North Adams, MA
063-3414 50 for $17.70

ON CAMPUS TRAVEL REP. OR ORGANIZATION NEEDED TO PROMOTE SPRING BREAK TRIP TO FLORIDA. Earn $, free trips and valuable work experience. Call Inter-Campus Programs at 1(800)433-7747

Valuable Coupon - Clip and Save
Going Home for the Holidays???

Four People to Amtrak Rensselaer or Albany Airport

$50.00 (regularly $69.50)

College Taxi

458-2100

Point of origin and destination must be the same limited luggage space expires 1/20/89

Read Record sports

Fall Season's Scorecard...

FOOTBALL	6-1-1	Little Three Champions	Ranked first in NESCAC
MEN'S SOCCER	17-1	Little Three Champions	ECAC Champions
WOMEN'S SOCCER	9-5-1	Little Three Champions	3rd in NIAC
FIELD HOCKEY	11-2	Little Three Champions	NIAC Champions
WOMEN'S X-COUNTRY		Little Three Champions	NCAA Eastern Champions
MEN'S X-COUNTRY		Little Three Champions	4th at NCAA Easterns
VOLLEYBALL	25-5	Little Three Champions	NIAC Champions
MEN'S RUDDY	5-3	Little Three Champions	First season in Division I
WOMEN'S RUGBY	5-3-1	Little Three Champions	2nd at Beantown Tournament
WATER POLO		New England Champions	2nd in Easterns

M. Hockey

continued from page 10
reiminder during a power play

Power play leads the way
Van Belle's goal set the tone for the final period, as the Ephs' comeback was led by the resurgent power play. Although the unit had failed to convert on six advantages in the first two periods, it clicked in the third, scoring three times against a beleaguered St. Nick's short-handed contingent.
After sophomore Sean Seguin tied the game at 11:27 of the third, assisted by the precision passing of senior assistant captains Putnam and Chris Conway, the power play unit punched home two more goals to put the game out of reach. During a five-minute major to St. Nick's defenseman Buzz Brown, Van Belle finished off his hat trick with the game-winning goal, and Putnam added an insurance goal two minutes later. Junior winger Dave Bakken's diving effort on an empty-net goal with just two seconds remaining capped a fine finish for the squad.

McCormick credited the team's seven seniors with a determined effort, noting that, "These seniors have said, 'we're not going to let things slip away this year.'" He also praised the squad's work ethic, adding that "we've had some intense practices. They don't spare the horses on anyone." St. Nick's defenseman Gus Wimmerding added a note of praise, stating that the Ephs "are a good team, they'll do well this year."

The Ephs hope to prove Wimmerding right as they open the regular season on Saturday night against Hamilton in the friendly confines of the Lansing Chapman Rink.

From the locker room

by Marc McDermott and Ted Hobart

Billy Owens of Syracuse and Alonzo Mourning of Georgetown are generally regarded as the cream of the crop among freshmen at big-time basketball schools, but who really cares. After reading everyone and their uncle's predictions about the college basketball season, one can come away with only one reaction—so what? When is someone going to get down to the league that everyone cares about—should care about—the Sunday Night Basketball League?

After all, big-time college and pro hoops get so monotonous after a short while that no one can stand to watch it. Who wants to watch Michael Jordan put on another spectacular move and finish with yet another monstrous dunk when the same enjoyment can be had watching someone dribble the ball off his foot and out of bounds—live at courtside and free of charge.

So here it is—the definitive predictions of the 1989 Sunday Night Basketball League finishes.
The defending champion team, made up primarily of members of the various coaching staffs (most notably basketball coach Harry Sheehy) lost the services of point guard Jim Duquette '88 to graduation but could still be tough. The coaches are rumored to be looking for new Sports Information Director Dave Paulsen '87 to take Duquette's place, but Paulsen is reportedly holding out for a better contract offer.

Last year's runnups, the Gladden Garys, were mostly seniors last year, and should not make much impact this year.
The Disease are bolstered this year by the addition of coach Dave Clawson '89, and classmates Rob Gotti and Randy Schriver to the playing roster. With these three joining Scott Kennedy '89 in the backcourt, there may not be enough ball to go around.

The Cotton Ponies look strong going into the season, as they feature an experienced and talented lineup. The coaching spot is up for grabs for the Ponies this year, and the strategy is not yet set. Rumors abound in training camp about a radical shift in strategy—posting seniors Al Mottur and Dave Trattner down in the paint while shifting classmates Mike Barbera, Dave Beischer, and Clark West to the outside to gun from Bonus Land.

And now to pick the preseason All-Sunday Night League team. Mottur is a returning All-Star, so we will not count him but rather will focus on new additions. Kennedy should also find his spot from last year waiting again, as will the Ponies' Barbera and Beischer. The Disease's backcourt figures to be the strongest and deepest in the league, so any two of Clawson, Gotti, and Schriver could join the squad. Ponies' seniors Will Morris and Hal Hermanson will also contend for an All-Star spot.

In the frontcourt, senior Winslow Chang's improved shooting touch should combine with his leaping ability to put him near the top of the centers balloting. Also big in the paint, and we mean BIG, is assistant football coach Roger Caron, who can certainly clear a lane to the hoop. Coach Harry Sheehy would normally be an automatic All-Star selection, but because the game against Amherst's All-Stars takes place immediately before the varsity game, it is unlikely he would be able to accept his invitation.

W. WUFO

continued from page 10

we were not enough to bring back feeling to all frozen appendages. Despite all these hardships, the team set out for the third game ready to kill. WUFO beat the club team 22 and then headed back in high spirits.
The season closed two weekends ago at Regionals. Despite the possibility of bad weather and the fact that it was Homecoming, a team of sixteen p-

continued from page 1

she felt that many students didn't understand their message. This was reflected in the commentary on a number of the 45 pieces of paper taped to the glass case in Baxter.
"Do you care to explain the purpose of this, or are you just taking up space?" "Why? What's the point?"

Disgusting display
Other comments were even more negative. "This is a disgusting display of faggotism, pervertism, commism, anti-americanism. Need I go on?"

"Aside from a response from us, what are you trying to accomplish? Aren't there more positive ways to express women's need for equality?"
Someone had scribbled in pencil the question, "Why don't you try to solve societal problems instead of trying to change individual opinions of what is beautiful in a human body?"
The group responsible for the protests has no name because "it doesn't want to be pigeon-holed," Calame said. She emphasized that her group of ten to 15 women is distinct from the Feminist Alliance, although the two are not rivals.

"The Feminist Alliance is a good place to talk, but when you want to make a unified statement, you can't have that variance of opinion," she said.
Calame did express a desire for members of her group to eventually work with the Alliance. "The Alliance is College Council-funded and it can do more than we can if more people get interested in going to the meetings."

Becky Teed '89, a leader of the Feminist Alliance, likewise expressed respect for the other group. "We aren't responsible for the displays, but we wish we were... we support the movement."

In the Spotlight...

Football's tri-captain Dan Pritchard was named NESCAC defensive player of the week for his effort in Williams' 21-0 thrashing of Amherst. The senior linebacker punished the Amherst backfield with 10 tackles and a sack to lead the Eph defense to their fourth straight shutout.

All-American Anne Platt. Yes, that's the bow you can refer to the sophomore strider after her 10th place finish at the NCAA Division III national championships. Platt's fantastic showing can only open speculation as to how well the whole team would have placed had they been allowed to compete. A top three finish was quite possible.

Mare Beliz and Dylan Cooper traveled to St. Louis with Platt and performed admirably in men's competition. Beliz loped home in 26:20 to take 84th place. Cooper ran even with Beliz much of the way, but rain induced cramps caused him to fall off the pace to a 27:15, good for 132nd place.

Athlete of the Week

This week's award goes to sophomore runner Anne Platt. Platt ran an 18:30 to take 10th place at the NCAA Division III National Championships and garner All-American honors. Congratulations, Anne.

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Magic in the Middle

BY ROBERT H. WOLFE/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maloska

- | | | | |
|-----------------|------------------|--------------------|--------------------|
| ACROSS | DOWN | ACROSS | DOWN |
| 1 With, to René | 1 Like Natural | 33 Watchdog for | 46 Multiply |
| 5 Gains | 2 "— Triste" | 36 Actor Jeremy | 47 Stallone-type |
| 8 Maui farewell | 3 Sibyllus | 38 Isben products | 48 Ur's |
| 14 Brawl | 4 Clear the | 43 Ex-senator | 49 Uris |
| 16 —avis | 5 boards | 45 Kind of rice | 50 Blush gray |
| 20 Gershwin's | 6 Was solicited | 48 Bad day for | 51 Can. province |
| | 7 Taut | 50 Highway for | 49 Breaks |
| | 8 Vain ones' | 51 Steve Martin's | 52 Mythical |
| | 9 trails | 52 "Jerk" | 53 Sorceress |
| | 10 Full | 53 Dice throw | 54 A colonel of |
| | 11 Kind of night | 54 Puccini aria | 55 Clery or maid |
| | 12 Fireplace | 55 Baby boys in | 56 Gang follower |
| | 13 accessory | 56 Barcelona | 57 Justice joins |
| | | 57 An Alcatraz | 58 Virginia |
| | | 58 Pony-express | 59 Connery and |
| | | 59 haul | 60 Penn |
| | | 60 Queen's | 61 Hogan's cousin |
| | | 61 Gazelles | 62 Actor from |
| | | 62 Role for | 63 Kind of cast or |
| | | 63 This Mr. went | 64 Where kind |
| | | 64 ending | 65 Where kind |
| | | 65 Typing method | 66 Where kind |
| | | 66 of actress with | 67 Where kind |
| | | 67 director | 68 Where kind |
| | | | 69 Where kind |
| | | | 70 Where kind |
| | | | 71 John Brown's |
| | | | 72 Arenal's |
| | | | 73 Chile |
| | | | 74 Daisylike |
| | | | 75 Creepy |
| | | | 76 Bowl calls |
| | | | 77 Ornamental |
| | | | 78 case |
| | | | 79 Mezzanine |
| | | | 80 part |
| | | | 81 —patric |
| | | | 82 "What's Up, |
| | | | 83 Stress and film |
| | | | 84 Wawaweeches |
| | | | 85 Jewish month |
| | | | 86 Click beetle |
| | | | 87 Access Sandra |
| | | | 88 Some |
| | | | 89 corruptive |
| | | | 90 people |

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

"Hey! Look what Zog did!"

Sports

Seven seniors lead men's hockey to 7-4 scrimmage win

by Kerr Houston and Ted Hobart
Looking down the rows of pictures of Williams hockey teams from years past, one notices several obvious differences. Uniform styles have changed, equipment has changed, the rink has changed, and the players have changed. But there is one unchanging feature of Williams hockey over the last 35 years—head coach Bill McCormick.

McCormick has become something of an institution behind the Ephs' bench; through the lean seasons and the championship years, McCormick and his Williams baseball cap were always there, barking out orders, rearranging lines, and assembling power play units. Saturday night was no exception. As his squad opened its 1988-89 campaign with a scrimmage against the St. Nick's Hockey Club, McCormick assumed his customary position leaning intently over the bench, and he must have been pleased by what he saw. His Ephs stormed back from a lackluster start to notch five goals in the third period and walk away with a 7-4 triumph over a very physical team made up of alumni of various schools, including Williams and several Division I teams.

The victory continued last year's late-season trend of strong finishes by the Ephs. In several games last season, the squad led its opponents into the late stages of the games, only to allow victory to slip away in the closing minutes. In the last two games of the 1987-88 season, however, the Ephs ended the string of frustration by notching consecutive last-minute victories over North Adams State (5-3) and Salem State (6-5).

Down to the wire
Saturday night's contest also went down to the wire, as Ron Van Belle '90 did not notch the winning goal until the 16:22 mark of the third period. Van Belle's tally, on a superior effort in which he beat the defenseman before flipping the biscuit into the top of the net over the diving St. Nick's goalie, rounded out a hat trick for the Canadian centerman (last season's leading scorer), and completed an impressive Williams comeback.

We were very disappointed for two periods," said McCormick of the squad's below-par play in the opening forty minutes. The Ephs were outshot 21-18 and trailed by a substantial 4-2 margin at the second intermission.

Van Belle's first goal of the night opened the scoring, staking the Ephs to a 1-0 lead at the 6:43 mark of the first period. The goal was the first of four for the Ephs' revamped first line, featuring Van Belle and seniors Will Putnam and Mike Swenson. Former "red-liner" Sean Seguin '91 now centers the second line of Rob Abel '91 and freshman Andy Zinman, as McCormick seeks a more balanced offensive attack.

Jolly of St. Nick's comeback
The Ephs were unable to hold off the St. Nick's charge for long, however, as the visitors notched two goals within 17 seconds of each other (15:24 and 15:41). Senior captain Tim Frechette's goal at the 19:00 mark tied the contest at two, but St. Nick's third goal, coming with just 18 seconds remaining, posted them to a 3-2 lead after the first.

St. Nick's also scored the only goal of the second period, as former Yale Eli David Williams fired a slapshot past a screened Matt Zolin '91 for a 4-2 advantage. The Ephs, however, got the better of play in the period, outshooting their opponents 12-8.

Spurred by McCormick's fiery pep talk during the second intermission, the Ephs seemed a different team in the third stanza. Van Belle opened the offensive floodgates under four minutes into the final period, when he stuffed a loose puck past the sprawling St. Nick's

continued on page 9

Guard Henry Jones looked like he never left as the finaly senior led the Ephs to a 95-72 victory in Friday night's scrimmage with the Costa Rican national team. Jones poured in 27 points for the Ephs, while Bill Melchior '89 added 16. Bias Martinez was on fire for the Costa Ricans, tallying thirty points on the evening, but even that was not enough for the Central Americans to overcome the powerful Williams attack. (Scala)

For Hedeman, Williams sports run in the family

by Marlam Nafay

"I'll try." These words mean a great deal coming from the mouth of Nancy Hedeman '89, whose undaunted attitude and what coach Dave Caputi calls "God-given natural ability" have made her one of Williams' best-ever athletes.

Among Hedeman's accomplishments: she captained the basketball (18-5) and softball (9-4, Little Three title) teams last year, breaking the previous women's basketball career scoring record of 950 points with a total so far of 1119. Hedeman was the first Ephswoman to score 1000 points; even more impressive is the fact that she reached this milestone in only three seasons. This year, Hedeman captained the volleyball team, leading them to a 25-5 season and the Little Three and NIAC titles, and will captain the basketball and softball teams again.

All in the family

Hedeman's achievements are not surprising considering her family's athletic history; father Bill Hedeman '59 played basketball, baseball, and football (All-American, captain), while mother Peggy Hedeman (Vassar '59) played field hockey and tennis. Nancy's older brother Rick '87, played squash and was an All-American baseball player; younger sister Holly '92, was captain and MVP of her high school basketball and volleyball teams, and turned in a strong volleyball season here at Williams this year.

It is Hedeman's inherited ability and the fact that she has been raised in an extremely athletic family that, for example, made her able to take over first base last spring without ever having played the position and play better than many who had played first base for years.

Problem of recognition

Not all of Hedeman's accomplishments have come naturally, however; she claims that she has had to practice hard to get where she is, and works even harder at being a part of the team and getting in shape. It is difficult, then, for Hedeman to see the hard work of female athletes at Williams ignored: "What bothers me is some people's attitude toward women's sports—they don't take it seriously. Basically, though, we get treated pretty well here."

But it is a lack of recognition of most women's sports that has in part made her grow to enjoy basketball: "Basketball is the one women's sport here that gets a lot of recognition," she says. Hedeman didn't enjoy the two years of basketball she played in high school and didn't want to play when she arrived at Williams; ironically, it has become her strongest sport.

What lies ahead for Hedeman? As a former Junior Advisor, second-year college council representative-at-large, and member of the Athletics Committee, Hedeman has enjoyed being involved in many activities at Williams and says she will miss them after she graduates, especially participation in organized women's team sports.

An American Studies major, Hedeman is undecided as to what she wants to do after graduation. Meanwhile, she is supporting her sister Holly and her rise into the limelight of Williams athletics. Says Holly, "People are always coming up to me and saying, 'you must be Nancy's little sister'—it gets a little annoying. But people are generally good here in recognizing that I'm my own person." For Williams' sake, one can only hope that Holly continues the Hedeman tradition.

Senior Nancy Hedeman launches the shot that marked her 1000th and 1001st career points in a game against Trinity last season, becoming the first Ephswoman ever to reach the 1000 point milestone. This year Hedeman captains the basketball team, in addition to captaining the volleyball and softball teams. (Ward)

Women's WUFO comes into its own in fall season

by Louise Price and Monica Brand
For many years WUFO was co-ed, which meant a team of men with maybe two or three brave women. In the spring of 1986 Hans Humes and Sarah Thurber convinced Anne Carson and various others to seriously consider founding a women team. The next fall, massive recruiting effort at the Purple Key Fair dragged together enough women to form a team.

Ultimate is not a simple game to teach since many people can barely throw a frisbee when they join the team. So it has been a struggle. However with the encouragement of the many other women's teams that are being founded all over the country and especially the Northeast, the women kept up their spirits. Ultimate prides itself on the official "Ultimate spirit." This is the philosophy that players should strive for excellence but never let the pressure of competitiveness destroy the joy of the game.

This year WoWUFO has finally come into its own. Gone are the days of tournaments with scarcely two subs and just as many points. Now the squad must contend with overstuffed cases, excesses of "Ultimate Spirit", and, yes, even some victories.

October first was a beautiful day, heralding the beginning of a marvelous transformation. Poker flats was the setting for the home tournament attended by eight teams. As the first game began, the WoWUFO rookies looked around in amazement at the unprecedented turnout. Over twenty women -three full teams- came out to lead Williams to its first victory. With a sound victory over Tufts, WoWUFO went on to defeat Wesleyan 13-12 in a close, intense game.

The squad's only loss was to Zulu, the University of Massachusetts entry, a team that practically founded Women's Ultimate in the Northeast. Yet even this "loss" was an accomplishment, for WUFO was the only college team to score against Zulu in this tournament (with a zone no less).

Coming off this high the team's spirits felt the next weekend as the snowflakes hit the windshield on the way to the Ultimate Affair at UMass. In addition to the finger-numbing weather, the prospect of playing all club teams (as opposed to college teams) killed WoWUFO's spirits. The Ephs trudged through two uncontestable defeats: the first to the Smithereens (you may have read about them in the New York Times) and the second to XS.

Between games the players huddled in heated cars trying to defrost, but even the socks and plastic bags for their feet

continued on page 9

Water polo falls 9-8 in Division II Easterns final to Queens College

Last weekend the water polo team hosted the Division II Eastern Championships. The team entered the tournament seeded second among the top teams on the East Coast. The seven other teams participating included Queens College, Duke University, Johns Hopkins University, the University of Maryland, George Washington University, Amherst College, and Bowdoin College.

Williams first played Maryland on Saturday afternoon. The Ephs played strong press defense and shot consistently to beat Maryland 12-3. The win helped fire the team up for the next game, Saturday evening against George Washington.

GW played with a rough and tumble style, but the Williams team managed to stay calm and methodically crushed the District of Columbia 10-3. The victory earned Williams a place in the final Championship round on Sunday. The competition was Queens College who had been seeded first going into the tournament and who had also crushed two opposing teams on Saturday.

The teams were fairly even—Williams still clashed with Queens' strength. The two traded goals in an intense aquatic confrontation which kept the crowd on its feet. In the final quarter the score was tied until Queens scored a four-meter penalty shot with a minute and forty seconds remaining.

Williams attempted a final strike on the Queens net, but was unable to counter the enemy goal. The final score was Williams 8, Queens 9. Williams scorers included Andy Kaplinsky '90, Than Healy '91, and Dan Snyder '89.

The All-American team named from the New England tournament which Williams won two weeks ago includes several Williams players. Will Dudley '89, Kaplinsky, Healy, and Gavin Webb '92 were named first team All-American. Senior Dave Cantor was named second team All-American. Webb was also named tournament MVP for his outstanding play in goal. Three Williams players were named first team All-American for their performance in the Easterns tournament: Kaplinsky, Healy, and Webb. Kaplinsky was also named runner-up tournament MVP.

The team's final record is 16-5. They are New England Champions and second on the East Coast. The season was outstanding for everyone, but especially for the seniors whose strong desire led the team—Captains Cantor and Dudley, Dane Dudley, Mike Desenne, Chris Giglio, Trey Meckel, Darren McSpeddon, and Jeff Reardon. Congratulations to the entire water polo team for a great record.

Decisions handed down

CAP recommends eight professors for tenure

by Ellen Drought
Eight professors will be recommended by the Committee on Appointments and Promotions for tenure to the Board of Trustees later this month, several faculty members said last week. 13 professors had applied to the CAP for tenure.

According to Dean of the Faculty John Reichert, the trustees will make the final decision on the CAP's recommendations on January 21.

The assistant professors to be recommended for tenure are Colin Adams, mathematics; Wendy Brown, political science; William Darrow, religion and history; Darra Goldstein, Russian; Paul Karabinos, geology; Thomas Kohut, history; Michael MacDonald, political science; and Jim Shepard, English.

Adams specializes in hyperbolic structures and topology. He graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1978 and received his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin at Madison in 1983.

Michael MacDonald

Brown's teaching fields are ancient, early modern and modern political philosophy; 20th century political thought; feminist theory; women and politics; and international relations. She received her B.A. from the University of

Wendy L. Brown

California at Santa Cruz in 1977 and her Ph.D. from Princeton University in 1983.

Darrow specializes in Islamic and Near Eastern studies. He graduated from the University of California at

William R. Darrow

Santa Barbara in 1970 and received his Ph.D. in 1981 from Harvard University. He taught at the Firdausi University in Mahad, Iran from 1975-6.

Goldstein graduated from Vassar in 1973 and received her Ph.D. in Slavic

Thomas A. Kohut

Languages and Literatures from Stanford University in 1983. She also spent time at the University of Helsinki and Leningrad State University. She served as Adjunct Curator at the Williams College Museum of Art from 1985-6

Paul Karabinos

and has arranged Williams' exchange program with the Tbilisi University in the Soviet Republic of Georgia. Karabinos specializes in metamorphic petrology and structural geology. He

continued on page 6

Salem Gafsi, 17

by Scojin Kim

Salem Gafsi '92 was killed December 31 when a powerful explosive device detonated while he and three friends were working with it in a garage, according to the Washington Post. Three other Maryland teen-agers were also killed in the explosion.

Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards notified the Williams community of the accident in a letter distributed last Wednesday morning.

Gafsi lived in Bethesda, Maryland, where he graduated from Walt Whitman High School in three years. He was described by friends and teachers as a highly intelligent and science-oriented student. He was a National Merit Finalist. Gafsi's friends described him as a cosmopolitan and easy to get along with. "At an entry dinner, we gave him 'The Too Cosmopolitan for Williams' award. He was used to going to clubs and restaurants and it took him a while to get used to it here," said Brian Schweswelder '92.

"He had this great telephone voice from talking on the phone so much with his girlfriend. He set up a lot of the entry's screw your roommate dates," recalled David Riker '92.

Gafsi had varied interests, according to his family and friends. He spoke Japanese and classical Arabic, skills learned while an exchange student in Japan and in Tunisia. He was also interested in oil painting.

Four killed in explosion

Montgomery County, Maryland Police Department spokesman Sgt. Harry Geelbreug was quoted in the Washington Post as saying that the blast, which occurred shortly after 3:00 a.m., blew out the garage doors and windows at the house rented by the mother of Gustavo Machado, a sophomore at Williams.

Gafsi and Dov Fischman, a sophomore at the University of Maryland, bore the brunt of the blast and were killed instantly, according to the Post. Machado and Bruno Perone, a sophomore at the University of California at Berkeley, died later at Suburban Hospital in Bethesda, police said.

According to his friends in his freshman entry, Williams D. Gafsi, who was taking Chemistry 201 at Williams, probably built the pipe bomb out of scientific curiosity.

"Knowing Sam, he probably did it just to see how powerful a bomb he could build," said Schweswelder. He shared a suite with Gafsi and Chris Givler '92.

Both Schweswelder and Givler felt that the first news articles in the Washington Post regarding the tragedy sensationalized it.

"The accident came after the Pan Am incident and the Post tried to connect the accident to terrorism," said Schweswelder. Givler added, "The Post used two quotes from Sam's girlfriend, Sharni Banik, which his parents and Sharni denied or felt had been taken out of context."

Banik was quoted as saying that after the explosion on the Pan Am jet, which crashed December 21 after a bomb went off, Gafsi told her that he and his friends could "do better than that."

"The Post made it sound so bad, portraying the trio as deranged, manic kids who spent a lot of time building bombs and possibly getting materials from the underground," said Givler.

According to the Berkshire Eagle, police have ruled out terrorism as a cause for the building of the device.

Gafsi's funeral was held Wednesday at the Muslim Community Center in Silver Springs, Maryland. Williams College chaplain, the Reverend Carol Pepper and his junior advisors, Walter Hayne and Andrew Perrotti, as well as entymates Tomio Komatsu, John Emerson, Michael Heidkamp, Michael Muriel, Givler and Schweswelder attended.

Gafsi is survived by his parents, and a younger sister, Sonya.

A memorial service will be held in Griffin Hall, Room 3, at 4:00 p.m. on Thursday, with a reception following the service in the Faculty House.

Faculty approves minority course requirement for class of 1993

by Dan Shwire

After more than two hours of debate at a meeting last month, the faculty voted to adopt a proposal by the Committee on Educational Policy that modifies the current distribution requirement to include a course on minority or non-Western studies.

The motion passed by a vote of 70 to 13, with 13 abstentions, surpassing the 60 per cent majority that is required to make curricular changes. The real battle, however, was fought over a motion introduced by Associate Professor of History Thomas Spear that would have returned the proposal to the CEP for additional study.

Spear spoke at length about the impact the proposal would have on enrollments, noting that he feared class sizes would grow even further as a result of the new requirement.

"The increase in enrollment [in courses satisfying the requirement] will be skewed to more popular courses. We cannot teach well in courses of 50-70 students. We will see a prevalence in caps of popular courses. Is that the way we want to teach at Williams?"

He added that the CEP had not made sufficient efforts to consult professors in the departments affected by the proposal to ask for their views on enrollment pressures. In his recommitment motion, he asked the CEP to reconsider the staffing implications of their proposal, and to do so through consultation with faculty in Afro-American Studies and Area Studies.

Dean of the Faculty John Reichert said that the CEP had been remiss in not consulting more faculty members,

"We will see a prevalence in caps of popular courses. Is that the way we want to teach at Williams?"

but added that the college had been attempting to address possible enrollment pressures. He said that the college has recently hired several new professors and currently had three visiting professors teaching courses that would be included in the new requirement.

One concern that many faculty members had with Spear's recommitment motion was that it might postpone the date that the new requirement would take effect. As introduced by the CEP, the requirement would begin with the class of 1993. CEP Chair Saul Kassir said that date would not be feasible if the proposal was returned to his committee.

Motion failed

After discussion, the recommitment motion failed by a margin of 51-45, a vote that cleared the way for the final vote on the proposal.

"I understood what the issues were," Kassir said later of the recommitment motion, "but my impression was if the recommitment had passed, the CEP would have come back with exactly the same proposal. It was the best possible proposal under the circumstances."

The faculty did adopt one amendment to the CEP's original proposal, changing the deadline for fulfillment of the requirement to the end of the junior, rather than sophomore, year. Associate Professor of Economics Ralph

continued on page 6

New College Bookstore owner plans textbook sales

by Mary Moulé

The College Bookstore on Spring Street has been purchased by Bob Beres '84 from former owner Betsy Burbank. Beres said that he hopes the new Bookstore will begin selling textbooks soon.

Beres said he was interested in getting into the textbook business, and he said the college thinks it can renegotiate its exclusive ten-year contract with Joseph Dewey, owner of the Williams Bookstore. He added that the college hasn't committed itself to selling textbooks through his store, but he is working with the management to plan the changes that will take place if the deal comes through.

"Textbooks are tough to deal with, but I really think that it can work," manager George Couscoule said. He added that if the bookstore takes over the textbook business, they would consider keeping textbooks in open stacks in the basement of the building, and allowing students to drop off lists and come back for their books later - procedures that could shorten lines and make the process less frustrating for students.

College Books?

The College Bookstore on Spring Street has been sold. The new owner, Robert Beres, hopes to capture all or part of the college's textbook contract. (K. Thomas)

"Some things are inevitable," Richard Simpson, the Bookstore's other manager, said, "and lines and high prices are found even at larger universities, but we will do our best because it's our business. If we're providing the service, we'd better care for it."

continued on page 4

NEH grants school $250,000 for humanities

by Rajesh Swaminathan

On December 15, the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) awarded a $250,000 challenge grant to the Center for the Humanities and Social Sciences at Williams College.

"The grant will enable the center to move forward with diverse programs for faculty development," said Mark C. Taylor, professor of religion and director of the center.

The money, he said, will be used to establish an endowment for the center, which aims to examine fundamental issues of human society and thought as manifested in art, literary traditions and sociopolitical institutions. Taylor added, "The purpose of the center is to promote faculty research and development by creating opportunities for faculty members to participate in seminars and engage in discussions with visiting scholars."

"The greatest demand on faculty at a place like Williams is teaching. It is difficult for faculty to engage in research as much as either they or the college would like them to." For this reason, he said a facility such as the center is very important at an institution like Williams.

A challenge grant differs from a simple grant in that matching funds must be raised by the school. As stipulated by the terms of the award, the center must raise an additional $1 million by July 31, 1991 through the Alumni and Development Office.

"In short, for every $1 the center receives from the government, we must raise $4," Taylor said.

Local story picked up by Weekly World News.

PAGE 4

Crouchley scores 1000th point in rout of North Adams State.

PAGE 6

Williams Chess is king at Pan-Am Championship.

PAGE 7

The Williams Record

New requirement - unnecessary?

When the faculty overwhelmingly voted to accept the CEP's proposal for a modified divisional requirement that includes a course in minority or non-Western studies, they neglected serious concerns about the efficacy and consequences of such a course of action. Most students will not even notice the requirement since nearly 80 percent take such a course before graduation and about 60 percent do so by the end of their junior year.

The new requirement is disturbing, however, for that very reason. What is the sense in mandating a course in a field that four out of every five students are already exploring? Rather than inspiring the other 20 percent of students to develop an appreciation for non-Western culture, the requirement seems likely to foster an attitude of discontent among the very students it is trying to reach.

Several years ago, the college eliminated its foreign language requirement because students with no interest in languages were retarding the academic pursuits of those with a serious interest in the study of language. Instead of broadening their horizons by studying a foreign language, students were groaning their way through courses they had no interest in solely for the purpose of fulfilling a requirement. Their unhappiness in class detracted from the experience of other students in the course.

What is to prevent such a situation from arising from the CEP's new requirement? It seems likely that most students trying to fulfill the requirement will initially flock to such popular courses as "Modern Japan" and "Sage, the Way, and Zen," only to find strict enrollment caps. As a result, they will be channeled into smaller classes which they may find less interesting.

This is not to suggest that Williams students are unwilling or unable to appreciate courses in non-Western cultures. The fact that 80 percent are already taking such a class clearly shows that this is not the case. Undoubtedly, however, there are some students here who do not wish to take these courses, and requiring them to do so will hurt other students more than it will help them.

"[The requirement] may harm the academic credibility of the programs we're talking about," Associate Professor of History Thomas Spear said during the faculty debate. "What students now find challenging and attractive may become less so. The requirement might do more harm than good."

The requirement is a poor idea not because it addresses unimportant issues or because it will put an excessive strain on the system, but because it is simply unnecessary. The large number of students now taking courses in minority and non-Western studies are doing so because they want to, not because they have to. If the college increases the number and variety of its course offerings in those areas, it is likely to find even more students taking the classes.

George Santayana said, "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it." It would be horrible and short-sighted for the faculty to so blithely ignore the lessons they learned when they abolished the language requirement.

SKELLY

On The Record...

"Some things are inevitable, and lines and high prices are found even at larger universities, but we will do our best because it's our business. If we're providing the service, we'd better care for it."

--Richard Simpson, a manager of the College Bookstore. The bookstore, after its purchase by Bob Beres '54, may begin selling textbooks.

"The [College Bookstore] decided that they wanted to get out of the textbook business, and they sold their rights."

--Joseph Dewey, owner of the Williams Bookstore, who has four years remaining on his exclusive contract with the college to sell textbooks.

"My sense was the faculty was content with the outcome.... In any case, the issue is now moot."

--College President Francis Oakley on the new minority or non-Western studies requirement which passed last month's faculty meet with a vote of 70-13.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible, not more than 500 words, and must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication, either typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-6529.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor
TRAVIS PIERSON, Managing Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor ANN MANTIL & STEPHANIE JONES, Arts Editors
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors
BILL PHILPOTT, Layout Editor

News Assistants
DAN SKWIRE, BILL SAVADOVE, ELLEN DROUOHT
OREG HART & SARA DUBOW
Sports Assistants
STEVE BRODY & KERR HOUSTON
Assistant Layout Editor
ASHESH SHAH

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Letters

Limiting toxics use begins at home

To the Editor:

I was disturbed upon returning from Thanksgiving vacation to see a sign posted near the computer center warning students to avoid contact with the lawn because it had been chemically treated. I know that many Williams students have been active in working to limit the flow of toxic chemicals in Massachusetts through advocacy of the pending Toxics Use Reduction Act. To find an example of unnecessary toxics use in my own backyard was troubling.

It is a myth that herbicides pose no threat to animal or human life. Since their large-scale introduction after World War II, many have been linked to decreased reproductive abilities in birds and to malignant tumor development in humans. If we are serious about toxic use reduction, and I hope that as a community we are, the effort must begin on our own campus.

Rachel Carson, in her landmark expose of toxic chemical abuse published over 25 years ago, wrote of the task that continues to challenge us today:

[The earth's vegetation is part of a web of life in which there are intimate and essential relations between plants and the earth, between plants and other plants, between plants and animals. Sometimes we have no choice but to disturb these relationships, but we should do so thoughtfully, with full awareness that what we do may have consequences remote in time and place.

I hope that we at Williams will give thought to this challenge and in the future implement a biologically sound alternative to herbicide spray.

Barbara Myers
Graduate Student, 1990

No tenure for Wright? Williams was wrong

To the Editor:

I was dismayed to hear recently that the English Department had not granted tenure to Lisa Wright.

Those of us who have had Professor Wright in class know why she has earned the reputation as one of the best professors on campus. Her dedication to teaching and the high caliber of her professional work have helped her attain the status of a "must take" professor—one of the few members of the faculty whose every student should try to take just for the experience, even if they have no prior interest in the subject matter.

Even in my most generous frame of mind, I cannot understand the tragedy that has been perpetrated. That the Administration accepted the decision of the Department baffles me still further. If Williams is indeed committed to the ideals of teaching excellence and scholarly achievement, it cannot afford to reject the contributions of one of its most valuable faculty.

I hold my Williams experience and the College as a whole in the highest regard. Yet I can't help but feel a sense of betrayal that an institution in which I placed such confidence would make a decision that cannot be in the best interest of the Department, the college or the student body.

Brad Shipp '87

Don't use funds to promote "traitor"

To the Editor:

What is with our Chaplain? It's not enough that she plaster the Chaplain's bulletin board with her own political agenda (anti-Contra, anti-Reagan, anti-anything right of Karl Marx). It's not enough that she use her office as a bully pulpit for her view of political issues facing all of us as Americans. Now our beloved Chaplain has begun to use money delegated for official use by the Chaplain's office to subsidize blatantly political speakers.... And what a speaker she chose to shower with that money.

Last year, I wrote a letter complaining about the political propaganda littering the Chaplain's bulletin board. Well, it's still there, implying the moral superiority of her political convictions. But I decided not to waste my time complaining again, having realized that no one really cares whether or not the Chaplain likes Reagan or how she feels about the trade deficit or what her opinion is on SDI. The Chaplain has no right to use the official property of her office to promote her own private, political views, but once she does, nobody must care what those views are a nyhow. You don't go to a dentist to fix your plumbing. His professional opinion on the condition of your piping would be worthless, as is the professional opinion of the Chaplain when it comes to politics. Certainly a chaplain is not hired to teach us about foreign policy.

Regardless of my opposition to the Chaplain's unwanted political proclamations, however, at least she has always adhered to political views which may be deemed non-traitorous and has confined her words of wisdom to a much-ignored bulletin board. With the advent of Philip Agee to our campus, however, our Chaplain has broadened her political horizons. The Chaplain's Office sponsored Agee who, by all accounts, deserves the label "traitor". This ex-CIA man left the agency, sharing the wealth of his knowledge with such friends of America as Cuba and the Soviet Union. He also published the names of over 200 CIA agents, one of whom was found shot dead soon after the publication of his name and address. France, England, and Holland joyfully deported him while the United States Supreme Court upheld the denial of his passport. What a guy!

As a member of the Williams College community, I resent any money going to a man who was personally responsible for the death of another human being and the jeopardization of the national security of my country. As a religious member of this community, I resent the Chaplain's expenditure of money, appropriated to serve the spiritual needs of me and many others like me, to such a despicable human being. Political propaganda defacing a bulletin board is one thing. The misuse of funds for the promotion of a traitor to my country is quite another.

Russ Day '91

Students must act to eliminate campus racism

by Rodney D. Cunningham '88
Each week, I am never certain before-hand of the exact day, I open my mailbox to discover a copy of the Williams Record which is mailed in me. Needless to say, I pour over it with enthusiasm because I am anxious to find out what is going on back in the Purple Valley.

I have noted, with interest, that of the six issues that I have received so far (beginning with October 4), four of those six have devoted sections to stories on racial tensions in America, some more in depth than others. The articles point to what we have long been accustomed to reading about: racial slurs, racial violence, note-slipping, and segregated socializing. One need not be confined to an issue of the Record to read of these things, as national papers almost assuredly run similar stories on a daily basis.

But what prompts me to write is not my abhorrence of the visible evils of racism, nor is it shock after reading the articles, but rather a challenge to Williams students to actually do something about these evils, to do more than read about them, to do more than attend lectures or workshops (if you do), to do more than leave the difficulties associated with change to those who desire change the most.

That racism is bad and that we should weed out any signs of it has become axiomatic on the Williams campus. No one truly believes that racism is good for our environment. What has not become self-evident is a concrete definition of racism. No student should be willing to accept racism as being merely visible acts of domination of one race over another. The definition encompasses far more than that.

It has become easy for us to latch on to the emotional disgust that is triggered by acts of racial violence because we actually see these things happening. When we watch the television and see people being beaten by police, holed by water cannon, and assaulted with tear gas, can we remain unaffected? But being affected in Williamstown is the easy part of dealing with the above types of racism because we rarely experience any such horrors on the campus (and thankfully).

We should no longer ignore the contributions of non-whites to the quilt of American history.

What has become difficult for many students, both at Williams and elsewhere, is the reality of more subtle and hard-to-detect forms of racism. On many campuses, the subject of curriculum content comes to mind. By now, the entire nation is well aware of the debate over supposedly Western and non-Western education, and why there is a debate. Rather than recapitulate the arguments, I'll merely state that the time for American education to be truly American is now. We should no longer ignore the contributions of non-whites to the quilt of American history. Many students have tried to institute change on this matter and have received some support. By-and-large, however, these students have come against stiff resistance (or apathy) and have been condemned as "leftists" or "radicals". I urge caution to those that are quick to attach labels of any sort before understanding the motivation behind the action. To point specifically to Williams, I call your attention to the Jenness Takeover (1988). Here, I do not offer an opinion on the (de)merits of the takeover, or whether or not the takeover was appropriate. Instead, I focus on the direction of the student body's reaction. Most students found the protest to be wrong and out of place. That is the problem.

The majority of Williams students are extremely uncomfortable with anything that is not similar or identical to their beliefs. That is to say, deviation from the norm is not truly accepted, nor is serious challenge actually tolerated. To return to the Jenness Takeover, is the takeover the important issue? I am inclined to say no, and to maintain that the heart of the takeover is contained in the issues raised by the C.A.R.E. organization, and why it raised them. Most students did not focus on that. Do not interpret my mentioning of C.A.R.E. as being partial to its actions, or its advocate, but rather as a push towards accepting the fact that different people can possibly have different goals for Williams, that there may not be a complete harmony of interests. Of course, there is more than a consensus that Williams students should receive a good education, and I heartily agree that they do. Nevertheless, it is as complete as it should be? And is a true picture of American history being painted when one artist, one brush, and one color being used?

I have given just one example of subtle racism (curriculum), and at this point I turn to insensitivity because that too is a major part of the Williams experience.

I fear that the majority of Williams students have attempted to package the rest of us into neat, little boxes of definitions. Perhaps these categorizations are inadvertent, but they are pervasive, annoying, and need to be changed.

I am reminded of one evening when I was watching "A Different World," and a fellow student commented that "Maggie is the only white one on the show." I questioned, "Is that important?" The student replied that it seemed "weird, that's all." I returned, "No more weird than me being here." Finally the student concluded, "I guess I never thought of it that way." The point, again, is that most Williams students see things from one perspective, not realizing that there can be more than one opinion. To quote Ralph Ellison (1964):

"Prefabricated Negroes are sketched on sheets of paper and superimposed upon the Negro community; then when someone thrusts his head through the pages and yells, 'Watch out there, Jack, there's people under here,' they are shocked and indignant."

The example of the character "Maggie" points to something even deeper, that one white student in the midst of black students is bizarre, while one black student in the midst of white students is acceptable, and that the show is not about college life but about black college life. I cannot deny that most of the actors on the show are black, but I raise the concept that whites are viewed as the norm, and that anything else is merely an adaptation. Example two: "yuppy" and "buppy." Does "yuppy" truly mean "young urban professional," or does it imply whites only, with "buppy" being its derivative?

My final point is one of representation, and for this I turn to an article in the New York Times (October 21, 1988, p.A15). The article reads:

"When Dr. Alvin Poussaint, associate professor of psychiatry at Harvard University, goes to certain kinds of parties, he tends to be on his guard. 'I've been at parties where whites have asked how black people feel about

The point is obvious. One black person cannot possibly speak for the entire black community.

Jesse Jackson, or if people in the black community feel Tawana Brawley was telling the truth," said Dr. Poussaint, who is black. "Then they crowd around. He says his black patients and students are similarly beset. 'They complain of having to be representative for the entire black race,' he said.

Indeed, as the growing number of black professionals, managers and academics mingle with white colleagues and supervisors at work-related social functions, many report acute anxiety about conversations that veer suddenly to 'black' issues.

"It makes blacks uncomfortable, especially in social settings," Dr. Poussaint said. "They feel they are being tested."

The point is obvious. One black person cannot possibly speak for the entire black community. Unfortunately, most Williams students do not realize this and have been quick to attribute a single opinion to a larger populace. To return to the same article in the NYT:

"Oh, we've all had those questions put to us by white party guests in between the Swedish meatballs and the white wine," said Chris Clark, a lawyer and co-author with Sheila Rush of How to Get Along with Black People: A Handbook for White People (Third World Press, 1977).

Clark claims that she has found a way to circumvent "being black 24 hours a day." She remarks, "When I get a question like that, I just respond by saying, 'What do white people think?'"

What conclusions can we now draw? 1) Racism is not restricted to overt acts. 2) Insensitivity to non-whites must go. 3) The opinions of one do not imply an opinion of many.

I write to challenge you to lift yourself out of comfortable apathy and to prompt you into action. I realize that I have given a somewhat grim picture, and I realize that an individual within a majority may not actually be reflective of the majority. My point is that difference on the Williams campus is the commonality that all students share. Rather than stifle that difference, offer it an opportunity to flourish.

and nachos concession would furnish an incentive other than alcohol for people to go to all campus parties. It would also provide the Log with operating funds. (The food concession doesn't presently fund the Log because few people ever go there.) Furthermore, such a concession would assure that "real food" is actually available to be consumed with the house-provided alcohol.

Twenty-one nights could be left intact on Wednesdays, and might actually be funded by the Wednesday through Saturday food concession proceeds combined with 21 night alcohol revenue. Mondays and Tuesdays could be made available for campus groups, house saunas parties and the like. What do you back in Williamstown think? This impresses me as a much better alternative than the College Council's

Martin S. Frey, III '88

Letters

Creativity could cure "dead horse"

To the Editor:

As a recent graduate, I have been following the "Log Saga" in the Record with some interest. In one sense I suppose Jim Hodgkins is right: the Log, in its present form, is something of a dead horse. Only a change in the drinking age could restore the Log to its former glory, and that's not about to happen. On the other hand, I don't believe that creative solutions to the Log's troubles have ever been sought. Allow me to suggest one.

The Log used to be a sort of "never ending all campus party with food." I think that accurately describes the Log's old appeal. It doesn't seem to me that the College's "party policy in any way precludes the recurrence of that phenomenon. Why not make the Log available to residential houses as an all campus party venue on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights? The College's bar could be closed and locked, Security could guarantee that only Williams students enter the building, and Food Service could sell pizza, nachos and other food items from the kitchen throughout the duration of the party. The enforcement of the drinking age would be the responsibility of the party sponsors, as it is at any other campus party.

Not only would this sort of policy revive the spirit of the old Log, but it would also benefit the campus social life in new ways. Small houses like Chadbourne, Bascom, and Woodbridge would have a centrally located venue at which to hold all campus parties. Food Service's provision of a pizza

Freshmen, Sophomores, Juniors, lend us your time.

The Record is looking for people interested in all aspects of journalism.

The Record is always in production, offering the opportunity to learn and practice valuable skills.

ADVERTISING
BUSINESS LAYOUT

NEWS PHOTOGRAPHY

Information Session on Wednesday, January 11, 1989 at 8:00 in the Record office (B12, Baxter).

FEATURES
SPORTS
GRAPHICS

Groups call for end to college rankings

College Press Service

Two of the nation's largest college groups called last week for an end to the "guidebooks" and media lists that rank campuses by how high their students score on admissions tests. The American Council on Education and the College Board attacked lists ranking schools solely on their students' scores.

The recent U.S. News & World Report guide which placed Williams third among liberal arts colleges, uses scores as a major criterion for placing schools in its list.

The groups blasted many of the charts that purport to rank the quality of a particular college as subjective and meaningless.

"Students should be looking at institutions because they're exciting places and they want to be there, not because they're number one on a bloody chart," said Donald Stewart, President of the College Board.

Robert Atwell, president of the American Council on Education, and Stewart also warned that students are flocking unwisely to schools deemed "selective" by these publications while ignoring good schools that don't appear on the lists.

Many such lists, they claim, mislead prospective students by attempting to determine the quality of a certain college through the admissions exam scores of its students.

nothing about the quality of what goes on in those institutions," Atwell said.

In a joint letter sent to thousands of college presidents and higher education officials, Atwell and Stewart urged institutions to report scores in ranges, rather than averages or medians. They suggest reporting the highest and lowest scores of the middle 50 percent of the admitted freshman class.

Edward Fiske, who produces the Fiske Guide to Colleges each year for the New York Times, agreed. "I support their recommendation. In fact, I've already done it," he said. "Students misinterpreted median scores. By printing the range of scores, you let them know what schools are in their ballpark."

College lists usually don't inform prospective students about how well a school will accommodate their individual goals and needs, Fiske added. "When you do a ratings list, you not only have to say the school is good, you have to say for whom."

Campus officials have complained that such lists and guides, put out annually by groups ranging from the Yale Daily News to Playboy magazine, which ranks "party schools," are unfair and destructive.

Atwell and Stewart's plea has seemingly had little effect: so far, no publication has announced plans to discontinue the printing of lists ranking colleges and universities.

In fact, the same day the educators called for an end to the ranking of schools, Business Week magazine released a list of the "best business schools." It ranked Northwestern University's number one.

The Irish Alps await!

Despite the lack of snow last week, students battled for berths on the Brodie bus in order to participate in everyone's second favorite winter study pastime. (K. Thomas)

Kavanaugh named Williams-Oxford director

by Sallie Han

Associate Professor of Psychology Robert D. Kavanaugh has been appointed director of the Williams-Oxford Program. He will take his post at Oxford University beginning July 1, 1989.

Kavanaugh succeeds Professor of Theatre Jean-Bernard Buckley, who has been director of the program since July 1987. The position is usually held for two years.

"I'm very happy to have the appointment," said Kavanaugh. "I think it's a wonderful program and an excellent opportunity for students."

The Williams-Oxford Program, now in its fourth year, is run in conjunction with Exeter College, one of Oxford's 35 colleges. Approximately 30 Williams juniors participate in the program, living as members of the Oxford community and studying in the University's tutorial system. The academic year at Oxford is divided into three terms; students take a required two-term seminar in Contemporary British Culture, and one tutorial each term.

As director of the program, Kavanaugh's main responsibilities will include assisting students to find tutors in their areas of interest and establishing relations between the Oxford professor and the students. "I think that the Oxford community is particularly appreciative of the attention Williams pays to the program," said Kavanaugh.

Williams has a professor there at Oxford who pays detailed attention to how students fit into the Oxford University system.

"I would say that my goal is not to change the program so much," he said, "but to make sure the tutorials remain high quality educational experiences." Kavanaugh hopes to maintain a program which is solid but still flexible enough to meet the changing interests of students.

Kavanaugh was dean of freshmen from 1984 to 1987. He will be acting chair, second semester, of the psychology department.

Robert D. Kavanaugh

College Bookstore may sell textbooks

continued from page 1

Dewey has exclusive contract. Six years ago, the college granted the textbook contract to the Dewey. The [College Bookstore] decided that they wanted to get out of the textbook business, and they sold their rights," Dewey said, adding that he is still paying them a large sum for those rights.

College officials negotiated the contract because they felt it was more efficient than the previous system. Formerly, both stores sold textbooks, a situation that Simpson said brought confusion and frustration to both students and the bookstores.

Despite the College Bookstore's claim that textbooks are not the most profitable part of the book trade, Dewey said that he depends on them for most of his sales. "There's not enough business here for two trade bookstores."

Dewey said he is willing to work with the college to improve the textbook situation. He added that he would like to be allowed to use more of the building that he currently rents from the college. With more room, he said he could eliminate long lines by using open shelving for textbooks.

Dewey said that the college has not spoken to him about taking book orders elsewhere. "I hope I will be able to enjoy the rights to sell textbooks after I finish paying for those rights in three and one half years." He said that a decision by the college to order its textbooks at another store would probably put him out of business.

Further changes

Couscoule said that other changes are being planned by the College Bookstore's new management. First and foremost will be the introduction of a computerized inventory system, which he said will reduce the time that is now required to look after his stock. "I would like to eliminate the frustration for everyone involved."

Another possible change is expansion into the antique store and perhaps even the large basement below the bookstore. This would permit a larger inventory and Couscoule said he is considering selling art and computer supplies as well as books.

"If there's a need, we're willing to take suggestions," Couscoule said, "and we are hoping to get feedback from the college and community." Simpson said that the store will be stocking more academic titles such as the Norton Anthologies.

Beres is a 1954 Williams graduate who sold his business in New York to return to Williams. He said he plans to be actively involved in the new business. "I don't believe in absentee management."

Simpson and Couscoule will remain as the bookstore's managers, and they said they plan to work with the new owner to provide more services that will appeal to students and faculty at Williams. Simpson and Couscoule have worked at the College Bookstore under the last three owners, and they said they hope to provide some continuity with the previous affairs of the bookstore.

For those of you who are too lazy to read The Week in Review...

U.S. Shoots Down Two Libyan Planes
United States jets shot down two Libyan planes over international waters Wednesday. According to U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Vernon Walters, the two Libyan MIG-23's were heavily armed. Libya, however, claims that the jets were unarmed reconnaissance planes. Consequently, Libya called for an emergency session of the U.N. Security Council to condemn the U.S. action. At the session's first meeting, Walters exhibited photos of the two jets which apparently showed them to be carrying missiles. The U.S. is expected to veto any Council resolution condemning its actions. The Defense Department has made available to the public video and audio tapes showing the encounter from the cockpit of one of the U.S. jets involved.

Japan's Emperor Hirohito Dies
Emperor Hirohito, Japan's monarch since 1926, died Saturday at the age of 87. During his lengthy reign, Hirohito saw his nation become a global military power during World War II, and then rebuild from the ashes of their defeat to develop into one of the world's leading economies. The emperor's role in Japanese affairs has been mainly ceremonial, especially since the end of World War II, when he admitted to the Japanese people that he was not divine. Hirohito died from cancer of the duodenum, a condition he developed about one year ago.

Dukakis Won't Run For Governor
Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis announced last Tuesday that he will not run for re-election in 1990. His decision has clouded the gubernatorial race, leaving the field without a clear front-runner. Now serving his third term as state governor, Dukakis declined to comment on whether he would run for President again in 1992, though he admitted that his losing bid for President was hurt by the time he had to devote to running Massachusetts. Dukakis has been dogged by a large state budget deficit since returning to state politics after the election.

Compiled by Greg Hart from the Boston Globe and the Berkshire Eagle.

Dirty Rotten Scoundrels: not so rotten

by D. W. Maze

Dirty Rotten Scoundrels is a comedy about two aristocratic con men on the French Riviera, played by Michael Caine and Steve Martin. The film is a remake of a 1964 movie, Bedtime Story, which starred Marlon Brando.

Martin plays Freddy Benson, a sleazy, bumbling American out to make it rich quick. His arrival in the Riviera poses a threat to Englishman Lawrence Jamieson, played by Caine, who uses finesse and charm to con women into supporting his extravagant lifestyle.

Martin's hook is a woe of a tale of a grandmother hovering between life and death. He tells female backers that only an extremely expensive operation will save her. Caine, taking a more profitable role, allows prospective contributors to think he is a prince of a small country that desperately needs funds.

When the two meet on the train to Caine's home, Martin is trying to scam a meal from a woman in the dining car. Caine looks on with knowledgeable and "poor American" smirks. Martin learns of Caine's masterful charlatanism, however, and threatens to tell all unless Caine teaches him how to be the great impostor.

While learning the art of extracting money from wealthy dames, Martin is Caine's indentured servant, and receives no money from swindles he participates in as part of his "education." Caine even makes him play the role of his retarded brother in order to scare away women that Caine has promised to marry.

After Martin decides he has learned the tricks of the trade, the two agree that the Riviera is not big enough for both of them. They make a deal in which the first to swindle $50,000 from a certain woman will stay and reign over the Riviera kingdom of con artistry, while the other will leave and set up shop elsewhere. The second half of the movie is filled with elaborate schemes and somewhat predictable plot twists revealing the pair's shortcomings as swindlers.

Caine as the stereotypical Englishman is subtle and debonair. He uses the money he milks from mostly wealthy wives to support his chateau, wine cellar, garden and donjons to the local museum. Martin, a smile stuck on his constantly over-expressed face, is loud, obvious and wants nothing more than fast cars, fast women and lots of money.

While Caine is reminiscent of Cary Grant, Martin only reminds one of a used car salesman from Detroit. In this movie, he seems more a comedian than an actor. He excels while playing the role of Caine's retarded brother, but during much of his time onscreen, he is strikingly unbelievable and sometimes irritating. His broad portrayal of the American wheeler-dealer lacks depth. Caine sustains his string of excellent performances, providing the subtle laughs of the film. His glib glances, refined movements and highbrow attitude make one wonder if he ever thought of leaving the realm of acting and moving to the French Riviera.

Despite Caine's performance, unexciting dialogue and situations keep the movie from realizing its comic potential. Yet Caine was never known to turn down a role due to a poorly written part—perhaps a charlatan of the silver screen?

Although amusing, Dirty Rotten Scoundrels is predictable and obvious. Several sequences elicit laughter, but many go bankrupt. The film's value lies in its lack of pretension to be anything more than a simple entertainment.

Arts In View

A new exhibition, "Read All About It," presented in conjunction with the Winter Study course "Assignment: The New York Times," opened Saturday, January 7 at WCMA and will run until February 12. At 8:00 PM Wednesday The Emerson String Quartet will present the fourth Thompson Concert of the season in Chapel Hall. "German Expressionist Prints and Paintings," an exhibition at WCMA will open Friday, January 14 and run until March 19. At 3:00 PM Saturday, January 15, Ivan MacDonald, a lecturer and photographer, will lecture on "Monet's Gardens" at the Clark Art Institute. Auditions for Williams Theatre's "For Michael: Contemporary Works III" will be held at 4:00 PM on Monday, January 23.

Local Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas I, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179

Mystic Pizza	7:00 & 9:15	Sat. & Sun. 2:05
The Naked Gun	7:25 & 9:15	Sat. & Sun. 2:05
Tequila Sunrise	7:00 & 9:10
Oliver and Company	6:00	Sat. & Sun. 2:05

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612

Salaam Bombay!	January 10-12	7:00 & 9:15
Crossing Delancey	January 13-14	7:00 & 9:00
Bird	January 15-17	7:30

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873

Twins	7:00 & 9:20	Sat. & Sun. 2:00
Dirty Rotten Scoundrels	7:00 & 9:20	Sat. & Sun. 2:00
Tequila Sunrise	7:10 & 9:25
Land Before Time		Sat. & Sun. 2:00
The Naked Gun	7:10 & 9:25	Sat. & Sun. 2:00

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

Working Girl, Dirty Rotten Scoundrels, The Accidental Tourist, Scrooged, Twins, Tequila Sunrise: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30, Sun-Thurs 1:00 & 3:10

Rain Man: 6:45 & 9:15

The Naked Gun, Oliver and Company (no late show), Crossing Delancey, Hellbound: Hellraiser II: Sun-Thurs 7:15 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:15 & 9:30, Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2558

Rain Man	12:30	3:30	6:40	9:50
Dirty Rotten Scoundrels	12:55	4:10	6:55	9:40
Oliver and Company	12:30	3:30	6:35	8:15
Tequila Sunrise	1:00	3:55	6:50	9:25
Scrooged	1:15	4:00	7:10	9:45
Hellbound: Hellraiser II	12:50	4:05	7:30	9:45
Twins	1:05	3:50	7:05	9:30
Working Girl	1:10	3:40	7:15	9:50
The Naked Gun	1:30	4:20	7:20	9:35
The Accidental Tourist	12:40	4:15	7:00	9:40

Bronfman Auditorium
Tuesday at 7:00 & 9:00
Wednesday at 7:00 & 9:00
Friday at 7:00 and 9:00
Saturday at 2:00

SUMMER HELP NEEDED IN LATIN AMERICA

WORK. SHARE. LIVE. SAVE LIVES.

You can have a summer full of adventure & personal growth while improving health for the people of Latin America. VOLUNTEER!

To be an Amigos volunteer, write: Amigos de las Americas, 3618 Star Lane, Houston, Texas 77057.

Or call: 713-782-5290 or 800-231-7796 (800-392-580 in Texas)

AMIGOS

SPRING BREAK
NASSAU/PARADISE ISLAND
FROM $299.00

PACKAGE INCLUDES:
ROUNDTrip AIR, TRANSFERS, 7 NIGHTS HOTEL, BEACH PARTIES, FREE LUNCH, CRUISE, FREE ADMISSION TO NIGHTCLUBS, TAXES AND MORE!!!

CANCUN PACKAGES ALSO AVAILABLE!!

ORGANIZE SMALL GROUP, EARN FREE TRIP!!

1-800-231-0113
OR
(203) 967-3330

TUFTS UNIVERSITY

Come Daily in the Alley
at the
Elysian Fields Gallery
(formerly The Studio)

Featuring handwoven minuar sweaters and shawls, handcrafted jewelry, 100% silk scarves, country antiques, museum prints, exquisite etcetera.

Hours: Mon-Sat 10:30-5:30 and Sun 12-5:00

Elysian Fields Gallery

Eph's Alley, off Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-4707
Elise and Jonathan Meer '83, Proprietors

Campus Paperback Bestsellers

1. Beloved, by Toni Morrison.
2. The Essential Calvin and Hobbes, by Bill Waterson.
3. The Tommyknockers, by Steven King.
4. The Cat who came for Christmas, by Cleveland Amory.
5. Tales too Ticklish to Tell, by Berke Breathed.
6. Kaleidoscope, by Danielle Steel.
7. The Bonfire of the Vanities, by Tom Wolfe.
8. The Far Side Gallery 3, by Gary Larson.
9. Separated at Birth?, by Spy Magazine, Eds.
10. Silver Angel, by Johanna Lindsey.

Compiled by The Chronicle of Higher Education from information supplied by college stores throughout the country, December 15, 1988. Courtesy of the Association of American Publishers.

We Have A Great Selection of Beautiful Wool Sweaters

And they are on Sale, too!

the Mountain Goat
Water St., Williamstown

Mon.-Sat. 10-6
Thurs. 11-8 PM
Sunday 12-4
458-8445

Discriminating people, you Liberal Arts graduates

You've learned how to distinguish between Ulysses (highly intelligent, but devious) and Hercules (full of drive, but no gray matter).

You can appreciate the differences between George Washington and Benedict Arnold. You know why Othello messed it all up, why Henry V got the girl and the money.

In short, you have a solid understanding of Homo sapiens: You know what kind of animal he is, and whether he's likely to succeed or not. You know about square pegs in round holes.

So why don't you join us. We're a New York management recruiting firm. The book says you've got to be extremely ambitious, highly motivated, enterprising, assertive and articulate—with impressive interpersonal skills. Not too liberal. Not too artsy.

Find out more at your placement center. Submit your resume by Jan. 13 to interview with us Feb. 7.

Human Resource Management

535 Fifth Avenue, 32nd Floor, N.Y., NY 10017
(212) 887-2650
30 Vreeland Road, Forham Park, NJ 07932
(201) 966-0909

WE WANT ENTREPRENEURS

We're looking for College Graduates with the qualities, desire, and get-up-and-go to run their own business.

If you're the one we need, be at the:

OFFICE OF CAREER COUNSELING
(Lower Level)
STETSON

Wednesday, January 18th
7:00 P.M.
For an Information Meeting

All Majors Invited Entrepreneurial Spirit
Is The Only Requirement

Kitchen Professionals
Retailers of Fine Kitchens & Bath Cabinetry
A DIVISION OF ONE OF THE WORLD'S LARGEST KITCHEN WHOLESALERS

FOLLOW-UP ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS: FEB. 24th

YOU QUALIFY FOR INSTANT CREDIT!
Start making credit purchases IMMEDIATELY! We will send you a Members Credit Card at once with NO CREDIT CHECK. Buy any Jewelry, Clothing, Sporting Goods, Watches, Electronics & MORE! All with installment payments out of our "Giant 100+ Page Catalog." Take 12 months to repay. Your personal credit card is a second I.D.—valuable for check cashing, etc. plus your Students Credit Group A-1 reference will be on file to help you obtain other credit cards. So send in your $5 catalog deposit now. (refundable with your first order)

Establish your credit today!
100% Satisfaction Guaranteed (or your Money Back)

MEMBERS P.O. BOX 4649
STUDENTS FORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA 33338

SAVE THIS AD & Come To DRUMMOND CLEANERS
Spring Street, Williamstown
Jim Drummond is at it again... He wants to clean you up!!

SPECIAL SAVINGS On Drycleaning

4 for 2 Similar articles for the price of 2 Jan. 16 to Jan. 21	SWEATERS reg. $3.50 Now $1.50 Jan. 23-Jan. 28
Coats & Parkas reg. $8.50 Now $4.00 Jan. 23-Jan. 28	Household Goods (Drapes, curtains, seat covers, cushion covers, etc.) 50% off $8.96-$11.96

Coupon must be presented when clothes are brought in for cleaning.

Don't forget we're now in North Adams
at The Laundry Club, 41 Union St., (413)-664-6789

Drummond Cleaners 56 Spring St., Williamstown, VT (413) 664-3331
Hoping Laundry 119 Park St., Boston, MA (617) 452-1887
O'Dell's Upholstery 41 Elm St., Haverhill, MA (603) 884-3804

For those of you who are too lazy to read The Week in Review...

U.S. Shoots Down Two Libyan Planes
United States jets shot down two Libyan planes over international waters Wednesday. According to U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Vernon Walters, the two Libyan MIG-23's were heavily armed. Libya, however, claims that the jets were unarmed reconnaissance planes. Consequently, Libya called for an emergency session of the U.N. Security Council to condemn the U.S. action. At the session's first meeting, Walters exhibited photos of the two jets which apparently showed them to be carrying missiles. The U.S. is expected to veto any Council resolution condemning its actions. The Defense Department has made available to the public video and audio tapes showing the encounter from the cockpit of one of the U.S. jets involved.

Japan's Emperor Hirohito Dies
Emperor Hirohito, Japan's monarch since 1926, died Saturday at the age of 87. During his lengthy reign, Hirohito saw his nation become a global military power during World War II, and then rebuild from the ashes of their defeat to develop into one of the world's leading economies. The emperor's role in Japanese affairs has been mainly ceremonial, especially since the end of World War II, when he admitted to the Japanese people that he was not divine. Hirohito died from cancer of the duodenum, a condition he developed about one year ago.

Dukakis Won't Run For Governor
Massachusetts Governor Michael Dukakis announced last Tuesday that he will not run for re-election in 1990. His decision has clouded the gubernatorial race, leaving the field without a clear front-runner. Now serving his third term as state governor, Dukakis declined to comment on whether he would run for President again in 1992, though he admitted that his losing bid for President was hurt by the time he had to devote to running Massachusetts. Dukakis has been dogged by a large state budget deficit since returning to state politics after the election.

Compiled by Greg Hart from the Boston Globe and the Berkshire Eagle.

Eight assistant professors tapped for tenure

continued from page 1

received his B.S. from the University of Connecticut in 1975, and his Ph.D. from the Johns Hopkins University in 1981. Kohut graduated from Oberlin College in 1972 and received his Ph.D. from the University of Minnesota in 1983. He is a 1984 graduate of the Cincinnati Psychoanalytic Institute. He specializes in German history.

MacDonald's areas of concentration are comparative politics, East European and Soviet politics, Western European politics, settler colonialism and political theory. He received his B.A. in 1972 and his Ph.D. in 1983 from the University of California at Berkeley. He is the author of Children of Wrath: Colonial Violence in Northern Ireland. Shepard specializes in creative writing. He is the author of Flights and Paper Dolls, and has contributed fiction to Redbook, Harper's, the Atlantic Monthly and Esquire. He graduated from Trinity College in 1978 and received his M.F.A. from Brown University in 1980.

James R. Shepard

Several faculty members said that the CAP has decided not to recommend for tenure Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright, Assistant Professor of Chemistry Richard Blatchly, Assistant

Darra Goldstein

Professor of Biology Michael Lynes and Assistant Professors of Economics Brian Levy and David Ross.

Colin C. Adams

The issue of tenure will be extensively covered in the January 17 edition of the Record Insider. Articles on the decision process, ramifications of the tenure choices and protests to unpopular decisions will be included in the Insider.

Lecture Calendar

Tuesday
8 PM. Mary Jo Bane from Harvard University Kennedy School of Government will speak on "Welfare Policy After Government Reform," in Lawrence 231.

Wednesday
8 PM. Warren Hoge, an associate editor of the New York Times, will speak on foreign policy coverage. The talk will be at the Sleson Faculty Lounge.

Thursday
7:30 PM. Professor of Religion John Eussen will speak on "Changes: History, Law, Religion." The lecture will be in the Dodd House Living Room.

Athlete of the Week

This week's recipient is senior Missy Crouchley, co-captain of the women's basketball team. Missy scored her 1000th point during the Ephs' 99-44 win over North Adams State College last Friday. She is the second Ephwoman in Williams basketball history to reach this milestone, and has the highest free-throw percentage in Division III.

New course

continued from page 1

Bradburd, who introduced the amendment, argued that delaying the requirement would permit students to fulfill the prerequisites for more advanced courses, enabling them to cover subjects in greater depth.

70 courses satisfy Kassin's demand, citing the fact that six of the nine existing divisional requirements already must be completed by the end of the sophomore year. He added that of the 70 courses that currently satisfy the requirement, 54 are open to freshmen and sophomores. Kassin said after the meeting that he had known there was a good possibility that the requirement would be delayed. One of the strongest supporters of the CEP's proposal was President of the College Francis Oakley. As Dean of the Faculty in 1981, he had introduced a similar proposal, but it never got beyond the CEP. In an interview after the faculty's vote on the proposal, Oakley spoke quite favorably of the meeting's outcome.

"I think the college as a whole has a significant responsibility for its educational program. We do not have a heavy battery of requirements, and our pattern has been always to use a distribu-

The following is the CEP proposal as it was adopted by the faculty on December 14. The vote was 70-13.

Starting with the Class of 1993, each student must complete a graded semester course primarily concerned with: (1) the peoples and cultures of Africa, Asia, Latin America, Oceania, or the Caribbean; or (2) the peoples and cultures of North America which trace their origins to these areas; or (3) Native American peoples and cultures. This course must be completed by the end of the junior year, and may be counted towards the divisional distribution requirement.

The Committee on Appointments and Promotions has committed two extra positions, one in Latin-American History, and one in Afro-American Studies. The resources have been allocated to address the requirement.

In Other Ivory Towers

The Distinguished Visitors Program at the University of Massachusetts has invited black activist Louis Farrakhan to speak there on February 3, according to The Amherst Student. Farrakhan is a minister of the Nation of Islam and has been frequently criticized for his anti-Semitic views. Farrakhan's fee for the appearance is $13,000. The DVP is providing $9,000 of the funding, with the remainder coming from the black fraternity Phi Beta Sigma. Farrakhan has reportedly insisted that security measures such as a bomb squad, metal detectors and extra police officers be provided for his visit, provisions that may cost Phi Beta Sigma an additional $6,000.

Due to state budget woes, UMass will have to reduce its enrollment in future classes. According to the admissions office, out of an entering class of about 4,000, "200 or so" spaces will be cut. In addition, many fewer transfers will be accepted. The cuts were dictated by the state legislature, to cope with a budget deficit of over $600 million.

A student's celebration of the Festival of Lights last December got out of hand when his Chanukah menorah started a small fire, reported The Phoenix. The candles ignited a newspaper and "burned two leaves off my beautiful plant," said the dorm's Resident Assistant. Another student said, "I saw the menorah burning and got a towel, smothered the fire, and threw the menorah in the bathroom sink." Only a window sill in the room was damaged, and no one was hurt. College security later identified three unlit menorahs as fire hazards.

Any Williams students who felt their first semester grades were too low should be thankful they are not at WPI. The WPI Newsmag reported that out of a freshman class of 640 students, 137 failed one class, 62 failed two courses and eight failed all three. Of the 62 who failed two classes, 54 failed both math and science. In contrast, only 31 WPI students received straight A's.

Compiled by Dan Skwire from college newspapers and interviews.

Nassau/Paradise Island CANCUN, MEXICO "SPRING BREAK" FEBRUARY 24 - APRIL 1, 1989 WEEKLY DEPARTURES from $299.00

COMPLETE PACKAGE INCLUDES:
• ROUNDTRIP AIR FROM PHILADELPHIA, NEW YORK, BOSTON, WASHINGTON, DETROIT, CINCINNATI, COLUMBUS AND BUFFALO TO NASSAU/PARADISE ISLAND OR CANCUN, MEXICO.
• ROUNDTRIP TRANSFERS FROM AIRPORT TO HOTEL.
• 7 NIGHTS HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS.
• WELCOME BOTTLE SERVICE AT MOST HOTELS.
• ONE HOUR SUNBATHING ON TUCULIA (CANCUN) PARTY.
• THREE HOUR CRUISE WITH UNLIMITED FUN FUND AND ON BOARD ENTERTAINMENT, (NASSAU/PARADISE ISLAND).
• THREE BEACH PARTIES (ONE WITH FREE LUNCH) MUSIC AND ACTIVITIES (NASSAU).
• EXCLUSIVE FREE ADMISSION TO THE PALACE, WATERLOO AND THE DRUMBEAT CLUB (NASSAU).
• COLLEGE FREE PROGRAMS BY THE NASSAU TOURIST OFFICE.
• ON LOCATION PROFESSIONAL TOUR ESCORT.

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT:
AMERICAN TRAVEL SERVICE
456 GLENBROOK RD.
STAMFORD, CONN. 06906

1-800-231-0113
OR (203) 967-3330 IN CT.
SIGN UP NOW !!

LIMITED SPACE !!
ORGANIZE A SMALL GROUP EARN A FREE TRIP

RICHARD D. SIMPSON G. VINCENT COUSCOLE
the College Book Store
of Williamstown, Inc.

76 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-0008

Chess club celebrates holidays with surprising performance

Over Christmas break, the four members of the Williams College Chess Team tied for sixth place in the 1988 Pan-American Intercollegiate Championship held in New Brunswick, New Jersey. The effort earned the Ephs recognition as the top small college at the tournament.

The championship is an annual tournament that moves from city to city each year. This time, the event was held at the Hyatt Regency and consisted of eight action-packed rounds held from December 26th to the 30th.

Most of the Williams men arrived rested. John Kesh '89, however, flew in at the eleventh hour from North Carolina in typically hectic and heroic fashion. It was thus a great surprise to all when Kesh began to piece together win after win in his strongest performance ever. Kesh set the tone for the Williams team. The Eph squad lost only two matches - one to the eventual winner, Harvard, and one to the 1986 champion, the University of Chicago.

Strong play from all positions Gus Coning '89 played valiantly at board one, fighting off Master after Master in his position as team leader. Gus is ranked as a Candidate Master by the United States Chess Federation, and played the positional chess that is his trademark. David Lerner '90, playing at board two for Williams, employed his usual scoldishly aggressive and imaginative brand of chess. He crushed several Candidate Masters and extricated himself from seemingly hopeless positions throughout the week.

At board three, Brian Bugbee '89 won game after game in his deceptively simple, positional style and demonstrated masterful tactical understanding in round seven against Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. Kesh played the tournament of his life, scoring several pivotal upsets, refuting several unsound sacrifices and performing with his typical tactical and exciting double-edged game.

The atmosphere was tense, with most games lasting four tortuous hours.

Late round heroics The key rounds for Williams were the last three of the eight played. The atmosphere was tense, with most games lasting four tortuous hours. In round six, Williams began a huge surge, crushing Penn State 3.5 to .5. Coning drew a difficult game on board one, Lerner triumphed in a well-conceived and violent counterattack, Bugbee won smoothly, and Kesh triumphed by beating back an unsound assault launched by his opponent.

In round seven, the drama continued when Williams drew heavily favored rival RPI. Although Coning lost to a USCF-rated Senior Master who was undefeated in the tournament, Lerner offset this by crushing a Candidate knights sacrifice. However, Kesh could not quite muster another magical win. The match ended in a tie.

A nail-biting finish In the last round, Williams needed a win for the tie. Bugbee and Kesh both responded to this challenge by winning quickly, guaranteeing at least a tie.

Coning lost to his opponent, in a very close game - the team, St. Mary's of Canada, had a board one with a Senior Master's rating. Coning played valiantly, however, despite the end result. It was left to Lerner to draw his game for the tie.

He was, however, in a seemingly hopeless position, emerging from the opening in miserable shape. Lerner managed to complicate the game so much that his opponent was unable to find his way through the maze of complications. As the myriad of exchanges and variations ended, Lerner's opponent found himself in a drawn game, giving Williams the title of top small college in Pan-America. It was the highest finish ever for the Ephmen.

Track

continued from page 8

took it toll. However, both runners brushed aside the pain to finish well. Maseley's time was 5:25, and Mundy, in her first race on the track, ran 5:52.

Williams also ran teams in the distance medley relay, consisting of a 3/4 mile, 1/4 mile, 1/2 mile, and mile leg. The men's team of Dave Nadelman '89, David Weck '92, William Brockman '92, and Brendan Kearse '92 combined for a solid time of 10:57. The women's team, Heidi Beebe '91, Kim Barndollar '91, Jen Morris '89, and Anne Platt '91, ran 13:01, only ten seconds off the school record. They placed third in their heat.

Their success came as a result of Morris' 1/2 mile time of 2:30.

Field event performers for Williams also fared well. Joe McGinn '89 placed seventh in the 35 lb. weight throw. In the pole vault, Steve Moran '91 also started the season in fine fashion. He reached 13 feet, and should add valuable points in the Ephs dual meet schedule this season.

The finals of many events, as well as heats in several relays in which the Ephs competed, were held Sunday evening. Coach Larry Bell called the meet a "definite learning experience" for the young team, which has yet to begin its intense speed training. He expects that times will improve as the team gains more experience.

In the spotlight...

The football team has garnered several honors since the last issue of the Record. Senior linebacker Dan Pritchard was named NESAC defensive player of the year, while senior tackle Dave Montgomery, sophomore defensive end Ted Rogers, junior free safety Rich Williams, and sophomore tackle Andy Allen were also named all-NESAC players.

In the Record's November 22 list of a Williams sweep of the varsity Little Three titles, we omitted the women's tennis team. In addition to winning the Little Three, they placed fourth at the New England Intercollegiate Tennis Tournament in their last match of the season.

Two junior field hockey players have recently been recognized for their excellence: Mo Flaherty was named to the second All-American squad, while Beth McNulty was named to the first All-New England team. Flaherty was the Ephs' leading scorer, racking up five goals and six assists during the 11-2 season. McNulty led the Williams defense, managing to score one goal and assist two on the side. The two players have been voted co-captains of next fall's team.

Led by freshman guard John Conte's three three-pointers and 21 points, the men's basketball team kicked off 1989 in fine fashion, spanking Haverford 80-50 in a game played in Swarthmore, Pennsylvania on Saturday night. The Ephs led 44-20 at the midway point and the outcome of the game was never in question as all but one of the thirteen players scored.

Meanwhile, the men's hockey team journeyed to Minneapolis to defeat Amberst College, thus earning the right to face the University of Wisconsin-Superior in the finals of the four-team Massachusetts-Midwest Hockey Classic. Saturday's 6-4 victory, which left the Ephs with a 3-3 record, was keyed by senior Will Putnam's two goals. Sean Segulin '91 added a goal and two assists, and senior Mike Swenson notched a goal and an assist for the Ephmen.

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

New Year's Message

BY FRANCES HANSEN/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

ACROSS
1 Breezy idiom
9 All Baha, e.g.
13 Strong dislike
19 Futurer
21 Federation in SE Asia
24 Steve Martin romp: 1987
25 College town east of L.A.
29 Start of message
30 Cherish
37 Moines or Plaines preeder
38 "Comus" matchmaker and namesakes
39 Einstein's birthplace
40 Down East
41 Summer in Nissey-de-See
42 Islands, Blackbeard's base
43 Divided into areas
44 Baseball stat
45 B way signs
46 "Hallelujah I'm a..."
47 "I'm a..."
48 This may be missing
49 Do some ushwring
50 Whittman or Disney
51 Mare of message
52 Relative of et ol.
54 Announced or proclaimed, in a way
55 Mairiculate
56 E.T., e.g.
57 Quailed
58 Black eye
59 Same difference
60 He went over the wall
61 "The Shadow" medium
62 Ancient, to poets
63 Les Etais
64 Botanical pouch
65 Bastard wing
66 Estuary
67 Confrontation feature
68 Pop pioneer
69 Thelonious
70 Singer Paul from Ottawa
71 Bunyan's Blue Ox
72 Touches on man
73 Open-shelved china cabinet
74 Fift's friend
75 Pizzaz
76 At ease
77 Snappy comeback
78 Puffed up
79 Ship-plank curve
80 Specified, as a date
81 Glynor or Wylie
82 Many people
83 The original "golden boy"
84 "Claudia"
85 Chief French naval base
86 Hot-pot ingredient
87 Reduced to a mean
88 End of message
89 Mather of pearl source
90 Silverware city in N.Y.
91 Noped about listlessly
92 Colorful specialty type element
93 Flit-fletcher of yesteryear
94 On the quiver
95 In a way way
96 Viper out
97 Attacks with vigor
98 Skip the wedding march
99 Dined at home
100 Nandu's look-alike
101 Secretary of War: 1829-31
102 Nose, Comh firm
103 Wahine's neckwear
104 Kind of tube or man
105 Kind of like the Sears Tower
106 At ease
107 Oil-yielding tropical plant
108 State firmly
109 Busy as
110 Possibly
111 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
112 Yaro root
113 Cannon of cinema
114 Voice box
115 Clover type
116 Possibly
117 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
118 Yaro root
119 Cannon of cinema
120 Vision: Comh. form
121 The air (unsettled)
122 State firmly
123 Busy as
124 Possibly
125 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
126 Yaro root
127 Cannon of cinema
128 Vision: Comh. form
129 The air (unsettled)
130 State firmly
131 Busy as
132 Possibly
133 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
134 Yaro root
135 Cannon of cinema
136 Vision: Comh. form
137 The air (unsettled)
138 State firmly
139 Busy as
140 Possibly
141 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
142 Yaro root
143 Cannon of cinema
144 Vision: Comh. form
145 The air (unsettled)
146 State firmly
147 Busy as
148 Possibly
149 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
150 Yaro root
151 Cannon of cinema
152 Vision: Comh. form
153 The air (unsettled)
154 State firmly
155 Busy as
156 Possibly
157 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
158 Yaro root
159 Cannon of cinema
160 Vision: Comh. form
161 The air (unsettled)
162 State firmly
163 Busy as
164 Possibly
165 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
166 Yaro root
167 Cannon of cinema
168 Vision: Comh. form
169 The air (unsettled)
170 State firmly
171 Busy as
172 Possibly
173 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
174 Yaro root
175 Cannon of cinema
176 Vision: Comh. form
177 The air (unsettled)
178 State firmly
179 Busy as
180 Possibly
181 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
182 Yaro root
183 Cannon of cinema
184 Vision: Comh. form
185 The air (unsettled)
186 State firmly
187 Busy as
188 Possibly
189 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
190 Yaro root
191 Cannon of cinema
192 Vision: Comh. form
193 The air (unsettled)
194 State firmly
195 Busy as
196 Possibly
197 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
198 Yaro root
199 Cannon of cinema
200 Vision: Comh. form
201 The air (unsettled)
202 State firmly
203 Busy as
204 Possibly
205 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
206 Yaro root
207 Cannon of cinema
208 Vision: Comh. form
209 The air (unsettled)
210 State firmly
211 Busy as
212 Possibly
213 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
214 Yaro root
215 Cannon of cinema
216 Vision: Comh. form
217 The air (unsettled)
218 State firmly
219 Busy as
220 Possibly
221 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
222 Yaro root
223 Cannon of cinema
224 Vision: Comh. form
225 The air (unsettled)
226 State firmly
227 Busy as
228 Possibly
229 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
230 Yaro root
231 Cannon of cinema
232 Vision: Comh. form
233 The air (unsettled)
234 State firmly
235 Busy as
236 Possibly
237 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
238 Yaro root
239 Cannon of cinema
240 Vision: Comh. form
241 The air (unsettled)
242 State firmly
243 Busy as
244 Possibly
245 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
246 Yaro root
247 Cannon of cinema
248 Vision: Comh. form
249 The air (unsettled)
250 State firmly
251 Busy as
252 Possibly
253 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
254 Yaro root
255 Cannon of cinema
256 Vision: Comh. form
257 The air (unsettled)
258 State firmly
259 Busy as
260 Possibly
261 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
262 Yaro root
263 Cannon of cinema
264 Vision: Comh. form
265 The air (unsettled)
266 State firmly
267 Busy as
268 Possibly
269 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
270 Yaro root
271 Cannon of cinema
272 Vision: Comh. form
273 The air (unsettled)
274 State firmly
275 Busy as
276 Possibly
277 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
278 Yaro root
279 Cannon of cinema
280 Vision: Comh. form
281 The air (unsettled)
282 State firmly
283 Busy as
284 Possibly
285 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
286 Yaro root
287 Cannon of cinema
288 Vision: Comh. form
289 The air (unsettled)
290 State firmly
291 Busy as
292 Possibly
293 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
294 Yaro root
295 Cannon of cinema
296 Vision: Comh. form
297 The air (unsettled)
298 State firmly
299 Busy as
300 Possibly
301 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
302 Yaro root
303 Cannon of cinema
304 Vision: Comh. form
305 The air (unsettled)
306 State firmly
307 Busy as
308 Possibly
309 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
310 Yaro root
311 Cannon of cinema
312 Vision: Comh. form
313 The air (unsettled)
314 State firmly
315 Busy as
316 Possibly
317 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
318 Yaro root
319 Cannon of cinema
320 Vision: Comh. form
321 The air (unsettled)
322 State firmly
323 Busy as
324 Possibly
325 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
326 Yaro root
327 Cannon of cinema
328 Vision: Comh. form
329 The air (unsettled)
330 State firmly
331 Busy as
332 Possibly
333 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
334 Yaro root
335 Cannon of cinema
336 Vision: Comh. form
337 The air (unsettled)
338 State firmly
339 Busy as
340 Possibly
341 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
342 Yaro root
343 Cannon of cinema
344 Vision: Comh. form
345 The air (unsettled)
346 State firmly
347 Busy as
348 Possibly
349 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
350 Yaro root
351 Cannon of cinema
352 Vision: Comh. form
353 The air (unsettled)
354 State firmly
355 Busy as
356 Possibly
357 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
358 Yaro root
359 Cannon of cinema
360 Vision: Comh. form
361 The air (unsettled)
362 State firmly
363 Busy as
364 Possibly
365 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
366 Yaro root
367 Cannon of cinema
368 Vision: Comh. form
369 The air (unsettled)
370 State firmly
371 Busy as
372 Possibly
373 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
374 Yaro root
375 Cannon of cinema
376 Vision: Comh. form
377 The air (unsettled)
378 State firmly
379 Busy as
380 Possibly
381 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
382 Yaro root
383 Cannon of cinema
384 Vision: Comh. form
385 The air (unsettled)
386 State firmly
387 Busy as
388 Possibly
389 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
390 Yaro root
391 Cannon of cinema
392 Vision: Comh. form
393 The air (unsettled)
394 State firmly
395 Busy as
396 Possibly
397 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
398 Yaro root
399 Cannon of cinema
400 Vision: Comh. form
401 The air (unsettled)
402 State firmly
403 Busy as
404 Possibly
405 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
406 Yaro root
407 Cannon of cinema
408 Vision: Comh. form
409 The air (unsettled)
410 State firmly
411 Busy as
412 Possibly
413 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
414 Yaro root
415 Cannon of cinema
416 Vision: Comh. form
417 The air (unsettled)
418 State firmly
419 Busy as
420 Possibly
421 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
422 Yaro root
423 Cannon of cinema
424 Vision: Comh. form
425 The air (unsettled)
426 State firmly
427 Busy as
428 Possibly
429 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
430 Yaro root
431 Cannon of cinema
432 Vision: Comh. form
433 The air (unsettled)
434 State firmly
435 Busy as
436 Possibly
437 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
438 Yaro root
439 Cannon of cinema
440 Vision: Comh. form
441 The air (unsettled)
442 State firmly
443 Busy as
444 Possibly
445 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
446 Yaro root
447 Cannon of cinema
448 Vision: Comh. form
449 The air (unsettled)
450 State firmly
451 Busy as
452 Possibly
453 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
454 Yaro root
455 Cannon of cinema
456 Vision: Comh. form
457 The air (unsettled)
458 State firmly
459 Busy as
460 Possibly
461 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
462 Yaro root
463 Cannon of cinema
464 Vision: Comh. form
465 The air (unsettled)
466 State firmly
467 Busy as
468 Possibly
469 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
470 Yaro root
471 Cannon of cinema
472 Vision: Comh. form
473 The air (unsettled)
474 State firmly
475 Busy as
476 Possibly
477 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
478 Yaro root
479 Cannon of cinema
480 Vision: Comh. form
481 The air (unsettled)
482 State firmly
483 Busy as
484 Possibly
485 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
486 Yaro root
487 Cannon of cinema
488 Vision: Comh. form
489 The air (unsettled)
490 State firmly
491 Busy as
492 Possibly
493 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
494 Yaro root
495 Cannon of cinema
496 Vision: Comh. form
497 The air (unsettled)
498 State firmly
499 Busy as
500 Possibly
501 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
502 Yaro root
503 Cannon of cinema
504 Vision: Comh. form
505 The air (unsettled)
506 State firmly
507 Busy as
508 Possibly
509 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
510 Yaro root
511 Cannon of cinema
512 Vision: Comh. form
513 The air (unsettled)
514 State firmly
515 Busy as
516 Possibly
517 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
518 Yaro root
519 Cannon of cinema
520 Vision: Comh. form
521 The air (unsettled)
522 State firmly
523 Busy as
524 Possibly
525 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
526 Yaro root
527 Cannon of cinema
528 Vision: Comh. form
529 The air (unsettled)
530 State firmly
531 Busy as
532 Possibly
533 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
534 Yaro root
535 Cannon of cinema
536 Vision: Comh. form
537 The air (unsettled)
538 State firmly
539 Busy as
540 Possibly
541 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
542 Yaro root
543 Cannon of cinema
544 Vision: Comh. form
545 The air (unsettled)
546 State firmly
547 Busy as
548 Possibly
549 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
550 Yaro root
551 Cannon of cinema
552 Vision: Comh. form
553 The air (unsettled)
554 State firmly
555 Busy as
556 Possibly
557 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
558 Yaro root
559 Cannon of cinema
560 Vision: Comh. form
561 The air (unsettled)
562 State firmly
563 Busy as
564 Possibly
565 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
566 Yaro root
567 Cannon of cinema
568 Vision: Comh. form
569 The air (unsettled)
570 State firmly
571 Busy as
572 Possibly
573 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
574 Yaro root
575 Cannon of cinema
576 Vision: Comh. form
577 The air (unsettled)
578 State firmly
579 Busy as
580 Possibly
581 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
582 Yaro root
583 Cannon of cinema
584 Vision: Comh. form
585 The air (unsettled)
586 State firmly
587 Busy as
588 Possibly
589 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
590 Yaro root
591 Cannon of cinema
592 Vision: Comh. form
593 The air (unsettled)
594 State firmly
595 Busy as
596 Possibly
597 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
598 Yaro root
599 Cannon of cinema
600 Vision: Comh. form
601 The air (unsettled)
602 State firmly
603 Busy as
604 Possibly
605 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
606 Yaro root
607 Cannon of cinema
608 Vision: Comh. form
609 The air (unsettled)
610 State firmly
611 Busy as
612 Possibly
613 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
614 Yaro root
615 Cannon of cinema
616 Vision: Comh. form
617 The air (unsettled)
618 State firmly
619 Busy as
620 Possibly
621 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
622 Yaro root
623 Cannon of cinema
624 Vision: Comh. form
625 The air (unsettled)
626 State firmly
627 Busy as
628 Possibly
629 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
630 Yaro root
631 Cannon of cinema
632 Vision: Comh. form
633 The air (unsettled)
634 State firmly
635 Busy as
636 Possibly
637 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
638 Yaro root
639 Cannon of cinema
640 Vision: Comh. form
641 The air (unsettled)
642 State firmly
643 Busy as
644 Possibly
645 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
646 Yaro root
647 Cannon of cinema
648 Vision: Comh. form
649 The air (unsettled)
650 State firmly
651 Busy as
652 Possibly
653 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
654 Yaro root
655 Cannon of cinema
656 Vision: Comh. form
657 The air (unsettled)
658 State firmly
659 Busy as
660 Possibly
661 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
662 Yaro root
663 Cannon of cinema
664 Vision: Comh. form
665 The air (unsettled)
666 State firmly
667 Busy as
668 Possibly
669 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
670 Yaro root
671 Cannon of cinema
672 Vision: Comh. form
673 The air (unsettled)
674 State firmly
675 Busy as
676 Possibly
677 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
678 Yaro root
679 Cannon of cinema
680 Vision: Comh. form
681 The air (unsettled)
682 State firmly
683 Busy as
684 Possibly
685 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
686 Yaro root
687 Cannon of cinema
688 Vision: Comh. form
689 The air (unsettled)
690 State firmly
691 Busy as
692 Possibly
693 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
694 Yaro root
695 Cannon of cinema
696 Vision: Comh. form
697 The air (unsettled)
698 State firmly
699 Busy as
700 Possibly
701 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
702 Yaro root
703 Cannon of cinema
704 Vision: Comh. form
705 The air (unsettled)
706 State firmly
707 Busy as
708 Possibly
709 "Gat Five Dollars," 1931 song
710 Yaro root
711 Cannon of cinema
712 Vision: Comh. form
713 The air (unsettled)

Crouchley scores 1000th point Women's hoops crush North Adams

by Asif Jalli
There was little suspense on Friday night as senior Missy Crouchley became the second woman in Williams College basketball history to score 1000 points in her career. The milestone was passed with a three-pointer less than ten minutes into the Ephs' 99-44 drubbing of the North Adams State Mohawks.

Crouchley, who admitted to being nervous before the game, needed eight points to reach the 1000 mark and easily surpassed that requirement, totaling 22 on the night. She joins teammate Nancy Hedeman '89 in the exclusive 1000 point club.

After the historic basket, the game was stopped for a presentation ceremony. Crouchley was given the game ball by President Francis Oakley. She also received a tee shirt with the date and milestone printed on it. Crouchley set herself up to reach the mark at home by pouring in 33 points at Connecticut College on December 6th.

Crouchley said she did not realize she was so close to the 1000 point mark coming into the season until she saw an article in one of the football programs featuring Hedeman and herself. Crouchley and Hedeman are both three-sport captains this year (co-captains of basketball and softball, while Crouchley led the tennis team and Hedeman the volleyball team in the fall).

Crouchley emphasized how far the women's basketball program had come in her four years at Williams. "We took over a team that was 2-19 before our freshman year, and we've come a long way. As far as her [Hedeman] getting more attention, it doesn't bother me at all."

The Ephs broke the game open early against an inexperienced Mohawk team. Williams excelled at both ends of the court, taking good shots on offense and denying North Adams second shots through strong rebounding. The Ephs went on a 23-2 run in the middle of the first half, putting the game out of reach. Williams led 55-19 at the half.

Cadigan leads attack
Sophomore Chrissy Cadigan continued her fine play with a strong outing, finishing with 22 points. She was able to score from outside and inside, moving downcourt for several fastbreak baskets. The Ephs were also led by Hedeman, who scored 13 points, and Rebecca Borden '91, who pulled down 7 rebounds.

Senior Missy Crouchley defies gravity in Friday's win over North Adams State. During the game, Crouchley scored her 1000th point. (K. Thomas)

North Adams, with a lineup composed mostly of freshmen, was led by Mayellen Roberts, who scored 12 points and pulled down 12 rebounds. Unable to regroup after falling behind early, the inexperienced Mohawks shot 26 percent as a team, not a surprising figure considering the Ephs have held opponents to 37 percent shooting over their first four games.

Williams sharp performance was even more impressive because the team was returning from a substantial layoff. The team's last game was a 91-80 loss to Connecticut College.

Friday's win raised the Ephs' record to 4-1, while North Adams fell to 1-7. It was Williams' third blowout victory in five games.

Skiers anticipate season opener

by Marc Beliz
This weekend's Castleton Carnival opens the 1989 season for the men's and women's Alpine and Nordic skiing teams. Hopes are high as the Ephs begin the season-long battle with perennial powers Middlebury, Dartmouth, UVU, and UNH. Strong returning skiers and talented freshmen will be the key to success this year.

On paper, the men's squad is the best in years. The Alpine team will be led by senior captain Charlie Kaplan, junior J. P. Paralel, returning sophomores Lindon Seed and Jason Priest. All have previously qualified for the national championships and hope to qualify again this year. Dave Brule '92, with two years' training in a national development group under his belt, will also be making a bid for national honors. Good results in Eastern Cup races and a training camp at Sugarbush over the winter holidays give further promise for a phenomenal season.

On the Nordic team, senior captain Mac Nash and junior Pete Milliken will attempt to better their national placements of 21st and 20th. Nash, a classical specialist, hopes for radical improvement as a classical race has been added to this year's championships. Other hopefuls include senior Grey Davis and junior Todd Niedeck. John Coequet '92, who placed well at the Junior Olympics, is also expected to score for the Ephs.

The women's teams are at a crossroads. The Alpine team, despite the strength of senior captain Mari Omland and returning national qualifiers Amy Sullivan '91 and Amy Bellevue '91, lacks the depth to challenge the superpowers.

The Nordic team is suffering the loss of standout Kathy Wolfe '88, but looks for good results from returning skiers Kristin Seemann '89, Kirsten Froberg '90, sophomores Kris Hansen and Ann Bokman, and yet another freshman sensation, Kim Bowes. Hansen, who has represented the U.S. at the World University Games and Williams at the National Championships, is in Biwabik, Minnesota this week for national team qualifying races.

Runners shine at Dartmouth

by Steve Brody and Catherine Cocks
Last weekend, the men's and women's track teams travelled to Hanover, New Hampshire, for the Dartmouth Relays, testing themselves against Division I competition. Many excellent early season performances were turned in by both squads.

The meet began on Friday evening, when two Eph distance runners joined head coach Peter Farwell in the 3000 meters. Josh Rayman '91 posted a personal record of 9:33, chopping eleven seconds off his previous best. Farwell and freshman Brian Conn, running in separate heats, posted identical times, running 9:19. Conn took the first mile out in 4:53, and faded a bit in the last half of the race, but said he believes he will get stronger as the season progresses.

Saturday's competition was highlighted by the performance of Carey

Simon '90 in the 800 meters. Simon went out hard and took the lead in the first two of the race's four laps. In the final 400 meters, as it looked like the rest of the field would make him pay for his quick start, Simon surged back in front, outkicking his challengers to win the heat in 1:59.

Strong team performance
Williams also saw success in the 400 meters. Freshman Bob Behr won his heat with a time of 52.6 seconds, while in the women's competition, Katie Quisenberry '92 posted a time of 65.6 seconds. In the 500 meters, Rob Lake '91 ran a time of 72.1 seconds. Two freshmen from the women's team, Cherie MacAuley and Cindy Mundy, represented the Ephs in the 1500 meters. Both started fast with their Division I competition, and the hard first half mile continued on page 7

Rival squash captains Jessica Berg of Dartmouth and Allison Buckner '89 of Williams compete in Thursday's match. The Ephs lost 5-4. (K. Thomas)

Women's squash downed by deep Dartmouth squad, 5-4

by Marlam Naficy
In a close contest, the women's squash team fell to Division I Dartmouth last Thursday, 5-4. It was their first match since Christmas break.

"We did better than we did last year against Dartmouth - we're getting stronger," Lisa Brayton '90 said.

The match started off in Williams' favor when captains Jessica Berg of Dartmouth and Allison Buckner '89 of Williams squared off. Buckner quickly took the lead, while Berg seemingly offered little resistance, losing points in the succession. Buckner won the first two games 15-9, 15-11, but Berg rallied during the third game, tying at one point. Buckner prevailed, however, winning the game 15-12 for a 3-0 victory.

The other three Eph wins were turned in by Susie Piper '90 (3-1), Judy Kellogg '89 (3-1), and Brayton (3-2).

"[Brayton] played a good match - she beat someone she's never beaten before, and won in the 5th game, which is pretty impressive," Coach Gail Ramsey said. She said she was also impressed with Piper. "[Piper] beat Dartmouth's Heather Rabe [sic] fairly convincingly; she played well for her first match since break."

Rounding out the varsity nine were Lori Schuen '89, Laurie Burnett '91, Timmie Friend '90, Wynn Holt '89, and Jill Applebaum '89, all of whom lost tough matches to their Dartmouth opponents.

"I thought it could have gone either way. It's unfortunate that we couldn't play our best," Ramsey said.

The Ephs don't face another team until next Sunday. That match, against Yale, promises to be a challenging one.

Bell named N.E. coach of the year after only two years

by Marlam Naficy
Larry Bell, women's cross-country coach, has been named Division III New England Coach of the Year by the Women's Intercollegiate Cross Country and Track and Field Association. The award comes after two standout years for Bell and his team.

After just two years at Williams, Bell has guided the Ephs to several major victories. This year, the Ephs beat over 75 teams throughout New England and lost only to Bates. Williams also captured the NESCAC, Little Three, and NCAA New England Regional titles. Bell can be credited with the development of the team's core, as five of the top seven runners were either freshmen or sophomores.

Qualifying individually, Anne Platt '91 placed 10th at Nationals while another Bell protégé, Molly Martin '92, missed qualifying by seconds. According to Bell, the team could well have placed in the top three at Nationals, but because Williams is a NESCAC member, it was not allowed to compete there. Williams beat Smith by over 100 points at the NCAA Regionals and Smith later placed 10th at Nationals. Bell said that the Ephs are the deepest team in New England because of their abundance of talented runners.

"I often remind the 11th or 12th runners on our team that they outrun the top five runners of many other teams," Bell said.

A runner's life
Bell's achievements at Williams are hardly surprising considering the role that running has played during his life. As a student at Pittsfield High School, where he now teaches, Bell said he played soccer in the fall because the school did not have a cross-country team. After breaking the first pair of skis that the ski team loaned him, Bell said he decided to try yet another sport, running. His 4:18 record in the mile still stands at Pittsfield High.

After high school, he attended Nebraska Wesleyan University, majoring in psychology and biology. He said he spent most of his remaining time running cross country, indoor track, and outdoor track. Bell set the school record, 4:12, in the mile, and held the Division III Nebraska state title in the mile for two consecutive years. It was in charge of starting a women's cross country team. His success at Nebraska Wesleyan resembles his success at Williams: Bell said he started with three women runners, and by his third year there, he had sent seven runners to Nationals and had two All-Americans.

Following three years of coaching at a small high school in Western Nebraska, Bell moved back to Pittsfield. Bell said he has the best of both worlds. He can

'I've been lucky as much as anything else - the Ephs' talent was already there.'

through running at Nebraska Wesleyan that he ran into his wife Pam, whom he calls a "track groupie." He said they met when he needed gloves during a track meet and borrowed hers.

After graduating in 1978, Bell began his first coaching job while completing his master's degree at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. The athletic director at Nebraska Wesleyan placed him coach at a high level at Williams while still making an impact on younger children as a high school teacher. Bell teaches a class on human development, which deals with both mental and physical health, at Pittsfield High.

"I've been lucky as much as anything else - the [Ephs'] talent was already there," Bell said of his successes at Williams.

I.M. Report

Hockey		Basketball		Squash Team 1-1
Spinal Tap def. Panda 10-3		Bix East		Asif Jalli 1-1
New Jersey Psychotics def. Smokin' Hole 9-0		The Cotton Ponies 2-0		Gladden Garys 1-1
Flying Vegetables def. Town & Gown 6-2		The Duesse 2-0		Ted Moore 1-1
		Faculty 2-0
		The Blue Team 2-0
		B & G 1-1
		Snow White & 7 Dwarfs 1-1
		The Seamen 0-2
		Robin Lloyd 0-2
		The Burger 0-2
		Team Elvis 0-2
		ACC
		The Soccer Team 2-0
		Lara Hem 2-0
		Black Magic 2-0

Four students hurt in NY auto accident

Four freshmen were injured, two critically, in a head-on collision Saturday morning in New York state.

A car driven by Mary Hinton '92 was heading southbound on Route 22 through Canaan when a car traveling in the opposite direction inched over the center line at 6:30 A.M., according to the New York State Police. The other occupants in the car were Larkia Bolden '92, Larita Bolden '92, and Steve Nelson '92. The group was on route to a gospel singing event in New York City.

The four students were taken to Berkshire Medical Center in Pittsfield. The Bolden twins suffered vertebral fractures; they were placed in intensive care. A spokesperson for the hospital said

Saturday that both were in critical condition. Yesterday, the two were removed from intensive care.

Hinton was treated for facial injuries and released. Nelson suffered a chest contusion. He was held for observation, but was expected to be released yesterday, according to Director of Health James Cortina.

Cortina added that the injuries would have been far worse had all four not been wearing seat belts.

The operator of the other car, Cynthia Mills, is a 27-year-old resident of Lenox, Massachusetts. She was arrested for driving while intoxicated and failure to keep to the right of the road. More charges may be filed pending an investigation, police said.

Affirmative action report pending

In an all-campus mailing distributed earlier this month, President of the College Francis Oakley expressed satisfaction with the results of the three visits. He said, "Their visits to the campus were fruitful, their comments on the Williams scene perceptive and their specific recommendations helpful."

"The visits of the consultants were an opportunity for us to review and strengthen our policy and our commitment to the Affirmative Action Program at Williams. The college has been deeply committed to affirmative action since 1972—it predates any legal federal requirement for such a program. It is a long-standing commitment and one which we want to strengthen," said Nancy McIntire, assistant to the president for affirmative action and government relations.

Greater recruitment McIntire said that the policy has allowed for greater recruitment of minorities.

continued on page 4

The president speaks...

College Council president Trace Blankenship '89 makes a point, as vice president John Keish '89 and Sanand Raghunadanan '90 react.

Council discusses party policy, tenure controversy, Images

After beginning on a solemn note with a moment of silence for Salem Gishi '92, the College Council last Thursday concentrated on the controversy surrounding recent tenure recommendations. It also addressed the future of Images theater, freshman party policy and student evaluation of professors.

A large group of students attended the meeting to express their dismay at the decision of the Committee on Appointments and Promotions not to recommend Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright for tenure.

The group presented a statement, part of a petition they plan to circulate to the student body, which charged that the English Department and the CAP had erred in their decision not to recommend promotion of Wright to the rank of Associate Professor with tenure.

According to the statement, "We are certain that the English Department and CAP proceeded with care and deliberation in their decision; we are equally certain that they arrived at the wrong decision."

The students urged all those familiar with Wright to address letters of protest

"We are equally certain that [the CAP and English Department] arrived at the wrong decision."

to President Francis Oakley, Dean of the Faculty John Reichert and English Department chairman Michael Bell. The group also asked Council members to present the matter at dorm snacks by suggesting that those familiar with

Freshman entries face stricter fines for kegs

by Bill Savadove

The price of partying has just gone up for members of the freshman class, as a strict fine system for busted keg parties in entries will go into effect this week.

The new policy calls for a base fine of $50, the same fine that is usually charged to those who purchase alcohol for freshman entries. Unlike the old policy, however, with each subsequent violation by any freshman entry the fine will increase $25, to be levied on the junior advisor or junior advisors responsible.

According to Dean of Freshman Roberto Ifill, there is no cap on the fines. However, Ifill said he does not anticipate fines over $100 being levied. At the end of each semester or year, yet to be decided, the base fine will return to the $50 level.

All entries which have taps removed on the same night will be assessed the same fines.

The purpose of the new fine system is quite clear, Ifill said. "The deans want to reduce or eliminate drinking in freshman entries."

Unsupervised drinking JA reaction was negative. "Freshmen are going to drink no matter what. Instead of us being able to watch them, they're going to be running out and getting really hammered. I'd rather have them drinking in the entry," said JA Elizabeth Beahel '90.

"There's underage drinking all over campus. Is there something magic that happens the summer after freshman year that makes it O.K. to drink?" Brian Hughes '90, another junior advisor, agreed.

The new policy is being instituted after a number of incidents last semester, according to Ifill. Three entries were busted in one week; also, several entries were found to be having parties on the same night. Ifill said he has spoken to both concerned parents and freshmen who felt they should not speak to their

K. Thomas

A thing of the past?

The deans hope a stiffer fine system will end drinking in freshman entries. Under the new policy, junior advisors will have to pay the fines, which increase with each incident.

junior advisors about reducing the amount of alcohol in the entry.

Ifill said that increasing the fines will facilitate communication between junior advisors, and force them to check the risk before planning a party or buying alcohol. It will be in the interest of the entry and JA's to reduce the number of kegs instead of risking the fine. Ifill added that he hopes the policy will discourage JA's from purchasing alcohol, while at the same time, preventing them from being forced into the position of auxiliary police.

"The alternative means of entertainment will have to come from JA's. The deans don't offer anything," Hughes said.

Junior advisor Heather Adams '90 said that the new policy is also making some sophomores reconsider their decision to apply to be JA's. "It makes people less likely to be JA's. We're bearing the brunt of this policy."

According to Ifill, this method is less intrusive compared to other campuses which increase security or take disciplinary measures in order to reduce alcohol consumption. "Considering the alternatives, this is relatively moderate," he said. There have been no discussions about tightening security. J.A. President William Hong '90 said that he plans to file a formal letter of complaint, signed by all JA's, with the dean's office.

Hong added that he understands the reasoning behind the policy, but was dismayed by the lack of communication between the dean's office and the JA's. "The way they did it was kind of shady," he said. "We had to find out about it through word of mouth."

The decision to change the policy was made after a series of three meetings with JA's in late November and early December.

College may end book contract

by Mary Moule

A committee set up to examine Williams' textbook problems may recommend that the college end its exclusive textbook contract with the Williams Bookstore and its owner, Joseph Dewey.

The five-member committee, created by the administration in response to complaints by faculty and students, will make its recommendation to President Oakley at the end of January, said College Vice-President and Treasurer William Reed, chair of the committee. Many of the student complaints were noted in two College Council surveys on the Williams Bookstore conducted in the fall.

The college has several options, according to College Provost Gordon Winston, a member of the special committee. One possibility is to maintain its present contract with the Williams Bookstore, while working to improve the service to students there. The college could also sell books through the College Bookstore on Spring Street, The Albion Bookshop Inc. of Amherst, and Brennan Books, which has a store at Mt. Holyoke College.

Grundy's Garage on Water Street is a possible site if an outside bookstore is brought in, Reed said. "It's further for students, but it is much better in terms of space," he said. "It has 7000 square feet inside, and plenty of parking for townpeople. There is no comparable space on Spring Street."

Reed stressed that the two local bookstores are still in the running. The managers of the College Bookstore said they are confident that they can expand to provide room for open shelving and an increased stock of trade books. Reed said that there is currently not enough room for college needs at the College Bookstore.

Needs more space The Williams Bookstore is another possibility, but Reed said that if the col-

K. Thomas

Bookstore to be?

The former Grundy's Garage on Water Street is being considered as a possible site for an alternative to The Williams Bookstore.

lege continues to give Dewey the textbook business, he would have to be given more space to accommodate open shelves. Reed added, however, that the bookstore's current building would not be large enough, even if all of it was used.

"Open shelving came across as very important in the student survey," Reed said. "One of the desires of faculty and students would be to have books on display." He said open shelving could help students in choosing classes as well as give them a chance to preview prices and decide if they need to buy all of their books new.

Winston added that open shelving is helpful for professors as well because it gives them a chance to see what their colleagues are teaching. "When teachers go to other schools they can see what books are being taught, but when other professors come here, they can't do that," he said.

Dewey is currently operating under a ten-year contract with the college which gives him the exclusive right to sell textbooks. "If we brought in an outside bookstore," Reed said, "we'd have to be fair to Mr. Dewey." He said that a settlement of some type would have to be made.

College Council President Trace Blankenship, also on the committee, presented the results of the College Council surveys to the committee. "I reported on every comment from the questionnaire, and I feel really confident that they are extremely sensitive to students," he said.

Student and faculty complaints "We're trying to address the complaints from the student survey such as delay in ordering, not having all of the books and long lines," Reed said. He

continued on page 7

The Record Insider examines tenure at Williams.

Music review: Edie Brickell and the New Bohemians.

PAGE 5

Crowley is the first ever to sweep two events at the Castleton Carnival.

PAGE 9

The Williams Record

New policy is misbegotten folly

The recent change in party policy will certainly make it more difficult for freshmen to drink. Perhaps the administration hopes that this will help change the role alcohol plays in the Williams social life. The new policy, however, is misbegotten and doomed to failure.

To decrease the importance of alcohol at Williams, a much more fundamental change is needed. This current change in policy will not reduce the number of people who drink or, more importantly, the amount they drink; it is not effective and will hurt more than help.

Ill-considered burden on JA's

The first problem with the new policy is that it completely fails to get the support of the students. The only practical way to reduce drinking at Williams is to convince students that it is desirable to do so.

The underhanded way in which the administration implemented the policy only serves to antagonize the very students who must be counted on to obey the new rules. In the October 18, 1988 issue of the Record, Assistant Dean Andrew Hernandez told the Record that if a concern was raised about the party policy, the college would go through the same channels as in 1987, including a campus-wide discussion, before making a change. Recent actions have repudiated that claim. The new change in policy was sprung upon the Junior Advisers and freshmen, with no discussion or even warning.

If the college believes freshman drinking is a problem, why not discuss it openly? Restricting drinking in the entry will not create students who are less interested in alcohol; it will not reduce the drinking that occurs during the freshman year. The only good that can come out of it is to aid the administration's self-serving claim that something is being done about the problem. In fact, the administration's actions will be ineffective and serve only as a chimera to those who wish to address a serious issue.

Under the new guidelines, the burden of the punishment, paying the fine, falls upon the JAs, presumably because this will discourage them from leading their charges astray. The JAs, however, do not determine whether or not freshmen drink; freshmen decide this for themselves.

Alcohol in the entry is also not always the JA's responsibility. Punishing them for a keg that their freshmen may have obtained forces JA's to police the dorm. This completely changes the atmosphere of the entry. One of the attractive features of Williams is the difference between the JA system and an RA system. The new policy places strains on the informal and close-knit relationships JA's are encouraged to foster.

If a fine is necessary, fining the entry is a more sensible policy. This affects the freshmen students as well and does not turn JAs into obtrusive brownshirts.

Impact on freshmen

The new policy may lead to less entry unity. Entry parties and other events help create closeness among entries. If the new policy is enforced, many freshmen will not attend entry activities but spend Friday and Saturday nights in search of upperclass parties where alcohol is available. This adversely affects the social life of those who do not drink as well.

Finally, the new policy will make it more difficult for freshmen to meet people, especially those in their own class. Apart from Freshman Days, during which the new students are still learning the names of their entry-mates, Williams has very few formal activities in which the freshmen can meet each other. The best way for freshmen to meet is at entry parties, which few upperclassmen attend.

Rather than reduce the importance of alcohol on campus, the new policy seems more likely to increase it. The primary attractions of freshman social life would change from parties with a close-knit entry, that also include alcohol, to parties that are chosen because of the presence of alcohol. A more sensible and practicable approach needs to recognize the importance of entries and must seek the understanding of those whom the regulations will affect.

"THIS AIRLINE HAS THE TIGHTEST SECURITY MEASURES IN THE WORLD, BUT YOU'LL HAVE TO FLY NAKED WITH NO LUGGAGE."

Letters

Day's letter was unfair to Chaplain

To the Editor:

I'd like to thank Russ Day '91 for his letter in the January 10 Record. Until Mr. Day's letter alerted me of this scandalous situation, I had not been aware that the college's chaplain had political views. In the future, I shall make an effort to monitor the propaganda which defaces the Chaplain's bulletin board with greater vigilance — particularly since, according to Mr. Day, the Chaplain's convictions automatically carry the implication of "moral superiority."

If it turns out that Mr. Day's accusations are well-founded, he has reason to be troubled. I was once disappointed to learn that an alarming combination of "unwanted political proclamations" in a blatantly religious content is to be found in the Holy Bible. Since then, I haven't known quite where to turn, but surely we pay enough to go to this school to be sheltered from these sorts of questions. If these scurrilous and un-American activities do not cease, perhaps the Chaplain himself will have to be taken up on that bulletin board.

As a fellow student-patriot and self-proclaimed religious member, however, I feel that Mr. Day might be going too far in advancing his standard that the expenditure of college money and the use of our facilities should be withheld from anyone just because they are "responsible for the death of another human being." If adopted, this standard could set a dangerous precedent for the college's policies of investing part of its endowment in companies that do business with South Africa and allowing the C.I.A. to recruit on campus.

H.H. Murphy '89

Inn's policy favors the college's elite

To the Editor:

Last week we asked the Williams Inn about room reservations during graduation. We were told that they have a policy of not accepting reservation requests until after the commencement ceremonies of the previous year.

The manager then explained that the reservations are not granted on a first come, first serve basis but that he sits down with the trustees and board of directors to select and grant reservations to those who are "most important to the college," including fifth generation alumni and those who come from far away.

Williams is constantly trying to portray itself as a non-elitist, even anti-elitist, institution by stressing needs-blind admission and celebrating diversity. However, Williams does have a privileged elite, including children of alumni, and, since I don't suppose one would want to turn them away from the Inn, wealthy contributors.

Michael Reisman '90

We found it interesting that when we returned to the Williams Inn two days later to ask more questions, we were told by another employee that the decisions were made by random lottery. This makes one wonder about all the "random letters" used at Williams, such as the one to decide who gets co-ops.

How many of the students especially recruited to provide diversity on campus would come here if they knew they would be second-class citizens?

Katie Brennan '90
Kathy Tierney '90

Record's editorial was way off the mark

To the Editor:

Last week's Record editorial regarding the new minority studies and non-Western cultures requirement not only misses the point of the requirement, it makes vast unfounded generalizations about the perceptions of Williams College students.

The editorial argues that students will resent having to take another required course. However, in terms of academic requirements, this is only a drop in the bucket. It requires that one of the nine required divisional courses be in one of the aforementioned fields. Since the requirement does not take effect until next September and will affect only the classes of 1993 and onward, there will be ample opportunity to make sure that these students will be made aware of the requirement and the reasons behind it, and encouraged to take more than just the single required course.

One of the rationales behind the requirement, as is the case with the current divisional requirements, is to expose students to subjects they might not otherwise know about or take advantage of, and to promote further interest. This is one of the primary functions of a liberal arts education.

The fact that many students already meet the requirement does not mean that it is not necessary. The goal is to make sure that 100 percent of all Williams students meet it in their four years here.

The selection of courses is large enough so as not to foster resentment or force students to take classes they don't really want to take. If demand merits, more sections of existing classes and new classes can be added, and more professors hired. One could even argue, as many have, that the requirement is too weak. Some have said that the list of courses that could meet the requirement should be shortened.

As far as harming the academic credibility of some programs, this argument could just as easily apply to certain Division III courses. Furthermore, to argue that students won't take a required course seriously says more about the student than it does about the requirement. Serious students will take classes seriously whether they are required to take them or not. One would hope that given a long list of courses to choose from, a student would choose something in which he or she is interested.

Comprehensive honor code would insure integrity

by Todd Owens

At the beginning of every semester at Williams, we all read syllabi which contain at least one sentence like, "All work in this course will be subject to the rules of the academic honor code." Similarly, at the end of every semester, we are asked to sign the Statement of Academic Honesty before we take our finals.

It is clear that Williams expects academic integrity from its students. The reasons for this are equally clear to anyone who wishes to read the student handbook. The free exchange of ideas at any institution is dependent upon "the academic integrity of each of its members."

Yet, the Honor Code is not taken seriously by many students at Williams. For most of us it is just a formality, a ritual which must be endured before we can take a test or enroll at college. The honor code was designed to protect the right to an education. When others break the code, they are intruding on the rights of individual students. But students, by and large, are too timid to do anything about it. How many students do you know who would be willing to turn in a classmate who was clearly and obviously cheating? Probably not many.

Even more troubling, perhaps, is the attitude of some of the faculty. How many times have you had professors who refused to hold take home or self-scheduled exams because they felt it would be too difficult to make sure that the questions did not become common knowledge before the test? The assumptions they are making about the academic integrity of their classes is implicit in any such attitudes. I have even had a professor who laughed at the idea that the honor code would prevent students from cheating on a test? It has happened more than once.

The academic honor code is not completely ineffective. We do have a functioning Honor and Discipline Committee which hears several cases every year. But, by and large, it seems that the Honor code at Williams is ignored by both the faculty and the students.

Why? In theory, at least, it would be difficult to find any member of the community who would say that academic integrity is not something the college should concern itself with. Most people would agree that the academic honor code is a useful way of achieving that ideal.

But in practice the academic honor code cannot work because it is not comprehensive enough. By living in a family, or a community, or a nation, individuals acquire a sense of right and wrong. Like it or not, a community creates and defines a set of acceptable standards for relationships between people. The individual who accepts and follows that moral code will do so all the time, not occasionally.

Honor — integrity — is not something that can be switched off and on. We cannot expect individuals who do not act with integrity in our community to act with integrity in our classrooms — especially when most of the rest of us take academic integrity for granted and, hence, the safeguards against cheating are not strong.

With an academic honor code, we cannot effectively guarantee that students will act with integrity in the classroom. But we can guarantee that all members of a community will act with honor all the time.

This can be accomplished with a comprehensive honor code. Such a code would apply to all members of the Williams community — faculty, administration, staff, students — and it would cover all facets of life at Williams, from athletics to parties to academics.

The wording of the code would be equally clear. No member of the Williams community will lie or cheat. At any time or under any circumstances. Each member of the community would be responsible for insuring the compliance of the other members and, if necessary, filing a grievance. If an individual witnesses an honor violation, he or she would be honor bound to take action with the person who committed the violation.

With an academic honor code, we cannot effectively guarantee that students will act with integrity in the classroom. But we can guarantee that all members of a community will act with honor all the time.

A comprehensive honor code does not attempt to mold students... It offers them the tools to improve society, to make positive changes in the world beyond Williamstown.

However, if the violation does not seem too serious, it would not necessarily have to be reported. Instead, one could simply tell the person that his action may have violated the honor code and that he should refrain from such actions in the future.

A comprehensive honor code would have tremendous benefits for Williams as a community. First and foremost, it would more effectively guarantee academic integrity than a limited academic honor code by making personal integ-

One argument against a comprehensive honor code is that the college has no right to pry into the personal lives of its students. It should not try to impose its definition of moral standards on individuals who come here. But Williams is also an institution which believes that the education of a student is not just a function of the classes he or she attends. Students learn much from their interactions with other students. Because of this, the college strives to create a diverse student body. The college has a mandate to create an environment in which students can learn from one another.

On a more fundamental level, the college community, as a whole, does have the right to decide what kind of behavior is acceptable within it. And, once established, the comprehensive honor code will become one more aspect of Williams. Students who feel that they cannot abide by such a code would simply not come to Williams.

In American society today, there has been a breakdown of traditional values, a blurring of the line between what is right and what is wrong. There are increasing numbers of people who do not distinguish between right and wrong as society has defined it. It is simply not right that individuals should be allowed to grow up with no respect for other individuals. Yet this is what is happening within our society.

Williams needs to be a reflection of the society in which it nestles. We have the opportunity to create a community of trust and integrity, even amid a society in which those characteristics are not commonplace.

A comprehensive honor code does not attempt to mold students so they will be able to fit into society. It offers them the tools to improve society, to make positive changes in the world beyond Williamstown. Such is an admirable goal for Williams College.

News

Edwards responds to anti-BGLU vandalism

by Traci Mirligoff

The Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Union has been the victim of vandalism in recent weeks as many of the group's posters were destroyed or torn down. The posters were a reaction to previous vandalism of the BGLU's display case in Baxter.

In response to BGLU complaints, Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards issued an all-campus mailing November 29 outlining college policy concerning such actions.

BGLU president Chris Nealon '89 reported that someone had broken into the display case in one incident and on a separate occasion, actually smashed the glass in an effort to remove the posters inside.

Nealon said that the group made new posters in reply to the Baxter Hall incidents. "We didn't want to make it seem easy to silence us," he said.

Dean Edwards said, "Incidents such as this have been happening more this semester." She added that the statement was meant to clarify the administration's position on such actions.

Nealon, however, said that he wished the mailing had been more specific to the BGLU. "It was nice they made the gesture, but it was kind of universalizing."

He added that the group has resolved to keep their visibility up throughout the rest of the year. Nealon also said that the very anonymity of the actions taken against the BGLU's display case and posters is a sign of fear. "Anonymity is safety," he said.

Council discusses myriad of concerns at Thursday meeting

continued from page 1

If the actual decision to grant tenure will not be made for several years.

Images issue

The council then addressed the June expiration of Image's lease. "There is a very serious threat to a very important part of our community," said council member Matt Levio '90. "Image is one of the only movie theaters in New England which shows foreign films, cult films, art films, all sorts of things that you don't see unless you live in either Boston or Northampton."

Blankenship suggested that the college might purchase the theater, using it as a lecture hall during the day and operating it as a cinema at night. Blankenship warned, however, that the high price of the theater would probably preclude such a purchase. In addition, he added, "One of the first problems [the college has] is that the Director of Buildings and Grounds is the principal owner and it is a potential conflict of interest."

Fresh party policy

Blankenship announced that he had presented student concerns about personal fines imposed on Junior Advisers to Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards. The college administration recently began imposing personal fines on Junior Advisers whenever alcohol is found in a freshman entry. Blankenship explained that the administration is resorting to heavier fines in order to eliminate alcohol in freshman residences. He said, "Their side of the story is they don't want to punish people, they just want it stopped."

The administration fears that such a calamity might provoke local authorities and result in the revocation of the college's license to house students, he said. "They're extremely petrified of things like that."

"The fine has gotten very enormous. It's a cumulative thing...I just think that for a first offense they're really knocking the hell out of us as far as fining goes," Jon Gray '90 said.

Blankenship said, "I told [Dean Edwards] in no uncertain terms that [term-bill fining of J.A.s] doesn't seem right."

Gotchal!

The utter and complete paranoia of K.A.O.S. players is exemplified in the reaction of Beth Grucioke '92 to unarmed civilian Mark Destler '92. This scene of destruction took place in Baxter Hall.

Job market booming for '89 grads

by Michael O'Keefe
College Press Service

The class of '89 has reason to be confident going into its winter of job interviews. If two recently-released surveys on corporate hiring trends are correct, the studies reveal that the job market for this year's college grads is booming.

"There's no question about it," reported Angie Aschhoff of Linn-Benton Community College's placement office in Oregon, "the number of jobs advertised with us is up this year."

Northwestern University's Linn-Benton Endnote Report predicted an 8 percent jump in corporate demand for graduates with bachelor's degrees. Those graduates will receive starting salaries that are an average 4.6 percent higher than those of the class of '88. For students with new master's degrees, beginning salaries should be 3.5 percent higher than last year's, the report added.

While Michigan State University's Annual Recruiting Survey does not paint as rosy a picture, it does predict that new graduates will face a healthy job market.

MSU asked 427 corporations about their hiring plans. In response, the firms expected to make 3.1 percent more job offers to students this year, and said they were especially interested in hiring more women and minority graduates.

Students are in a better bargaining position than in years past, and companies know it. "We will be offering jobs to people who know they are going to be in great demand," Sally Odle, recruiting manager for IBM, said. "We have to offer jobs that are challenging and interesting."

"We are doing everything we can to prepare for the shrinking labor market," said Trudy Marotta of the Marriott Corporation.

Victor Lindquist of Northwestern added that companies also are hiring because the companies themselves expect to prosper. Sixty-one percent of the firms Northwestern surveyed thought they'd be more profitable in 1989 than they were in 1988.

"Corporate America is confident the economy will remain strong despite concerns by so-called experts about the volatile stock market, the deficit, trade balance, megamergers and the increased competition in the marketplace," Lindquist said.

His report closely followed an early December survey of 14,000 employers by Manpower, Inc., a temporary employment services company. Twenty-two percent of the companies interviewed expected to add to their payrolls during the first three months of 1989, while 11 percent forecast staff reductions.

"We were a bit surprised at the hiring strength indicated by those figures," Manpower President Mitchell Fromstein said. "After a year in which three million new jobs were added to the U.S. workforce, we expected to see a slowing down of job formation."

The boom is better for some students than for others. "Engineering, accounting and health professions are our most sought-after graduates," said DeLowe. Linn-Benton's Aschhoff also finds clerical, nursing and automotive students in high demand.

Michigan State researchers said electrical engineering majors will be in the greatest demand, followed by marketing and sales, financial administration, mechanical engineering and computer science majors.

Chemistry majors will be just behind engineering graduates in starting salaries, $28,488, up 5.1 percent from 1988. The biggest salary jump will be in sales and marketing, up 8.8 percent to $25,560.

The Southwest, according to the Michigan State report, will offer 1989 graduates the most new jobs, followed by the Northeast, the Southeast and the North Central states. The South Central states and the Northwest will offer the fewest new jobs.

On The Record...

"What's disturbing is to walk through this campus and not see students holding hands; which isn't to say you expect to see people making love in the bushes."

—David Raffeld, a published poet who is teaching the winter study, "The Beats"

"I told [Dean Edwards] in no uncertain terms that it doesn't seem right."

—College Council President Trace Blankenship on the new policy of fining J.A.s on their term bills if alcohol is found in their entry.

"Freshmen are going to drink no matter what. Instead of us being able to watch them, they're going to be running out and getting really hammered."

—J.A. Elizabeth Beshel on the new freshman party policy.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor
TRAVIS PIERSON, Managing Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor ANN MANTIL & STEPHANIE JONES, Arts Editors
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors
BILL PHILPOTT, Production Editor

News Assistants
DAN SKWIRE, BIL SAVADOVE, ELLEN DROUGHT
OREO HART & SARA DUBOW
Sports Assistants
STEVE BRODY & KERR HOUSTON
Assistant Layout Editors
ASHESH SHAH, ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered at Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Here comes hypermedia

The Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art is spending $70,000 to develop a multi-media system to provide extra information on exhibits. Pictured is the Sprague Mill Complex, the future site of museum.

courtesy of MassMoCA

MoCA hypermedia system to aid scholars

by Sallie Han

The Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art is spending $70,000 on a five-year research project in an attempt to develop a hypermedia computer system that will aid art scholars and the visiting public.

The undertaking, done in conjunction with Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, is known as MMAP, short for Project for Museum Management and Art Presentation. It is essentially an expanded multi-media system, which will use still images, electronic text, videos and audio recordings to provide information on the artists whose works are being displayed in the museum.

Once the system is fully installed, users will be able to tap into a worldwide database. Visitors will be able to learn more about the art they see exhibited in the museum, and students and scholars will have quick and easy access to more sophisticated information.

"We want to integrate it into all of the museum," Jennifer Trainer of MassMoCA said. "Some of it will be "Museums, at their core, are not storage vessels. They are sites of information exchange."

well-sized, some of it will be computers on a table." MMAP will be part of the layout of the museum, and planners envision the use of several types of information ports — such as gallery screens, workstations, video-walls and an interactive computer-video gallery for children.

MassMoCA and RPI are currently developing hardware and software that will make the database accessible to even those with little or no computer experience. Joseph Thompson, Planning Director of MassMoCA, said the system will greatly enhance the museum. "Museums, at their core, are not storage vessels. They are sites of information exchange. This multimedia quality of contemporary communication is something that every museum will have to address in the coming decade."

It will also make it possible for MassMoCA to display more works than it can accommodate in its galleries. This said Patricia Search, Assistant Professor of Graphics at RPI and chief researcher for MMAP, would expand the educational role of the museum.

The MassMoCA-RPI project is different in several respects from hypermedia systems being researched and designed elsewhere. The system will also use advanced computer graphics and optical disc technology.

RPI is researching the cost, possible funding options and the design of the hypermedia project. There are no estimates of the total cost of the system yet, but a sub-member research team is looking into the availability of corporate assistance both in funding and supplying hardware and software.

MassMoCA must conduct a $1.7 million feasibility study to receive its $35 million grant from the state.

BU eases restrictions against overnight guests in dorms

College Press Service

Boston University, which during the fall had imposed strict new dorm rules some saw as a return to the heavy-handed regulation of student life of the 1950s, has slightly relaxed its efforts to stop students from having overnight guests in their dorm rooms.

The rules, however, are still oppressive, a student protest leader maintained. "They have not changed that much," said Susheel Srikantha, a computer science major who helped form a group called Active, Concerned, Together to fight the ban.

BU President John Silber announced he would accept a task force's suggestion to allow relatives of dorm residents to stay overnight. He had formed the task force, made up of students, parents, faculty members and BU officials, after thousands of students demonstrated against the prohibition in September.

Under the revised rules, students still cannot host unrelated guests of the opposite sex in their rooms after 11 p.m. The recommendations leave the main thrust of the rules intact, said Srikantha, who argued that roommates, not administrators, should determine who may stay in a room overnight.

In November, the University of Portland in Oregon did decide to let individual dorms set their own visitation policies "by consensus among student residents."

Yet BU spokesperson Kevin Carleton contended that BU had gone further with its revisions than Srikantha claimed. "The initial policy that was proposed was that there would be no overnight guests. The tone of it was to discourage overnight guests." The new policy, he said, does allow overnight guests under some circumstances.

He did concede that the university, which has a dormitory population of about 8,500, cannot police the dorms to fight violations of the new rules. But BU, Carleton added, is obliged to discourage certain behavior.

Consultants rate minority programs

continued from page 1

ity and female faculty members since its establishment, citing the results of the policy over the past four years.

"I think there has been an increase in female recruitment in some parts of the institution, especially in the sciences and social sciences," she said. "We have added to the number of minority faculty in that we have increased the number of visiting minority professors in addition to those regular tenured positions which we reserve for minority faculty."

"We review our program periodically so that we can strengthen it, but the visit of the three consultants last fall is the first formal, outside review of our policies. They were able to consider anything at Williams and were given detailed policy reports and other sources of information. Based on these, they gave detailed policy and procedural reviews as well as criticisms on how they are put into practice."

The college has drafted a preliminary report which summarizes the observations of all three consultants and the college's response to them, Oakley said. This report has been sent to the consultants for their review, and a final report will be distributed to the college when their comments are received.

"Oakley wanted to make sure that he was reporting their comments and ob-

Klan group forms at Temple

College Press Service

The controversy over affirmative action has taken a nasty turn as a newly-formed white pride student group at Temple University is making clear its aim to end minority programs at the school.

The White Student Union recently registered as an official campus organization at Temple. With principles very similar to those of the Ku Klux Klan, the WSU aims to promote white culture and to end affirmative action programs which, WSU President Michael Spletzer said, discriminate against white people.

In a written statement, Temple President Peter J. LaCouras said the group has received more attention than it deserves, and affirmed Temple's commitment to affirmative action. LaCouras said the university had a legal duty to protect the students' rights to free speech by allowing them to register as a student group, but warned that intimidation or violence would not be tolerated on campus.

observations accurately, and that he was representing their views fairly. Since each of them visited the campus at different times, three reports had to be put together," McIntire said.

In Other Ivory Towers

Dartmouth

A New Hampshire Superior Court judge ordered the reinstatement of suspended Dartmouth Review staff members Christopher Baldwin '89 and John Sutter '88, citing the bias of one of the committee members who made the decision. According to the Dartmouth, the students, who had been suspended last March, now return to the college, but the judge warned that his order did not preclude "any further disciplinary decisions." The Review was later attacked by College representatives, who claimed the plaintiffs made the judge's decision public before he had ordered it revealed. The College also claimed some victory from the decision, which did not criticize its judicial process, but only one of the members of the disciplinary committee.

Smith

The condoms available in Smith College bathrooms may not be safe, according to the Sophian. A federal study on the effectiveness of condoms in preventing the transmission of AIDS found that Contrasept Plus condoms are the least effective brand of all those on the market. Contrasept Plus are sold in vending machines and in bathrooms at Smith. The condoms distributed by the Infirmary at Smith are a different brand, Shell, which ranked sixth out of the 31 brands in the study.

Amherst

A new alcohol policy will be enforced at Amherst beginning next semester, the Amherst Student reported. Students will be hired to stand at the doors and check for Amherst College I.D.'s, stamping students who are eligible to drink. The new policy is in response to complaints about theft and harassment resulting from the influx of students from other colleges in the area who come to the parties for free beer. "Amherst can't afford to supply the social life for all the five colleges," one student involved in the decision said.

Massachusetts State Schools

More than one-third of the 29 Massachusetts state colleges and universities are charging students up to $100 in emergency fees this semester to recoup $20 million in state-ordered budget cuts, reported the Berkshire Eagle. Some of the state's 180,000 students should be a one-time measure. The charges range from $35 to $100 per student and are specifically designed to make up some of the budget shortfall, a Board of Regents spokesman said. In addition to the fees, state education officials said some part-time faculty members are being laid off, some classes have increased in size, fewer courses are being offered and enrollment in community colleges has been reduced.

Compiled by Ellen Drought from college newspapers and the Berkshire Eagle.

Emerson String Quartet presents exhilarating musical experience

by Jay R. Hartley

The Emerson String Quartet, one of the world's most respected chamber music ensembles, played in Chapin Hall Thursday night. The many college and community members who attended, filling over two-thirds of the hall, were privy to an exhilarating performance.

This was the final concert of the first 100 years of Thompson concerts at Williams, and it would be hard to imagine a better, or more exciting, one. The success of the performance was partially due to the extraordinarily successful mind/body union of the four men who were on stage that evening.

The members of the Quartet, all Americans, are Eugene Drucker and Philip Setzer, who alternate as first and second violin; Lawrence Dutton, violin; and David Finckel, cello. They have been playing together for 12 years.

The Emerson is the Resident Quartet of the Smithsonian Institution and the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, and its members hold a teaching and performance residency at the Hartt School of Music in Hartford. The Emerson Quartet won the Naumburg Award for Chamber Music in 1978 and have toured widely, in the United States and abroad since then.

generous, featuring quartets by Mozart, Prokofiev, Bartok, and Beethoven. The Quartet members exhibited high levels of technical ability as well as mature musicianship. Yet the most valuable aspect of their performance for the audience was the display of erotic power that can overcome both performers and listeners.

"Too often groups merely 'stay together' in fiery finales or adagios that are not quite hypnotic enough. Members of the Emerson, on the other hand, created a higher level of chamber music by playing 'within' each other.

In the Mozart, for instance, the unison staccato chords at the beginning of the minuet and the fugue-like runs throughout the work let the audience know that these four men actually unite into a single musical being during their performance.

After this captivating opening, the audience was sucked into the Emerson's mind for the intense twelfth century works. The quartet avoided a likely letdown after the Bartok by jumping right into the Beethoven with the same fresh vigor that won them an exclusive recording contract with Deutsche Grammophon.

The Emerson responded to the warm reception by offering a menu from a Brahms quartet as a light encore.

It is to be hoped that the next century of Thompson concerts will bring equally exciting groups, perhaps even returning the Emerson Quartet to Williams.

Take a bow!

Eugene Drucker, Philip Setzer, Lawrence Dutton, and David Finckel, the members of the Emerson String Quartet, performed in Chapin Hall Thursday night.

Interview: Poet David Raffeld has the beat

Record Interview by Bill Savodove David Raffeld, a published poet and a poetry instructor, is teaching the winter study course "The Beats." Next fall, a collection of his poems, entitled The Bellad of Harmonica George, will be published. It is based on his experiences growing up in Chicago.

Raffeld started college in 1966 at the University of Missouri. In his junior year, he switched his major from journalism to English and creative writing. He also studied at Washington University and Berkeley. "I guess I am in some sense a product of the Sixties — the war, resistance," he said.

According to Raffeld, the beats, a literary movement of the late 1940s and early 1950s, have influenced his work. The beats, including the writer Jack Kerouac and the poet, Allen Ginsberg, Gary Snyder, Lawrence Ferlinghetti, and Gregory Corso — are best known for their wild lifestyle and as the forerunners of the hippie generation.

RECORD: After being a witness or a participant in what was going on in the 1960s, are you dismayed to see what college campuses are like today?

RAFFELD: One thing about the beats and the 60s. It was about body and the liberation of the body. In some ways we've perverted that. I think the media picked it up and perverted it; it's still being perverted. The commercials that sell products through bodies is a perversion of that. It's got nothing to do with the temple of creation or the temple of the body — it has to do with selling the body.

"I think they're a slap in the face of public taste... They're bad boys. They flaunted their behavior."

Although Ginsberg is extroverted, although he does celebrate his sexuality and his indignations, there is a fear of that in our culture. Perhaps the fear has extended into the other practices that really have nothing to do with the celebration of the body, but the exploitation of the body.

Rasputin's Music Box

"Shooting Rubber Bands" -- New Bohemians hit the spot

by Stan Shields

I've always thought that albums by bands with neo-sixties names like The New Bohemians were risky purchases. One usually ends up with a lot of strumming guitars and distant, soppy lyrics. Edie Brickell and the New Bohemians might be able to change my mind.

Edie and the band met when in the middle of a hot New Bohemians set in a bar, when a tall girl jumped up onstage and began singing. Judging from the band's debut album, "Shooting Rubber Bands," Edie seems to have purveyed this dominating attitude into an overall control of the band.

The cover art is by her, the lyrics to every song are by her (she wrote both music and lyrics for two songs), the sleeve has six pictures of her and only one of the band — and she's even in that. She has obviously staked out her spot in

K. Thomas

What's disturbing is to walk through this campus and not see students holding hands; which isn't to say you expect to see people making love in the bushes or popularizing the Beatles "Why don't we do it in the road?" But there seems to be a certain inhibition, so that the beats or anything having to do with body becomes self-conscious.

RECORD: Can you give a definition of the term beat?

RAFFELD: There's a definition that is the known one. Beat as in beat down, beat up. Then there's beat as in beatific. As it came through the progression of time, beat became beatnik, which had nothing to do with Kerouac at all. Beat as I see it is spontaneity. First thought, right thought. First word, best word. Those are the crucial elements of beat literature. The confusion in discussing the literature is that once spontaneity becomes a practice it is no longer spontaneity. It's one of those words that's gotten so much attention that it's almost lost its meaning — get the beat, downbeat.

RECORD: Why hasn't most beat literature been accepted into the literary canon?

RAFFELD: I think they're essentially a slap in the face of the public taste. So much of the notoriety got in the way. Kerouac became notorious so that there's all this attention to the man and not much attention to the writing. They're bad boys. They flaunted their behavior.

Their sexual shamelessness is very difficult to accept in a society which promotes sex but also wants you to feel incredibly ugly about it. There is an utter disregard for convention that still disturbs.

Another of the reasons why the beats are not in the canon is that they're not interested in literature. They're interested in the moment as it happens. They're not interested in revision. They're not interested in art for art's sake. They're all essentially on the outside.

RECORD: What attracts you to the works of the beat writers?

RAFFELD: The poems come out of the life. The life doesn't come out of the poem. That's what attracts me to Snyder and that's what attracts me to Ginsberg as well. With Snyder, the things that he writes have been lived first hand. He's a poet in the hermit, Zen tradition and I'm very attracted to Zen Buddhism and Zen poetry. There's another part of Snyder that makes him a citizen of the planet — interested in the community, interested in the ecology.

For Snyder, there is a body of work that represents a vision. He has not sacrificed vision for intensity, which is the predominant European ethos — to sacrifice everything for intensity. So that you're always after the big poem, the big fish, the big one that's going to establish your reputation. And to hell with your family, to hell with your life, and to hell with your kids. You're after art and that's it. Great art is what's really crucial. This is an oblique question and a more question — a question about art and where art stands in one's life and one's relationship to it. Ginsberg insists that art is nature and that the poem reflects what is going on in the life. The life doesn't reflect the poem.

"To hell with your family, to hell with your life, and to hell with your kids. You're after art, and that's it."

There is a certain insipidity in knowing that you've just lived through a day of responsibilities. The Western sense often denies the importance of our daily lives and our responsibilities to our families and each other. Snyder brings us home. He's the kind of poet that you can read and rely on.

One reason why the canon has rejected Ginsberg, Snyder, Corso and Ferlinghetti is the naturalness of their work, the almost insouciance of it. Again, it's the extent to which the poems come out of the life and the life comes out of the poem.

Snyder knows his boundary and backs off from the muse if the muse is going to take him to a place where Sylvia Plath goes. The Ginsberg, Snyder, Kerouac approach is that you write all the time. You keep journals; you write from your journals. The work and the life are center. Your don't prepare yourself for this mystical, infinite union with the muse.

just plain boring. Brickell does have a fair for narrative ("Air of December") and a great band led by Withrow.

On the up-tempo songs Withrow and Brickell work well together, Withrow playing irresistible bones and laying fills steely, flustered, while Brickell's stent vocal gives her lyrics substance and vitality — which by themselves they occasionally lack.

The rest of the band doesn't do too badly either. Percussionist John Bush and drummer Chris Whittom lay some nice, unconventional beats, while guest keyboardist Wes creates some relaxed, bluesy textures.

But it's Withrow's plucky guitar lines — which they all circle around — "Beat the Time," "The Wheel" with its pulsing rhythm section, and "Keep Coming Back" all surge with the power of a light band, and Brickell's vocals sit comfortably atop of them.

continued on page 6

Arts In View

January 17 At 8:00 p.m., Hilton Kramer, chief art critic for The New York Times from 1973 to 1982, will discuss the arts and art criticism in Stetson Faculty Lounge.

January 18 At 8:30 p.m., the Williams College Dance Society will present "Works in Progress" in Lasell Dance Studio.

January 20 At 7:00 p.m., the Freshman Talent Show will take place in Brooks-Rogers Recital Hall.

January 21 Two exhibits of the permanent collection will open at WCMA: "Maurice Prendergast's Women: Real and Ideal" and "Charles Prendergast's Panels." Both exhibits will close June 11.

January 23 At 4:00 p.m. auditions for "For Michael: Contemporary Works" will be held in the AMT Downstage.

Local Movie Listings

Bennington Cinema I, II, III

Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802)442-8179

Rain Man	7:00 & 9:20	Sat. & Sun. 2:05
Working Girl	7:05 & 9:15	Sat. & Sun. 2:05
Dirty Rotten Scoundrels	7:20 & 9:15
Oliver and Company	6:00	Sat. & Sun. 2:05

Images

Spring Street, Williamstown, 459-5612

Bird	January 17	7:00 only
A City in the Dark	January 18-19	7:00 & 9:15
Alice's Restaurant	January 20-21	7:00 only
Imagine: John Lennon	January 20-21	9:00 only
Vincent	January 22-24	7:00 & 9:00

North Adams Cinema

Rts 8, North Adams, 663-5873

Twins	7:00 & 9:20	Sat. & Sun. 2:00
Dirty Rotten Scoundrels	7:00 & 9:20	Sat. & Sun. 2:00
Tequila Sunrise	7:10 & 9:25
Land Before Time		Sat. & Sun. 2:00
The Naked Gun	7:10 & 9:25	Sat. & Sun. 2:00

Pittsfield Cinema Center

Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639

Working Girl, Dirty Rotten Scoundrels, The Accidental Tourist, Scrooged, Twins, Tequila Sunrise: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30, Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10

Rain Man: 6:45

Oliver and Company: 6:30

The Naked Gun, The January Man, Deep Star Six: 7:15 & 9:30, Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10

Berkshire Mall Cinema

Rte 8, Lenox, 459-2558

Rain Man	12:30	3:30	6:40	9:40
Dirty Rotten Scoundrels	12:55	4:10	6:50	9:20
Oliver and Company	12:30	2:30	4:30	6:30
Tequila Sunrise	1:00	3:55	6:50	9:25
The January Man	1:15	4:00	7:10	9:20
Deep Star Six	12:50	4:05	7:30	9:30
Twins	1:05	3:50	7:00	9:50
Working Girl	1:10	3:40	7:15	9:45
The Naked Gun	1:20	4:20	7:20	9:35
The Accidental Tourist	12:40	3:40	7:05	9:50

Bronfman Auditorium

Tuesday at 7:00 & 9:00

The Soft Skin	Friday at 7:00 & 9:00
The In-Laws	Saturday at 2:00
Yellow Submarine	Saturday at 7:00 & 9:00

BERKSHIRE STATIONERY

Factory Outlet Store

40% off

- Thesis Paper
- Stationery
- Notes
- Typing Paper
- Letter Paper
- Jigsaw Puzzles

Windsor Mill
121 Union St., North Adams, Mass.
Open Mon.-Sat 10 - 5

Catone FINE LETTER PAPERS

Elysian Fields Gallery

Come Daily in the Alley at the Elysian Fields Gallery (formerly The Studio)

Featuring handknit woolen and mohair sweaters, unique crafted jewelry, oversized paisley scarves and shawls, silk pajamas and kimonos, and museum prints for your dorm or favorite Valentine.

Hours: Mon-Sat 10-5:30 and Sun 12-5:00

Elysian Fields Gallery

Eph's Alley, off Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. (413) 451-4707
Elyse and Jonathan Meer '83, Proprietors

Smith

The condoms available in Smith College bathrooms may not be safe, according to the Sophian. A federal study on the effectiveness of condoms in preventing the transmission of AIDS found that Contrasept Plus condoms are the least effective brand of all those on the market. Contrasept Plus are sold in vending machines and in bathrooms at Smith. The condoms distributed by the Infirmary at Smith are a different brand, Shell, which ranked sixth out of the 31 brands in the study.

Amherst

A new alcohol policy will be enforced at Amherst beginning next semester, the Amherst Student reported. Students will be hired to stand at the doors and check for Amherst College I.D.'s, stamping students who are eligible to drink. The new policy is in response to complaints about theft and harassment resulting from the influx of students from other colleges in the area who come to the parties for free beer. "Amherst can't afford to supply the social life for all the five colleges," one student involved in the decision said.

Massachusetts State Schools

More than one-third of the 29 Massachusetts state colleges and universities are charging students up to $100 in emergency fees this semester to recoup $20 million in state-ordered budget cuts, reported the Berkshire Eagle. Some of the state's 180,000 students should be a one-time measure. The charges range from $35 to $100 per student and are specifically designed to make up some of the budget shortfall, a Board of Regents spokesman said. In addition to the fees, state education officials said some part-time faculty members are being laid off, some classes have increased in size, fewer courses are being offered and enrollment in community colleges has been reduced.

Compiled by Ellen Drought from college newspapers and the Berkshire Eagle.

The Cathedral

This woodcut by Ernst Barlach is one of the more than 40 German Expressionist prints and drawings that will be on view at the Williams College Museum of Art until March 19. The exhibit, a survey of German graphic art of the early 20th century, will include loans from private collectors and a selection of rare books as well as works from the permanent collection. Other featured artists are Max Beckmann, Wassily Kandinsky, Oskar Kokoschka, Kathe Kollwitz, and Emil Nolde. Sandra Goldman, Assistant Curator of the DeCordova and Dana Museum and Park in Lincoln, is the guest curator. She did research for the project while a National Endowment for the Arts Intern at WCMA last year.

Hufford memorial scholarships created

by Ellen Drought
Two awards have been established by the college to commemorate the life of Charlie Hufford. Hufford, a member of the class of 1989, died in an automobile accident in December 1987.

The awards were created from the memorial fund of contributions from Hufford's family, friends and classmates.

According to a mailing from the Dean's office last month, "the Charles Hufford Memorial Fellowship will be awarded to a student entering his or her senior year to support a summer of work closely related to the fields of political science or political economy." Those subjects were Hufford's primary academic interests.

The first fellowship will be awarded for the summer of 1989. The Dean's Office announced that although in the future only members of the incoming senior class will be eligible, for this first year members of Hufford's class will also be invited to apply along with members of the class of 1990.

In recognition of Hufford's work as a teaching assistant in Political Science 206, Empirical Political Science, the Charles Hufford Book Prize will be awarded to a teaching assistant in that course.

Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards said, "The idea for the Hufford scholarships was worked out very, very closely with the family."

"Dean [of the College] Stephen Fix along with the Hufford family felt the scholarships would really fit in with Charlie Hufford's spirit, his love, and his life at Williams," she added.

We carry the best in jazz on record, cassette and CD

TOONERVILLE TROLLEY RECORDS
131 WATER STREET 458-5229

New Bohemians: An energetic debut

continued from page 5

On the slower pieces, however, there are some slight problems. Brickell's voice seems almost devoid of emotion in some sensitive moments, and the band—though still good—has been mixed down and robbed of authority simply in volume levels.

There are tracks where Brickell does succeed in conveying the emotion she's striving for: "Air of December" flows nicely through nostalgia and yearning, and "Circle" is perhaps the best song on the album, quietly cutting out in resignation.

Overall, it is an impressive debut, and one that shows a lot of promise. The writing of Brickell and Withrow even in their off moments display a lot of poise and talent. The band is polished but not lacking in energy or overproduced.

On their next album the band plans to go simply by "The New Bohemians" and musically achieve a more equal status. Let's hope they don't change too much else.

RICHARD D. SIMPSON G. VINCENT COUSSOLE
the College Book Store of Williamstown, Inc.
74 SPRING ST., WILLIAMSTOWN, MA. 01267 (413) 458-4808

Interested in Public Policy? and The Career of a Wharton Graduate?

Earn a Ph.D., M.A., or M.B.A. in Public Policy and Management at

Wharton

And Take Your Place As One of Tomorrow's Leaders.

For information about these programs, write to:
Admissions Coordinator
Department of Public Policy and Management - Box 26
The Wharton School
University of Pennsylvania
Philadelphia, PA 19104

SAVE THIS AD & Come To

DRUMMOND CLEANERS
Spring Street, Williamstown
Jim Drummond is at it again... He wants to clean you up!!

SPECIAL SAVINGS

4 for 2
Similar articles for the price of 2
Jan. 16 to Jan. 21

SWEATERS
reg. $3.50
Now $1.50
Jan. 23-Jan. 28

Coupon must be presented when clothes are brought in for cleaning.

Coats & Parkas
reg. $3.50
Now $4.00
Jan. 30-Feb. 11

Household Goods
(Drapes, curtains, seat covers, cushion covers, etc.)
50% off
Feb. 6-Feb. 11

Don't forget we're now in North Adams at The Laundry Club, 41 Union St., (413) 664-6789

Drummond Cleaners 66 Spring St., Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-4801
Meyers Laundry 118 Park St., Boston, Mass. (617) 452-5827
O'Dell's Drycleaning 43 Elm St., Haverhill, Mass. (603) 892-3334

Women's hoops

continued from page 8

teams. Early in the first half, Williams forward Rebecca Borden, enjoying a strong sophomore season, went down with an ankle injury after landing poorly on a layup attempt. "The injury took some spunk out of our team emotionally," said Coach Roberts. Williams may have been a little flat anyway since they have not played a tough game in the past month.

Middlebury, however, was just coming off a tough loss to Middlebury ranked St. John's Fisher. Middlebury was also seeking revenge for a 95-89 loss to Williams at home on December 3, its fifth consecutive defeat against the Ephs.

Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards said, "The idea for the Hufford scholarships was worked out very, very closely with the family."

"Dean [of the College] Stephen Fix along with the Hufford family felt the scholarships would really fit in with Charlie Hufford's spirit, his love, and his life at Williams," she added.

Men's hoops

continued from page 8

came Saturday morning when the Ephs faced a highly favored Cornell team that featured several "big" names from the junior squash circuit. Freshman Bruce Hopper and senior Doug Gilbert faced these Cornell recruits at the top two spots and fell 3-0 and 3-1, respectively. The match was then placed in the hands of the middle of the ladder, as the bottom four, Chris Kilpstein '89, Pentz, Seth Packard '89, and Rob Kilp '91 all came away with victories for the Purple.

Both Adam Kimberly '89 and Rob Halligan '89 in the 5th- and 3rd-ranked positions came up short at 3-2. This left the outcome of the match to be decided between Captain Lewis Fisher '89 and the Cornell vermin. Fisher's opponent turned out to be teammate Kilpstein's younger brother. The match progressed until it was tied at two-all, leaving the fate of the team to be decided the next day, when Fisher lost his match.

On January 17 the Ephmen have a rare opportunity to avenge their loss to Cornell when they host the Dartmouth game for Middlebury with 21 points and 11 rebounds.

Westfield State no challenge
On Thursday, Williams had little trouble against Westfield State. The Lady Owls were forced to play without star center Kelly LaChance, who sat out the game with an injury. Cadigan led all scorers with 21 points and added 7 assists. Crouchley pumped in 19 points,

This [game] was their Amherst. I don't even think it was intensity. It was obsession.

familiarity. "We know your coach and the kind of game that Williams likes to play." The Ephwomen were led in Saturday's contest by sophomore Chrissy Cadigan's 25 points. Senior co-captain Misty Crouchley and freshman Kristina Burdurst added 11 points each. Kathy Dubzinski scored 24 points to pace Middlebury, while freshman center Caroline Leary contributed 16 points and 16 rebounds. Forward Meredith Binder also had an excellent game for Middlebury with 21 points and 11 rebounds. Westfield State no challenge

On Thursday, Williams had little trouble against Westfield State. The Lady Owls were forced to play without star center Kelly LaChance, who sat out the game with an injury. Cadigan led all scorers with 21 points and added 7 assists. Crouchley pumped in 19 points, while Hedeman had 17 points to go with her team-high 8 rebounds. Senior guard Wendy Kelly led the Lady Owls with 15 points, followed by freshman Kim McMillan, who scored 14 points. However, McMillan and team scoring leader Tessa Chenaille were unable to break into the scoring column in the first half. Chenaille finished the game with just four points. The Ephwomen were able to pass the ball inside repeatedly in the first half. Hedeman had a big half as a result, scoring 13 points. After a Westfield free throw made the score 6-5, Williams went on a 9-0 run, with Hedeman scoring all the points inside. Westfield State also played a strong inside game but was unable to convert several easy scoring opportunities.

Ephs break open game
The Lady Owls stayed close until midway through the first half because of standout play by Kelly. Kelly, the school record holder for assists, was forced to look more for her shot and responded with 9 points in the half.

Leading 28-18, Williams exploded over the next five minutes, outscoring Westfield State 16-2. The scoring spurt was keyed by long jumpers from Cadigan and Crouchley. Williams coasted to a 51-28 halftime game, and Westfield State never challenged in the second half.

Williams, with a 5-2 record, is still hopeful of earning a post-season playoff berth. However, the Ephwomen have a tough schedule ahead of them, including Amherst next Saturday. It appears that they will be forced to play without Borden, who could be lost up to two weeks. The Ephs host Union tonight at 7.

Green, who squeaked by Cornell earlier in a 5-4 win. The team is confident that they have improved enough since the Cornell match to beat Dartmouth.

"The added dimension of bulk that our weightlifting program has added to our game will be the margin of victory," Kimberly said of the upcoming match.

College may end contract

continued from page 1

added that they are also considering faculty complaints that there is not an adequate trade book supply.

Blankenship said, "Another important issue is how capable this bookstore will be of efficiently bringing in books at any time of the year. The capability is there for a bookstore to know every title on every topic by using a computer." He added that because bookstores cannot carry each one of these books, the speed with which they can get them is important.

Until a permanent decision is reached and put into practice, the committee is attempting to find short-term solutions to student and faculty complaints. They have met with Dewey, who has agreed to several changes which Blankenship said he believes will make the book-buying process less frustrating. The issue of long lines will be dealt with by providing more runners and three cash registers. Dewey has also promised to have 99 percent of books in stock in the two weeks before classes begin. He has said he will tell students immediately which of their books are unavailable and order any books that are not in stock by two-day air mail.

"We will give the president what we think is the best option," Reed said. The college community will probably receive the report in February.

The members of the committee are Acting Dean of the College Joan Edwards, Assistant Professor of English Jim Shepard, Reed, Winston and Blankenship.

Men's hoops

continued from page 10

the first two of his 13 points, the Ephs lead reached 14.

Conte closes the door
With five minutes left to play, Lipsky found Major in the corner for a three point attempt. The junior was knocked to the floor as he lay flat, but his shot found its mark, giving Williams a 60-49 lead. Down by eleven, the Thoroughbreds called time-out to plan a last-ditch effort. They caught the Ephmen by surprise with a quick inbounds pass that resulted in a three-point play for forward Pete Kesner. Then Kesner "picked off" an Eph pass and went all the way with it to bring Skidmore within seven with three minutes remaining.

But, seconds later, a lapse in coverage left Conte wide open in three-point land, and the freshman converted to put the game away.

After the game Masters looked ahead to Amherst, pointing to the team's current four-game winning streak and saying, "This game was important for us because we've got Amherst coming in next week, and if we can keep this streak going, we'll go into that game on an up note."

In Tuesday night's blowout win over Union, Melchionni led the Ephmen to victory with 26 points and 8 rebounds. Major added 23 and had 4 assists. The team's next game will be at R.P.I. on Tuesday; then it's back to Chandler Gym for Amherst on Saturday night.

Men's Hockey

continued from page 10

the first period. He was assisted by line-mate Seguin.

Williams clearly dominated the remainder of the period. Most of the plays occurred in the Owls' zone and the Ephs had several strong shots. Westfield State goaltender Robert Burke frustrated the Ephs with some superb sprawling saves, and the Williams attack was neutralized until Frechette kicked the nets from 25 feet after hauling in a pass from Andrew Zimman '92.

Ephs rally in second stanza
The Ephmen finally began to take firm control of the contest in the second stanza. After Ford turned aside a Westfield State breakaway just thirty seconds into the period, Seguin picked up the biscuit at his own blue line and outskated two Owl defenders before firing a blast into the lower left corner of the goal for a 3-1 Williams lead.

Seguin notched another goal minutes later on a three-on-one breakaway when he teamed up with junior line-mate Ron Van Belle at 5:19 of the period. Less than a minute later, the Ephmen pulled their keeper during a delayed penalty, and Frechette buried a ten foot wrist shot during the ensuing advantage. Although the teams could manage no further scoring in the period, the fans had plenty to cheer about. Owl defenseman Stephen Pacific had to skate quickly to his bench as his uniform pants began to fall to an embarrassing level, in the process earning a hearty ovation from the couple hundred fans on hand.

Although the Ephs seemed to wake up from their opening-period slumber in the second period, managing 25 shots and asserting themselves through solid checks and quality skating, it was not until the final twenty minutes that the Williams attack began to peak.

Five minutes into the third period, forward Mike Swenson '89 skated from the left corner and wristed a 15-foot shot past Burke. Sophomore Rob Abel followed with an unassisted breakaway goal at 7:20 to put the Ephs up 7-1, and then Swenson scored his second goal of the period came at 10:10, when he spanked a pass from junior line-mate Bob Santry into the left side of the net.

The Ephs continued their assault for the remainder of the contest. Most of the late action occurred in the Westfield State zone, and the Owls could muster no serious offensive threats. Freshman defenseman Mark Oliver made next year's highlight film, as he buried a 15-foot wrist shot at 15:59, and followed just five seconds later with a successful slapshot that gave the Ephmen a 10-1 lead. Although several late penalties marred the end of the game, Ian Smith '91 made sure that the final note of the evening was not completely sour, as he stuffed home a loose puck at 17:31 to end the scoring and to round out a successful week.

Williams travels to Middlebury tonight, then faces Connecticut College at home next Saturday.

the Cottage
CLOTHING
THURS., FRI., SAT. ONLY
ANY SALE ITEM 25% OFF
Get the second item for 50% OFF
WITH THIS AD (higher price prevails)
South Street Pittsfield Water Street Williamstown
OPEN 7 DAYS SINCE 1989

West Package and Variety Store

Route 2 between North Adams and Williamstown
Phone: 663-6081

Winter Study Specials

12 oz. Molson Golden case 14.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Heineken or Becks case 17.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Rolling Rock Export case 11.99 plus deposit
12 oz. Hofpenperle Swiss Beer 13.99 plus deposit

Cash and Carry: 1/2 keg Meisterbrau - $25 plus deposit

For quality over quantity, check out our variety of unique beers and ales

The Williams Record LIVE

SPRING BREAK
NASSAU/PARADISE ISLAND
FROM $299.00

PACKAGE INCLUDES:
ROUNDTrip AIR, TRANSFERS, 7 NIGHTS HOTEL, BEACH PARTIES, FREE LUNCH, CRUISE, FREE ADMISSION TO NIGHTCLUBS, TAXES AND MORE!!!

CANCUN PACKAGES ALSO AVAILABLE!!!

ORGANIZE SMALL GROUP, EARN FREE TRIP!

1-800-231-0113 OR (203) 967-3330

YOU QUALIFY FOR INSTANT CREDIT!

Start making credit purchases IMMEDIATELY! We will send you a Members Credit Card at once with NO CREDIT CHECK. Buy any Jewelry, Clothing, Sport, Electronics, etc. All with installment payments out of our "Giant 100+ Pages Catalog." Take 12 months to repay. Your personal credit card is a second I.D. - valuable for checking, etc. plus your Students Credit Group A-1 reference will be on file to help you obtain other credit cards. So send in your $5 catalog deposit now. (refundable with your first order) Establish your credit today! 100% Satisfaction Guaranteed (or your Money Back)

MEMBERS P.O. BOX 4649 STUDENTS PORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA 33338

Pack of Lies.

The Great American Smokeout, Nov. 17.

AMERICAN SOCIETY

1989! CRANK IT UP.

Hardrock. It's everything your Momma warned you about. Loud, Nasty. And looking for trouble. But for all its upstart nature, Hardrock definitely comes from the finest breeding. Specialized. Go out and give it a spin. With Hardrock it doesn't cost much to make a little noise.

CROSS COUNTRY SKI AND MOUNTAIN BIKE SPECIALISTS

the Mountain Goat

FOLLOW-UP ON CAMPUS INTERVIEWS: FEB. 24th

Women Hoopsters look sharp in victories

by Aali Jallil

"Our intensity was much less than theirs. That's why we lost. It's as simple as that." Those words from Williams College Coach Nancy Roberts summed up the story as Williams lost at home, 92-80, to an aggressive Middlebury squad on Saturday. Williams was coming off an easy 90-61 victory against Westfield State Thursday night.

Williams fell behind almost immediately. Down 4-2, Middlebury scored the next 11 points, the last four coming from fast-break baskets off turnovers. The turnovers were the result of Williams trying to force the ball to a nonexistent inside game.

The Ephs regrouped after a time out and regained the lead, 20-19. The comeback was keyed by a couple of

K. Thomas

Driving the lane

Kris Broadhurst '92 drives the lane for a basket as Megan King '90 looks on during Thursday's 90-61 defeat of Westfield State.

give-and-go layups by Cadigan and co-captain Julia Beasley '89 and good outside shooting by Crouchley.

The lead was short-lived, however. After the teams exchanged baskets for a couple of minutes, Middlebury took the lead for good with eight minutes left in the first half on a basket by captain Sue Haviland, making the score 30-28. Williams trailed at the half, 43-37.

Poor shooting by Ephs

Williams was out of synch offensively throughout the first half, even during its comeback. The Ephs were unable to rely on their inside game, but Middlebury played strong physical defense down low. With Middlebury denying the inside game, Williams also got poor outside shooting from normally reliable shooters Cadigan and Crouchley. Cadigan was 3-11 from the field in the first half, and Crouchley made only 3 of 8 shots. The Ephs' main scorer inside, senior co-captain Nancy Hede-man, was 2 of 7, and Williams shot 37 percent for the half. Middlebury, on the other hand, enjoying strong inside play on offense as well, shot just under 50 percent.

The Ephs started slowly in the second half, turning the ball over on five of its first 11 possessions. The turnovers enabled Middlebury to score 11 straight points, extending its lead to 62-45. Williams closed the gap to six points, 77-71, with just under five minutes to go in the game, but Dubzinski answered with a demoralizing three-pointer. Middlebury converted its free throws to seal the game.

Middlebury more intense

Middlebury was the sharper of the two teams and continually beat Williams down the court. Although Middlebury turned the ball over 28 times, Williams was unable to get their trademark easy fast break baskets. Middlebury, on the other hand, got several transition baskets, prompting Cadigan to say, "Middlebury was a much quicker team than what we were used to."

There were several reasons for the difference in intensity between the two

continued page 7

Men's squash falls to tough opponents

by Lewis Fisher

"I was out there to kill," senior squash player Kaveh Khorramabadi said, summing up his feelings about playing Division I powerhouse Harvard last Wednesday. The Ephs' confident attitude was not enough, however, as they were downed by the Crimson 9-0.

Although the score was one-sided, new squash coach Paul Assalante said he was pleased with his players as they were competitive in every match. The Ephs now stand at 6-4 and are poised to attack the national rankings. They have already met last year's North American Champion Harvard, a top-ranked team from London Ontario, and Yale, a squad that many believe has the talent to take the crown from Harvard.

Before travelling to Atlanta over Christmas break, the Ephs hosted the annual Williams Invitational. The tournament opened with the traditional match between the Ephs and the United States Naval Academy, in what has grown to become an intense yet friendly rivalry. Williams, never growing weary, was able to slowly crush the Midshipmen. When the match ended, Navy was left complaining about the excessive noise from the boisterous Williams fans. They were tormented by an 8-1 loss at the hands of the fired-up Ephs.

For Coach Assalante, victory was especially sweet as he had been coach at Army for ten years but had never beaten Navy. "The victory got Coach

Victory was sweet for Assalante, who had been coach at Army for ten years but had never beaten Navy.

A's career at Williams off to a great start," sophomore Chris Pentz said. "It built real comradery between Coach and the team when we not only beat his old nemesis, but dominated them. He was walking on air."

Kilstein wins twice

The next big match of the weekend

continued on page 7

Typing Service by published writer. Limited editing available. Typed or handwritten MS. Word processing disk storage. From $1.50/page. Tel. 458-2614

$60.00 PER HUNDRED remailing letters from home! Details, send self-addressed, stamped envelope:

Associates
Box 309 - T
Colonia, NJ 07067

THE BIGGEST IS LOOKING FOR THE BEST

The Prudential

THE TRAVEL STORE

105 Spring St.
Williamstown, MA

Open 9 to 5 Mon.-Fri. *Until 8 & Thur. *9 to 12 Sat.

(413) 458-5786
Outside Mass. (800) 225-5052

STUDENTS!

WE HAVE GREAT VACATIONS FOR "SPRING BREAK"

LOWEST POSSIBLE RATES FOR FLORIDA, MEXICO, BAHAMAS, THE CARIBBEAN AND EUROPE!!!

Book any vacation and receive a free T-Shirt

Special student youth fares on scheduled airlines to Europe, the South Pacific & Latin America

SAMPLE AIRFARES:	RIO	$415.00
	BUENOS AIRES	$415.00
	STOCKHOLM	$445.00
	PARIS	$445.00
	FRANKFURT	$430.00
	GENEVA	$445.00
	SYDNEY	$1140.00
	AUCKLAND	$1130.00

FREE TRAVELLER CHEQUES AND FREE PASSPORT PICTURES

AMERICAN EXPRESS TRAVEL REPRESENTATIVE
PART OF A NETWORK OF 1500 OFFICES WORLDWIDE

The Prudential -- the nation's largest diversified financial services organization -- is looking for high potential candidates for its Advanced Management Development Program.

The Program immediately places individuals in responsible positions which will expand their knowledge of the Company and develop analytical and managerial skills. The successful candidates will be expected to assume management and executive positions on a greatly accelerated basis.

If you have the talent, drive, and energy to become one of Prudential's future executives, please join our Prudential representatives at an Information Session on Thursday, January 19 at 7 p.m. at the Office of Career Counseling.

The Advanced Management Development Program -- a commitment to preparing individuals to shape their own future, and that of the Prudential.

The Prudential is an equal opportunity employer.

The Prudential Corporate Employment Center 56 North Livingston Avenue Roseland New Jersey 07068

Swimmers enjoy mixed success

by Anne Joseph

The previously undefeated men's and women's swimming teams fell to a consistently strong University of Massachusetts team on Saturday. The men lost 92-151, and the women lost 115-185; both records now stand at 3-1.

Coach Carl Samuelson attributed the loss to a combination of factors including the health of many swimmers. He said, "the swimming was quite good. It was a little off in the end, but a good job particularly considering what we've been going through for the past two weeks."

University of Massachusetts dominated from the first event. Brian McIver, especially, swam fast times in the 50-meter and 100-meter free, winning in 21.84 and 47.41 and beating posted pool records held by Colgate.

Although beaten out for the majority of first places in the men's meet, the Ephs did capture several events. Robert Benson '90 won the 200-meter fly with 1:59.81, and two events later, Chris Ciarro '90 captured the 200-meter back with 2:00.67, finishing about three seconds before Massachusetts' Elie.

The 500-meter free proved to be one of the closest races of the day, in which Massachusetts' Robertson edged out Paul Dehmel '91 4:51.61 to 4:51.78. Ephman Evan Davis '89 won the 200-meter breast with 2:16.69, in the process chalking up the final first-place finish of the men's meet.

Divers fare better

The Williams men's diving squad had an easier time, eventually winding up victorious. Scott Schwager '91 came in second in the 1-meter competition with 260 points and later won the 3-meter event, qualifying for Nationals. Schwager stated, "I'm psyched that the team had a good meet. And I look forward to Williams winning New England again."

The women's meet followed, and Massachusetts once more seized an early lead. Massachusetts' Tracy Young set a new pool record in the 1000-meter free with a scorching 10:51.82, beating second-place Michelle Freeman '90 from Williams.

The Ephs did have several first-place finishes, including Lee Schroeder '92 in the 200-meter freestyle and Dorothy Lebeau '91 in the 100-meter back and 200-meter back.

The women divers also had an outstanding meet. Coached by Mandy

Glenner, the Ephs dominated the 1-meter diving, qualifying both first- and second-place finishers Patty Althoff '92 and Kathia Vandevenne '91 for NCAA competition.

Both Williams squads travel to Hamilton next week, following a Wednesday home date in which the women face Smith. Co-captain Mike O'Malley '89 stated, "We have an opportunity to go really fast next week." Co-captain Chris Giglio '89 added, "Let's make people pay for this mark on our record."

Caught in mid-air

Diver Scott Schwager '91 displays perfect form in last Saturday's meet against the University of Massachusetts. Schwager qualified for Nationals with his win in the 3-meter event.

A. Pinto

Track

continued on page 10

McGinn and Igharo lead men

The men's meet showcased junior Geoff Igharo's return from injury as an almost two-year absence from the track, as well as the throwing prowess of senior Joe McGinn. McGinn's toss of 15.65 meters in the 35 lb. weight throw gave him a win in the event and a track record. Igharo looked strong in the 55 meters, cruising to a time of 6.6 seconds to take second place in the event final. Larry Smith '92 placed fifth for the Ephs in the 55 meters.

Other Ephs turned in second-place finishes and scoring contributions. Captain Dave Nadelman '89 ran the 800 meters in 2:00.4, an excellent early season time. Freshman Brad Behr looked strong in the 500 meters, posting a time of 69.3 seconds. Steve Moran '91 jumped 13 feet in the pole vault for the second straight week. Smith tied for second in the 200 meters with a time of 23.1 seconds. In the 5000 meters, Brian Coan '92 ran 16:11.2.

Other scorers for the Ephs in distance events were Brendan Kease '92, fifth in the 1000 meters, David Tewksbury '89, fourth in the 1500, Steve Brody '90, fourth in the 3000 meters, and Josh Rayman '91, fifth in the 5000 meters. Paul Thompson took fourth place in the shot put.

Williams will run a dual meet at Union on Saturday before competing in a TAC meet at Harvard on Sunday. Second in the 1500 meters after an intense battle with race winner Alicia St. John of Colgate, who prevailed by only 23/100ths of a second, Cherie MacAulay '92 was third in the 1500 in 5:09.3. In the field events, Sue Norbren '89 took second in the long jump while Noriko Honda '89 was third.

Athlete of the Week

This week's recipient is skier Bill Crowley '91, who won both the slalom and giant slalom races in last weekend's Castleton Carnival with times of 1:55.42 and 2:16.09. Crowley is the first skier from any college to sweep both events in a Division I EISA carnival since 1983. He is also the first skier ever to do so at the Castleton Carnival, held annually in Vermont. Congratulations, Bill.

Grapplers fall to MIT, Norwich

by James Lee

The Williams varsity wrestling squad, which had launched its season in December with upset victories over U. Mass Boston and Bridgewater State, lost two gritty fights Saturday against MIT and Norwich. Although ten out of the fifteen wrestlers are freshmen, the team is more competitive than last season, according to Coach Roger Carson.

"We really are starting from scratch; we haven't had a winning season for the past fifteen years... We need a revival of a program that has been on the back-burner of Williams athletics for a long time," commented Carson on his feelings for this season.

Freshman standout Ivan Fermon, wrestling in the 115 class with an unbeaten season record, led the team in both matches as he hammered two pins on his opponents with outstanding technique. Fermon physically dominated both matches as he pinned his Norwich opponent in 30 seconds and nearly injured the MIT wrestler. Freshman Doug Dreffer, in the 177 class, brought home two hard-fought victories in 7-0, 5-4 decision wins.

The final score against MIT stood at 15-27, with the Ephs taking four out of ten matches. Two of their losses were grueling matches involving freshmen Dylan Bloy and Chris Gemignani. Both, winning until the last few seconds in the third round, ended inches away from upset victories. "If we had won these matches, we would have beaten the strong MIT," Carson said.

The Norwich match closed with a 16-30 score as captain John Dillon '89, Peter Herbsman '92, Gemignani, Sean Glynn '91, Dan Brayton '92 all suffered tough decision losses and the Ephs, lacking a heavyweight, forfeited that category. Dreffer in 177, however, registered a tight decision win as he took down his opponent during the last 30 seconds after being tied 3-3. "Overall, we feel good that we were very competitive in these matches," said Carson, noting that MIT and Norwich have both been dominant in the past.

Earlier in the week on Tuesday, SUNY Albany and Western N.E., two nationally-ranked powerhouses, inflicted heavy blows on Williams. "We just were not as good," Glynn said. "We are concentrating on weight-training in a concerted effort to be more physically strong," said Carson in regard to what he perceives to be the team's principal weakness. "We are building towards future; we are now better and younger than last season," Carson said.

The wrestlers travel to Boston this Saturday for the MIT Invitational. "This is a great opportunity for individuals to shine among all the fine wrestlers in New England," Carson noted.

Skiing

continued from page 10

course conditions caused by a lack of adequate snow cover.

Both the women's alpine and Nordic teams finished third. The Nordic women were led by Kristin Seemann '89, who placed fourth in the 7.5 kilometer race. Kim Bowes '92 was seventh in the race. The University of Vermont placed first in the women's Nordic event with 90 points, ahead of Middlebury (85) and Williams (80). On the alpine side, sophomore Amy Sullivan's aggressive skiing earned her fourth place in both the slalom and giant slalom. She was supported by strong finishes from Amy Beliveau '91, Mari Omland '89, and Monica Kopp '89.

According to alpine coach Ed Greer, the team is among the most talented that he has coached. As was shown at the Castleton Carnival, the Williams skiers will this year be able to seriously challenge the University of Vermont for the NCAA Eastern Championship.

Sports Quiz

1. What state has had two schools' football programs receive NCAA sanctions in the past four weeks?
2. How many national football championships has Notre Dame now won?
3. The 1989 Super Bowl will feature the Cincinnati Bengals and the San Francisco 49ers. In what year did these two squads first clash in the league's title match?
4. In the 1940's Glenn Davis of Army set an intercollegiate record by stealing 64 bases in 65 attempts. What team ruined his bid for a perfect season by throwing him out?
5. Williams College was one of the participants in the first intercollegiate baseball game in history. Who was their opponent?

Send your answers to Mariam Naficy at SU 1871 by Saturday or call the Record office on Sunday to enter. A drawing will be held among the entries with the most correct answers.

Ski Sale at GOFF'S SPORTS, INC. SAVE 30%

-Tyrolia Bindings
-Sweaters
-Parkas
-Pants

SKI PACKAGES

Save an additional 10 %
From already low, low prices.

Save on Alpine and XC Skis

SAVE 20%
-Skis
-Bindings
-Boots
-Poles

ONLY AT:
GOFF'S SPORTS, INC.
15 Spring Street 458-3605

THE NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Hear! Hear!

BY RICHARD SILVESTRO/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

- ACROSS
- 1 Neither fem. nor neut.
 - 3 Thin-skinned area
 - 9 Spring
 - 12 Reporter's exclusive
 - 18 Juárez water
 - 16 Neophyte
 - 20 Moon valley
 - 21 Vell material
 - 22 Keystone State
 - 22 Fail to include
 - 24 Infix
 - 25 Summer snake?
 - 28 Nobleman views oceanic wastes
 - 30 "Sons of the Desert" co-star
 - 32 August sign
 - 22 County component
 - 24 Vane reading
 - 25 Auricles
 - 36 Source of a syrup
 - 20 It's V of the Urals
 - 41 Excavator overlooked secondary weather phenomenon
 - 46 Ed or Leon
 - 50 With full force
 - 51 Greek Cupid
 - 52 Biblical idol
 - 54 Carmine
 - 55 Old English barbs
 - 56 More dreadful
 - 58 Foulard
 - 58 NASA sites
 - 60 Earthquake
 - 62 Gourmand's toy
 - 65 Virgous relatives ran after insects
 - 71 Gridiron gear
 - 72 Selling places
 - 72 Type of sch. form
 - 74 Prefix for hurry
 - 75 "Aquit se—espahoi"
 - 77 Child's wear
 - 78 "Major" auth.
 - 82 Jeer
 - 84 Funnyman act
 - 85 "— by land
 - 86 Donkey's cry
 - 87 Ecclesiastical group/dined on chicken
 - 60 Three-time Olympics skating champion
 - 67 Suspect's out
 - 68 Brownish hue
 - 69 Silent screen star Nita
 - 70 One thing after another
 - 74 Sound from a Harold Gray canine
 - 77 Literary collections
 - 78 He rose over
 - 80 Wilkes's other half
 - 81 Methods: Abbr.
 - 62 Earth: Comb. form
 - 62 Assuages
 - 94 In two
 - 95 Uraeus symbol
 - 98 Early pulp!
 - 101 Squids squirt it
 - 102 Makes a clean state
 - 102 Sedate singer remained vile
 - 109 Careless hurrying
 - 110 Clean a fluke
 - 111 Yemeni, e.g.
 - 112 English
 - 115 Ethyl oxide
 - 116 Slender candle
 - 117 Ceremonial
 - 118 Galway's locale
 - 119 Fabric joints
 - 120 While preceder
 - 121 Have to have
 - 122 Multigen

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

© 1980 Chronicle Features Distributed by Universal Press Syndicate

Hoopsters crush Skidmore, Union

by Alex Rachmiel

After a ten-day sojourn in Costa Rica and a Philadelphia trip that produced wins over Haverford and Swarthmore, the Ephmen came home this week to host Union and Skidmore, and extended their winning streak to four games with victories in both contests.

Saturday night's Skidmore game, which the Ephs won by a 75-66 margin, featured a 21-point performance by Rich Williams '90. The junior forward shot 5 of 7 from beyond the three-point stripe, and had 6 rebounds and 4 steals. Freshman guard John Conte scored 17, including 4 three-pointers, and senior co-captains Bill "Air" Melchionni and Mike Masters controlled the boards, grabbing 8 and 7 rebounds respectively. "Our plan was to keep [junior Garcia] Major out of the game," said Skidmore coach John Quattrochi after the game, "but it didn't work because other people came through for them." Indeed, Skidmore's box-and-one defense kept Major out of the scoring column for the entire first half and held the usually high-scoring guard to 13 points on the game.

"Our plan was to keep [junior Garcia] Major out of the game," said Skidmore coach John Quattrochi.

But this strategy proved a costly gamble, for the Thoroughbreds' attention to Major allowed Williams, Conte, and Mike Butler '90 to repeatedly get open deep, and the trio combined for ten three-point baskets. Including a late addition by Major, the Ephmeos shot a total of eleven three-point bombs to Skidmore's three. In a game where Skidmore's pair of 6'7" freshmen, Darren Toon and Randy Thomas, controlled the paint and rendered Williams' inside game ineffective, it was this three-point attack that proved decisive. As Masters put it, "We didn't play with the intensity we've had in the last few games, but the right people came through for us."

Early in the first period, Skidmore's Toon hit a three-pointer to give the visitors a 7-5 advantage, but that was the

Magic

Kamikaze Garcia Major '90 prepares to dish the ball off for one of his assists in the Ephs' victory over Skidmore last Saturday.

last lead the Thoroughbreds were to enjoy, Williams guards Major and Conte began to put pressure on the Skidmore ballhandlers and force key turnovers. The crowd came alive as Williams scored seven unanswered points, and when Josh Lipsky '90 came up with a steal and took it down the floor for a pull-up jumper from 10 feet, the Ephmen reached a seven-point lead. The Williams lead held between seven to nine points until the final seconds of the half. Then, with four ticks remaining on the game clock, Masters grabbed a defensive rebound and ran the length of the court, eventually pulling up for a fifteen foot jumper at the buzzer. The senior's two made the score 37-26 and sent the Ephs into the locker room at the half with their biggest lead yet. After being burned by the marksmanship of Rich Williams and company in the first half, Skidmore came out for the second with a new defensive look. They increased their pressure on the Williams backcourt, and worked to take away the easy outside shot. It was at this point that co-captains Masters and Melchionni took over, pulling down rebound after rebound to allow the Ephs second and third chances at the basket. When Major sank a baseline jumper for continued on page 7

Ski team buries carnival enemies

by Jeff Biersack

At the season-opening Castleton Carnival last weekend, the Williams ski team proved that it is one of the country's strongest squads. The alpine team, racing at Pico Peak, tied for first place with the University of Vermont. The nordic team found snow in Craftsbury, Vermont, where they took second to Middlebury College. However, the nordic team defeated Vermont, giving the men's team first overall in the Carnival.

The men's alpine squad was led by the phenomenal skiing of sophomore Bill Crowley. With his technical strength, Crowley won Friday's tight and icy giant slalom. He found himself in second place after the first run, but won the second run to edge UVM's Eriner Boehmer with a time of 2:16.69, less than a second better than Boehmer's combined time of 2:17.31. His quick turning speed brought him yet another win in Saturday's slalom, as he beat Boehmer once again, 1:35.42 to Boehmer's 1:35.79. By winning both events, he became the first skier ever to sweep both events at the Castleton Carnival, and the first skier in Eastern Division I since Heidi Knight in 1983 to sweep two events in any carnival.

Crowley was backed up by strong performances from Charlie Kaplan '89, who placed fourth in the giant slalom, Kristian Orland '91, fifth in the slalom and ninth in the giant slalom, and Jed

Scala '89, who finished eighth in the slalom.

Milliken paces nordic team

In Craftsbury, Vermont, Peter Milliken '90 led the nordic squad with his second place finish in the 10,000 meters. Grace Davis '89 placed fifth, while freshman John Coequet placed eighth. The team suffered a serious setback when senior Mac Nash dislocated his shoulder.

Crowley became the first skier . . . since Heidi Knight to sweep two events in any carnival.

der. Nash was about to move into the race lead when he suffered the injury, which will keep him out of action for at least three weeks. It is the same injury that plagued Nash two years ago. The final scoring showed Middlebury with 91 points for the victory, followed by Williams with 87, and UVM with 80. No relay was held because of the poor continued on page 9

Trackwomen capture Colgate meet; men 4th

by Steve Brody

The men's and women's track teams travelled to Hamilton, New York, on Saturday to test themselves against Division I competition. The women's team proved that they belonged on the same track as their opponents, scoring a convincing win with 71 points to second-place Colgate's 49. Colgate was third with 36 points, followed by Union (32) and Hartwick (25). The men's team placed fourth behind meet winner Albany State (149), Columbia (142), and Colgate (103), with 66 points. Union and Hartwick rounded out the field.

The women were led by co-captain Dawo MacAuley '89 and Anne Platt '91, who each posted two victories. MacAuley won the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 9.0 seconds, just ahead of teammate sophomore Kira Shields '91 second-place finish of 9.2 seconds. MacAuley's second win was in the 400 meters, where she passed Colgate's Tamara Merchant going into the back-stretch of the final lap and pulled away to win comfortably in 61.5 seconds. In addition to her two victories, MacAuley captured second place in the high jump with a leap of 1.45 meters.

Platt sets record

Platt was invincible in both the 800 and 3000 meters. In the first race, she stayed with the pack for the first of the race's four laps before moving to the front and separating from the field for a nine-second win in 2:23.6. Katie Queenie '92 was third in the race with a time of 2:32.7, while Christie Dempsey '89 was fourth, a second behind Queenie. The 3000 was similar, as Platt once again ran away from her competition, this time winning by 38 seconds in a track record 10:46.6. Susan Donna '92 placed fourth in the 3000 with a time of 11:31.8.

Many other Ephwomen contributed to the victory. Heidi Beebe '91 placed continued on page 9

K. Thomas

Watch it fly

Ron van Belle '90 slaps the puck at the Westfield State goalie in the Ephs' 11-1 rout last Wednesday.

Hockey posts two wins

by Kerr Houston

The only dramatic thing about the men's hockey team's two contests last week was the Zamboni driver's zealous efforts to complete his rounds in the shortened intermissions before the players returned to the ice.

On the strength of a superior effort by redliners Will Putnam '89, Sean Seguin '91, and Ron Van Belle '90, the Ephmen coasted to two victories over outmanned opponents, first crushing Westfield State 11-1 on Wednesday, and then overwhelming New England College 8-2 on Saturday.

Although the two victories gave the Ephmen a respectable 5-4 mark as they head into conference play, the spotlight truly shone on the team's first line of Putnam, Van Belle, and Seguin. The trio combined to produce nine goals and an unbelievable twenty-three points in the two contests to lead the way to victory. Assistant Captain Putnam enjoyed a hat trick on Saturday night and finished the week with four goals and three assists. Seguin tallied three goals and five assists, including two scores in the win over Westfield State. Fellow Canadian Van Belle added two goals and an impressive six assists to round out the line's padded statistics.

Lesson in domination

Saturday's contest was a lesson in domination, as the Ephmen scored three power-play goals and outshot their opponents 41-20. Williams led only 2-1 at the conclusion of the opening period, but a five-minute New England major in the second period led to two more Eph tallies, and senior captain Tim Frechette scored on a 120-foot shorthanded shot that trickled through the opposing goalie's pads. Sean Ford '90 played consistently between the pipes for Williams, and the game was never in question after the midpoint of the second period.

Earlier in the week, the team celebrated its return home from a holiday tournament in Minneapolis by overwhelming an outmanned Westfield State squad, 11-1.

Westfield State opened the scoring, as Owl defenseman Jason Cowan beat Eph netminder Matt Zolin '91 on a twenty-foot slapshot during a one-man advantage just three minutes into the game. Williams, however, soon shut the door on the Fighting Owls when Putnam drove home the first of eleven consecutive Williams tallies at 5:32 of

continued on page 7

When the Dust Settles

McCormick ends career

by Mariam Naficy

When hockey coach Bill McCormick arrived at Williams in 1953, Williams had just finished building an outdoor artificial ice rink. He remembers a 1961 game against Yale when the rink's roof was still unfinished: "We would have to stop the game every five minutes to clear the snow off the rink - the Yale coach swore he would come back [to Williams] until the rink was completed," McCormick said. Twenty-eight years later, Lansing Chapman Rink has become another Williams institution, but the coach who watched it being built is leaving. McCormick announced his retirement last week.

"Bill McCormick is hockey at Williams. In guiding this program for more than three decades he has left a lasting mark on Williams athletics, and few coaches anywhere can match his record of reliability," Athletic Director Robert R. Peck said. McCormick's record as hockey coach stands at 311-322-20, including a 53-14 record against Amherst.

Glory Days

McCormick has been at one college longer than any other current hockey coach in the country. Highlights of his career include being named ECAC small college coach of the year in 1957-58, and being named New England Coach of the Year in 1961-62, when he piloted his team to a 16-3-1 record and to wins over Army, Brown, Cornell, and Penn. McCormick said that the Sixties were a particularly strong decade for Williams hockey because of the many outstanding players that joined his team.

In the years that he has been here, McCormick has missed only one practice, when he attended the historic 1980 Olympic game between the U.S. and Soviet hockey teams in Lake Placid.

McCormick has been here long enough to coach the sons of some of his former players and his own son James '76, who played hockey while attending Williams. His daughter Susan '77 played on Williams' first women's hockey team.

"[The Ephs] have been very coachable - they have the same desire to excel [in athletics] as they do in the classroom," McCormick said, explaining why he enjoyed coaching at Williams.

McCormick is a former president of the American Hockey Coaches Association and chairman of its board of governors. He has served on the NCAA Ice Hockey Rules Committee and has directed the Intramural program at Williams. Currently, he serves as assistant director of athletics in addition to coaching the hockey team. His duties at this post include directing the athletic department's insurance policies and awards.

Coach and player

Hailing from Hagerstown, Ontario, attend.

Canada, McCormick played hockey at Michigan State University. He was the leading scorer there for two seasons and captained the squad during his senior year. He received bachelor's and master's degrees from Michigan State in 1952 and 1961. Before coming to Williams in 1953, McCormick did a short stint in professional hockey, playing for the Clinton Comets of the International League.

McCormick said he made his announcement during the middle of the season in order to give the athletic department more time to find a new coach. A committee will be formed soon to appoint his successor.

Meanwhile, McCormick and his wife, Martha, plan to remain in Williamstown. They have at least one good reason: their son John, a hockey and golf player, is entering Williams next fall as a freshman, and will undoubtedly participate in home games that his parents can attend.

THE RECORD

INSIDER

VOL. 1, NO. 2

January 17, 1989

TENURE: The Decision

And Those It Affects

THE RECORD INSIDER

Volume 1, Number 2

CONTENTS

ARTICLES

3/ Tenure: What it is and how professors get it

5/ Students protest CAP decision against Lisa Wright

8/ Publish or perish? Professors discuss the pressure at Williams.

8/ New SCS forms--how effective are they?

11/ The departure of Drew: after an unsuccessful election campaign, Professor John Drew is denied reappointment

CENTERFOLD

6-7/ Most Williams faculty believe the demands placed on them don't leave them time to do research. However, a majority perceive classroom performance to be the most important criterion in getting tenure.

OPINION

4/ Insider editorial: The abolition of the tenure system

4/ Why the college shouldn't give tenure to all qualified candidates

5/ An alumna supports Lisa Wright and questions Williams' teaching philosophy

INTERVIEWS

9/ Dean of Faculty John Reichert on the tenure process

10/ Richard Blatchly on being denied tenure and the options available afterwards

Cover photos by Buckner, Kernhaw, King, Scheibe, Steinman, Wege

Copyright Insider, The Williams Record. No part may be reproduced in whole or in part without the express consent of the editors. All rights reserved. The Insider is published by The Williams Record, Baxter Hall, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267, the second issue of each month.
Editorial: (413) 597-2400

Business: (413) 597-2289

THE BIG SECRET

The second issue of the Insider examines a topic of immediate concern to everyone in the college community--the tenure process at Williams. Eight professors have been recommended for tenure this year by the Committee on Appointments and Promotions.

What immediately became obvious as the Record began working on this magazine was the shroud of secrecy around the tenure process. Professor after professor refused to comment on the relative importance of publishing and teaching and the role of interdepartmental politics in tenure decisions. This hesitance was common both among assistant professors and those faculty members who have already been granted tenure. It was even suggested to a Record reporter that he not write one of the articles featured in this issue.

The Insider begins with an analysis of what tenure is and how the process works. We follow with an opinion page, which features an editorial representing the views of the paper and a dissenting opinion.

The first aspect of the tenure process examined is student input. The controversy surrounding the decision against Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright highlights the question of how objective and valid student evaluations of their professors can be. New Student Course Evaluation forms have drawn mixed reviews from both students and faculty.

Perhaps the most volatile tenure issue is the weighting of teaching and publication in tenure decisions. Dean of Faculty John Reichert and Assistant Professor of Chemistry Richard Blatchly share their perceptions of these two factors at Williams. The faculty poll in the centerfold indicates that the axiom "publish or perish" may not hold true.

The Insider welcomes reactions and comments, especially to this month's coverage of the tenure issue. Letters will be published in the regular edition of the Record, according to the stated Op-Ed letters policy.

The free exchange of ideas may lead to a community discovery of just what the Big Secret is.

ANN MANTIL, Editor
LISA KAESTNER, Productions

ELLEN DROUGHT, BILL SAVADOVE, DAN SKWIRE, Assistant Editors
KAREN DUGGAN, Productions Assistant, BRIENNE COLBY, Graphics
BILL PHILPOTT, ASHESH SHAH, Layout Assistants

General supervision, entertainment and food provided by THE EDITOR EMERITUS

Looking for security : Running the Tenure Track

Most faculty come to Williams as assistant professors. These initial assistant professor appointments are made for three years. All non-tenured faculty, regardless of whether they are up for reappointment, are reviewed each year through departmental staffing reports to the Committee on Appointments and Promotions (CAP).

After the initial three years, the CAP decides whether or not to reappoint the professor for a period of one to four years. At the end of this second term, which is usually four years, the faculty member comes up for tenure. Individual departments make recommendations, which are passed on to the six-member CAP for approval.

CAP membership consists of the President, the Dean of Faculty, the Provost, and one full professor from each of the academic divisions. The three professors are currently Lawrence Graver of the English department, William DeWitt of biology, and Raymond Baker of political science.

Tenure decisions are based on three criteria, according to the faculty handbook: classroom performance, contributions to the arts or to scholarship within a given field, and contribution to the college community.

Once the CAP makes its decision, it gives its recommendation to the Board of Trustees for approval. The department chair or the Dean of Faculty usually notifies candidates verbally if they are denied reappointment.

Professors granted tenure are elevated to the rank of associate professor. After three years, the CAP reviews each associate professor. Promotions to full professor are based on the same criteria used for tenure decisions.

Professors may appeal tenure decisions only if "improper consideration," which violates academic freedom or the college's policies against discrimination on the basis of race, color, sex, age, etc., has been given. "Failure to accord adequate consideration" is also grounds for an appeal, but "adequate consideration" refers to procedural rather than substantive considerations.

The faculty member can request reconsideration up to two months after he or she was denied reappointment. Should reconsideration be denied, the professor can then petition the Steering Committee. A review committee of five professors will be appointed to investigate the procedures followed by the CAP in making the decision in question.

Should the review committee decide that a prima facie case of improper consideration exists, a hearing committee will formally investigate the case. The burden of proof rests with the professor throughout the appeal process.

If the review committee finds that adequate consideration of evidence was not given, the CAP and the department will reconsider the case. Again, adequate consideration refers only to procedural errors.

Steps to Tenure

Hired as assistant professor

Second Year:
Regular CAP
review

Fourth Year:
Regular CAP
review

Sixth Year:
Up for tenure

First Year:
Regular CAP
review

Third Year:
Up for reappointment

Fifth Year:
Regular CAP
review

Seventh Year: Contract ends
if denied tenure

Ninth Year:
Associate professor review

OPINION

Future of Tenure

Insider Editorial

Abolish tenure

Once again, there is surprise, even outrage, among the student body at some of the tenure recommendations handed down by the Committee on Appointments and Promotions. This type of student reaction is nothing new; it has happened before and will undoubtedly happen again, unless the tenure process itself is dismantled. That, of course, is not an option.

Or is it?

Ideally, the tenure procedure at Williams is a way of achieving well-rounded departments, structive influence on the classroom.

Finally, tenure creates situations where senior faculty are given a free hand to teach as they want. In some cases, this means little or not at all. While some may call this a privilege of time, it is unfair to both the student and the junior faculty members who may be squeezed out of a department.

Ideally, tenure is a fair process. As it exists today, it is not.

The answer is to abolish tenure and replace it with a merit-based system, where all profes-

The answer is to abolish tenure and replace it with a merit-based system, where all professors at Williams undergo a regular review ...

sors at Williams undergo a regular review of his or her performance. The longest-standing professors will be judged in the same manner as the greenest professors, with appropriate considerations for past service.

Obviously, such a proposal will not sit well with many people. Senior faculty will lose the great benefit of being removed from the weeding-out of the tenure process. Their job security will be greatly reduced. But, hopefully, so will their complacency.

The goal of this proposal is not to destroy the organization of academic departments. It is to insure that professors who have been here for 25 years have the same love of teaching that they started with, which presumably helped them to get tenure in the first place.

Perhaps it is fair that not every good professor at Williams can get tenure. But at least, with tenure abolished, every capable professor will have an opportunity to teach at Williams for as long as she or he can contribute to the level of instruction here.

Dissenting Opinion

Tenure a necessary evil

by Dan Skwire

The tenure decisions handed down by the CAP this year have led to a tremendous outcry against the perceived ills of the tenure process. The general opinion on campus seems to be that it is outrageous to deny tenure to any faculty member who is an inspiring classroom instructor. It is incorrect and dangerous, however, to regard the appointment to tenure as some kind of reward for the school to grant to good teachers.

The faculty handbook, which outlines the college's tenure policies, is very explicit on this point. "There is no presumption in favor of reappointment with continuous tenure.... Given the limited size of the faculty and the infrequency of departures or retirements from the tenure ranks, appointments to tenure are few. For these reasons a decision not to make an appointment to tenure in a particular case should not necessarily be taken to reflect a negative judgment of an individual's performance."

It is regrettable that Williams cannot offer tenure to every good teacher that comes its way; nevertheless, it would be folly to do so.

In other words, it is incorrect to assume that the CAP's decision not to grant tenure to a particular professor is indicative of that committee's belief that the professor is a poor classroom instructor. It is equally possible that the CAP simply could not justify hiring another teacher in a department that was already fully staffed.

The college, after all, must consider its own resources when making tenure decisions. Any survivor of Economics 101 knows it would be absurd for a college of 2000 students to have three tenured faculty members specializing in ancient Japanese history, even if all three professors were outstanding teachers with tremendous quantities of published works to their names.

A tenure decision is permanent. When professors are granted tenure, the college is telling them that they may remain as long as they wish, and it is committing itself to pay their salaries for as long as 25 or 30 years. Colleges exist for the good of their students, and for this reason they have the responsibility to provide them with the best possible instructors. This responsibility is tempered, however, by the need for schools to use their resources for the greatest benefit of all their students. It is clearly not in students' best interests for colleges to waste money on faculty overkill by granting tenure to unneeded, though well-qualified, professors.

Another point to consider is that faculty members who are denied tenure, if they are truly well-qualified and inspiring teachers, should not have inordinate difficulty finding positions at other schools. A negative tenure decision, though undoubtedly difficult to take, is hardly the death sentence that it is sometimes made out to be.

It is regrettable that Williams cannot offer tenure to every good teacher that comes its way; nevertheless, it would be folly to make an attempt to do so. The college's tenure policy, though it may seem harsh, is absolutely necessary to its successful operation.

Students organize to protest Wright tenure decision

by Mary Moule

About 30 students attended a meeting on January 9 to organize a protest against the college's denial of tenure to Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright. Many of the students had taken classes from Wright.

Wright declined to comment on the tenure decision or to discuss her plans for the future, but many students said they believe she will formally appeal the decision of the Committee on Appointment and Promotions.

The group of students, organized by Judy Conti '91, Cassandra Taliaferro '90 and Evan Davis '89, plans to express their disappointment by organizing a petition and a letter writing campaign.

"We just need to get this issue raised on campus," Conti said. She added that the group may ask for letters of support from recent Williams graduates.

Wright, who has taught English at Williams since 1983, was eligible for tenure this fall, but was not recommended by the CAP. A 1974 graduate of Ohio State University, Wright received her Ph.D. from Indiana University in 1985. Her dissertation was entitled "Through a Glass Darkly: Piers Plowman and Fourteenth Century English Mysticism."

Wright is a medievalist and a specialist in Middle English language and literature. At Williams, she has taught courses on Chaucer, Arthurian Literature and Sir Thomas Malory.

Some students at the meeting were concerned more with the tenure process in general than with Wright's specific case. As one student warned, "It could be your favorite teacher next."

The students presented their concerns at the College Council meeting last Thursday. They announced plans to circulate petitions around the student body and to send out an all-campus mailing.

College Council President Trace Blankenship reminded the council that they could act only as individuals and reporters to their constituents on this issue. "Let these folks do the advocating because the Council obviously cannot take an official position."

Members were asked, however, to bring up the tenure decisions at dorm snacks and to encourage students to write letters to President of the College Francis Oakley, Dean of the Faculty John Reichert, and Chairman of the English Department Michael Bell.

"I think that it is a good idea that students know what the tenure system is," Blankenship said. He suggested that better teacher evaluation by students might be necessary, but added that the Council has no plans to formally discuss student input into the tenure process.

Blankenship also pointed out that individual students could write letters of recommendation about professors at any time, not just when they come up for tenure.

The petition that will soon be circulated explains the group's reasons for protesting the decision against Wright:

"We believe that the Department and the Committee [on Appointments and Promo-

The bleachers were packed in protest of tenure decisions at the most recent College Council meeting. (Pinto)

tions] cannot have known fully how profoundly Professor Wright has shaped the intellectual life of the College as we have known it or how deeply she has enriched the lives of many of its individual members. We consider this decision incongruous with Williams' oft-expressed ideal that teaching is the preeminent purpose of the College."

"Part of what we came to Williams for -- what they package it as -- is the picture of Mark Hopkins on one end of a log with the student on the other," Jane Penner '90 said.

Other students at the meeting agreed that the focus on individual, quality teaching was one of the greatest attractions of Williams. They expressed resentment at what they said was a departure from this focus. Several individual students have speculated that Wright's slow publishing record may be partially responsible for the decision.

"The issue has much greater ramifications," Taliaferro said. "It raises questions about the tenure system. Is teaching being adequately taken into consideration? What's more important, teaching or publishing?" Wright has not published anything at this time.

"If I were to speculate, I'd suppose that Lisa [Wright] believes she has written publishable material, but perhaps the department does not believe that she has," Assistant Professor of English Jim Shepard said.

Other students have suggested that the presence of Sherron Knopp, a senior member of the English Department, may have been a consideration in the decision, because she is also a medievalist. However, Shepard, who did receive tenure this year, said that he didn't think that was a consideration.

"Lisa is doing what they need her to do in the department. If they decide not to tenure her... they will have to find someone else."

The student group is not in formal contact with Wright. "This is completely independent of Professor Wright," Conti stressed at the College Council meeting. "Whether she will appeal is up to her."

Opinion:

Wright tenure decision strays from Hopkins' ideal

"But essentially the College has built its reputation around teachers and teaching. Mark Hopkins, who was a Williams professor...has become a symbol of this emphasis. In American education Hopkins pioneered in making the student the center of the educational experience, and he did it so well that one of his former students, U.S. President James A. Garfield, immortalized his achievement in an aphorism which passed into the lore of American education: 'The ideal college is Mark Hopkins on one end of a log and a student on the other.' The Hopkins tradition has become one of the College's greatest assets. It has been perpetuated in the lives of generations of teachers."

by Laura E. Greene '87

I take this statement of Williams' educational philosophy from the Williams College Bulletin, 1985-1986. I have absolutely no quibble with the ideals of teaching venerated therein. With the CAP's recent decision to deny Professor Lisa Wright tenure, however,

I am forced to question the college's commitment to the doctrine it so readily advertises to its former, present, and prospective students.

This decision is particularly puzzling given the college's efforts to emphasize the teaching capacities of its students. I worked as a writing tutor for two years at Williams, and during my senior year the role of student TA's was rapidly expanding, particularly with the Freshman Residential Seminar program.

I listened to the Dean of Faculty urge us to consider careers in teaching during my senior class meeting, and decided to attend Cornell graduate school based on the recommendation of my advisers that Cornell was a place where "they teach you how to teach."

Since I have chosen a career in education, I hope you will pardon a measured amount of personal investment in this "teaching" issue. I feel as though I have been lied to. How can Williams encourage in its students a quality which it fails to reward in one of its most valuable professors? What kind of a message does that send, both to faculty and to students?

But to return to the Williams ideal, which advocates "making the student the center of the educational experience," I am struck by how aptly these words apply to my own description of Professor Wright's teaching, in the letter of support I wrote before her tenure decision was made.

"Most important," I wrote, "is Professor Wright's ability to make students believe in the value and importance of their own thought. So many students, convinced that the study of English is either a vague and sloppy 'anything goes' or a mystical search for truths beyond their scope, despair of ever trusting their own thoughts and ideas about a work of literature. Yet Professor Wright insists, simply and repeatedly, that everyone has the tools to unlock literature; that all that is required is careful reading, thought, and close attention to the text before them."

"She has the ability to pick up on a tentative or incompletely expressed idea in a conference with a student and nurture it by asking questions and eliciting more information. continued on page 9

Could you fill this space???

The Insider is looking for an editorial cartoonist.

We only publish once a month, so the time commitment is minimal.

Contact Ann Mantil, x2967 or SU Box 1824.

Faculty opinion

The Record sent questionnaires to sixty-seven professors thought to be on campus during Winter Study. Visiting professors, instructors and lecturers were excluded from the survey. Thirty-four faculty members responded.

The majority of professors confirmed the emphasis Williams places on teaching. However, a substantial number of respondents ranked classroom performance and publication as equal, even though this was not presented as a formal option in the ranking.

A high percentage of faculty believe that the demands Williams makes on them as teachers and administrators do not leave time for the scholarly research required to receive tenure. This seems to confirm last year's reaccreditation report, which pointed to the excessive amount of pressure on junior faculty members at Williams.

An eighth question of the survey asked for suggestions of methods of improving the evaluation of teaching performance made for tenure decisions. Responses were divided between those advocating more student input through SCS forms and student letters, and those wanting less emphasis on student evaluations: "Sometimes the students' evaluations seem like a popularity contest instead of a real measure of teaching abilities." Faculty in the latter group seemed to feel that their colleagues are more objective and qualified to evaluate than their students.

Do you feel that the new Student Course Survey forms provide an adequate measure of students' evaluations of their courses and professors?

Did you distribute a supplementary comments form to students in your classes?

Rank the following factors in the order of importance they have in tenure decisions as you perceive them at Williams, and also in the order of importance you think they should have in an ideal situation. Use ranks of 1, 2, 3, with 1 being the most important factor.

Percentage of faculty who felt that (a) Performance in the classroom was the most important factor.

Percentage of faculty who felt that (a) and (b), Performance in the classroom and Contributions to arts or scholarship in the appropriate field were equally important.

Percentage of faculty who felt that (b) Contributions to arts or scholarship in the appropriate field was the most important factor.

NOTE: All faculty members felt that (c) Contributions to the college community was the least important factor.

Photo by Thorndike

- Performance in the classroom.
- Contributions to arts or scholarship in the appropriate field.
- Contributions to the college community (advising, committee work, etc.)

Do the demands placed on Williams professors in teaching and administrative capacities leave enough time for the research and publication required to receive tenure?

What chance do professors appealing tenure decisions have of obtaining a reversal, in your opinion?

How satisfactory do you find the current evaluation of teaching performance and potential made for tenure decisions?

How much student input do you feel there should be in tenure decisions?

The tenure track

by Rajesh Swaminathan

Williams has always demanded, above all, that professors be quality classroom instructors. But assistant professors in the fast lane of the tenure track know another equally important hurdle must be overcome in order to stay at a college like this. The hurdle is academic research, and everyone knows the adom — publish or perish.

"One of the sad facts of the profession is that you have to publish to be marketable. It is your published work that is going to be the most visible sign of your competence," said Dean of the Faculty John Reichert.

Associate Professor David Dethier of the geology department said, "It's plain to me, at least, that if you're a great teacher and you publish little or nothing, you're not going to stay. You can't rest on just being a good teacher."

"I think a very good teacher without much work published should be considered for tenure while a rotten teacher who has published obviously shouldn't," said Professor Norman Petersen, chair of the religion department.

The faculty handbook says that while effective teaching is of primary importance in reappointment or promotion decisions, professors should also engage in research work that would allow them "to contribute to the arts or scholarship in their appropriate field."

"Teaching should be the first and foremost commitment of the faculty, but research is a very close second," Reichert said. "The capacity for scholarship can be demonstrated through written work. It is a way of subjecting your research and your thinking to an audience of professional peers. Williams believes that it is important that they submit their work to that wider community and not just to the student body here."

Other professors agree: "Participation in academic activity is highly desirable, if not absolutely necessary, for teaching. Otherwise, you're teaching off the top of your head. And the academic community outside Williams keeps us honest," Petersen said.

"If you have a faculty that are superb teachers but do not research, twenty years from now, they'll have nothing to teach," Assistant Professor of Economics David Ross added. "I believe that the best researchers are the best teachers."

Dethier said, "Teaching well is very important and is constantly emphasized. I think that, while the emphasis on publication and research (in the sciences) is just right, the overall mix of teaching, scholarship and committee work is excessive. It's asking too much of junior professors to be good at all three."

Petersen added, "The frustration, the crippling sense of pressure, is largely a junior faculty phenomenon because they have to have published something to be get tenure."

Publish OR PERISH

According to Dethier, many professors are already driven to research and publish by their fields. "In this sort of environment, by the time you're in a place like Williams, you already have enormous self-motivation. It is difficult to distinguish between your and the school's expectations of your work."

Professors, however, don't live by blackboard and pen alone. Besides demonstrating an ability to teach and conduct scholarly research, a professor must also contribute some of his time to the college community through departmental or committee service. Junior faculty members often feel pressured to perform strongly in all three areas.

The pressure on junior faculty at Williams was emphasized in last year's reaccreditation report by an evaluation team from the New England Association of Schools and Colleges.

"They feel tempted to measure themselves against what they perceive to be the image of the ideal Williams faculty member...the image of a polished teacher-scholar-college servant turning in all directions to meet community demands, with style."

"Any college like Williams is going to be a difficult and demanding place to work," Reichert said. "The pressure that people feel to publish comes from the profession at large, not from Williams."

The report indicated that this might not be the case, however. "Some with whom we spoke feel that Williams expects more junior faculty research and publication than ever, and fear that they do not have time for it..."

Reichert said that the pressure felt by faculty members at Williams is not counterproductive to their capacities either as teachers or as researchers. He added that a tenure decision was designed to consider as many aspects of a faculty member's potential contributions to Williams as possible.

"A tenure decision really involves a judgment and a prediction of a faculty member's potential as a teacher and a scholar. A judgment of that sort can't be based on a neat quantifiable set of tasks accomplished; it is a qualitative decision and it ought to be," he said.

According to Reichert, the tenure review process is a highly personalized and complicated process that varies on a case by case basis. The research work of the junior professor is sent for review outside of the Williams community to three expert scholars in that particular field of study.

"We do not insist upon any quantity of publication; we are more interested in quality," Reichert said. "And actual publication has not always been necessary for us to grant tenure; we do look at unpublished manuscripts of research work. And we have promoted people who haven't yet published but whose work shows promise."

Ross, who was not recommended for tenure this year, said, "I've gone through it and I have received a negative decision; I don't understand it fully, but it seems to be a fair process. The college makes a number of mistakes over time, but if you look at the quality of the faculty here, you will see that it is indeed a fair process."

New course survey form opens to mixed reviews

by Soojin Kim

Last semester, for the first time, the use of the Student Course Survey (SCS) form was mandatory for all regular semester courses. The form was shortened to lessen the burden on the professor and on class time, according to Vice Provost David Booth.

Booth said the questionnaire has a dual function: collection of student opinion to be used in the evaluation of teaching effectiveness by the Dean of Faculty and departments, and improvement of teaching techniques by professors.

According to Professor William DeWitt, who is a member of the Committee on Appointments and Promotions, the use of the survey forms was made mandatory because of discrepancies over which professors used them before.

Under the old system, junior faculty were more or less bound to use the forms due to the college's rule that no faculty member can be presented for promotion without some student input. Senior faculty had no such motivation.

"Junior professors said they suspected that senior professors who expected high scores from the survey used it but that others did not, so that the non-tenured faculty's scores were compared with those of the best senior faculty," DeWitt said.

The Record conducted a poll last week of faculty on campus during Winter Study (see Insider centerfold). Only 40 percent believed that the new SCS forms provided an adequate measure of students' evaluations of their courses and professors.

"Given its brevity, it's unfortunate that a relatively large portion of the survey addresses such specific courses as foreign language, science or tutorials. Out of the 21 [questions] asked, only ten are general evaluation," said Associate Professor of Mathematics Olga Beaver.

Student Input?

guage, science or tutorials. Out of the 21 [questions] asked, only ten are general evaluation," said Associate Professor of Mathematics Olga Beaver.

Van Belle '90 maintained that the new form is an improvement. "The old one asked too many uselessly repetitive questions and took away a lot of class time. Unless he has a gripe, the average student doesn't take the survey all that seriously. The shorter one is better at keeping the student's attention." Other students said that they feel the new form does not offer an opportunity to truly evaluate courses and professors because of the lack of a free response section.

"The new form is fine for comparing scores, but it is too limiting," Jeff Farmer '90 said. Although many professors ask students to fill out supplementary forms, he pointed out that many did not.

Beaver agreed that she preferred the previous form containing a free response section for students. She said she found the repetition in the old form helpful. "It's a good idea to ask the same thing in different ways and look at questions from different points of view."

The new SCS form was instituted by vote of the faculty last May. The ruling provided the Committee on Appointments and Promotions (CAP) with direct access to the results of the new surveys, instead of reports of the results as submitted by individual departments.

DeWitt, who helped revise the form, said he felt the previous form was redundant as well as biased against science courses.

"The older form had a heavy favorable bias for courses of the seminar type. As a student worked through the old forms with its emphasis on class discussions, the student got an idea of how a course ought to be taught; the form promoted a certain style of teaching. We were trying to get away from that."

Booth, who is in charge of revising and tabulating student course surveys, said that he thinks the average Williams student understands the difference between a large lecture and a small discussion class and tailors his answers accordingly.

DeWitt and Booth both said they felt that little was lost by shortening the form. "Certain general dimensions to evaluating teachers come up regardless of what kind or the number of questions asked," Booth said.

The last two questions of the new form asked students to rate the usefulness of the form in evaluating instructors and classes. Booth said that the results of those questions have not yet been tabulated.

Dean of the Faculty:

Reichert defends the tenure system at Williams

Record Interview by Ellen Drought

RECORD: When is a professor placed on an advanced track for tenure as opposed to the usual path — three years to reappointment then three more years to tenure?

REICHERT: If somebody comes with enough prior teaching experience, we may give them a more accelerated contract. They might come up a year or two earlier, depending on how much prior experience they have had.

RECORD: It seems that most professors are easily reappointed, but that it's more difficult to get tenure. Is this true?

REICHERT: That's right. At the time of reappointment, we're really concerned with whether this is somebody who seems to be off to good start and who we want to keep around for four more years — somebody whose seems to have the kind of potential that might get them tenure in the long run. But we don't insist on the same proven achievements at the time of reappointment that we do at the time of the tenure decision.

RECORD: Once a professor is denied tenure, are appeals to the decision common, and are they likely to be successful? For instance, last year there was a successful appeal.

REICHERT: I wouldn't say last year's was a unique occurrence; I wasn't here last year so I don't know all the details.

RECORD: In the tenure process, each of the departments make recommendations and then the CAP takes those into account and makes its own recommendations. Where does the student input in the form of the SCS forms come into play?

REICHERT: Up until this year, the SCS results have gone to the departments if the assistant professor gave permission, and most have done so. The department makes a report on each assistant professor every year and that report includes whatever information about student responses that has come in. So at the sixth year, the time of the tenure decision, there's a history of departmental reports. Not only SCS results, but for some departments their own questionnaires and student interviews—that is, department members will interview students about the teachers they've had. Starting this year, all questionnaire results for assistant professors will go both to the department and to the CAP. It's now required whereas before it was voluntary.

RECORD: There has been a lot of dissatisfaction with the shortened SCS forms. Why was this change made?

REICHERT: A number of teachers would still want to administer either department questionnaires or their own individual questionnaires. One of the problems has always been the way the questionnaire administering has filled up the classroom hour.

RECORD: So would you say you're satisfied with the amount of student input there is in this whole process?

Photo by Steinman

REICHERT: I think there's been a lot of student input over the years, and I think that it will be even more regularized. All departments are going to be interviewing students, for example, whereas in the past only some of them did.

RECORD: In the faculty handbook, it says the main criteria by which the CAP judges a candidate are their effectiveness in the classroom, their scholarly achievements and their contributions to the college community (serving on committees, etc.). It also says the first two are equally important and exceptional strength is needed in both for appointment to tenure. It seems, however, that "publish or perish" describes one's likelihood of getting tenure—if you're not making good contributions to your field you're not going to get tenure. Do you find this to be true, or do you think the handbook's assertion is correct?

REICHERT: The faculty handbook makes it pretty clear that exceptional strength in both teaching and scholarship is usually required. I think the strongest justification for making scholarship and research an important area is that they are not at all unrelated. That is, if someone is to remain a vital and well-informed teacher over the years, it is important for them to have their wits sharpened by putting out their ideas and their scholarship for

continued on page 11

Student opinion should matter in Wright decision

continued from page 5

Above all, she respects the individual's talents and observations, at the same time stressing the methods that students must use to test their ideas against the text itself.

"As a result, students in her class do not write papers in an anxious attempt to figure out 'what the teacher wants'; rather, they try to figure out the text for themselves, because they find it interesting and compelling to do so, and because the exploration and pursuit of an idea now matters, personally, to those students."

I think even Mark Hopkins would agree that the woman I describe here is an exceptional and splendid teacher, whose first priority is "making the student the center of the educational experience."

I know that many students would sum up the best part of their college experience as an image of themselves and Professor Wright, if not on either end of a log, then on either side of a lunch table, or the conference table in her office in Stetson. This translation of the log story into the present sacrifices a bit of its historical charm, perhaps, but none of the truth and integrity behind the tradition it describes.

If students are truly to be the center of education, then the administration must respect and value the students' abilities to evaluate the quality of teaching they receive. The outpouring of student protest over this teaching a limited, secondary skill possessed equally by all the faculty, a system that has no measure for degrees of excellence and passion of commitment in teaching.

By ignoring the student's insistence that some teachers are better than others, the administration restricts its concept of the student's mind as well. If teaching is a limited

Professor Wright could have been denied tenure only under a system that considers teaching a limited, secondary skill...

decision suggests that students are able and vocal judges in this matter of teaching, and also that the administration does not take them too seriously.

Professor Wright could have been denied tenure only under a system that considers skill, then surely the minds it educates must be equally limited. Mark Hopkins described and corrected such a narrow model of the mind in his 1836 inaugural address:

"We are to regard the mind, not as a piece of iron to be laid upon the anvil and hammered into any shape, nor as a block of marble in which we are to find the statue by removing the rubbish, nor as a receptacle into which knowledge may be poured; but as a flame that is to be fed, as an active being that must be strengthened to think and to feel—and to dare, to do, and to suffer."

It is this thinking, compassionate, and holistic view of the mind that Lisa Wright applies to her students. The decision to deny her tenure is an embarrassment to the small college teaching tradition so eagerly espoused by the college, and an insult to the intellectual and evaluative capacities of its students.

To the CAP and administration I would suggest a little reality testing, to ensure that they hold their private tenure decisions accountable to their public rhetoric.

To the students, present and former, I would suggest that politics begins in the home, or in this case, the dorm. Do not settle for polite administrative acknowledgments of your opinions. Keep talking, writing and meeting until the CAP reverses its decision and Lisa Wright is granted tenure.

9/The Insider January 17, 1989

Richard Blatchly

A Professor's Perspective

Assistant Professor of Chemistry Richard Blatchly was one of five professors denied tenure this year. He graduated from Williams in 1976, and has taught here since 1983.

Interview by Robert Weisberg

RECORD: Psychologically speaking, is the tenure process a very rough one to go through?

BLATCHLY: It's fairly nerve-wracking, I'd say. It depends a little bit on the specific department and environment that you're in. I think probably the best thing that one could do to allay fears is to give people a clear and fairly detailed reading of how they're doing as time goes on—how people in your department view various aspects of your contribution.

RECORD: Does that happen during the process now?

BLATCHLY: It's variable. It depends a lot on your chairman. You get something in writing once a year which is a distillation of the views of the senior faculty. That can be vague or specific, depending on who's writing it. And there are a couple of instances in which one sits down with the chairman to chat.

RECORD: Did you feel any pressure, or do you know of people who have felt pressure, from higher up in their departments to be more into research than they would like to be?

BLATCHLY: I know other people who I think have felt that pressure. I think there may have been some pressure on me to do that, but the pressure on me was perhaps less strong than on some others.

RECORD: How does seeing tenure on the horizon affect your balance between teaching and research?

BLATCHLY: I did not ever consciously know of a decision I made to do more teaching or to do more research because of tenure considerations. I may be fooling myself, but I really dislike the idea of doing something just so you can get tenure because that doesn't give the senior staff a very good idea of what your interests are and that's not being true to yourself.

I doubt that that's true for everyone. People might view a job as a junior faculty member as a very specific kind of job, which is to read the signals and do all the right things to get tenure, so that then after one gets tenure, there can be a dramatic change. I didn't play it that way.

RECORD: So your concern was to be a very student-oriented professor. You didn't find your teaching style compromised by the process in any way?

BLATCHLY: I did change somewhat over 10/The Insider January 17, 1989

the course of a few years, and some of that was due to pressure from senior faculty and some of it was appropriate... You would hope that one can learn from people who have been teaching for a long time. Teaching is a specific profession with its own tricks of the trade, and it's difficult to learn those.

There are certain things which I was not willing to compromise. I have a tendency to teach courses in a fairly challenging way—I believe strongly in that. The result of doing that in a Williams environment where people are not always eager to rush into a challenging course, is that one has to spend a lot of time doing the teaching out with the troops, basically saying, "I'm not doing this because I hate you; I'm doing this because I care about you, because challenging you will make you a much stronger student."

RECORD: Are there any special demands on Division III professors because of your research?

BLATCHLY: There's never anything explicit. The feeling is that one should have several papers published. However far one strays from that is not clear. I think it's even possible to publish too much. If you're publishing that much, you must not be spending the time on your teaching.

RECORD: Was your research at Williams an outgrowth of something you had been working on before?

BLATCHLY: I tried to take a new tack when I got here. It was not wildly successful, I might add. My second line of research was a more pedagogical one to try to make advances in the laboratory teaching of the introductory organic course...and basically update it. Last year I was on leave at Penn State and made some very exciting discoveries involving a compound that has potential for anti-cancer or anti-viral activity. That was not work that I had done at Williams, but it is work that my honors students are now pushing forward.

RECORD: How do you feel about having done this kind of work and then not getting tenure?

BLATCHLY: I think it's impossible for a human being to go through not getting tenure and not feel angry, hurt and resentful. You just wouldn't be human if you didn't come to the end of six years and feel that you enjoy teaching, that the denial of tenure is a decision that you will not be allowed to teach.

RECORD: Do you think there should be a greater amount of student input into the tenure process?

BLATCHLY: My selfish response to that would be yes. Intellectually, I'm not sure I necessarily believe that because it's going to depend on what form the student input takes. The opinions of students after they have finished a class may be different from their opinions two, four or six years down the line, depending on what they remember of a particular course. I think people who are making [tenure] decisions look at student opinion in conjunction with a general sense of what people are teaching and how they are teaching it.

RECORD: What are your options after this decision?

BLATCHLY: I can tell you that the two things in general are options inside the college and options outside the college. I have not yet decided which I'm going to pursue, but I have roughly another month or so to make that decision. Inside the college there is an appeal process for the tenure decision. That appeal process is fairly complicated and strictly laid out in the faculty handbook. It is initiated by the professor who was denied tenure. However, if you think it's a dumb decision, you can't appeal on that basis. There has to be some procedural error made by the department.

RECORD: As far as the options outside the college...

Blatchly: Well, options outside the college are basically another job. My options would be to try and find another teaching position similar to this one, to try and find a teaching position in an institution relatively different from this one—you could go to a place more focused on research, or you could go to a place that's a community college type of thing. That would probably be less satisfying from the point of view of the quality of the students.

Record: Would you want another school like Williams?

Blatchly: I think I've learned a lot over the past five years about teaching and about operating in a place like this, and it would be nice to transfer some of that stuff. But those kinds of jobs are somewhat rare.

Outside the academic realm, there are quite a number of industrial positions for chemists even in this area. That really expands the possible job market pretty dramatically when you compare my situation to someone in classics or history. There really is not much that those people can do that's related to their field outside an academic institution.

Record: As far as getting another job in academia, how does having this decision on your record affect getting future positions?

Photo by Steinman

BLATCHLY: I think it's hard for people to look at someone who has not been granted tenure at an institution like Williams and not look at their record and try to figure out why they were not given tenure. I think it has a negative impact, but it is certainly possible to go from a place like Williams to a number of other institutions and in fact get a job. So it is not a crippling problem, but it is definitely a factor.

RECORD: Do you think the overall tenure process needs some review?

BLATCHLY: I think that in general that's probably true. There are aspects of the tenure process that could use a little tune-up. For the most part, the system is as good as it can be. There are deeper philosophical questions about whether tenure is a good thing or not. I think the general answer is if you have tenure it's a good thing, and if you don't it's not. It's very difficult to release someone who has tenure—you have to commit an ax-murder or something like that. I don't know exactly where I stand on the issue of whether tenure should exist. It does, and people sign on to a place like Williams knowing tenure does exist, and that they are not going to be able to change that.

RECORD: Does the tenure process create any competition among professors in a department?

BLATCHLY: The party line is that decisions are made on an individual basis, but that has got to be difficult to do. Within the department, I think it's difficult not to compare yourself with someone in the same year as you are. I tried to minimize this.

RECORD: There seems to be a taboo about talking about tenure. Why this unwillingness?

BLATCHLY: Some of it may be familiarity. We forget that students don't know all about tenure because it is such a large part of our lives. Perhaps some people feel that students don't need to know about tenure, because it is somewhat irrelevant to them. From the simple issue of who's going to be around when, the tenure business is a longer time-frame than most students spend at this institution. In the sense of what tenure does to people, students should be interested. I don't see any evil conspiracy to keep the issue of tenure away from students. There's nothing secretive about the process.

John Drew

Considers options off tenure track

by Dan Skwire

After three years in the classroom, Assistant Professor of Political Science John Drew has been turned down for reappointment to the tenure track.

Assistant professors are initially hired for three years. At the end of this period, the Committee on Appointments and Promotions decides whether or not to reappoint the professor, usually for a four-year period. In the fall of a professor's sixth year, the CAP decides whether or not to grant tenure.

Although the CAP denied Drew reappointment, it did award him a one-year contract, which will permit him to remain at Williams through June, 1990, if he wishes to do so.

According to Drew, the primary reason for his failure to be reappointed was the political science department's dislike of the methodology he used in his thesis, "Child Labor and Child Welfare: The Origins and Uneven Development of the American Welfare State."

"At Cornell [where he did his graduate work], we did a lot of case studies, but the department here said I should have used more statistical studies. Other than that, they said my teaching, contributions to the community and service to the department were all strong."

"I'm very saddened to be taken off the tenure track. It's a big disappointment to me. I'm quite aware that my failure to stay on the track was entirely under my control. If I had wanted to work harder on my thesis and turn it into a book, I have no doubt I would have been reappointed."

As an undergraduate, Drew attended Occidental College in Los Angeles, where he described himself as a liberal. He said he entered the teaching profession because it was one of very few occupations he considered to be morally acceptable.

Since his college days, however, Drew has become increasingly conservative, a change he attributed in part to his rediscovery of religious faith. Last fall, he ran unsuccessfully as the Republican candidate for the state legislature in the Second Berkshire District. Drew said his conservative beliefs now make him feel unwelcome on the Williams campus.

"It is difficult being surrounded by colleagues who don't share my assumptions, are hostile to me and don't see the merit of my work. It seems a very unhealthy environment to put myself in. I have no intention of living out my life in such an environment.

"In a sense, I feel that I've outgrown being a college professor," he continued. "My goals now are to get married, own a comfortable, spacious home and have a powerful impact on public policy. It's becoming increasingly apparent that staying in the teaching profession is not the way for me to achieve those goals."

"I'm teaching in the number one liberal arts college in the country, and I'm making $33,000 a year. I have students leaving my classes making $50,000. The other day I met a 24-year-old making $120,000. I don't want to be a sucker. Whatever delight I get from doing research pales in comparison to making an extra $100,000 a year."

Drew said he has not yet decided on his future plans, and does not know if he will be teaching at Williams next year.

"This is a very tense moment in my life. I'm almost 32, and I've spent my entire life training myself to be a scholar. I'm going to take my time in making an intelligent decision."

Among the possibilities Drew said he is considering are running for office again in Berkshire County, returning to his home in California and standing for election in a Republican district, finding a job in a public relations firm or high tech business and doing consulting work for other Republican candidates in Massachusetts.

Drew did speak of his desire to work among other conservatives in the future. That way, he said, "I wouldn't have to work every day with people who have a really distorted view of humanity." He went on to describe the Williams campus as having an "extreme liberal bias."

Despite holding political beliefs that were opposed to those of many professors here, Drew said he never felt he was treated unfairly. "I really feel that the reasons I was not appointed were completely and entirely my own fault. In the long run, however, I'm not so sure this is the job I wanted to be in for the rest of my life."

"I look at my job here and I think to myself, 'Will it help me get married? Will it help me get the house?' Doing research became less and less interesting. In my own mind, I feel I'm always going to be a great teacher — I'd just like to do it in a much more lucrative situation."

Photos by Isaacson

Reichert

continued from page 9

the perusal of their peers as well as of the students in the classroom.

RECORD: This emphasis seems strange in view of Williams' reputation of having accessible professors rather than having them off doing research. That's why many students choose Williams over universities like Harvard or Yale.

REICHERT: I don't think that Williams places nearly so heavy an emphasis on the amount of publication as the major research universities do. Many of them are counting up the number of books and articles and pages that a person has written and Williams doesn't do that. We're interested in some demonstration that they are actively engaged in scholarship and that their scholarship is of high quality, but the quality is more important than the number of publications.

"It could be your favorite teacher next."

Member of the student group protesting the tenure decision against Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright

"They [junior faculty] feel tempted to measure themselves against what they perceive to be the image of the ideal Williams faculty member...a polished teacher-scholar-college servant..."

New England Association of Schools and Colleges Reaccreditation
Report on Williams

"I don't see any evil conspiracy to keep the issue of tenure away from students."

Assistant Professor of Chemistry Richard Blatchly

"By ignoring the student's insistence that some teachers are better than others, the administration restricts its concept of the student's mind as well."

Laura E. Greene '87

"It's plain to me, at least, that if you're a great teacher and publish little or nothing, you're not going to stay."

Associate Professor of Geology David Dethier

How long is that extension cord?

When their common room in Carter House flooded, Chris Towle '90, David Shatto '89, David Lemor '90 and Brian Harwell '90 set up outdoors to watch Super Bowl XXIII Sunday. The San Francisco 49ers won 20-16.

Wright petition drive continues

by Mary Moule

The student movement to reverse the decision of the Committee on Appointments and Promotions not to recommend Assistant Professor of English Lisa Wright for tenure is picking up steam, according to one of the group's co-leaders, Judy Conti '90.

A second meeting on January 17 was attended by about 15 students, including some that had not come to the first one on January 9. "Our core group of students is growing," Conti said. She added that she hopes these leaders will be able to get a significant segment of the campus involved in the issue.

The group tried to build publicity for its cause by making a presentation to the College Council on January 12. "I thought it was really positive," Conti said of the council's reaction to the petition drive. "The College Council did as much as they could for it."

Last Friday, the group sent out an all-campus mailing with the signatures of 38 student supporters. Conti said the letter was designed to explain the group's goals and discuss the petition they are circulating.

Yesterday, the group took its petition drive to the dining halls in search of increased student support. "We'll have to see how many signatures we get, then maybe we'll go to houses," Conti said. She added that they would like to get 2000 signatures. "We're aiming to get everyone in the school."

Conti said that the petition was worded in such a way that anyone who would like to see a change in the tenure system could sign, without specifically supporting Wright's case.

"We'll have to see how many signatures we get, then maybe we'll go to the houses."

An editorial in the January 20 edition of The Issue asked the CAP to reverse its decision on Wright specifically, while also demanding more student input into the tenure process.

The group seeking to overturn the denial of Wright for tenure also wants to achieve recognition of the weaknesses of the entire process, according to its leaders.

Director of WTF for over three decades dies

by Anne Joseph

Nikos Psacharopoulos, who helped put Williamstown on the cultural map in his 34 years as director of the Williamstown Theatre Festival, died from colon cancer January 12 in the Virgin Islands. He was 60 years old.

Serving as the WTF's artistic director from 1955 until his death, Psacharopoulos was responsible for turning a small summer theater into one of the most prestigious programs in the world.

"His whole life was wrapped up in the Williamstown Theatre Festival. It was the national theater of the United States to Nikos," said Ralph Renzi, co-founder of WTF and a personal friend of Psacharopoulos.

In 1955, the festival was a small operation of 25 people with a budget of $12,000. Under the guidance of Psacharopoulos, however, the program grew to involve 300 people and last summer its budget was nearly $1,000,000.

According to Renzi, the director's "family" grew as well. "The actors made sacrifices for him. Since his parents were deceased and his sister lived in Greece, he built a family here."

Born in Athens, Psacharopoulos first became involved in theater during the Nazi occupation of Greece, when normal schools were closed, and he and his friends performed skits and short plays in local homes. After coming to the United States at 17, he attended Oberlin College where he earned a B.A. in Art in 1951. Three years later, he received his M.F.A. in directing from Yale University, where he was a professor on the undergraduate drama faculty.

In 34 seasons of the WTF, Psacharopoulos directed over 90 plays. He also directed "A Streetcar Named Desire" for the Circle in the Square last spring in New York.

Famous actors

During Psacharopoulos' tenure, WTF became one of the country's most well-known summer repertoires. Actors such as Christopher Reeve, Richard Dreyfuss, Joanne Woodward and Mary Tyler Moore made the trek to Williamstown to work for him. According to Renzi, none of these actors were ever billed as stars, and they were typically paid minimum equity wages of under $300 a week, instead of the usual $15,000 to $20,000 a week.

Dr. William Everett, President of the Williamstown Theatre Festival Board for the past 13 years, said that Psacharopoulos himself was the reason that such prestigious programs in the world.

"[He] built it to last. His spirit ran that festival and will continue to do so."

well-known actors were willing to work in a summer theater. "He had the personality to attract these people."

Everett credited Psacharopoulos with creating a special theatrical atmosphere in Williamstown. He compared the excitement of Williamstown in the summer to living in New York, saying that there was so much to do that one could not hope to experience it all. He also said that Psacharopoulos' fondness for presenting classics not usually seen on Broadway made WTF a very special program.

"It is an opportunity to learn real crafts, a place to recharge," he said. "I identified with [Psacharopoulos] and the long hours he worked. I didn't know much about theater until I met him."

The festival is currently comprised of a recently added free theater, the Extension, where new and experimental plays are staged, the four night a week Cabaret, a program to train directors and a large apprentice program.

Continued success
A large fund drive started under Psacharopoulos will insure the continued continued on page 8

Council inquires into house government

by Justin Smith

At an October College Council meeting, President Trace Blankenship '89 said that a preliminary Committee on Undergraduate Life examination of residential house elections had uncovered irregularities that were just "the tip of the iceberg."

Last week, Blankenship's promise came to fruition as the council discussed in detail the shortcomings of present house election procedures.

"A lot of people have expressed concern because their houses' elections have been kind of disastrous. Some elections run great, some do not," Blankenship said. A CUL sub-committee composed of Blankenship, Dane Dudley '89, Dean of Housing Andrew Hernandez and Assistant Professor of Psychology Colleen Kelly.

The council distributed a two-page memorandum to student mail boxes on Friday. "The memorandum" basically sets out the principles that we think would make things fairer," Blankenship said.

"Over the past semester students in several houses have been troubled by inconsistencies in their house elections that have resulted in disillusionment with house government, hurt feelings, and disunity in the house membership.... We have codified a list of principles to govern election of house

Hmm...

Members of the College Council, plus other concerned students, listen intently as the health of house residential government is debated. The Committee on Undergraduate Life has begun an examination of house elections.

officers and representatives, believing that these represent a fair standard by which to unify the student body's residential house election procedures," the memorandum said.

Included in the letter was a detailed description of voting procedures. It emphasized that "elections for Fall Semester 1989 will be held after room draw," and that only "a student who will be living in the house next semester, or who is a senior currently residing in the house," can vote for house officers. Confusion about voter eligibility in residential elections was a major concern of the CUL sub-committee examining the problems.

Hernandez attended the council meeting to answer members' questions on the subject. Hernandez also offered a

continued on page 3

More college freshmen depressed, study finds

by J.M. Rubin
College Press Service

This year's freshmen are depressed, disappointed and debt-ridden, a large survey of national student attitudes reported January 9.

The findings of the American Council on Education and University of California at Los Angeles annual survey of 308,000 freshmen paint a picture of college students "who are not sanguine about the future," UCLA's Kenneth Green said. A record number of students, for example, reported frequently feeling overwhelmed and depressed.

"We have very high suicide rates among college students now," said Alexander Asting, the UCLA professor who directs the survey. He attributes them to "tremendous pressures on young people to achieve." Whatever the reason, 10.5 percent of the nation's freshman reported feeling depressed frequently, up from 8.3 percent of the class of 1991 freshmen and 8.2 percent of the 1985 freshman class.

More than one of every five freshmen felt "overwhelmed by all I have to do." Green said that freshmen may be unhappier than previous generations because "a larger number than ever before are not attending their first-choice college."

A record number of students, for example, reported frequently feeling overwhelmed and depressed. "We have very high suicide rates among college students now," said Alexander Asting, the UCLA professor who directs the survey. He attributes them to

Only 15.6 percent of the students entering college for the Fall '88 term received Pell Grants, which don't have to be repaid. It was the lowest level in the survey's history, Green said. In 1980, almost a third of the freshman got grants.

"The federal government, in effect, cut back most of the financial aid programs intended to help college students from low- and middle-income families," Astin concluded.

As a result, he said, "the burden of paying for college has shifted increasingly to students, their families and the nation's colleges and universities."

Higher-paying jobs desired
The money pressure apparently has changed the way freshmen view the world, Astin and Green said. The economic recession that plagued families nationwide in the early 1980s and continues to plague them in many farm and energy states changed the students, too.

"These are the children of economic upheaval," Green said. "The recession of the 80's was worse than anything since the Depression. Their loss of faith and preoccupation with jobs comes from that."

A record number of freshmen -- 72.6 percent -- said they were going to college primarily to get higher-paying jobs later in life.

In contrast, a majority of freshmen in 1968 viewed "the college years as a time for learning and personal development," Green said.

Hopkins Hall to be finished in February

PAGE 3

Williams Jazz Ensemble plays at Woodstock

PAGE 5

Lady hoopsters destroy the defectors

PAGE 12

The Williams Record

If it ain't broke...

Rarely does a year go by at Williams without someone criticizing the freshman entry system. Freshman, we are told, become little more than lemmings following each other everywhere, remaining separated from the rest of the campus both physically and psychologically. As a result, freshman are denied the opportunity to expand their horizons by meeting more of their fellow classmates.

The solutions range anywhere from moving entries into upperclass housing groups to tightening junior advisor requirements to abolishing the entry system altogether. Perhaps these answers would appear more reasonable if the analysis of the problem were more convincing.

First, what is so terrible with having a freshman class that is greatly united? Critics of the entry system believe that freshman should have greater contact with the rest of the campus through the houses with which their junior advisors are affiliated. In many entries, this already exists. Officially affiliating freshman entries with upperclass houses would dilute the integrity of both the entries and the houses.

Placing entries physically into either housing groups, such as the Greylock Quad, would do irreparable damage to freshman class unity. Upperclassmen have the advantage of already knowing a large number of other people on campus. Having many of the freshman entries close to each other puts freshmen into proximity with the people they most need to know: their classmates.

In fact, while the critics of the entry system constantly point out the need to socialize the freshman and the upperclassmen, few people mention the fact that many freshman know few of their classmates outside their entry group. It is more important that a freshman from Williams Hall know another from Fayerweather than a sophomore from Mills. And most freshman feel this need to meet more of their own classmates; this is the reason many of them flock to Mission sophomore year. Changing the entry system would only exacerbate this problem.

Tightening JA requirements is another solution that entry system reformers commonly propose. This is unfair as well as uninformed. Anyone acquainted with the junior advisor selection process knows its complexity and thoroughness; the fact that some JAs do not adequately assist their freshman is not the fault of the process. It is inevitable that not every selection by the JA committee will make a perfect junior advisor. To think that restricting requirements will result in a group of intellectual, cultured and super-social JAs is simple-minded and naive.

"If it ain't broke, don't fix it" may be an overused adage, but in light of the wild suggestions flying around campus concerning the so-called sorry state of the entry system, it is more than appropriate.

It was groovy

In 1964 Barry Goldwater told us that "moderation in the pursuit of justice is no virtue." In resurrecting the mood and spirit of the 1960's, Food Service took that advice to heart.

The mood, food, music, movies and the costumes people wore to the 60's dinner were a welcome and entertaining repast in what has been an unfortunately mild and bleak Winter Study. Thank you to Food Service and all the people who made the night something special.

On the Record

"Without tenure Williams would not get diddle-poo in faculty applications."

-- Williamstown resident Ray Warner on why Williams should not abolish tenure.

"We tied the whole thing together with hallways and emphasized the center staircase."

-- Architect David Pearce's description of his firm's work on Hopkins Hall which is now scheduled to be completed by February.

"The theater will not die. He was one of the closest people to being irreplaceable, but he was the first one to say he wasn't. We will always have a warm spot for him."

-- Ralph Renzi, co-founder of the Williamstown Theatre Festival, on his friend Nikos Psacharopoulos, WFT's artistic director from 1955 until his death January 12.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes letters from all interested readers. Letters should be legible and not more than 500 words. They must be received by 5 p.m. the Friday preceding publication. We reserve the right to refuse letters and edit them for length.

The Record's Op-Ed department welcomes submissions from the entire community. Opinion pieces must be received by 5 p.m. of the Friday preceding publication. They must be typed or word-processed. Any questions should be directed to Stephanie Jones at (413) 597-2289.

TODD OWENS, Editor in Chief
CHUCK SAMUELSON, Executive Editor
TRAVIS PIERSON, Managing Editor

ROBERT WEISBERG, News Editor ANN MANTIL, Insider Editor
STEPHANIE JONES, Opinions Editor ANN MANTIL & STEPHANIE JONES, Arts Editors
MARIAM NAFICY, Sports Editor JAY STEINMAN & KARL THOMAS, Photography Editors
BILL PHILPOTT, Production Editor

News Assistants
DAN SKWIRE, BILL SAVADOVE, ELLEN DROUGHT
GREG HART & SARA DUBOW
Sports Assistants
STEVE BRODY & KERR HOUSTON

Assistant Layout Editors
ELISA DUGUNDJI, SARAH OUCHI, ASHESH SHAH

Copyright 1989 The Williams Record. Entered as Second-class mail Nov. 27, 1944 at the post office in North Adams, MA and re-entered in Williamstown, MA, March 3, 1973 under the Act of March 3, 1879. Second-class postage paid at Williamstown, MA 01267. POSTMASTER: Send address corrections to The Williams Record, Williams College, Williamstown, MA 01267.

Letters

Elitism not a practice of Williams or the Inn

To the Editor:

I would like very much to reply to Katie Brennan and Kathy Tierney's letter in last week's Record. While I don't consider myself a spokesperson or public relations expert for The Williams Inn, I do know my parents have stayed there many times over the past four years, and we have never received anything other than completely courteous service. As one of the authors' "second-class citizens" (neither of my parents is an alum, and we are certainly not part of any economic or social "elite"), I feel I should relate my family's experience with graduation reservations at the Inn. As the policy was explained to us, the Inn guarantees the college about half of the available rooms for that weekend, to accommodate trustees, honorary degree recipients, and the like, with the remaining half is dispersed by lottery. Last June my parents dutifully sent in their request, and received reservations for two rooms over this year's graduation weekend.

The particulars of the reservation policy, however, were not the most disturbing part of Brennan and Tierney's letter. They implicated the rest of the college's lottery systems in some sort of elitist conspiracy against those of us of lower-income, no-legacy status.

Not only is this completely misguided, since the Inn's lottery system was in question, but it is also potentially very damaging to Williams for such allegations to surface without proof. I know of no one, myself included, who can point to some apportioning of this college, aside from the higher percentage of alumni children acceptances, that is geared to better the lives of some "elite" at the expense of "second-class citizens."

If the college does operate this way, which I certainly believe it does not, I think everyone would want that fact exposed and the practice halted. Until some proof of this can be offered, the allegations in Brennan and Tierney's letter only serve to continue the misperception of Williams as an elitist "country club" college, and perhaps stop qualified students from applying.

William F. Tulloch '89

To the Editor:

I have looked into the facts involved in the letter from Katie Brennan '90 and Kathy Tierney '90 regarding the booking of rooms at the Williams Inn for Commencement weekend. Let me clarify them. The College reserves a block of rooms one year in advance for trustees, honorary degree recipients, Olmstead Award winners, and guests. If it turns out that the college does not need all those rooms, the manager of the Inn is notified as soon as possible.

It is never the case that anyone at the College, let alone anyone on the board of trustees, confers with the manager of the Inn about who else should be given a room.

James G. Kolesar
Director of Public Information

To the Editor:

We apologize for a misunderstanding in a letter to the Editor concerning The Williams Inn graduation reservation policy. At no time have the college trustees or administration influenced who gets a reservation, but rather they have reserved a block of rooms here for their own needs.

As for the balance of our rooms, The Williams Inn is an independent business making its own decisions.

Carl J. Faulkner
President, The Williams Inn

Letters

Profs need tenure to provide security

To the Editor:

The Record Insider on tenure was outstanding. A college official told me the Record reporters understand tenure better than many faculty members do.

However, the Insider -- and particularly the editorials for and against -- missed the main point about tenure. Without tenure Williams would not get diddle-poo in faculty applications. The principle is the same at Williams as it was at The New York Times, from which I retired four years ago. No teacher, no editor, no reporter wants a job that will be threatened whenever a new college president, a new department head or a new editor or publisher takes over. Without a job guarantee too much can be contributed to incompetence. At The Times the guarantee was provided by a union contract with the Newspaper Guild.

Young job-seeking Ph.D.s, like young job-seeking journalism graduates, are looking for, among other things, security. If they are going to face a review at age 50, and then 55 and then 60, with their jobs in jeopardy every time, they are going to look elsewhere for employment.

If Williams did not offer tenure its faculty would be composed of teachers who could not get a job at Slippery Rock.

Ray Warner

Sexual harassment is a problem at Williams

To the Editor:

Something terribly wrong and disgusting happens frequently, perhaps daily, on this campus, usually going unquestioned and unreported. Some men sexually harass women, both verbally and physically, and no one stops them.

These men are allowed to regard their conduct as funny, entertaining, exciting. Some of them are probably too stupid to realize that they belittle and degrade women, but others deliberately abuse and bait women, seemingly for pleasure and sport.

I know one woman whose breasts were grabbed at a party by one drunken boy as he and another screamed, "You can see her nipples!" Initially she remained silent, worrying that somehow she may have provoked this violation of privacy. She eventually talked to her friends and parents, however, who encouraged her to speak to the deans. Though unsure that she had a legitimate complaint, she knew that the shame and confusion she felt were not her fault.

She decided to demand a formal written apology from both boys; surprisingly, they seemed genuinely sorry and horrified. I was impressed by their sincerity and remorse. They not only wrote her, but also wrote the sponsors of the party, apologizing for their own and their friends' Baccchanian behavior (yes, these were Baccbus boys).

They wrote, "We find our behavior shameful. Some of us were too drunk, disgustingly drunk... Sometimes we complain about the burden of the stereotypes that we carry as members of Club Baccbus. But it is nights like last Saturday night that perpetrate those stereotypes. As part of this small community, we do not wish to create an uncomfortable atmosphere."

Unfortunately, an "uncomfortable atmosphere" persists. Sexual harassment is not solely the province of Club Baccbus; even if all their members behaved themselves, harassment would continue. Indeed, at a subsequent party, another boy unzipped his fly, pulled out his penis, and dangled it in front of several women's faces. His friends stood around and laughed.

What is going on at this school? I know of numerous incidents in which women reported repeated obscene and threatening phone calls to Security and were told nothing could be done to track the callers. Nothing is not an acceptable answer. Sexual harassment and indecent exposure are crimes punishable with fines and jail terms.

We, as a community, cannot stand by and completely condone this revolting behavior. Our passivity incriminates us as well. I shudder to think of these boys, and anyone who tolerates this malignment, unleashed on the world outside Williams, say teaching school or running a corporation, believing they can treat other people like dirt.

Jennie Newkirk '90

Some points in favor of new party policy

To the Editor:

As I was reading last week's Record article about the increased fines for alcohol in freshman entries, I was surprised to see no voices supporting the Administration's position. Reading your coverage, one would assume that all students disagree with the Administration on this. I thought I'd correct that.

Let's start with the obvious points that no one mentions. Almost all freshmen are underage. This alone should render the whole discussion moot. Also, college rules state that entries are to be dry. Apparently no one follows these laws and rules anymore. Not to mention that alcohol is inherently dangerous. Anyone remember the three prospectives last year? Enough said about that.

As to the Administration's policies so far: they've been mild. They could bust entries much more than they do now. Even better, they could have Zoilo arrest the underage drinkers. Be glad they've been nice. I do think, however, that they should fine the entries rather than the JAs.

I agree with Brian Hughes '90 that the Administration does not offer many (if any) sources of entertainment, and probably never will. (How about it, President Oakley?) If the only source of entertainment his entry has is alcohol, however, 1) that's a hurting entry and 2) Mr. Hughes has completely abandoned his obligations as a JA.

There are plenty of things an entry can do together that don't involve alcohol, such as: ice cream socials, Sunday brunch in the entry, pizza and movie nights, entry Pictionary games, entry Olympics, entry Moonlighting hour, entry primal scream therapy time, entry tie-dye parties, entry cookouts, entry pic-

Opinions

The George Bush inauguration: What the new breeze will bring

by Jeff Biersach

At noon Friday, America put on its version of a coronation. George Bush's inauguration came complete with typically proud trumpet fanfare and even a Billy Graham invocation that made our forty-first president sound like a divine appointee.

I certainly hope that God is on Bush's side, because it will take a miracle to address the tremendous national debt that Reagan has left us.

A new breeze is indeed blowing. It smells of the toxic stench from our pitifully insufficient waste sites. For our record number of homeless and impoverished, it is a chilling winter draft.

A new wind is blowing, and like our fat-filled defense department, it is blowing away the money we need to maintain this nation's economic strength. A new breeze is blowing, and it brings the first whiff of the problems that lie ahead.

Fortunately, Bush seems to recognize that it is no longer "morning in America." While financing prosperity on hot checks, America has reached a false peak in its standard of living. As

In his inaugural address, Bush prepared the nation for the unavoidable cuts to come. He wisely advised the money-hungry supplies to stop thinking of themselves as "the sum of their possessions." To Congress and especially to the Democrats, his speech made a necessary plea for the non-partisan cooperation that will be needed to solve our budget problems.

Amidst the gloss of the inauguration, Bush told a contented America that we are at "a moment rich with promise." That is what Americans want to hear. But what Bush knows, and what Americans will soon find out, is that "things will be difficult."

Bush stated in an inaugural speech that was thankfully more realistic than rosy, that "our funds are low," and "we have more to wait." For George Bush, faced with a phenomenal debt and declining international economic competitiveness and credibility, there is indeed much work to do.

nies, entry sledding, and on and on. As the Record itself stated, "Entry parties and other events help create closeness among entries." Well, how about some more "other events" and less partying?

I'll conclude with two personal comments. The first is that from the JA reaction printed in the Record and talks I've had with certain freshmen, it seems that two many JAs are copping out of their responsibilities. To those JAs who haven't, and I know there are a lot of you, I apologize and in no way mean to criticize you or to refer to you with the above statement. But to

Jonathan Howard '91

News

Hopkins may be habitable shortly

by Mary Moule

The construction on Hopkins Hall is nearing completion and the administration could return to its old offices by February, according to Assistant Director for Construction Services Antonio Janairo, who is in charge of the project. Originally, the construction firm Barry, Bette & Ledduke, Inc., had hoped to be finished this past fall, far ahead of schedule, said Architect David Pearce. Pearce's firm, Architectural Resources of Cambridge, Inc., had originally estimated a completion date of June, 1989.

Most of the major work is finished, Janairo said, "But there's a few little details here and there that can add up to a lot of man-hours." The bottom two floors and the basement still need to be cleaned by the construction company and inspected by the architect before the building inspector can issue a certificate of occupancy. The certificate should be issued in about two weeks.

Just about there

The new, improved Hopkins Hall is nearly ready to hold administration offices and classrooms once again. The original expected date for completion of the renovation was this June.

According to Janairo, other tasks to be completed include bringing in furniture and a smoke test to see how well the fans would circulate air in the event of a fire. The landscaping will not be completed until the arrival of warmer weather.

Other offices that will be moved back to Hopkins are Security, the Comptroller, the Vice President and Treasurer's Office, the Deans of the College and the Faculty, the Provost, the Alumni Review, and Public Information. There will also be eight classrooms in the building.

Architect is pleased
Pearce said he is very pleased with the way the building is turning out, both externally and internally. One of the difficulties that the architects had to overcome was the image of two separate buildings. "We tied the whole thing together with the hallways, and emphasized the center staircase," Pearce said. Another difficulty, according to Pearce, was the structure of the original building. The stone walls and original floors of the building were an integral part of the structure itself. Pearce said, "We had to brace it up before tearing it down, so we put holes in the old floors and put steel columns through."

The addition and internal renovations were designed by a team of eight to nine architects. "It would have cost too much to build it like the original, but it needed to be related," Pearce said. "The other roofs in the area suggested a certain style, and we tried to keep many of the same lines." The architects also tried to relate to the surrounding buildings. Pearce said that this idea made brick the logical building material. "You have to attempt to pick up the context of the other buildings around it," he said.

Council, CUL investigate house elections

continued from page 1
historical background of residential government at Williams.

Other business

In other business, Monique Waddell '90 and Allison Handler '92 proposed the formation of a leadership caucus, which would be an informal association of campus club and organization presidents. According to Handler and Waddell, the group would meet periodically to exchange information. Handler explained that the caucus would serve an important function by promoting communication between campus groups.

"I feel very frustrated by the lack of communication between a lot of campus groups," she said, adding that greater communication between campus organizations would help in practical matters, such as pooling funds and making joint transportation arrangements for trips.

Council Vice President John Keish '89 announced that the AIDS Education

Committee has suggested that the council organize events in observation of Sexual Awareness Week. Council Treasurer MaryEllen Sullivan '89 will lead a committee to investigate the possibility of holding a panel discussion and other activities to promote sexual awareness at Williams.

Beyond the Bubble

Bush inaugurated as 41st president

George Bush was sworn in as the nation's 41st president Friday. In his inauguration speech, he said he will attempt to elicit bipartisan support for his programs to improve education, clean up the environment and reduce the federal budget deficit. The next day, he and First Lady Barbara Bush opened up the White House to the public, the first such open house since William Taft became president eighty years ago. Over 400,000 people were greeted by the new leader of the free world. Private citizens Ronald and Nancy Reagan returned to their California ranch just after the inauguration ceremony.

Gunman kills five schoolchildren in California

Five children were killed and 30 more were injured when a gunman opened fire with an assault rifle in a Stockton, California elementary school yard and classrooms last week. The gunman, a 24 year old drifter with an extensive criminal record, shot himself after the attack. Police say they have no idea of a motive.

Riots rock Miami in week before Super Bowl

Recent racial hostilities caused by the influx of Nicaraguan refugees into Miami had Super Bowl promoters worrying about the city's image while community leaders were more concerned about the threat of ethnic division. The disturbances have been seen by some leaders as similar to those resulting from the 1980 boatlift which overwhelmed Miami with 100,000 Cuban refugees. The fatal shooting of a black motorcyclist by police last week provided the catalyst for the outbreak of violence, authorities said.

Major treaty signed on East-West relations

Thirty-five nations signed a treaty last week in Vienna pledging to strengthen human rights safeguards, improve East-West trade and hold new security talks. Delegates from the 16 North Atlantic Treaty Organization members, seven Warsaw Pact states and 12 non-aligned European countries signed the document at this meeting of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

Koreans agree to high-level reunification talks

North Korea agreed to a South Korean proposal for the highest-level political and military talks since the Korean war last week. The two sides will meet February 8 at the truce village of Panmunjom to discuss terms for a meeting between North Korean Premier Yon Hyung-mook and his South Korean counterpart, Kang Young-hoon.

Minority organization begun at Mt. Greylock High

A minority student union at Mt. Greylock Regional High School, the first of its kind at the school, has caused negative reactions from both white and non-white students. Members of the union say the student sees have ranged from silence to irritation, reflecting what they say as discomfort with the presence of the union. Organizers of the group say they used the Williams College Black Student Union as a model and were inspired after seeing how well an assembly on Martin Luther King, Jr. was accepted last year.

Compiled by Ellen Drought from The Berkshire Eagle

Looking very sixtiesish...
John Freedman '91 takes time out from admiring the decor of 60's Night at Greylock Dining Hall to pose for a photo. Mission Park and Baxter dining halls also participated in this blast from the past.

Trustees discuss athletics, tenure controversy at meeting

by Ellen Drought

The Board of Trustees convened for the second time this school year, focusing most of their discussion on athletics. They also discussed the recent tenure controversy and budgetary concerns.

According to College Treasurer and Trustee Secretary William Reed, the trustees met with student athletes and Robert Peck, chairman of the physical education department, concerning the place of athletics at Williams. Reed said that they discussed how equal the treatment men and women athletes receive in terms of facilities and equipment scheduling.

The pros and cons of the tenure process at Williams was debated in-depth by the trustees. "The Board doesn't go into individual cases, but it discusses how decisions are reached, in terms of input and degree of outside review," Reed said.

"They do that every year, but the discussion was more intensive this year. The chair [of the Trustee Committee on Instruction], Matthew Nimetz, felt our position was strong," Reed said.

"The problem this year was the number of very able faculty members who were up for tenure."

The Board also discussed the objectives for the new multicultural center without reaching any conclusions, according to Reed.

In addition, he said, "They had an extensive discussion with the budget committee over costs at Williams. Gordon Winston, the provost, desired to tighten up on cost controls."

Finally, it was unusual that Buildings and Grounds had no new projects up for approval, according to Reed. "B & G thought they needed $1.5 million for new boilers, but now concluded they could be updated without replacing them. That pleased the Board," Reed said.

"The problem this year was the number of very able faculty members who were up for tenure; there were 13. That placed enormous pressure on the Committee on Appointments and Promotions."

Buckle Up For Spring Break '89

Reagan in review: students, schools left gasping for funds

Michael O'Keefe
College Press Service

Eight years after they rode into Washington, D.C., pledging to change federal student aid forever, members of the Reagan administration can say they succeeded. However, it is doubtful that students who now have to borrow money they used to get in grants think these changes are for the better.

Virtually all observers, across the political spectrum, say the dramatic shift in financial aid programs from grants to loans is the administration's most enduring campus accomplishment.

"Debt is the great legacy of the Reagan administration for students," Fred Azcarate, president of the U.S. Student Association, said.

Conservative groups, however, are disappointed the trend away from grants wasn't more pronounced. "The intent of financial aid was to supplement the cost [of a college education]," contended Jeanne Allen of the Heritage Foundation, a right-wing think tank that helped develop many of Reagan's campus policies.

"It was never meant to guarantee everyone gets a college education," she said. "Ronald Reagan's goal was to get back to the original intent...to ensure full access to a college education, but not that it would be fully paid by the federal government."

Allen said Reagan largely succeeded in making sure that only the truly needed got federal aid.

Reagan came into office with other education goals, too, like abolishing the Department of Education, shifting responsibility for funding campuses from Washington to the states and drastically cutting the federal budget for schools and colleges.

But "the announced intention to decrease expenditures...never materialized," according to Terrell Bell, Reagan's first Secretary of Education.

Though there were numerous attempts to cut education, sometimes as much as 50 percent, Congress balked on completing Reagan's attempted dismantling of numerous school programs. Edward Elmendorf, assistant secretary for postsecondary education from 1982 to 1985, said, "We forced Congress to decide the programs are not expendable. Congress has a chance each year to take a [vote] on how much programs should be cut, and what their impact would be."

However, the amount of money granted to students also rose during the same period. Much of the increased loan money was given to middle-class students, who had been made eligible for student loans for the first time.

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "I'd rather work on issues such as the retention and recruitment of minorities instead of defending programs that have existed for years."

Students change majors

Student life, regardless of who started the shift to loans, has been changed as a result. Liberal arts students, for example, changed their majors from lower-paying careers like teaching to more lucrative fields because they know they would need to repay loans, some said.

"Students know they are going to graduate with large debts, and that affects what classes they pick, what majors they choose, what jobs they select when they graduate," according to Arlette Slachmuyder, president of the State Student Association of New York.

"It creates a lot of pressure on the student that hasn't existed in the past," he added.

Azcarate said, "Some students will be in debt for the rest of their lives. Many young people are not going to college because they can't assume the debts."

And many who do choose to assume these debts now can't pay them back, critics said.

Students are defaulting on almost half of the Stafford Loans they receive, formerly called Guaranteed Student Loans. It costs the federal government $1.6 billion a year to cover loan losses, up from $530 in 1983.

Lewis predicts that the government will have to reduce the amount of loans it gives to students because of the high proportion of defaults. Increased spending to repay banks for defaulted Stafford Loans accounts for part of the increase in the Education Department's budget during the Reagan years. Nevertheless, the budget did rise, Reagan supporters have said.

"When I started," Bell said, "the budget was $14 billion. Now it's $21 billion. There's a perception in academia that there were cuts, but in actual dollars, there's been an increase."

After inflation is figured in, however, student aid programs were actually about 20 percent smaller in 1986 than in 1980, a 1986 USSA study concluded, while August, 1988, Wall Street Journal analysis pegged the decrease at 9 percent from 1980 to 1988.

Bell said, "The response of the higher education community and Congress frustrated," the administration's hopes to cut college spending more, and some Reagan critics remain bitter about it.

"We've been forced [to fight] to hold the status quo," Azcarate said. "

Close, but no cigar...

Yet another act hits the dust at Dennett House's Gong Show last Friday. The lucky winners received $50 and the joy of not hearing Dennett's makeshift gong, shown above.

Rain Man reviewed: wait for a rainy day

by Elizabeth Greenman
Tom Cruise plays with fast machines. Why not, people pay to see him. They also pay to see Tom's sexy physique, Tom in sunglasses, and Dustin Hoffman acting lovable. Again, while Rain Man is full of repetitions and clichés, it also has warmth and humor. Whether it is worth taking the good with the bad is a close call.

The basic premise of Rain Man is contrived, not to mention barely believable. Charlie (Tom Cruise), a supposedly smooth-talking car dealer, flees Cleveland from Los Angeles for his father's funeral, only to discover that most of the considerable inheritance is left to an unknown trustee. This trustee turns out to be none other than Charlie's older, idiot savant brother, Raymond (Dustin Hoffman).

Determined to get the inheritance money that he "deserves," Charlie kidnaps Raymond and takes him back to L.A. From here on, the movie moves solely by dint of Raymond's autism, and the trials and benefits associated with it.

It seems to be popular opinion that Rain Man is Cruise's best acting job to date. This is true, but that is not really saying very much. Hoffman is a different story. His acting is superb throughout the movie; one does not doubt the character he creates.

On the other hand, not many people know an autistic adult, making it hard to judge the realism of Hoffman's work. At times, Raymond seems able to cope with the shocks of road life just a bit too handily, although one could attribute this to flow in the writing, and not in the acting.

Despite Rain Man's transparent plot, the writing is obviously intended to be important. There are some interesting, if superficial parallels drawn between Raymond and Charlie, two men who never grow up, who remain in their own little worlds. In that sense, the trip is a kind of coming into manhood, or coming into maturity story, at least for Charlie. Quite nice to happen in the span of a week's driving.

Even so, the film is sentimental, and evocative enough to have the audience rooting for Charlie and Raymond right up until the final shot. Rain Man is sappy, humorous, and touching. If you see it, you will like it; should you decide you have better things to do, you won't miss it.

ARTS IN VIEW

January 24 At 3:00 p.m., Rachel Tritt '90 will give a piano recital of Chopin's Ballades in Currier Ballroom.

At 8:00 p.m., Cap and Bells presents "Icarus's Mother," a one-act play by Sam Shepard, in the Extension Theater of AMT.

At 8:00 p.m., a dance project developed in the winter study, "This House, This House," will be performed in Lasell Dance Studio.

At 8:00 p.m., a string octet of student musicians will perform Mendelssohn's Octet in E-flat Major, Opus 20 in Brooks-Rogers.

At 10:00 p.m., the White Bread Coalition will present "MassMcCabaret" in AMT Downstage.

January 25 At 4:00 p.m., student soloists and ensembles of various independent study projects will play in Brooks-Rogers.

At 8:00 p.m., Obo Addy, a West African master drummer, and students from the winter study course he co-taught with Assistant Professor of Music Ernest Brown will give a concert in Brooks-Rogers.

At 8:00 p.m., Cap and Bells presents "Icarus's Mother," a one-act play by Sam Shepard, in the Extension Theater of the AMT.

At 10:00 p.m., "MassMcCabaret" will be presented at Bette's Life and Times.

January 26 At 1:00 p.m., an English Handbell Choir comprised of students from Professor of Music Douglas Moore's winter study course will perform in Brooks-Rogers.

At 10:00 p.m., "MassMcCabaret" will be presented in the Williams Inn.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinemas 1, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
7:00 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:05
7:05 & 9:15 Sat & Sun 2:05
Oliver and Company Fri-Sun 6:00 Sat & Sun 2:05

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
January 24-26 7:00 & 9:00
January 27-28 7:00 & 9:00
January 29-31 7:00 & 9:15

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
7:00 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:00
7:10 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:00
7:00 & 9:00 Sat & Sun 2:00
7:10 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:00

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 2N, Pittsfield, 443-9639
Working Girl, Dirty Rotten Scoundrels, The Accidental Tourist, Scrooged, Tequila Sunrise (no matinee), Twins: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30, Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10
Rain Man: 6:45 & 9:15, Sat-Sun 12:45 & 3:10
Oliver and Company, Land Before Time, Star Trek: The Motion Picture, The Naked Gun, The January Man, A Fish Called Wanda (no matinee), Deep Six: 7:15 & 9:30, Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rte 8, Lenox, 499-2558
Rain Man: 12:30 3:30 6:40 9:40
Dirty Rotten Scoundrels: 12:55 4:10 6:55 9:20
Oliver and Company: 12:30 2:30 4:30 6:30 8:15
Tequila Sunrise: 1:00 3:55 6:50 9:25
The January Man: 1:15 4:00 7:10 9:20
Deep Six: 12:50 4:05 7:30 9:50
Twins: 1:05 3:50 7:00 9:30
Working Girl: 1:10 3:40 7:15 9:45
The Naked Gun: 1:20 4:20 7:20 9:35
The Accidental Tourist: 12:40 3:45 7:05 9:50

The Naked Gun reviewed: Good, stupid fun

by Rob Weisberg

About eight years ago, Jerry Zucker, Jim Abrahams and David Zucker decided to enter what was then a completely new brand of comic cinema. Instead of a movie where the plot set up funny situations, the jokes themselves would be the raison d'être.

The one-liners would keep coming as rapidly as possible, and no opportunity to make a crack, however asinine, would be missed. The key was to give the audience no chance to think about the jokes; eventually, the frantic pacing of the film would get to them, and they would laugh along hysterically.

The result, of course, was Airplane!, which was a hit precisely because the audience was kept laughing throughout the movie, without a second to catch their breath. People left the theater not really sure what they had seen, but knowing full well that Airplane! was the funniest movie ever made. If you don't believe me, try to remember more than half a dozen really funny individual jokes from the movie. It's not easy.

And audiences must have never caught on to the trick, since Airplane II and Top Secret both did very well. The one time this idea failed was the television show Police Squad!, which had commercials to give the audience a breather.

Then The Naked Gun, based on that short-lived television series, arrived in movie theaters. It's classic Airplane! genre, with jokes, most of them inane, coming at you like bullets from a machine gun.

It's only the hyperactive pacing of the movie that keeps the audience interested.

The film opens with O.J. Simpson snooping around a dock where a drug deal is being made. Then, in quick succession, he is shot six times, steps in a bear trap, his head on a pipe, backs into wet paint and gets his fingers jammed in a window. And away it goes. What's really interesting about this movie is not that people like it a lot, but that it's received so much critical acclaim. The Naked Gun is not well-written by any means—none of the jokes are that clever, and three experienced Hollywood writers should have little trouble coming up with 90 minutes of one-liners and slapstick situations.

For the most part, it's only the hyperactive pacing of the movie that keeps the audience interested. Yet it works: everyone has a good time, and walks out laughing and retelling the best lines from the film. In that sense, The Naked Gun is a success.

The acting in The Naked Gun is pretty good, if you can look past the fact that only three people in the movie act the rest are just props for jokes (it's sad to think that the great John Houseman's last role was that of a stereotypical old driving instructor).

Leslie Nielsen, who plays the principal idiot, was the surprise of Airplane! He had the silliest of the dialogue in that movie, and his Joe Friday just-the-facts-ma'am delivery was terrific. He is just as good in The Naked Gun. One thinks that he could tell Monty Python's jokes so funny it kills you and hardly crack a smile. Nielsen is very good at what he does, and his performance is one of the few real bits of talent that went into The Naked Gun.

Priscilla Presley, whose resume is mostly composed of several years on Dallas, has surprisingly good timing in her roles as the love interest. She plays off Nielsen well. Ricardo Montalban also fits the part of the crook adeptly. But since most of his lines are straight, he serves more as a ready-made foil for Nielsen's ridiculous and irrelevant dialogue than as a true actor.

The movie also stars George Kennedy (will he ever have a leading role again?), O.J. Simpson and Reggie Jackson. But none of them really act.

The plot? Something about a plan to kill the Queen of England, but it hardly matters. What's central to The Naked Gun are the jokes. All ten thousand, four hundred and fifty-two of them. Keep count; you'll be surprised.

pip Camera Ready Resumes $5.00 for $17.70
Offset Printed in just a few hours!
We do all types of printing
53 Main St.
North Adams, MA
663-3414

How to live with someone who's living with cancer.

Learning to live with cancer is no easy task. Learning to live with someone else's cancer can be even more difficult.

Nobody knows better than we do how much help and understanding is needed. That's why our service and rehabilitation programs emphasize the whole family, not just the cancer patient.

We run local programs with volunteers who are recovered cancer patients, or whose lives have been touched by family members or friends with cancer. That's what makes us one of the largest, best motivated and most caring of any health organization in the country.

Among our regular services we provide information and guidance to patients and families, transport patients to and from treatment, supply home care items and assist patients in their return to everyday life.

Life is what concerns us. The life of cancer patients. The lives of their families. So you can see we are even more than the research organization we are so well known to be.

No one faces cancer alone.

AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

PEACE CORPS SERVICE: A Good Career Move

COLLEGE GRADS—Highly rewarding opportunities overseas for B.A./B.S. self-starters to share their skills with people in Africa, Asia and Latin America. PEACE CORPS

Recruiters at Williams! Mon., Feb. 13 at 7 p.m. In Office at Career Counseling INFORMATION BOOTH: Mon., Feb. 13 from 11-3 p.m. In Student Union, Baxter Hall

Sign up in Office of Career Counseling—607-2311 for interview with a former volunteer on Tue., Feb. 14

Has your first Winter Study lived up to your expectations?

Interviews by Peter Kilvans, photos by Karl Thomas

It has in a way. I didn't expect to really learn that much over Winter Study. I'm in Mind, Body, and Culture and it has really broadened my horizons. —Larry Smith '92

Should I have had any expectations? —Denise Winton '92

Winter Study means so much more to me than drinking beer, doing drugs or listening to loud music. I was told by many people that it would be a complete blow-off with parties the whole month. Besides not being what I wanted, I was disappointed by the lack of energy and moral rectitude. —E. Davis Jackson '92

I've sort of been slipping into apathy. At first it was fun, but now I'm really looking forward to Mid-Winter Break. —Sara Martin '92

Yes, and far surpassing them. Winter Study is a thing of the gods. Square that. —Kris Delmhorst '92 and Becky Bond '92

Women's hoops smother Amherst, Union

continued from page 12

ond shots by Hedeman in the latter period. Amherst converted 30 of 90 field goal attempts on the game.

The Jeffs cut the lead to one, 56-55, at the 9:20 mark, setting the stage for an exciting conclusion. Moments later, Hedeman picked up a loose ball underneath and scored while being fouled. She converted the free throw to give Williams a 64-58 edge with just under five minutes left in the game.

Junior Stephanie Murphy scored inside for the Jeffs, cutting the lead to 66-64 at the 2:17 mark. The Defectors would not score again, however. Hedeman, playing one of her best games of the season, answered with a basket at the other end, and then rebounded an Amherst miss and was fouled. With 1:36 remaining in the game, she converted both ends of the one-and-one to extend the lead to six points.

The teams exchanged turnovers, with Williams having a lot of trouble bringing the ball up court. Amherst was unable to take advantage of the Williams miscues, missing a couple of desperate jumpers. Kristina Broadhurst '92 rebounded the last miss and was fouled with 40 seconds left. Amherst called time out to put more pressure on the freshman. Broadhurst missed the front end of the one-and-one, but Cadigan pulled down the rebound and was fouled immediately.

Cadigan, in an atypical performance, struggled at the line on Saturday (9-15). She made the first free throw to finish the scoring in the game. Williams again go with 18 rebounds. Cynthia Knight surprised the Ephs women with her inside play, scoring 20 for the Jeffs. Murphy added 15.

Williams struggles with Union Last Tuesday, the Ephs showed none

We finally played as a team...we couldn't score inside, we passed the ball out. We wore them down.'

recovered a missed free throw, as Hedeman rebounded a follow-up attempt by Martha Lucy '91.

"We showed so much heart. That's why we won," said Croucheley.

Both teams were very sloppy in the final minutes, providing an ending appropriate to the game as a whole.

"Williams-Amherst is always a sloppy game. It's a question of who plays a better fundamental game," said Coach Nancy Roberts. Both Hedeman and Coach Roberts attributed the sloppiness to the tension surrounding the game.

Cadigan led the Ephs with 25 points, followed by Hedeman with 20 points in

of the desire that they displayed against Amherst. Union was a lightly regarded team, and Williams was understandably looking ahead to the Amherst game.

The first half was a seesaw battle with neither team playing well. Coach Roberts, sensing that Williams might be flat, opened the game with a full court press. The Dutchwomen, however, were able to beat the press without too much difficulty. Broadhurst started for the Ephs for an injured Brown. She got the nod over Megan King '90 and Meg Brown '91 because of her intensity and quickness.

As a result, the Ephs played the first half with four perimeter players. Hedman was invisible, getting off just four shots. The outside game was unable to compensate, as Croucheley is mired in a shooting slump. She made just 8 of 21 shots from the field in the game. Williams trailed at the half, 34-31.

Ephs wake up for first half In the second half, Williams inserted Brown into the lineup and the move paid off immediately. Midway through the period, Williams went on a 17-4 tear to lead 54-42. Hedeman and Brown keyed the run by grabbing offensive rebounds and dominating inside. The smaller Dutchwomen could get no closer than 10 points the rest of the way.

"We came in thinking Union would be no problem. In the second half, we bore down," said Croucheley. She made all eight of her free throw attempts down the stretch to seal the game and lead Williams with 24 points. Cadigan added 16. Hedeman cleared 20 rebounds, and Brown pulled down 10. Gina Protosch scored 14 points for Union and Robin Romber grabbed 16 rebounds.

Williams now stands at 7-2 and has one game remaining on its successful homestand. The Ephs host Vassar on Wednesday before playing in a tourney at Connecticut College over the break.

It Takes All Kinds...

BY NORMA STEINBERG/Puzzles Edited by Eugene T. Maleska

ACROSS
1 Annex-listing
43 He's in the museum
6 Libran symbol
11 Space
15 Sch. groups
19 Title picture
20 In the wrong
22 About
23 -avis
24 He's an unwelcome caller
26 He's unfriendly
28 "... against of troubles"; Hamlet
29 Cuneans, e.g.
30 Pasadena
31 Bowers
32 Sanctuaries
33 Kin of aves.
34 Peyton or Park
35 Porn
36 Vernal barbers
37 Fellowship
38 Cerepanthus
39 Lot's hometown
40 Sift
43 He's in the museum
45 Chew the fat
48 Dear
49 Peppermint or hamburger follower
51 Sci. dealing with currents
52 -dies (kneeling bench)
53 Shoe ties
54 Lords it over
55 Lung hikes
57 Miserly
58 Germanic exclamations
59 Lunthead
60 Dense or mawkish
61 Jousting
62 Weapons
63 Damsel in Knight
64 He got a tax break
65 Used a tumble
66 D sharp
70 Dirt
71 Book of the Bible
72 She's a go-getter
74 Airport timetable info
77 Hits hard
78 Squamous
80 Is indebted
81 Zola's "The Shop"
82 Locales
83 Spin
84 Showy flower
86 Idaho's largest city
87 Cover person
88 Chum, sometimes
89 Perky rhythms
90 Wooden shoes
91 Erhard's gp.
92 He's Cowper
93 Paces
95 Paced
96 Penned
97 It has skulls and songs
98 Lark
99 Dialects of regions
101 "Easy —" of radio fame
102 Blackthorn
103 — Love You, "1934 song
104 American wildcat
107 Ellington's "The Doll"
108 Separate
110 Germ
111 He's determined
113 She's hanging around
116 — Smile Re Your Umbrella
117 Took off
118 — de corps
119 — the Chief
120 Brides in Barcelona
121 Takes home, as pay
122 Mill runs
123 Cries of surprise
124 —

DOWN
1 Dumbwater
2 Keys' cousins
3 Feasive
4 — et ubique
5 Carlyle's native land
6 Choose
7 Minos's realm
8 Foot part
9 Eng.
10 Hugeness
11 Pacella
12 Ingredient
13 Respectability
14 Revolutionary
15 Patriot
16 Inventor
17 Orderly
18 Heat, for short
19 Easy basket
20 City on the Rhine
21 Yuppies
22 Keys' cousins
23 Feasive
24 — et ubique
25 Is inclined
27 He has nerves of steel
31 Charon's river
34 Uses a lever
35 Eng.
36 Peignoirs
37 Uses a telescope
38 Archibald of N.A. fame
39 Smooth
40 Chair-back piece
41 Harness strap
42 He's a sweetie
43 City on the Rhine
45 She gives you a second chance
46 Venetian
47 Charpoys
48 Cocoon
49 Residents
50 Hardy villain
52 Loren's spouse
54 Follows
55 Of sound
59 Like some dirt roads
57 Severe
58 Conainers for oil
60 Taint
61 Sticks it out
63 Runs in neutral
64 Union activist
65 Chavez
65 "I am monarch — I survey"; Cowper
69 Wendell or Jeff of films
68 Of birth
70 Fricks
71 Helen's kidnapper
72 Part of a yard
73 Discrimination
76 In — (telescope)
77 Knight's aide
78 Eulogize
79 — Roy
81 Sticks it out
81 Gillis of TV
83 Desires
84 Devoat
85 Actress Sommer
86 Exposes
88 San Fran. cisco, nce
89 Trysters' highway
90 Elastic
92 Flag
93 Church child
94 Instructions for cooking
95 Infant fern
96 Author Cather and name-sakes
98 Viewpoints
99 More frosted
100 Welty's "Wedding" like some ends
103 Positive thinking
104 Religious blocs
105 Thought
106 Comb. form
107 Transmitted
108 Creative pursuits
109 Info at depths
110 Ferry's berth
112 Indefinable
114 What epigrams do
115 Jazzman winding

ANSWER KEY ON PAGE 8

In Other Ivory Towers

Worcester Polytechnic Institute

Five workers were injured at WPI last December when the bottom literally dropped out of the Fuller Laboratories construction site there, reported the WPI Newswatch. The presence of too much wet concrete in a small area caused an eight by 14 foot section of the building's main floor to drop out. Of six men working on the floor section, five fell into the basement where they were pulled out of wet cement and styrofoam that had fallen on top of them. All five men were treated for minor injuries. The sixth man was able to save himself by holding on to the girders. Several organizations are currently investigating the incident.

Dartmouth

An unidentified male intruder entered Dartmouth's Russell Sage dormitory on January 18 and stole glimpses of two showering female students, according to The Dartmouth. At 1:45 p.m. he entered the first floor bathroom and pulled back the shower curtain. The student said she was not scared because the incident happened so quickly. She added that she called out to him that she would be finished with the shower momentarily. At 2 p.m. the intruder entered the fourth floor bathroom, but ran into one of the stalls when the showering student saw him. The Hanover police are currently trying to locate the suspect from the victims' descriptions.

University of Michigan

The price of partying has gone up at the University of Michigan after the Ann Arbor City Council has raised the fines for noise violations to $500 from the previous $100. The Michigan Daily reported that the new penalty was almost a good deal more harsh. The original proposal had included a possible 90-day jail sentence for violators. The new arguments are directed toward the fraternities, which border a residential neighborhood. According to Ann Arbor police officer Richard Beck, the police have received frequent reports of students "fornicating, urinating, and defecating" on residents' lawns. He said such complaints have led to stricter punishments for fraternities' disruptive behavior.

compiled by Dan Skwire from college newspapers

Come Daily in the Alley at the Elysian Fields Gallery (formerly The Studio)

Featuring handknit woolen and mohair sweaters, unique crafted jewelry, oversized paisley scarves and shawls, silk pajamas and kimonos, and museum prints for your dorm or favorite Valentine.

Hours: Mon-Sat 10-5:30 and Sun 12-5:00

Elysian Fields Gallery

Eph's Alley, off Spring Street
Williamstown, Mass. (413) 458-4707
Elyse and Jonathan Meer 83, Proprietors

THE WILLIAMS BOOKSTORE
CLASSICS OF THE AMERICAN WEST

THE FAR SIDE By GARY LARSON

Embarrassing moments at gene parties

"Sol Planning on roaming the neighborhood with some of your buddies today?"

Close, but no cigar...

Yet another act bites the dust at Dennett House's Gong Show last Friday. The lucky winners received $50 and the joy of not hearing Dennett's makeshift gong, shown above.

Rain Man reviewed: wait for a rainy day

by Elizabeth Greenman
Tom Cruise plays with fast machines. Why not, people pay to see him. They also pay to see Tom's sexy physique, Tom in sunglasses, and Dustin Hoffman acting terrible. Again. While Rain Man is full of repetitions and clichés, it also has warmth and humor. Whether it is worth taking the good with the bad is a close call.

The basic premise of Rain Man is contrived, not to mention barely believable. Charlie (Tom Cruise), a supposedly smooth-talking car dealer, flees to Cleveland from Los Angeles for his father's funeral, only to discover that most of the considerable inheritance is left to an unknown trustee. This trustee turns out to be none other than Charlie's older, idiot savant brother, Raymond (Dustin Hoffman).

Determined to get the inheritance money that he "deserves" Charlie kidnaps Raymond and takes him back to L.A. From here on, the movie moves solely by dint of Raymond's autism, and the trials and benefits associated with it. It seems to be popular opinion that Rain Man is Cruise's best acting job to date. This is true, but that is not really saying very much. Hoffman is a different story. His acting is superb throughout the movie; one does not doubt the character he creates.

On the other hand, not many people know an autistic adult, making it hard to judge the realism of Hoffman's work. At times, Raymond seems to cope with the shocks of road life just a bit too handily, although one could attribute this to flaws in the writing, and not in the acting.

Despite Rain Man's transparent plot, the writing is obviously intended to be important. There are some interesting, if superficial parallels drawn between Raymond and Charlie, two men who never grew up, who remain in their own little worlds. In that sense, the trip is a kind of coming into manhood, or coming into maturity story, at least for Charlie. Quite a lot to happen in the span of a week's driving.

Even so, the film is sentimental, and evocative enough to have the audience rooting for Charlie and Raymond right up until the final shot. Rain Man is snappy, humorous, and touching. If you see it, you will like it; should you decide you have better things to do, you won't miss it.

ARTS IN VIEW

January 24 At 3:00 p.m., Rachel Tritt '90 will give a piano recital of Chopin's Ballades in Currier Ballroom.

At 8:00 p.m., Cap and Bells presents "Icarus's Mother," a one-act play by Sam Shepard, in the Extension Theater of AMT.

At 8:00 p.m., a dance project developed in the winter study, "This House, This House," will be performed in Lasell Dance Studio.

At 8:00 p.m., a string octet of student musicians will perform Mendelssohn's Octet in E-flat Major, Opus 20 in Brooks-Rogers.

At 10:00 p.m., the White Bread Coalition will present "MassMcCabaret" in AMT Downtown.

January 25 At 4:00 p.m., student soloists and ensembles of various independent study projects will play in Brooks-Rogers.

At 8:00 p.m., Obo Addy, a West African master drummer, and students from the winter study course he co-taught with Assistant Professor of Music Ernest Brown will give a concert in Brooks-Rogers.

At 8:00 p.m., Cap and Bells presents "Icarus's Mother," a one-act play by Sam Shepard, in the Extension Theater of AMT.

At 10:00 p.m., "MassMcCabaret" will be presented at Bette's Life and Times.

January 26 At 1:00 p.m., an English Handbell Choir comprised of students from Professor of Music Douglas Moore's winter study course will perform in Brooks-Rogers.

At 10:00 p.m., "MassMcCabaret" will be presented in the Williams Inn.

Movie Listings

Bennington Cinema 1, II, III
Rte 67A, Bennington, VT (802) 442-8179
7:00 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:05
7:05 & 9:15 Sat & Sun 2:05
22 About 7:20 & 9:15
Oliver and Company Fri-Sun 6:00 Sat & Sun 2:05

Images
Spring Street, Williamstown, 458-5612
January 24-26 7:00 & 9:00
Lair of the White Worm January 27-28 7:00 & 9:00
We the Living January 29-31 7:00 & 9:15

North Adams Cinema
Rte 8, North Adams, 663-5873
Twins 7:00 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:00
Deep Star Six 7:10 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:00
Rain Man 7:00 & 9:00 Sat & Sun 2:00
My Stepmother is an Alien 7:10 & 9:20 Sat & Sun 2:00

Pittsfield Cinema Center
Rte 20, Pittsfield, 443-9639
Working Girl, Dirty Rotten Scoundrels, The Accidental Tourist, Scrooged, Tequila Sunrise (no matinee), Twins: Sun-Thurs 7:00 & 9:15, Fri-Sat 7:00 & 9:30, Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10
Rain Man: 6:45 & 9:15, Sat-Sun 12:45 & 3:10
Oliver and Company, Land Before Time: Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10
The Naked Gun, The January Man, A Fish Called Wanda (no matinee), Deep Star Six: 7:15 & 9:30, Sat-Sun 1:00 & 3:10

Berkshire Mall Cinema
Rte 8, Lanesborough, 499-2558
Rain Man 12:30 3:30 6:40 9:40
Dirty Rotten Scoundrels 12:55 4:10 6:55 9:20
Oliver and Company 12:30 2:30 4:30 6:30 8:15
Tequila Sunrise 1:00 3:55 6:50 9:25
The January Man 1:15 4:00 7:10 9:20
Deep Star Six 12:50 4:05 7:30 9:50
Twins 1:05 3:50 7:00 9:30
Working Girl 1:10 3:40 7:15 9:45
The Naked Gun 1:20 4:20 7:20 9:35
The Accidental Tourist 12:40 3:45 7:05 9:50

The Naked Gun reviewed: Good, stupid fun

by Rob Weisberg

About eight years ago, Jerry Zucker, Jim Abrahams and David Zucker decided to enter what was then a completely new brand of comic cinema. Instead of a movie where the plot set up funny situations, the jokes themselves would be the reason d'être.

The one-liners would keep coming as rapidly as possible, and no opportunity to make a crack, however asinine, would be missed. The key was to give the audience no chance to think about the jokes; eventually, the frantic pacing of the film would get to them, and they would laugh along hysterically.

The result, of course, was Airplane!, which was a hit precisely because the audience was kept laughing throughout the movie, without a second to catch their breath. People left the theater not really sure what they had seen, but knowing full well that Airplane! was the funniest movie ever made. If you don't believe me, try to remember more than half a dozen really funny individual jokes from the movie. It's not easy.

And audiences must have never caught onto the trick, since Airplane II and Top Gun also stars George Kennedy (with the over the top leading role again?), O.J. Simpson and Reggie Jackson. But none of them really do.

It's only the hyperactive pacing of the movie that keeps the audience interested.

The film opens with O.J. Simpson snooping around a dock where a drug deal is being made. Then, in quick succession, he is shot six times, steps in a bear trap, hits his head on a pipe, backs into wet paint and gets his fingers slammed in a window. And away it goes.

What's really interesting about this movie is not that people like it a lot, but that it's received so much critical acclaim. The Naked Gun is not well-written by any means—none of the jokes are that clever, and three experienced Hollywood writers should have little trouble coming up with 90 minutes of one-liners and slapstick situations.

For the most part, it's only the hyperactive pacing of the movie that keeps the audience interested. Yet it works: everyone has a good time, and walks out laughing and retelling the best lines from the film. In that sense, The Naked Gun is a success.

The acting in The Naked Gun is pretty good, if you can look past the fact that only three people in the movie act—the rest are just props for jokes (it's sad to think that the great John Houseman's last role was that of a stereotypical old-fashioned instructor).

Leslie Nielsen, who plays the principal idiot, was the surprise of Airplane! He had the silliest of the dialogue in that movie, and his Joe Friday just-the-facts-ma'am delivery was terrific. He is just as

PIP PRINTING
Camera Ready
Resumes
$0 for $17.70
Offset Printed in just a few hours!
We do all types of printing
53 Main St.
North Adams, MA
663-3414

How to live with someone who's living with cancer.

Learning to live with cancer is no easy task. Learning to live with someone else's cancer can be even more difficult.

Nobody knows better than we do how much help and understanding is needed. That's why our service and rehabilitation programs emphasize the whole family, not just the cancer patient.

We run local programs with volunteers who are recovered cancer patients, or whose lives have been touched by family members or friends with cancer. That's what makes us one of the largest, best motivated and most caring of any health organization in the country.

Among our regular services we provide information and guidance to patients and families, transport patients to and from treatment, supply home care items and assist patients in their return to everyday life.

Life is what concerns us. The life of cancer patients. The lives of their families. So you can see we are even more than the research organization we are so well known to be.

No one faces cancer alone.
AMERICAN CANCER SOCIETY

PEACE CORPS SERVICE: A Good Career Move

COLLEGE GRADS — Highly rewarding opportunities overseas for B.A./B.S. self-starters to share their skills with people in Africa, Asia and Latin America. PEACE CORPS

Recruiters at Williams!
• FILM PRESENTATION & INFO SESSION: Mon., Feb. 13 at 7 p.m. In Office at Career Counseling
• INFORMATION BOOTH: Mon., Feb. 13 from 11-3 p.m. in Student Union, Baxter Hall
• INTERVIEWS: Sign up in Office of Career Counseling-597-2311 for interview with a former volunteer on Tues., Feb. 14

Has your first Winter Study lived up to your expectations?

Interviews by Peter Kilvans, photos by Karl Thomas

It has in a way. I didn't expect to really learn that much over Winter Study. I'm in Mind, Body, and Culture and it has really broadened my horizons. —Larry Smith '92

Should I have had any expectations? —Denise Winton '92

Winter Study means so much more to me than drinking beer, doing drugs or listening to loud music. I was told by many people that it would be a complete blow-off with parties the whole month. Besides not being what I wanted, I was disappointed by the lack of energy and moral rectitude. —E. Davis Jackson '92

Yeah. —Chuck Pecor '92

I've sort of been slipping into apathy. At first it was fun, but now I'm really looking forward to Mid-Winter Break. —Sara Martin '92

Yes, and far surpassed them. Winter Study is a thing of the gods. Square that. —Kris Deinhorst '92 and Beeky Bond '92

Women's hoops smother Amherst, Union

continued from page 12

and shots by Hedeman in the latter period. Amherst converted 30 of 90 field goal attempts on the game.

The Jeffs out the lead to one, 56-55, at the 9:20 mark, setting the stage for an exciting conclusion. Moments later, Hedeman picked up a loose ball underneath and scored while being fouled. She converted the free throw to give Williams a 64-58 edge with just under five minutes left in the game.

Junior Stephanie Murphy scored inside for the Jeffs, cutting the lead to 66-64 at the 2:17 mark. The Defectors would not score again, however. Hedeman, playing one of her best games of the season, answered with a basket at the other end, and then rebounded an Amherst miss and was fouled. With 1:36 remaining in the game, she converted both ends of the one-and-one to extend the lead to six points.

The teams exchanged turnovers, with Williams having a lot of trouble bringing the ball up court. Amherst was unable to take advantage of the Williams miscues, missing a couple of desperate jumpers. Kristina Broadhurst '92 rebounded the last miss and was fouled with 40 seconds left. Amherst called time out to put more pressure on the freshman. Broadhurst missed the front end of the one-and-one, but Cadigan pulled down the rebound and was fouled immediately.

Cadigan, in an atypical performance, struggled at the line on Saturday (9-15). She made the first free throw to finish the scoring in the game. Williams again go with 18 rebounds. Cynthia Knight surprised the Ephs women with her inside play, scoring 20 for the Jeffs. Murphy added 15.

Williams struggles with Union

Last Tuesday, the Ephs showed none

'We finally played as a team...we couldn't score inside, we passed the ball out. We wore them down.'

recovered a missed free throw, as Hedeman rebounded a follow-up attempt by Martha Lucy '91.

"We showed so much heart. That's why we won," said Crouchley.

Both teams were very sloppy in the final minutes, providing an ending appropriate to the game as a whole.

"Williams-Amherst is always a sloppy game. It's a question of who plays a better fundamental game," said Coach Nancy Roberts. Both Hedeman and Coach Roberts attributed the sloppiness to the tension surrounding the game.

Cadigan led the Ephs with 25 points, followed by Hedeman with 20 points to

of the desire that they displayed against Amherst. Union was a lightly regarded team, and Williams was understandably looking ahead to the Amherst game.

The first half was a seesaw battle with neither team playing well. Coach Roberts, sensing that Williams might be flat, opened the game with a full court press. The Dutchwomen, however, were able to beat the press without too much difficulty. Broadhurst started for the Ephs for an injured Horden. She got the nod over Megan King '90 and Meg Brown '91 because of her intensity and quickness.

As a result, the Ephs played the first half with four perimeter players. Hedman was invisible, getting off just four shots. The outside game was unable to compensate, as Crouchley is mired in a shooting slump. She made just 8 of 21 shots from the field in the game. Williams trailed at the half, 34-31.

Ephs wake up for first half

